Eight Volumes

OF

TO

Mr. HOLE.

A General Preface

To the WHOLE.

BEsides the Prefaces already affix'd to each Single Volume of these Letters; which contain Particular Answers to the Objections and Cavils of some, with Solutions of the Scruples and Doubts made by others: As likewise Critical Explanations of Passages seeming obscure to all, in the English Translation of our Spy; it is thought necessary to prefix something more by way of General Preface, not so much regarding the Translation, as the seeming Original Abruptness and Obscurity of our Arabian Author Himself in some Places, with his frequent Change of Subjects, his Digressions and Startings from Matter of Fact, the then present Wars, Transactions, and Intrigues of Christian Courts, States, and Kingdoms, (for which he was chiefly sent to Paris) and his Immethodical falling upon Philosophical, Divine, and Moral Contemplations, and even to Ancient, Obsolete Histories, which some think were altogether Foreign to his Business.

That the Ingenuous Reader therefore may not henceforward be left in the Dark as to any Thing exhibited in the whole Series of these Letters; it will not be amiss to begin regularly at the First Volume, and say something of the Wars in which our Spy found several Nations of Europe engag'd, at his first coming to Paris; especially France, Spain, and the Empire.

After the Barbarous Regicide of Henry the Great; the Name and Malice of what they call'd the Holy League, seem'd to be quite extinguish'd, as if that deplorable Tragedy had fully satissatisfied the Cruel and Bitter Zeal of the Factious Catholicks. France seem'd to enjoy a Serene Quality, and Halcyon Days, from the Year 1610. to 1614. Fortune smiling on the Greener Years of Lewis XIII. as loth to disturb and ruffle the Tender Passions of the Royal Child with the Harsh Sound of War, foreseeing that he wou'd quickly have enough of that, even in his early Youth, before he cou'd write Man, unless he had been a King.

During this Minority of his, the Guardianship of him, and the Regency of the Kingdom, were committed to the Queen-Mother, Mary de Medicis, Daughter to the Great Duke of Tuscany. This Princess had brought into France a Favourite of hers, a Florentine by Birth and Extraction, whom she exalted afterwards to great Dignities, procuring him to be made a Marshal of the Kingdom, and to be invested with so exorbitant a Power at the Court, that the Princes of the Blood, with the other Grandees of France, began to look with an ill Eye on him, being quite disgusted at the too portentous Authority of a Stranger.

Therefore in the Year 1614. they openly shew'd their Discontent by taking up Arms, raising Seditions, Tumults, and Insurrections, which lasted till the Year 1616. at which time the King was married to Anne, the Daughter of Philip III. King of Spain, whilst an interchangeable Match was made between the Young Prince of Spain, Son to the said Philip, and Elizabeth, Sister to Lewis XIII. Thus these Two Potent Monarchs bound themselves to each other, as the World judg'd, in streighter Obligations of Peace and Friendship, by the Sacred Bonds of Matrimony, and a reciprocal Union of their Blood. Which was also accompanied with the Blessing of an Universal Domestick Tranquility, and Cessation from Civil Broils in France; Henry de Bourbon, Prince of Conde, and the Rest of the Confederate Princes being reconcil'd, in all outward appearance, to the King, their Soveraign. But, on a sudden, new Jealousies arising, about the Beginning of September, 1616, the Prince of Conde was was seiz'd and clapt up. And Declarations of War publish'd against the Princes, his Confederates. Yet this was all hush'd up again, and a Peace made the following Year, upon the Death of the Marshal d'Ancres, the fore-mention'd Florentine, and Favourite of the Queen, who was kill'd in the Louvre, by the King's own Command; in that when they were going to arrest him, he offer'd to draw his Sword in his Defence.

The Fall of this Italian seem'd now to pacifie all Malecontents. But the Queen taking it to Heart, retir'd from the Court. Which gave occasion to the King to assume the Publick Administration of the Government into his own Hands. And a while after, he releas'd the Prince of Condè from his Confinement.

Much about the same Time, there broke forth Civil Wars among the Grisons, upon the account of Religion. For, the Catholicks and Protestants continually vex'd one another with mutual Injuries; and engag'd the Kings of France and Spain in their Quarrel: So that the Arms of these Two Kingdoms were employ'd against each other on a foreign Account, for many Years.

In the mean while, the Duke of Luines succeeding the Marshal d'Ancres, in the Prime Ministry of France: The Princes and Nobles conceiv'd as great a Dislike and Hatred of his Power at the Court, as they had before done of the others. So that, in short, they took up Arms also, and gave the King no small Trouble, who was at the same Time molested by the Factious Attempts of the Queen-Mother's Party. But, by the Assistance and Counsel of the Prince of Condè, who now prov'd faithful and serviceable to him, he suppress'd all his Domestick Enemies, and restor'd Quietness in France; the Queen-Mother also and her Party being reconcil'd to him.

Things remain'd in this Posture, till the Duke of Rhoan, and his Brother, Monsieur Soubize, rais'd new Commotions in the Kingdom. The Rochellers at the same Time took up Arms in Defence of their Religion, and cal-led in the English to their Assistance; who sent a Navy of a Hundred and Twenty Ships, under the Command of the Duke of Buckingham; but all to no Effect. For, though the English land-ed in the Isle of Rhee, after many sharp Conflicts; yet they were soon expell'd again, and a long Siege laid to Rochel, under the Conduct of Cardinal Richlieu, and the Marshal de Schomberg, who re-duc'd that City to the King's Obedience, ras'd the Walls, and left it as open as a Village, that it might be a Terrour and Example to others; teaching them rather to confider in the Clemency and Faith of their Soveraign, than to try the Force of his Arms. This was done in the Year 1628. From which time the Rebels, as it were by strife, return'd to their Duty, seeking who shou'd be most forward in testifying their Obedience to the King, and their Repentance for what was past. Thus was Peace once more restor'd to France at Home; that the King might have the more leisure to prosecute the War in Italy. Whither he led his Victorious Army, taking many Towns in his Way to Casal, which he hasten'd to relieve, it being at that Time besieg'd by Spinola the Spanish General. In a Word, he come within sight of the very Walls, and so near to the Spaniards, that both Armies were ready to engage, when Mazarini (afterwards made Cardinal) ran between, and reduc'd them to Terms of Peace.

A while after this, a Peace was concluded between the Emperour, and the Duke of Mantua; the latter having the Possession of Mantua, Montferrat, and other Places, confirm'd to him by an Imperial Decree. But, as if Fate had ordain'd, That the Arms of France should not rust, or be long Idle; but that they shou'd be constantly kept in Exercise, by equal Vicissitudes of Foreign and Domestick Wars; no sooner was this Peace concluded, which gave some respite to the French abroad, when new Stirs arose at Home; occasion'd first through some Misunderstandings between the Queen-Mother and Cardinal Richlieu. Which afterwards were improv'd into open Hatred and Enmity; the Queen-Mother having drawn into her Party the Duke of Orleans, Brother to the King: a Man who had conceiv'd an Irreconcilable Averſion for that Potent Miniſter. Till at length Things coming to an Inevitable Rupture at the Court, the Queen-Mother fled privately into Flanders, and the Duke of Orleans into Lorrain; from whence he afterwards follow'd her into Flanders alſo.

The next Year he ruſh'd into Dauphine with a Confus'd Army, and the Duke of Montmorency came over to his ſide. Who being Governour of that Province, brought great Forces with him, and gave new Courage to the Invaders. Inſomuch as they enter'd Battel with the Marſhal de Schomberg, General of the King's Army. The Fight was ſhort and bloody, wherein the Rebels were routed, having loſt many of their Principal Leaders on the Spot; whilſt the Duke of Montmorency was taken Priſoner, and afterwards beheaded, by Sentence of the Parliament. This concluded the Year 1632. But the Duke of Orleans did not return to his Duty till the Year 1634.

From

From which Time the Kingdom of France was ſtill by various Turns kept in an Active Poſture, either of Defence or Offence, partly by Domeſtick Factions, and partly by Foreign Engagements of Allies or Enemies, even to the Time of the Turkiſh Spie's Arrival at Paris, which was in the Year 1637.

I paſs over theſe Three laſt Years, before his coming to Paris, with the more Brevity, that there may be Room to ſay ſomething of the other Wars in which Europe had all along been equally engag'd, from the Murder of Henry the IV. or thereabouts, to the ſame Year 1637. and this ſhall be done as concisely as may be, That ſo the Reader may have the clearer Idea and Underſtanding of what our Spy entertains him with, in the Courſe of his Firſt Letters, to the Year 1643. when Lewis XIV. the preſent King of France began his Reign. Whoſe Life and Actions gave an immediate Turn to all Affairs, both in his own Dominions and the other Nations of Europe.

In

In the Year 1610. The Town of Gulick in the Netherlands was surrender'd to Prince Maurice of Nassau, after many Princes had claim'd it, upon the Death of Duke John William, who left no Heirs of his Body. And Prince Maurice himself was oblig'd to the French, for their Aid in obtaining it. About the same Time, the Moors were expell'd out of Spain, to the Number of Nine Hundred Thousand. Of which our Spy takes Notice in some of his Letters.

In the Year 1611. Sigismund King of Poland took Smolensko, a very strong Town of the Moscovites, after Two Year's Siege. Whose Son Uladislaus, the Moscovites chose for their Duke or Czar. Of which repenting in a little Time, there broke forth a Bloody War in those Parts.

The same Year died Charles the King of Swedeland, being succeeded by his Son Gustavus; tho some endeavour'd to transfer the Crown to Sigismund King of Poland.

In

In the Year 1612. died Rodolph, Emperour of Germany, who was succeeded by Matthias, his Brother. A while after this, the Venetians made War upon Ferdinand, Arch-Duke of Austria, Son of the Arch-Duke Charles, who was Brother to the Emperour Maximilian II. This War lasted to the Year 1618. at which Time it was finish'd.

In the mean while the War between the Dukes of Mantua and Savoy broke forth about the Principality of Montferrat. It was occasion'd by the Death of Francis, Duke of Mantua; who leaving no Male-Issue behind him, Cardinal Ferdinand his Brother, under the Protection of the King of Spain, took Possession of that Principality, which he defended by Arms against Charles Philibert, Duke of Savoy. This War also lasted to the Year 1618. at which Time it was ended by the powerful Intervention of the French King.

About this Time there broke out a most Cruel War in Germany, on this Occasion. Ferdinand, Arch-Duke of Austria, and King of Bohemia, receiv'd also from the Emperor Matthias, the Kingdom of Hungary on certain Conditions. Which Conditions seeming disadvantageous to the Protestants, they made an Insurrection first at Prague in Bohemia, where they kill'd the Magistrates, and then they were soon followed by all Bohemia and the adjoining Provinces; who took up Arms against the King, under the Conduct of Ernest Mansfelt, and other Grandees.

In the Year 1619. Matthias the Emperor died, whom Ferdinand the aforesaid King of Bohemia and Hungary succeeding, prosecuted the War very vigorously against the Rebels. In the mean while they chose for King of of Bohemia, Frederick, Elector Palatine of the Rhine, who had married the Lady Elizabeth, Daughter to James I. King of England. He with his new Queen were the same Year solemnly Crown'd at Prague: and the Year following, their Forces being routed by the Emperor, they themselves were forc'd to fly into Holland, where they led a private Life ever afterwards. In the mean while, Bohemia, with the other revolting Provinces, vinces, return'd to their Obedience. And this was thought to be a Leading Card to the Religious War, which about the same Time was rais'd among the Grisons: Of which mention is made above. Nay, and the same is suppos'd to have Influence on the Commotions rais'd by the Huguenots, inhabiting the Foot of the Pyrenees, against whom Lewis XIII. made a successful Expedition in the Year 1620. reducing the greatest Part of that Province to their Duty and Allegiance: tho the following Year gave him some fresh Trouble, and the Loss of many Great Nobles: among whom were the Duke of Mayne, Governor of Guienne; and the Duke of Luines, First Minister of State.

About the same time died Pope Paul V. being succeeded by Gregory XV. who sate in the Chair but Two Years and a few Months, when dying he left it to Urban VIII.

In the Year 1624. Breda was besieg'd by Spinola the Spanish General, and surrender'd in 1625. In the mean while, Count Mansfelt infested Germany with with frequent Excursions, being got at the Head of a bold Army of Freebooters; but at length he was defeated by Tilly, a brave and expert General on the Imperial side. Then he was forc'd to fly for Sanctuary into Transylvania; and from thence going to Venice, he died in the Year 1626.

All these Things our Spy glances at in his Letters, but with some Abruptness and Obscurity: Which renders him scarcely Intelligible in those Places, to such as know not the History. 'Tis for this Reason we are at the Pains of giving a Compendious View of the Wars and Transactions in Europe, before his coming to Paris.

Therefore to proceed; Gustavus King of Sueadland, came out of his Territories in the Year 1630, and enter'd Pomerania with a Mighty Army. From whence and from all the adjacent Provinces, he drove the Imperialists. In the Year 1631. he enter'd the more interiour Parts of the Empire, taking Innumerable Towns, and filling all Places with Terror. And this he did under pretext of vindicating the Evangelicks or Protestants. In vain did Tilly, the General of the Catholicks, oppose him. All that he cou'd do, was to burn Magdeburgh to Ashes.

After which the Protestant Princes held a Diet or Assembly at Leipsick, where they enter'd into a Confederacy against the Emperor, joining their Forces with those of Gustavus. Against these Tilly march'd with General Papenheim, and laid close Siege to Leipsick; which they were forc'd to surrender upon Conditions.

After this, the King of Swedeland, the Duke of Saxony, with the other Confederate Princes, took to the Field: and there was a Terrible Fight between them and the Imperialists at Leipsick, whose Consequence prov'd fatal to the latter. For Tilly having lost Ten Thousand of his Men, was forc'd to fly himself; Whilst Leipsick fell into the Hands of the Duke of Saxony. This Victory opened a clear Way for the King of Swedeland to over-run all Germany. So that having taken Wirtzberg, he soon reduc'd reduc'd all Franconia or Frankenland: after that Mentz, with other Provinces; ſpreading like a Fire, or a Deluge of Water. In the mean while, the Duke of Saxony invaded Bohemia; and took Prague, the Capital City of that Kingdom. In a Word, ſo General was the Conſternation throughout the Empire, that ſome Princes to divert the Storm which they ſaw hanging over their Heads, had Recourſe to the Protection of the King of France; who accordingly by his Mediation ſkreen'd them from Violence; eſpecially the Archbiſhop of Triers or Treves.

In the Year 1632. the King of Sweden purſu'd the Courſe of his Victories; ravaging without ſtop or oppoſition, through Alſatia, Bavaria, and other Parts, ſtill taking Towns and ſtrong Holds, filling all Places alſo with Ruin and Deſolation. At length paſſing the Danube, he routed Tilly once more, with all his Army, who died ſoon after of a Wound he receiv'd in the Battel.

Walſtein was ſtreight ſubſtituted in his Place, who recover'd Prague in Bohemia

hemia from the Saxons. Then after many Conflicts and Skirmishes he encounter'd the King of Swedeland at Lutzen, a Town not far from Leipsick. This Battel prov'd fatal to Gustavus, for in it he lost his Life, and not long after him, General Papenheim on the German Side.

The same Year Sigismund King of Poland dying, his Son Uladislaus succeeded in the Throne. The Swedes were not the least discourag'd from prosecuting the War, by the Death of their King; but whereas before they fought for Conquest and Liberty, now they seem'd to fight for Revenge. Christina, the Daughter of Gustavus Adolphus, was soon set upon the Throne of Sweden. After this there was a Diet held at Francfort, consisting of Swedes and Saxons. Then there was another assembl'd at Hailbrun. And in the Year 1634. The States of Saxony met at Halberstadt, to consult about their own Safety. Much about the same Time happen'd the Sieges of Ratisbonne, and Norlingen. This Year was Noted with Tra[illegible] Characters, on the Account of the great Desolation made in the Provinces lying on the Rhine, by War, Pestilence, and Famine: Where People were reduc'd to those Streights, as to feed on Humane Flesh, and to do other Things, which will scarce now seem Credible.

The next Year 1635. seem'd to give a New Turn to the Affairs in Germany. For the Duke of Saxony, Brandenburgh, and Lunenburgh, having had a Treaty at Prague in Bohemia, came over to the Emperour's Party. Yet the Swedes still pursu'd the War.

The Two following years, were remarkable for the Election of Ferdinand III. who was chosen King of the Romans 1636. and succeeded his Father in the Empire 1637. as also for the Irruption made by Galassio, General of the German Forces in France: Which was attended with Various Events on both Sides; Till at length toward the End of 1637. Galassio return'd with his Army into the Empire again. The same Year before, there was a Notable Sea-Fight between the Spaniards and Hollanders.

derls. Prince Maurice overcame the Portugueze in Brasil, and took from them Immense Riches. The Prince of Orange besieg'd Breda, and took it: The same Year died Bolislaus, the last Duke of Pomerania. Much about the same Time, the Pope earnestly exhorted the Princes of Europe to establish a General Peace.

Such was the Face of Things in Christendom, when this Turk first came to Paris: and it is evident that the Scenes were often chang'd in the Course of those former Years, which I have here recounted. And so they have been ever since: Which was the True Reason of that Variety of Subjects, with which our Author abounds. In some Letters giving an Account of Battels, Sieges, and other Events of Campaigns; glossing also and descanting on the Good Conduct or Oversights of Great Generals; on the Valour of Famous Captains, and, in General, on the Fortune of War. In others he treats of Court-Intrigues, Junto's of Politicians, and Subtle Proposals of Statesmen.

Again,

Again, when he writes to his Intimate Friends, he either entertains them with Melancholy Complaints of his Long Abſence from Conſtantinople, and his Native Country; with the Inconveniences, Miſeries, Hazards, and Hardſhips, that attend it; or elſe diverts them with ſome trifling Diſcourſe, Comical Story, or ſomething very unuſual, ſurprizing, and ſtrange.

In Time of War, he ſeems to be a curious Engroſſer of the Earlieſt and Choiceſt News. In Time of Peace he watches the Motions of Cardinal Richlieu, Mazarini, Olivarez, and other Great Miniſters of State. For this End he had his Agents about in every Corner of the Court of France, beſides his Intelligencers at Vienna, Venice, or ſome other City of Europe.

But give him leave ſometimes to lay aſide the Cares and Buſie Toils of Life. And wonder not, if he ſeem in ſome of his Letters, very Melancholy; in others, of a contrary Humour, chearful and frolickſom: For theſe Unevenneſſes of Temper happen to every Man.

You

You shall hear him sometimes wishing himself in the Pyramids of Egypt, confin'd and enclos'd within those Antique Piles; a Companion of Ghosts, and Devils, rather than lead the Life he did in Paris. When at another Season, you shall find him all over content, and Resignation it self in the Abstract.

Besides, the Difference of his Years ought to be consider'd; which at the Climacterical Periods, are observ'd to alter Men's Spirits as well as their Bodies. So that 'tis no Wonder, if in the Course of Five and Forty Years, which he pass'd away at Paris, both his Genius and Conversation may seem to Vary at some Critical Seasons; through the Natural Force of Time, and the Change of the Elements, of which his Body was compounded: As he himself in his Letters makes the same Apology.

Add to all this, his daily Improvements by Observation, Experience, Reading, Meditating, Converse, and Habitual Engagements in the World. For which Reason alone, it wou'd be unequal to expect the same Method of Writing Writing from him, either as to Sense or Style, Matter or Form, when he was but Thirty or Forty Years Old; as when he was Threescore, or Threescore and Ten. Most of the Famous Writers in the World, have not only chang'd the Opinions which they harbour'd in their Greener Years; but before they came to the Age of our Spy, some of them have Publickly Recanted them, both with their Tongue and Pen. Neither is it a Shame to any Man, so long as the Old Axiom is true: Humanum est errare; at Errores feliciter retractare, vere Divinum.

Neither cou'd our Spy, considering his Education in the Mahometan Religion, take a properer Method, in my Opinion, to disengage himself from the Legends of the Nursery, and the Fables of the Schools, (as a Great Man calls our Infant Idea's of Things) than to follow the Counsel of his beloved Des Cartes, the French Philosopher, whom he so much admir'd; and who advises every one that wou'd perfect his Reason, and arrive at the Knowledge of Undisguised Truth, To shake off the Prepossessions sions and Prejudices of his Infancy and Youth; to wipe, brush, or sweep his Soul clean of the very Dust and Relicks left behind on our Faculties, by those First Foreign Invasions and Encroachments on our Minds. Having thus cleans'd and polish'd the Soul, it becomes a Pure Tabula Rasa, fit for the best or worst Impressions. And here's the First Start of the Free-Will: For, before this, a Man is a perfect Slave, driven up and down by every Spirit that blows strongest on him. Whereas now he begins to feel some Strength and Consistence in himself: Being able to say with Interiour and Solid Reason; Cogito, ergo sum. Fixing therefore on this Foundation, he builds a Fortress, or Strong Hold, from whence he defies all the Attempts of open Enemies, or sly Secret Interlopers; neither permitting himself to be debauch'd by the Profaneness of Libertines and Atheists, nor by the Ridiculous Enthusiasms of Fanaticks and Zealots. This is the Course which our York seems to have taken with himself, when he once arriv'd at those Years, wherein Men usually begin to examin the Grounds of Religion, and bring the

Doctrines and Traditions of their Fathers, to the Test of Sense and Reason. 'Tis no wonder therefore, if in some Letters to his Families and Intimate Friends, he discourses of such Matters with more freedom, than when he writes to the Mufti, the Mufti's Vicar, the Preachers of the Seraglio, or any of the Grandees. Yet even to these he makes bold sometimes to propose Queries, and start Scruples; which plainly discover, that he was not fully satisfied in many Principles and Practices of the Mahometans.

On the other Hand, when he writes to the Jew, his Correspondent at Vienna, he endeavours to reclaim him from a too fond and implicit Confidence in the Hebrew Rabbi's, whom he calls Religious Triflers, ridiculing their Fables and vain Inventions; and perswading his Friend not to be over Pious, but to attend the Affairs of his Employment with Alacrity, and to be zealous in the Grand Signior's Service. He likewise frequently explodes the Vanity and Superstition of some sort of Christians, with some Tartness indeed, but free from all Ill-Nature and Bitterness, every where speaking honourably of Christ Jesus our Blessed Saviour; only condemning the Vices and Errors of his Followers. Which last is no more, than what would become a Christian Divine, whose Duty it is, to reprove and correct whatsoever he sees amiss in those that profess the Christian Faith.

In General, he appears a Man void of Superstition and Bigottry. And if he seems Partial, or Byas'd any Ways, it is in the Point of Abstinence from Flesh, and the Doctrine of Transmigration. Whereby we may conclude he was a Pythagorean, which is no new or uncommon Thing among the Turks; there being a particular Sect of Mahometans, wholly devoted to the Rules of that Philosopher; and it is well known, that Pythagorism is in great Reputation all over the East.

Hence we need not wonder, that he appears so much enamour'd with the Indian Gentiles, who are the strictest Observers of Abstinence, and of the whole Pythagorean Discipline, of any People

People in the World, as all our Modern Travellers can testifie.

Tho' he cannot be call'd an Antiquary, yet he appears a great Lover of Antiquities; and no less an Admirer of New Discoveries; provided they be both of them Matters of Importance, and worth a Wise Man's Regard. For it does not belong to either of these Characters, that a Man is a Curious Collector of Medals, Images, Pictures, and a Thousand other Insignificant Trifles, which can neither serve to Illustrate History, Regulate Chronology, or Adjust any Momentous Difficulty in the Records of Time; but are only Reverenc'd for their Rustiness, Illegible Characters, and Exotick Figure: Nor that he is fond of every little Improvement in Arts or Sciences, which perhaps has no other Tendency than the Advantage of some Particular Trade or Profession, among Men, and serves only to divert the Mind from more Solid Objects. Whereas, our Arabian aspires at Higher Things: He loves Antiquities, but 'tis only such as draw the Veil from off the Infancy of Time, and uncover the Cradle of the World. This makes him busy himself with so much Zeal and Passion on the Records of the Chinese and Indians. He admires New Discoveries, but only such as shall either conduct us to the yet Unknown Parts of the Earth, or present us with a Truer and more perfect Scheme of the Heavens, than what was before extant: As may be seen by his Letters to Osman Ashrewly, Astrologer to the Sultan, Vol. viii. Book iv. p. 268. and to Abdel Melec Ibn Omar, President of the College of Sciences at Fez, Vol. viii. Book iv. p. 356.

He often praises and recommends the Reading of History to his Friends: And throughout the Course of these Letters, gives sufficient Proofs, that he is no Stranger to it. Which yet need not be laid to his Charge, as if he affected to be thought a Knowing Man; or that he spent his Time in Studies Foreign to his Employment. For he began to read Histories, as he himself declares, long before he came to Paris, as soon as he was releas'd from his Captivity in Palermo in Sicily, and had Access to the Academies. Which makes it no Wonder, that he should employ his Vacant

Hours

Books in the Libraries of Paris, after he became Master, being a very Inquisitive Man, and Greedy of Knowledge. Besides, that was Commended by him, So Solomon tells us to improve himself, and to transmit the Abstracts of what he Read, to Constantinople: Which is a sufficient Excuse for All.

It only remains now, that we touch upon some Translations of the Turks, as we have already done upon those in the Text: That so the Reader, who perhaps has not the Leisure to peruse the Turkish History, may the better understand some Passages in these Letters relating thereto.

Solyman was born in the Reign of Selim Achmet, during whose Life, he being but a Youth, it will be to no purpose to recount what happen'd in those Parts, or between that Monarch and the Christians.

Achmet dying, was succeeded by Mustapha, his Brother: Of whom our Author makes some Mention; as of his throwing Gold to the Fishes of the Sea;

and of the Cruelty of Sultan Amurath IV. in causing him to be Strangled. Indeed, he was a Prince who made so small and contemptible a Figure in the World, That few Historians take any other Notice of him, than as a Man more fit for a Convent, than for a Royal Palace.

Therefore he being Depos'd, and Remanded to his Former Prison, where he had spent his Youth; Osman, the Son of Achmet, was plac'd in the Throne of his Fathers. He Renewed the Ancient Leagues, which had been made between his Ancestors and several Christian Princes; wrote Letters to James I. King of England, and Lewis XIII. King of France; Aided the Emperour of Germany against the Hungarians, Bohemians, and other Rebels. But at length entring into a War with Poland, his Army was beaten. From which Time his Affairs began to decline. And the next Year giving out that he would make a Pilgrimage to Mecca, he was Strangled by the Janizaries, who Suspected that he design'd to abolish their and alter the Constitution of the Empire.

Then Mustapha was taken out of his Prison again, and the second Time plac'd in the Throne. Who soon after experienc'd the Mutability of Fortune, in that he was again laid aside; and Amurath, the Brother of Osman, Establish'd in his stead.

This Amurath was a very Warlike Prince, and esteem'd the stoutest Man of his Age. He had not long Sway'd the Ottoman Scepter, when the Persians came and Besieg'd Bagdat, or Babylon, which they took from the Turks. Then the Cossacks, with the Inhabitants of the Ukrain, gave him some Diversion, making violent Incursions into the Turkish Territories, and laying all Waste where-ever they came. However, the Sultan regarded the Persian War with most Concern. He sent an Army toward Babylon, in the Year 1626. who were defeated by the Persians; Twenty Thousand Turks being kill'd upon the Spot. This was reveng'd afterwards, by the Slaughter of Thirty Thousand Persians. Then follow'd the Siege, or rather Blockade of Babylon by the Turks.

A while after this, happen'd that dreadful Fire at Constantinople, which consumed a Third Part of the City: Of which our Spy makes mention in some of his Letters; especially to his Friend Dgnet Oglou, who had suffered great Losses in the Conflagration.

Not long after this, there was a Rebellion rais'd in the Holy Land by Facardine, the Brave and Famous Emir of Sidon; with whom join'd some other discontented Bassa's and Beys of Egypt. But Amurath sending powerful Forces against them, reduc'd them to their Duty. Afterwards enticing Facardine to Constantinople, the Old Emir went accordingly with Forty Thousand Men at his Heels: Who encamp'd at a Distance from the City: But at length trusting too much to Sultan Amurath's Allurements and fair Promises, he ventur'd so far into the Grand Signior's Clutches, that he was Strangled. This our Spy descants upon in several Letters.

Next

Next follow'd the taking of Revan by the Persians; which was accompanied by the Rebellion of the Beglerbeg of Grimea. At which Time there rag'd a Destructive Plague at Constantinople. In this Year our Spy came to Paris. Much about the same Time, the Persians routed the Turks before Babylon, and forc'd them to Raise the Siege.

Amurath was enrag'd with these reiterated Ill Successes, that collecting together a Mighty Army, he led them in Person to the Walls of Babylon, and laid Close Siege to that City; resolving never to return to Constantinople, till he had won that Important Place: Which he accordingly did, with an Infinite Slaughter of the Persians. Our Spy speaks much of this Siege, sometimes extolling the Bravery of Schah Abbas, King of the Persians; at other Times, magnifying the Valour of Amurath.

The Grand Signior returning from this Successful Campagne, enter'd Constantinople in Triumph. And being puff'd up with his Victories, gave the Reins to his Passion, committing a Thousand Exorbitances and Cruelties. At length he died of a Fever, which he got by Excessive Drinking of Wine and Spirits, to which he had much addicted himself.

Reins

Ibrahim, Brother to Amurath, Succeeded in the Throne; a Prince wholly given over to the Amours of Women. Yet he commenc'd that long and tedious War with the Venetians, which cost so much Money and Blood on both Sides; which lasted above Twenty Years, and which was not ended till the Surrender of Candia, the Chief City of the Island bearing that Name, which Consummated the Conquest of the whole Isle.

The Occasion of this War is related Variously. Our Histories affirm, That it was begun on the Account of Sultan Ibrahim's Son being taken Captive by the Knights of Malta; who was afterwards Educated in that Island, became a Monk; and for Distinction's sake, in Regard of his suppos'd Extraction, was call'd Padre Ottomanno, or Father Otto-

Ottoman. Our Spy contradicts all this, and says he was only the Son of a Female Slave, belonging to the Seraill, there being no Account to be had of his Father.

Ibrahim being transported with an Extravagant Luſt after Women, and having debauch'd the Muſti's Daughter; the Muſti, with the Grand Viſir and ſome other Baſſa's, Conſpir'd againſt him, drawing his own Mother into the Plot. At length he was ſeiz'd, depos'd, and after ſome Days Confinement, growing Mad, he was Strangled in his Priſon, and his Son Mahomet IV. aſcended the Throne; a Prince addicted more to Hunting, and the Pleaſures of a Country-Life, than to War or Love of Women. Whence it was, that he ſpent moſt of his Summers in ſome delightful Solitude, where the agreeable Shades of Trees, the purling Streams, and Harmony of Birds, invited him as to an Earthly Paradiſe. Yet this hinder'd not the Grand Viſir from proſecuting the Wars in Hungary, Dalmatia, Candia, and elſewhere, as there was Occaſion. Of all which Things, our Spy gives Hints in his Letters, according to their proper Seaſons.

To

To draw towards a Conclusion, the Reader of these Letters may observe, That our Spy, in some of them, makes Mention of several Papers and Journals which came to his Hands; and of one which he wrote himself in the Academies, wherein is contain'd the History of his Youth, with the most Memorable Adventures which befel him in that Part of his Life.

But among Foreign Journals, he seems to put the Greatest Value on those of Carcon, Pesteli Hali his Brother, and Ismy his Cousin. The First of these was a Private Agent for the Grand Signior at Vienna, who liv'd some Years there after our Spy came to Paris, and held a strict Correspondence with him, by Order of the Turkish Divan, as appears by several Letters, in the 1st. and 2d. Volumes. But at length dying, his Journal and other Papers were sent by his Successor, to our Spy, with a Ring which Carcon had bequeathed him as a Legacy and Token of his Inviolable Friendship even to Death.

This

This Journal, as we may gather from some of our Spy's Letters, contains Copies of all the Dispatches which Carrera sent to the Ministers of the Port, during his Residence at Vienna; with some of their Letters to him. In these, as we may further collect, is couch'd a History of all the most Remarkable Transactions in Europe, with parallel Occurrences and Events in the East, from the Year 1600, or thereabouts, to the Year 1642, at which time Carrera died. Our Spy, besides other Commendations which he gives this Journal of Carrera, particularly celebrates it in one of his last Letters, to Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna. At the first Receipt of that Journal, he sent an Answer to Nathan, which begins thus: ["Thy "Letter, with Carrera's Journal, is come "safe to my Hands, and the Ring which "he bequeath'd me, &c.] And a little after, he says, ["His Memoirs will be "of Great Service to me; containing a "More Accurate History of the German "Court, from the Year 1600, to the "Time of his Death, than I have yet seen "extent. I am not acquainted with

"Rela-

Relations of this Kind, &c.] Vol. III. Book I. Letter XXX. Pag. 107. But in the very Last Letter he wrote to this Jew, he gives this Journal yet far higher Encomiums, praising the Elegance and Succinctness of the Style, the Solidity of the Matter, and the Great Usefulness, as well as Delightness of Both; as may be seen more at large in Vol. VIII. Book IV. Letter XVI. Pag. 350.

The Second Journal is that of Peseli Hali, Brother to our Spy, and a Great Traveller in Asia. At his Return to Constantinople, he was made Master of the Customs, and Superintendant of the Arsenal there. His Journal contains an Accurate Account of his Travels through Syria, Arabia, Persia, India, China, Tartary, Georgia, Circassia, Mingrelia, &c. With Choice Remarks and Observations on the Divers Religions, Laws, Customs, and Forms of Government which he found among so many People of Different Nations. As also several strange and pleasant Adventures that happen'd to him on the Roads, and in Cities; the Escapes he made from Robbers, and his Intrigues with the Persian and Indian Ladies. All which our Spy professes he took great delight to read. In a Word, according to the Character which he gives us of this Journal, we may believe, That it contains many Useful and Pleasant Memoirs, in History, Philosophy, Morality, and the Politicks.

As for the Journal of Ysouf his Cousin, we may conclude from several Letters in our Spy, that it deserves much the same Character: Only, with this Advantage, That besides his Travels through all or most of the fore-mention'd Countries in the East, he adds an Account of his Journies through the South, having Visited the Chiefest Regions of Africk. And Mahmut appears particularly pleas'd with this last Part of his Journal, as containing Narratives of Countries to which he was wholly then a Stranger. In a Word, upon the Reading of this Journal, he conceiv'd so great an Affection for his Cousin Ysouf, the Author of it, that he recommends him to his Brother Pesteli Hali, and to one of the Bassa's, as a Man deserving the Sultan's Favour, and some Preferment suitable to his Abilities. Which may be a sufficient Ground for us to believe, That this Journal was not stuffed with Vain Romantick Fables, and Empty Trifles; but that it had something in it Extraordinary and Illustrious.

If therefore the Publisher of these Volumes (who has been at great Expence and Pains, in endeavouring to retrieve the said Journals, should ever be so happy as to succeed in his Attempt; he promises himself, That the Publication of the said Journals, will be a Work both Useful and Acceptable to the World.

WRITTEN BY

TO THE

READER.

I Here offer you a Book written by a Turk, whose Matter is as instructive and delightful, as the Manner of finding it was strange and surprizing.

I do not doubt but you would know where 'twas written; and perhaps, whether the Author be living; and whether you must expect a Romance or a real History. Hear then in short, what will fully satisfie you.

The Curiosity of seeing Paris, made a Man of Letters leave Italy in the Year 1682, where being arrived, he found such Diversions, as caused his stay longer than he intended.

Scarce had he been Two Months in Paris, when, by changing his Lodging, he discovered, by meer chance, in a Corner of his Chamber, a great heap of Papers; which seem'd more spoil'd by Dust than time.

He was at first surprized to see nothing but barbarous Characters, and was upon the Point of leaving them without any farther search, if a Latin Sentence, which he perceived on the top of a Leaf, had not retained him:

Ubi amatur, non laboratur; & si
Laboratur, labor amatur.

The Surprize of the Italian was yet greater, when after having considered these Characters with more Attention, he found them to be Arabick: which Language was not altogether unknown to him, which made him look narrowlier into them, where he found, That they treated of Affairs of State: That they contained Relations of War and Peace; and discoursed, not only of the Affairs of France, but of those of all Christendom, till the Year 1682.

The curious Italian was in no small Impatience, to know how, and where these Memorials had been writ, and by what adventure they came to lie so neglected in a Corner of his Chamber. But, before he further informed himself, he thought it expedient to transport these Manuscripts into another House, as a place of greater Security.

He afterwards questioned his Landlord with great Precaution, concerning the Papers; and he inform'd him even to the least Circumstances.

He told him, That a Stranger, who said he was a Native of Moldavia, habited like an Ecclesiastick, greatly Studious, of small Stature, of a very course Countenance, but of surprizing Goodness of Life, had lived long at his House. That he came came to lodge there in the Year 1664, and had ſtaid Eighteen Years with him; that being gone abroad one day, he returned no more, and they had no certain News of him ſince. He was about Seventy Years old, had left Manuſcripts, that no Body underſtood, and ſome Moneys, which was an Argument, that his Departure was not premeditated.

He added, That he had always a Lamp Day and Night burning in his Chamber; had but few Moveables, only ſome Books, a ſmall Tome of St. Auſtin, Tacitus, and the Alcoran, with the Picture of Maſſaniello, whom he praiſed very much, calling him the Moſes of Naples. He ſaid further, That this Strangers greateſt Friend, and whom he ſaw often, was a Man which moſt People took for a Saint, ſome for a Jew, and other ſuſpected to be a Turk. According to the Landlord's Report, he came to Paris in the Year 1637. being then but Twenty eight Years of Age, At firſt he had lodg'd with a Flemming; he went oft to Court; Moneys never failed him; he had Friends, and paſſed for very Learned. As for his End, this Man thinks he died miſerably; it being ſuſpected that he had been thrown into the River.

The Italian being ſufficiently inſtructed by what he had heard, applyed himſelf to the Study of the Arabian Language; and as he had already ſome Knowledge in it, he quickly learnt enough to tranſlate theſe Manuſcripts, which he undertook a while after; and he examined with care the Truth of what the Moldavian had writ; confronting the Events he met, with the Hiſtories of thoſe Times; and to ſucceed the better, ſearched the moſt approved Memorials, having had Access into the Cabinets of Princes and their Ministers.

These Letters contain the most considerable Intrigues of the Court of France, and the most remarkable Transactions of Christendom, which have been sent to several Officers of the Ottoman Court.

By these may be known the Perspicacity of this Agent of the Turks; and by him the Prudence of those that command in that Nation, who chose (the better to penetrate into the Affairs of Christians) a Man, who could not be suspected by his Exterior; who was deform'd, but prudent and advised; and, for the better concealing him, destined his ordinary abode in one of the greatest and most peopled Cities of Europe.

During his being at Paris, which was Forty Five Years, he has been Eye-witness of many great Changes; has seen the Death of Two great Ministers of State; has seen that Kingdom involved in War, without and within. He was scarce settled in Paris, but he was Witness to the Birth of a King, who surpasses those that preceded him; in a time, when the Queen's Barrenness, caused the King, her Husband, to despair of ever having a Son that should succeed him.

During the Course of so many Years, he hath seen Cities Revolt, and return again to the Obedience of their Sovereign; Princes of the Blood, make War against their King; and Queen Mary de Medecis, Wife, Mother, and Mother in law to four of the greatest Kings in Europe, die in Exile in Cologne. He

He speaks frankly of the Princes of Christendom, and explains his Sentiments with Liberty. He saith, The Emperor commands Princes, the King of Spain Men, and the King of France sees Men, and even Kings obey his Orders. He adds, That the First commands and prays, the Second sees oft times more effected than he commanded, and that the Third commands many brave Soldiers, and is well nigh obeyed by Crown'd Heads. There appears no Hate or Animosity in him, in what he writes against the Pope. In discourfing of the Emperor and King of Spain, he says, That both of them having Provinces of such vast Extent, they are not much concerned at the Losses they sustain.

He believed that England was more powerful than the Empire, and Spain at Sea. He apprehended more the Counsels of the Republick of Venice, than their Arms. He magnifies what passed in the Wars of Candy, which the Venetians supported with so much Bravery against the Forces of the Ottoman Empire. The Genoeses with him are perfect Chymists. He speaks of the last Plague, and last War that this Commonwealth hath been afflicted with; he touches something of the late Conspiracy against this State by Raggi and Torne; and to shew, that he understood their History, he says somewhat of Vadero and Balbi.

Thou wilt see, Reader, by the Progress of the Work, what this secret Envoy of the Ottoman Port, thought of the other Princes of Italy, and those of the North: And I have drawn his Picture, because thou maist understand better what I give thee of him.

This Arabian (for he declares himself in his Writings, to have been of that Nation) having been taken and made a Slave by the Christians, was brought into Sicily, where he applyed himself to Learning. He studied Logick in his Captivity, and applyed himself much to History; he overcame them by suffering with Patience the Blows of his Master, who often beat him for endeavouring to acquire those Lights, which this Brute had not. And finally, after much Labour, great Assiduity, and long Watchings, he came, as he writes himself, to understand Greek and Latin Authors; he had Commerce afterwards with the best Masters; and during his sojourning in the French Court, he joined Experience to the Knowledge he had acquired.

He explains himself neatly, and speaks of Things with great Frankness. His Style shews a great Liberty of Spirit, and never Passion; and if it appear that he accommodates himself to the Fashion of the Court, one may see that it is not out of design to please, but that he wisely conforms himself sometimes to the Genius's of Nations.

Thou wilt find in his Letters Wit and Learning. If sometimes he appears tart, 'tis to shew his Vivacity, not disoblige; and he appears all over fully instructed in Ancient and Modern History. He is very reserved when he blames, and seems persuaded when he praises. When he speaks to the great Men of the Port, his Style is very grave; and he changes when he writes to meaner Persons. He never tells News that he is not assured of, nor thinks of divining Things that seem obscure to him.

He gives rare Lessons when he writes of the Revolutions of Catalonia, the Kingdoms of Naples, Portugal and England, which happened in our Days; with strange Circumstances, terrible Murders, and the Death of a Potent King, Martyr'd tyr'd by his own Subjects upon a Scaffold before his own Door.

He weighs much the Duke of Guise's hardy Resolution of going to Naples, to succour the Revolted there; and he reasons not as a Barbarian, but like an able Statesman, and wise Philosopher, on the Rise and Ruin of States. He always discourses with Liberty, and what he says, is filled with solid and agreeable Thoughts. He speaks sometimes of the Cruelty and Tyranny of the Turks, of the Violence of the Ministers of the Port, and upon the precipitated Death which many of the Sultans, Bashas and Viziers are forced to suffer. But this Language is only to his Friends and Confidents.

However, though these Letters be neither Greek nor Latin, nor written by a Christian, they contain nothing of Barbarous; and though the Ignorant be in great Numbers amongst the Turks, there are yet Men of great Understanding, that write the Annals of the Ottoman Empire, though they are not easily come by; for, their Books not being printed, they scarce ever reach us. We may notwithstanding believe, That amongst this Nation, that we term Barbarous, there are great and wise Captains, good Men, and learned Authors; as we have amongst us Generals without Conduct, Hypocritical Votaries, and ignorant Fellows that pretend to be Masters.

To justifie what I affirm of the Turks, let us but consider their Victories, which have gained them so many Kingdoms, their Power at Sea, their Exactness to punish Crimes, and to reward Merit. As for Printing, they would never endure it amongst them. A Grand Vizier's Judgment of it was remarkable markable, which shews rather their Prudence than any effect of their Ignorance. A famous Printer of Holland, by Religion a Jew, came to Constantinople, bringing Presses with him, with Characters of all Sorts of Idioms, particularly Arabick, Turk, Greek, and Persian Letters, with design to introduce the use of Printing into that great City. As soon as the Vizier was informed of it, he caused the Jew to be Hanged, and broke all his Engines, and Millions of Characters which he had brought; declaring, it would be a great Cruelty, that One Man should, to enrich himself, take the Bread out of the Mouths of Eleven Thousand Scribes, who gained their Livings at Constantinople by their Pens.

Peruse, Gentle Reader, what I offer, without fear of tiring thy self, or being deceived. As Christian Authors think of nothing ordinarily, but of writing Panegyricks in hopes of Reward, we have reason to believe not to find all the Truth in their Works. Interest and Passion do often make good Princes pass for Tyrants, and unjust and cruel Princes, are sometimes transferred to Posterity for Models of Justice and Clemency. This occasions Histories which issue from so corrupt a Source, to serve like a pitch'd Field for Modern Writers, where the one and the other combat for the destruction of Truth; the one falsly reporting what they have heard; and the other, by ill badly representing the things they seem to witness. Most Princes will have their Altars, and then 'tis no wonder if there are Priests found to sacrifice to Falshood, and Idolaters to deface the Statue of Truth.

There is no General that will not always seem Conqueror, and Princes never confess their Losses, which occasions a Confusion, and the Actions of Men do thereby become doubtful.

How

How many times have we seen both the Victors and Vanquished make Bonfires for their Successes? And, in our Days, we have known the French rejoyce, and the Spaniards and Germans sing their Te Deum for the same thing.

As we are, perhaps, now less just than in Ages past, it is difficult to write things as they are, particularly during the Lives of Princes; whose History cannot be writ without Fear, nor the Truth said without Danger. For these Reasons, we ought not to question the Credit of our Arabian, who reports with Liberty what came to his Knowledge: Besides, he being an Universal Enemy to Christianity, and a concealed one, neither obliged or gained by any, and religiously true to his Prince, whom he adores as a Divinity; it cannot be imagined, that he says any thing for Fear or Favour.

As these Relations have been read with Attention and diligently examined, we may be assured of an exact History, abounding in considerable Events; and this History being separated into Letters as the Author writ them, the Reader may read them without stopping. If he will not acknowledge the Translator's Pains, let him at least receive the Labours of a dead Man with Civility, one that never dreamt his Memorials would be printed, and that served his Master faithfully.

These Sentiments made him exactly follow that Sentence of St. Austin, found in the Front of his works:

Where Love is, there is no Labour, and if there be Labour, the Labour is loved.

The

The Translator hath thought fit to retrench some Ceremonies, and proud Titles of the Eastern People. What is represented here, is in a familiar Style, such as the Ancient Latins used in their Writings to their Consuls, Dictators and Emperors themselves. And, if the Translation be not Elegant as the Arabick, do not accuse the Author, seeing it is not possible to reach the Force and Beauty of the Original.

Have moreover some Respect for the Memory of this Mahometan; for, living unknown, he was safe from the Insults of the Great Ones, so that he might write Truth without Danger, which ordinarily is disguised by Fear or Avarice, having still reported the Transactions of Christians, with no less Truth than Eloquence

If what I have said cannot satisfie the Curious, expect the rest of these Letters, which will be found full of great Actions, Profitable Instructions, and good Morals. Thank God however, who raises Men that employ themselves in vanquishing Ignorance and Idleness. And in rendring Justice to Mahomet, a passionate Slave for the Interest of his Master and the Truth; have some Goodness for the Translator; who being born free, acknowledges no Master but God, his King and his Reason.

VOL. I.

BOOK I.

LETTER I.

Mahmut the Arabian, and Vileſt of the Grand Signior's Slaves, to Haſnadar-baſſy, Chief Treaſurer to his Highneſs at Conſtantinople.

I Have at length finiſhed my Journey, after One hundred and forty days March, arriving at Paris, the 4th of this preſent Moon, according to the Chriſtians Style. I made no ſtay in Hungary, yet ſojourned One and forty days at Vienna; where I obſerv'd all the Motions of that Court, according as I was ordered; of which I ſhall not now ſpeak, having given a full Account to the ever Invincible Vizir Azem. Being but newly arrived, I ſcarce know any Body, and am as little known my ſelf. I have ſuffered my Hair to grow a little below my Ears; and, as to my Lodging, 'tis in the Houſe of an old Flemming, where my Room is ſo ſmall, that Jealouſie it ſelf can ſcarce enter. And becauſe I will have no Enemy near me, I will therefore admit of no Servant.

Being of low Stature, of an ill-favoured Countenance, ill-ſhap'd, and by Nature not given to Talkativeneſs, I ſhall the better conceal my ſelf. Inſtead of my Name, Mahmut the Arabian, I have taken on me that of Titus the Moldavian; and, with a little Caſſock of black Serge, which is the Habit I have choſen, I make two Figures; being in Heart what I ought to be; but Outwardly, and in Appearance, what I never intend.

Carcoa at Vienna, furniſhes me with Bread and Water, ſupplying me with juſt enough to live, and I deſire no more. The Eggs here are dearer than Pullets with you. It is to him that I will addreſs my Letters.

Eliachim the Jew came to ſee me, who ſeems to be ſufficiently informed of what paſſes in the World, and will be an uſeful Man to me: Yet I will never truſt him more than I need. Although I have a Diſpenſation from the Muſti for Lying, and falſe Oaths, which I ſhall be obliged to make, yet I have ſtill ſome Qualms on my mind. However our Sovereign muſt be ſerved; and, I can commit no Sin, as long as this is my ſole End: for the Intelligence which I ſhall ſend, none ſhall come from me but what is true, unleſs I be firſt deceived my ſelf.

It will be hard for me to mention any Thing conſiderable of a City which is not to be viewed in One day, I having been there but Seven. 'Tis peopled like the Borders of the Sea with Sand, the Inhabitants lodging to the very Cock-loſts; and Houſes are built on the Bridges.

The

This great City is divided by a River, and both Parts of it are joined by a great Bridge of Stone, well built and very stately. In the midst of it is seen, an Horse of Brass, with the Statue of Henry IV, which bestrides it; whose Heroick Actions have justly surnamed him The Great, and he seems still to command this Capital of the Kingdom. The other Bridges being full of Houses, are not seen, appearing as if they had been made for the City, not the River.

The King's Palace is an ancient Building, yet retains a certain Majesty, which denotes the Grandeur of its Master: Within it appears a Desart; for, the Court is always abroad, or in the Army.

A Church-man, term'd at Rome a Cardinal, is the Principal Minister of State; his Name is Armand du Plessis, Cardinal of Richlieu. He is esteem'd a great Politician, a Man of Wit and Action, and every way fitted for the Place he holds.

All the People make Vows to Heaven, That their King may become a Father; for, the Queen has been barren these many Years.

I go into the Churches as a Christian; and when I seem attentive to their Mysteries, I hold our Sacred Alcoran in my Hands, addressing my Prayers to our Holy Prophet; and thus behaving my self, I give no Offence. I avoid Disputes, mind my own Concerns, and do nothing which may endanger my Salvation.

Preserve thy Health, and expect to hear from me, as oft as the Interest of our Great and Mighty Monarch requires, who is the Master of my Life and Affections.

I make thee no present of my Services: for they be devoted to that Lord, whose Slave thou art as well as I. The Letters I write for the future, shall be directed to the Ministers of the Divan.

Live with the Piety of a good Muſſulman, and the Prudence of an able Miniſter, and preſerve the Treaſure as thine own Heart, (which thou knoweſt) is the laſt expiring.

Paris, 11th of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1637, according to the Chriſtian Style.

LETTER II.

To the ſame Haſnadarbaſſy.

I Had too good an Opinion of my ſelf, and did not ſufficiently conſider to whom I wrote, when I attempted, in ſo little a time, to give thee an Account of the Court of France, and how this King lives. An old Arabian was wont to ſay, To have a perfect Knowledge of Things, we muſt know them more than once, and forget them twice, to the end, that learning them a fourth time, they may become perfectly our own. This will inſtruct me how to write to my Friends hereafter; not as I underſtand Affairs, but as they ought to be underſtood: For, once well done, is better than twice ill done.

I think I may ſay, the Spaniards want Grounds themſelves, by taking an handful from others. Two and twenty of their Galleys, with ſome other ſmall Veſſels, have taken two ſmall Iſlands named St. Margaret's and St. Honorat's, which lie over against Provence, and are barren and unprofitable Places, and will ſerve to little purpoſe, unleſs for Ports; and 'tis alſo a queſtion, how long they will hold them.

The War betwixt theſe Two Nations is like to continue, eſpecially from the Death of the two Ba-that Princes, Victor Amade, Duke of Savoy, and Charles Gonzague, Duke of Mantua.

I believe it an Effect of Providence, that these Two Nations know not their own Interest, or knowing it neglect it. Heaven is more kind to us; for, as our Empire transcends all others in Strength and Greatness, so it does in Unity and Concord, by which means 'tis in our Power to make War or live in Peace. The Christians never consider the Advantage they lose, and the Good they may acquire by attacking of us, whom they yet hate and treat as Barbarians.

The Archbishop of Bourdeaux is at present General of the French Naval Forces; who though a Priest, is yet permitted to turn Turpaulin and Soldier: For my part, I understand not how a Prelate of his Rank can forsake his Flock, his Altar, and his Function. If what the Christians say be true, but that is nothing to us; and the King of France being so enlightned a Prince, and employing him, as he does, he must needs be a good Seaman and Soldier.

To say no more in this Matter, For Princes of what Religion soever they be, are always sacred, and not to be approached but with Respect, seeing their Doings lie above the reach of a common Capacity.

I would fain hear of the Grand Signior's Health; for, when he is well, all the World is so to me, and without him I am nothing. I will not write so soon to the Grand Vizir, being desirous to write what passes here with more exactness.

I am in this Place, like a Man lost in Confusion; for, this Town seems rather a Province than a City. All is hurry and Noise, every Body bustling about after Action. The Men for the most part are for Martial Exploits, either at Sea or Land; and as to the Women, they are not idle, employing themselves as becomes them, either in the Shops or Kitchins. Yet they take more care to shew themselves, than ours do to hide themselves. Do thou be careful of thy Health, for I shall never be Miserable having thee to my Friend.

Paris, 25th of the 10th Moon, of the Year 1637.

LETTER III.

To Darnish Mehemet Bassa.

I Have been at a Ceremony which I am willing to see often, to give an account of it in my Letters; 'tis the Te Deum, which Christian Princes cause to be sung in their Churches, on the gaining any considerable Advantage over their Enemies; which Te Deum is an Hymn composed by Two of their Saints, to wit, Ambrose and Austin. When the French beat the Spaniards they sing the Te Deum, and when these vanquish their Enemies they do the same. These Two Nations do the Duty of the Mussulmans, in destroying one another; and when this is done, they give God Thanks for the Evil they have committed. Whence we may judge of the Wisdom and Piety of the Mahometans, amongst whom there's seldom seen an open War; and, if it should happen, 'tis generally condemned.

The rejoicing of the French proceeds hence; the Spaniards had besieged Leucate, a small Peninsula in Languedoc, which is but four Leagues round, with Two Ports, where a few Galleys, and Four small Vessels may Anchor in safety. The Place was attack'd by the Spaniards with much Heat, but was afterwards given over with as great Loss. The Assailants being obliged to make a Retreat, not unlike a shameful Flight; quitted their Baggage, their Arms, and all their other Provision.

Count Serbellon offered at first to Barrè, who commanded the Place, a great Sum of Money, which was to be attended with a constant Pension; which refused, they were necessitated to betake themselves to Force, by which, in short, the Spaniards were entirely defeated. Serbellon withdrew towards Perpignan, with the Duke of Cardonna's Son, who was Viceroy of Catalonia. He lost all his Tents, his Plate, and the Money designed for Payment of the Army: And I will say yet more, that he has lost the Reputation of a good Captain and valiant Soldier, until he can recover an Opportunity to Fight and Vanquish. This Victory must have been of Consequence and very Glorious, seeing the King assisted in Person, together with the Queen, Two Cardinals, the Council of State, and that of the Finances, and that which they call here, the Courts Sovereign, which are a Company of Men chosen to judge others. Besides these, there was an innumerable Concourse of People, who testified their Joy for the Advantage gained by their King, notwithstanding it be at the Cost of their Brethren of the same Religion.

Live happily, and conserve thy Honour as thy Life.

Paris, 25th of the 10th Moon,
of the Year 1637.

LETTER IV.

To Iſouf his Kinſman.

I Tell thee I live, and am well. I have received no News from thee; perhaps thou thoughteſt me Dead. I Salute thee firſt with my Letters, though thou oughteſt to have begun. If thou art aſhamed of my Kindred, accuſe thy Parents, by whom thou art become of the ſame Family. But be not ungrateful to them, nor forgetful of the Good thou haſt received from me. Thou ſhalt now know where I am and ought to ſtay, and mayeſt anſwer me if thou wilt. Believe in the mean time the Counſel I give thee, although thou doſt not demand it. Be devout in thy Religion without Hypocriſie, and remember there is no more Gods but One; as alſo, that the Favourite, and ſent of God, is Mahomet his Prophet. After that, love thy Maſter, without deſiring any thing more than the Execution of his Pleaſure. Embrace thy Father as from me, and give thy Mother a Kiſs, ſaluting her as my Siſter and Friend, which is the moſt endearing Title that Antiquity could invent for Perſons, who had the ſame Sentiments of Affection. Live happily, and conſerve thy Chaſtity.

Paris, 25th of the 10th Moon,
of the Year 1637.

LET-

LETTER V.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

I Shall give thee ſome Pleaſure in telling thee, that the Chriſtians loſe eaſier than they acquire. It ſeems the Marqueſs Ambroſe Spinola, whom all the World took for a great Captain, has loſt much of his Reputation; ſeeing, that a Place is loſt in Eleven Weeks, which he had formerly beſieged Eleven Months, and where he had expended Eleven Millions. If theſe Circumſtances are true, they are very extraordinary. However, he ſhall continue a great Captain in my Opinion; and it is ordinary enough to ſee that loſt in a little time, by the Cowardlineſs of one, which has not been acquired in a great while by the Valour of a whole Army.

The Prince of Orange hath taken Breda, a Place of great Importance, which had been ſurrendred Twelve Years and Three Months ſince, to the ſaid Spinola, who commanded the Army of Spain. This Conqueſt is great; for, 'twas the general Opinion, the Place could not be taken but by Famine; yet hath it been conſtrained to yield, by the continual Fire and Volour of the Beſiegers.

Had not the Hollanders become Maſters of this Place, they had been, as it were, block'd up on the ſide of Brabant, and had the Enemy always at their Gates; whereas, now they are more at large. We ought to rejoice rather at their Acquiſition, than thoſe of the Spaniards, with whom we never had Peace.

This Place is fortified with much Regularity. It hath fifteen Baſtions, beſides ſome little Forts on the Moat ſide. There are five Horn-works without. The Place is conſiderable for its Greatneſs.

It contains Five thousand Houses, with great Gardens, and there are Three principal Gates.

I mention these Particulars, because thou art a Man of War. Receive my Letter kindly; believe me thy Friend, and do not doubt of my Fidelity. If thou wilt add to thy Valour by new Merit, which will heighten the Consideration Men have for thee, I will teach thee a Secret, which will not be very Expensive, but very Delightful. Read at Times the Histories of others, and particularly those of the Greatest and most Fortunate Princes, and their Captains. Imitate rather the Wise, than those who have only signalized themselves by their Valour. To conclude, be conversant in Histories, but chuse always the best, I mean such as cannot be suspected for Lyes. Thou canst not fail of good Books, both Greek and Arabick, which are translated into the Turkish and Persian Tongues. Thou wilt learn to be wise by the Folly of others, and wilt become yet more prudent, by observing the sage Conduct of such who performed great Actions: Above all Things never neglect to make serious Reflections upon the least Events. It happens sometimes, that Passages are found in Books that seem of no Consequence, which may yet be of use in important Occasions, for the clearing of Difficulties. And for Example, learn this from a great King, Henry IV. who conquered his Kingdom by the dint of his Sword.

I will finish with a worthy Saying of Marquis Spinola's, which I think is to the purpose. He said, That a Captain's Sword must be tied to his Hand, his Hand fixt to his Head, and conducted by his Judgment; which ought particularly to be formed by the reading of Histories. Love me as much as I esteem thee, and thou wilt never love me enough.

Paris, 25th of the 10th Moon, of the Year 1637.

LETTER VI.

To Mehemet, Page Eunuch to the Sultan-Mother.

THou has ſpent Fourteen Years in the Seraglio, and to thy unhappineſs, always been in the Service of Women; ſerve now a Man, who is certainly ſomewhat more than a Woman. Thou knoweſt the Confidence we have in each other is arrived to that Degree, as to diſcover our Failings to each other, and to ſuffer them. Seeing I am at preſent far off, and by Conſequence the more expoſed to Criticks and ill Offices, do not forget the Intereſts of thy Friend. Watch Day and Night for the Advantage of my Life. Obſerve, ſearch and endeavour to penetrate what People diſcourſe of me, and what is ſaid concerning me at Court. Our Great Emperor ſent me hither to obſerve what paſſes here, and render him an Account. I know I am where I ought to practiſe what I am commanded to do, but I do not yet know whether I ſhall return to the Place where I would willingly end my Days. Moſt things are done on that ſide, but they are not all equally performed. I have therefore more juſt Reaſon to apprehend, that all Men do know that I ſhall acquit my ſelf with Fidelity, of the Orders I have received. Conſider how far this unhappineſs doth extend, who ſerves another, who is Maſter of ſo many Millions of Subjects.

I will inform thee of two Things, whereof thou ſhalt tell the firſt to the Baſſa of the Sea, and the other to the Muſti's Vicar. We are told, that the King of England hath ſet forth a Veſſel upon the Britiſh Ocean, of ſuch Prodigious Greatneſs, that it exceeds all others as well in Force as Vastness. It is armed with one Hundred and twenty Brass Guns. It draws Unrigg'd, Seventeen Foot of Water, and its Bulk is Eleven hundred Tun. 'Tis reported, that it cost Two Millions of Piasters, and as if it were the King of all other Ships, it is called The Sovereign. The Second News is, a Prodigy that happened in Upper Saxony, which finds but a little Credit with the Wise, but is easily believed by the Women, and the Common-People.

They say, That at Dresden, one of the Duke of Saxony's Courtiers having cut a piece of boiled Beef, there issued so much Blood out of it, that the Elector's Table was wholly covered with it; which extreamly troubled this Prince, looking upon the Adventure as a Presage of Famine and War. Let me hear often from thee, and of our Friends; but, make no Confidence to any, of that which is betwixt us. Thou shalt learn from me Secrets of great Importance, provided thou be Faithful and Discreet. God grant thee in an instant, the Good which I shall wish to acquire in my whole Life.

LETTER VII.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem.

SEeing thou hast acquired the Knowledge of Things present, by thy Prudence and rare Understanding, and hast desired me to inform thee of those Things which shall happen in the Places wha-whither thou hast sent me; I will endeavour to penetrate into Affairs the most secret, to the end that nothing in this World may be hid from thee.

At present, there are but few Actions in Christendom which deserve to be reported; and thou art sufficiently instructed in the Affairs of France, and touching the Person of her King. I expect to inform thee of Events, which at the same time may divert thee, and instruct thee. The Prince is called Henry the Just. He cannot be called the Happy; for having as yet no Son to succeed him, there will be always Occasion of Trouble in his Kingdom: Nor is there any Hopes that the Queen may prove with Child, by Reason of her long Barrenness. If the King will resolve to be divorced from her, and take another, it cannot be effected without Rome; and Rome, the Mufty, and all their Priests, will, according to their usual Manner, raise so many Difficulties, and be so long before they determine, that it will be a hard Matter to extort from them, that Consent which the Laws of the Christians render necessary for the dissolving a First Marriage. Certainly, this Slavery which doth thus subject the Christian Princes, is hard; but, it is a Point of their Law, which being of no Importance to thee, I will trouble thee no more with it. This Defect of a Successor in the King of France, is of great Advantage to the Spaniards; and one would think, Heaven had created this Nation to be Enemies to the French. It seems moreover, there is a secret Violence which entertains an Antipathy betwixt the Two Nations; which enforces a belief, that there can never be a solid Peace betwixt them.

Thou hast already understood from those I writ to, and who dare hide nothing from thee, what hath happened here during the small time of my Sojourning in these Quarters. I will not repeat little Things; the Greatneſs of thy Genius, and the Eminency of thy Employment, have put thee far above every Thing that is not extraordinary, that we ought to inform thee of nothing but tranſcending Events.

Things

I will not entertain thee with the taking of the Old Town of Sally, nor of the Diſorders in the New. Thou wilt have learned more ſwiftly from the Coaſts of Africk, Advices of the Hoſtile Acts which the Engliſh have committed with their Ships of War, againſt that City, which the King of Morocco protects.

The Attempt was great, and is diſcourſed of here as a hardy Enterpriſe. The vaſtneſs of thy Underſtanding, will eaſily judge of the Conſequence.

They ſay here, that the King of France has writ to Rome, that he will willingly reſolve to make a long Ceſſation of Arms with his Enemies. If that happens, this Repoſe will ſerve but to encreaſe the Forces of both ſides, which may hereafter render the War more cruel. In the mean time, 'tis thought they deſign a General Peace, but Time will diſcover to the Politicians, what we cannot at preſent divine.

This Court is great and Magnificent. It ſtays not long in a Place, and is very ſeldom at Paris; being in the Camp amongſt the Armies, or for Pleaſure in the Country.

The Genius of the Courtiers is different, but they have an equal Inclination for two Things very oppoſite, War and Love; and apply themſelves to both with much Conſtancy.

The Religion which they call Proteſtant, and which has been the occaſion of ſo much diſturbance to the Kingdom, is now low, by the Surrender of Rochell, which was, as thou knoweſt, the Principal Bulwark of thoſe of that Party.

It

It seems this King will imitate our Mighty and Formidable Emperors, and will regulate his Conduct by theirs, in not suffering within his State Two Religions which are opposite.

The Kingdom is notwithstanding, as yet, full of Trouble. Cardinal Richlieu (who holds the Helm of Affairs in France, as thou directest that of the Empire of the World) seems as may be said, in the midst of a Tempest, and hath reason enough to apprehend Danger; for, there are an infinite number of People, who follow the Standards of Luther and Calvin, who have no other Thoughts but of his Ruine.

In the mean time, the Power of France seems mighty Great, and 'tis to be apprehended, it may in Time augment infinitely.

Thou knowest, Invincible Bassa, what the ancient Gauls did in Old Time. They were called Gallogrecians; for having over-run Italy and sack'd Rome, they settled in the middle of Asia, and could not be overcome but by the Romans: because the Heavens had ordained, that the Romans should subjugate all Nations. But now that these Gauls are no more, and there are no more of these brave Romans, we must pray the Infinite Goodness of the most High, that the Power of these Modern Gauls may be limited. If the French however would do, what a Spaniard, who fled from the Passion of Philip II counselled Henry IV. their King, which was, To set himself right with Rome, to have a great Power at Sea, and a Counsel composed of Wise, Secret and Faithful Men; by that means, he might one day perhaps equal the Ancient Romans. I think he that gave this Advice was named Antonio Perez.

I observe every thing with Care, but shall observe them neater for the future. It appears to me, that the Genius of this Nation is to aggrandize it self, and extends its Limits.

The

The French have a common saying, That Kings having nothing above them that may limit them, God hath given the Empire of the Earth to the strongest. They add, That Adam left no Kingdoms to his Children, but that they made them for themselves. They glory in certain Prophecies, which promise them the Empire of the World. In relating this, I tell what they say, not what ought to happen. They entertain here the same Hatred for us, as others do when our Power is Formidable; but wise Men who have Knowledge of our History, speak with more Admiration of the Ottoman Empire, than that of the Romans; and if these last were restored by the Civil Wars which tore them in Pieces, the other will encrease and maintain it self, by the great Pre-cautions used to hinder them, and by the Union of their Forces.

Thou knowest more of the Extent of the City of Paris, than I can tell thee. It appears to me, great and full of People; but Constantinople is yet Greater, and more Populous.

Thou wilt pardon me after all, if I make not a certain Judgment of a Nation, which I do not yet well comprehend. However I will assure thee, the French are no Fools, and I believe never were. They do not love Novelty through Levity, but for Reason of State; and when they are unconstant, it is not to do ill, but to acquire Good. They are Happy and Unfortunate in Wars, like others; but, what is considerable, They do not combat their Enemies because they hate them, but in Obedience to their Prince, which occasions the great Discipline which is in their Armies. And, what seems worthy of Reflection, is, That they love their King by Inclination; and, this Love produces in them, that which our Attachment to the Precepts of the Law, does in the Hearts of the best Turks. I use this Comparison, which I learnt from thee, who are the wiſeſt Man in the World; from whoſe Mouth I have heard, as from an Oracle, That it is not much material, whether Subjects love their Maſter by Inclination or Fear, provided they always faithfully ſerve him, and are always humble.

If ever it happen I am diſcovered, thou wilt do me a great Honour to let me know, if I ought to avow my ſelf an Agent from the ſublime Port; or, whether I ought to die without confeſſing any Thing.

I end with my Head in the Duſt, without ever ceaſing to ſupplicate the Moſt High, that he will ſhower his continued Happineſs upon thee and the Empire.

Paris, 15th of the 11th. Moon, of the Year 1637.

LETTER VIII.

To Muzlu Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

THis is the Second Letter which I have writ to thee. My Diſpatches hitherto have not been filled with Things of great Importance, by reaſon I have not yet had Time to learn them. I wiſh greatly to write what may pleaſe thee. Receive therefore what I offer kindly, and be perſwaded, That I fear thy Cenſures, as much as if I did deſerve them.

I live here according to the Inſtructions which were given me, and live eaſie enough. The Country is good and fat, the men good Companions, are frank and ſeem Diſcreet.

I have not as yet any Acquaintance with Women, and yet it is necessary I find Means to introduce my self into their Companies. It is a Sex that will not pardon, when they think themselves neglected. They are proper to discover Things one would know, and to say them when one would have them published; and likewise, they as much penetrate into the Secrets of Hearts, as the most refined and spiritualest Courtiers. Further, there are many of them that can conceal nothing, but what they do not know.

I frequent not the Monks, but when necessitated. If I see them, it is to seem devout, upon Design of being introduced by them into the House of a Minister of State, when I teach his Son the Greek Language.

We must not expect to find here the great Tranquility which is at Constantinople. The Town is so full of Coaches, of Horses and Waggons, that the Noise surpasses Imagination. Thou wilt certainly find it strange, that Men who are in Health, and have no sore Legs, should cause themselves to be drawn in an Engine with Four Wheels; but I more wonder to see these same Men can resolve to suffer the Inconveniency of the Noise, and of the Expence which they throw away out of Vanity. The more moderate French, which do not approve of this Luxury, say, That in the time of Henry III. there were but Three Coaches in Paris, whereof two were the Kings. But the number is now so great, that they are not to be counted.

I can tell thee no more of the Genius of the French, thou knowest it perfectly. There is in all their Actions a Spirit very delicate, and an Activity like that of Fire.

It seems as if none but they knew the short Duration of Man's Life; They do every Thing with so much haste, as if they had but one Day to live.

if they go on Foot, they run: if they ride, they fly; and if they speak, they eat up half their Words. They love new Inventions passionately. I can say nothing certain of their Fidelity, though methinks we might suspect such, who do not read as they write, nor write as they speak. They love Money, which they look upon as the first Matter, and second Cause of all Things: They well nigh adore it, and that is the Original Sin of all Nations.

Paris ought to be destroyed, to enrich many Cities in Europe. Whence thou mayst comprehend her Greatness, her Traffick, how Rich she is, and how all sorts of Arts do flourish in her.

The French Nobility is always ready to get on Horseback at their King's Commands: And they love War so well, that it is to be supposed, we should have enough to do with them, if we were as near them as the Spaniards, and they did not want Infantry.

I shall hereafter observe every Circumstance with so much care, as well in this Kingdom as elsewhere, that nothing shall escape me. In the mean time I shall endeavour to get Acquaintance; but shall want more Money than is allowed me, to answer what is expected from me. Two Chequins a Day, are more than enough to support a Man that will live like a Cynick, but not sufficient to introduce me into their Houses, to dive into their Secrets, and enable me to discover the Affairs of most Importance, according to my Commission; so that thou must assist me to obtain more.

I hope to succeed in my Employment, if thou dost not refuse me thy Assistance, finding no Difficulty in the Execution of my Orders, but the Necessity of Lying, when I pass for a Christian. I fancy I see Mahomet in a Rage, and believe my Soul lost; though I am from my Heart more faithful in my Religion, than all the Mahometans put together gether. Seeing I am resolved to do a Thing to which I have so much Aversion, thou mayest be assured, I will bear all the Evil imaginable that can happen to me with Firmness, though in all appearance I ought to hope nothing but Good.

Deliver, I beseech thee, this inclosed Letter into the Hands of the most Venerable Mufti, and extort from him, if possible, a Solution of my Doubts. There is nothing that touches me nearer, than what regards my Religion, and with my Religion the Service of my Emperor.

Paris 15th of the 11th Moon,
of the Year 1637.

LETTER IX.

To the Mufty, Prince of the Religion of the Turks.

I Will die a true Musſulman, though I should see all the Crosses of the Carthaginians set up for my Punishment, and had before mine Eyes, all the Instruments of the most Cruel Tortures, that the Enemies of our Holy Religion could invent. But, seeing there is no Question at present of dying, but of living to serve my Emperor, I beg of thee, Sovereign Prelate, that thou wilt be pleased to conserve my Innocence, in giving me an ample Absolution, or in imposing a Penance that may cancel all my Crimes.

Paris hath always been the Residence of the Kings of France; whence it is, that the Exercise of no other Religion but the Christian, is suffered there; and those who acknowledge the Bishop of Rome for their their Head, have the principal Management of the Affairs of Religion; and 'tis with these, that the Rites of the Latin Church are more strictly observed.

I live here in Appearance, as if I were a Christian and a Catholick. I enter into their Churches, assist at their Ceremonies, kneel before the Cross; and I appear with great Devotion and Humility before the Images, which are had here in Veneration.

I know well enough, if the Life which I lead be not permitted me, as advantagious to the Affairs of State, and the Person of the Grand Signior, that I commit Sacrilege, acting as I do, contrary to the Precepts of Mahomet, expressed in his Alcoran.

I am guilty of violating the Law which is prescribed me, and deserve Death, if thou dost not, by approving this Life I am obliged to lead, assure me of both my Salvation and Life. 'Tis true, thou hast already given me Absolution from all the false Oaths I shall be necessitated to take, when they are for the Service of my Master; but I am not assured this Absolution extends far enough to secure my Conscience, when I abuse Holy Things.

'Tis thy Province to decide this Point which is of such Importance to my Repose, which makes me expect thy Resolves with Impatience; if thou thinkest a Faithful Musulman, who conserves his Religion in his Heart, and lives, as I do, amongst the Enemies of the Law, worthy this Grace.

The Interest of my Conscience obliges me to demand, after what manner I ought to govern my self, when I see them, who are effectively what I seem to be, practise the same Acts of Religion.

The French will in a little Time celebrate their Carnaval or Shrove-tide. As soon as it is done, the Catholicks think of Fasting, having first assisted at a Ceremony, where Ashes are put upon their Foreheads, heads, to make them remember, they were formed out of the Duſt, and ſhall return to Duſt again. It is at this Time they go to hear Sermons, their Prieſts explaining that which they call the Goſpel, and frequent the Church more than ordinary. They apply themſelves oftner to Works of Piety; and having purged their Conſciences by Penances and ſecret Confeſſions, which one Man makes to another, they eat of a certain Bread, which they call The Sacrament of the Euchariſt, where, after certain Words pronounced by their Prieſt, they will have the Body of their Meſſiah to be really preſent under thoſe Apparent Species.

This Ceremony is an Obligation that good Chriſtians cannot diſpenſe with, it being ordained by their Law, and by their Great Prelate, the Biſhop of Rome. They commonly call it Confeſſion, and Communicating, and Keeping Eaſter. Ought I hazzard my ſelf in committing ſo horrid a Sacrilege, and tempt, as I may ſay, God, by ſo great a Superſtition, and ſo irritate our Great Prophet? It may be ſaid, perhaps, that many Jews have done the ſame Thing, and do it yet every day to preſerve themſelves more ſecurely. But how many of them have been chaſtiſed by viſible Miracles from Heaven, and undergone terrible Puniſhments by the Ordinances of the Judges?

All theſe Reflections trouble my Spirit, O Holy Primate of the moſt Divine Law. I do not think it lawful, to mock the Myſteries of any Religion whatſoever. The God of the Chriſtians, is the ſame that we adore; but Their Religion is quite oppoſite to Ours: There is a great difference betwixt their JESUS Crucifi'd, with all the Ignominies poſſible, as theſe Infidels do believe, and a Mahomet Immortal and Triumphant, a great Legiſlator and the Angular Stone of the firſt Empire of the World.

Give

Give me then positive Orders, to the end I may be eased of my Scruples, and may believe, That what thou permitteſt, may be an Effect of thy Juſtice, and not of a Toleration which may be pernicious to me.

'Tis true, I may wave all theſe things in feigning to have done them; but it will be more advantageous for my Affairs, not to exempt my ſelf, if that may be without a Crime.

Teach then a moſt Obedient Slave, what thou ſhalt believe moſt conducible to the Glory of God, and moſt profitable for the Service of our Soveraign Lord. I do not ſend thee my Doubts to puzzle thee, but to draw from thy great and ſublime Genius, ſuch Lights as may diſſipate the Darkneſſes I live in.

This done, Sovereign Prelate, remember thy Humble Servant, and pray our Holy Prophet, that he will keep me from periſhing.

Paris 15th of the 11th Moon of the Year 1637.

LETTER X.

To the Kamachan.

I Received from thy Hand the firſt Diſpatch that has been addreſſed to me from the Sublime Port, and I received it at the Beginning of the Year, according to the Moons of theſe Infidels. The Date is of the Month Meelidge. Thou order'ſt me to write to thee of Two Things, and to do Three. Thou wilt firſt know, If this King be Aged, and of perfect Health; and afterwards, If there be any

any Hopes that the Queen may have Children. Thou wouldeſt alſo have me ſend his Highneſs the Pictures of the King, the Cardinal of Richlieu, and the Eldeſt Son of the Prince of Condé.

As thou art one of the Principal Supports of the Power of the Sublime Port, elevated above all the Thrones of the World, (after the Vizir Azem, whoſe Orders are the Rule of the Univerſe) Miniſter and firſt Slave of the happy Emperor of the Ottomans; I ought to do what thou commandeſt me.

I tell thee then, I have ſeen this King Thrice, nor doth he appear by his Countenance, by his Hair, or by his Shape, to be yet Old; neither would it be eaſie to divine the Number of his Years, if we were ignorant of the Day of his Birth; But it is known to every Body, that this Prince was born the 27*th* of the Ninth Moon, of the Year 1601, according to the Style of the Chriſtians.

By this thou may'ſt juſtly calculate the Age of this Monarch, who though he is in his Flower, ſeems fading, becauſe he hath as yet given no Heir to his Kingdom; beſides, his Years being near Forty, ſurpaſs that of a young Man; and 'tis obſerved, That few Princes arrive to a great Age.

The Queen may ſtill lie in, if ſhe proves with Child; which if it ſhould happen after Twenty three Years of Barrenneſs, 'tis certain, a Fruit which hath been ſo long in ripening, will give an ample Subject of reaſoning to the Aſtrologers of Europe.

For my part, I fancy this King will ſcarce become a Father, unleſs they Repudiate this Wife and marry another.

It is not permitted to be inquiſitive into the Cauſe of this Sterility. Hereby thou ſeeſt the Weakneſs of thoſe Chriſtian Princes, who are ſubjected to the Laws of Rome, which think it a Crime to give themſelves Heirs that are not born of lawful wedlock; tho' it often happens, that when such are wanting, this Kingdom is expos'd to Ruin, by the Dissentions and Civil Wars, which, on these Occasions, are always inevitable.

The most High, who hath always protected the Grandeur of the Ottoman Empire, hath left the Infidels in these Errors; to the End, that he might give our most Mighty Monarch, who is the Avenger of the Divine Unity, an Eminence Superior to that of all Kings, who are his Slaves; and at the same Time, made him Holy above all the Saints in the World, and permitted us to have Children, that may succeed us, from as many Wives as we can entertain; the Children of True Believers being always Legitimate.

I humbly beg Pardon; I forgot I spoke to thee, who art Wisdom it self, and to whom no Secrets of the Law or State are unknown.

I will send to Caire or Vienna, the Pictures of the King, of the Prince of Conti's Son, and of the Cardinal Richelieu, according to the Orders I received from thee, and they shall be dispatch'd in little Time; I would to Heaven I could as easily send thee the Originals; I should at one stroke disarm this Kingdom, which would thereby be suddenly involv'd in Fire and Blood.

The Habit I wear, and the manner after which I live, have already gained me many Friends. I find Means to escape a Wreck to Court. My Deformity procures me access to the Jealousies of Husbands. Some People take me for a Wise Man, and discourse confidently in my Presence of Politicks and Affairs of State; neither do I neglect the making Use of every Thing which may be advantageous to my Master. Thus in doing a Thing for the which I have much Aversion, I compass all I desire; and I swear thee, upon my Faith, if thou will continue to protect me and assist me with thy Counsels, I will do somewhat extraordinary.

I supplicate the Great God, to give a perpetual Health to thy Body, and make thy Soul enjoy upon Earth and in Heaven, the Felicity of the Blessed.

Paris, 1st. of the 1st. Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XI.

To Bedredin, Superior of the Convent of Dervises of Cogny in Natolia.

I Write to thee, who art Venerable by thy Age, and so many long Voyages, which thou hast made. Thou who hast been so many Times in Pilgrimage to Arabia, Tartary, Persia, and the Indies, always barefoot, and begging, out of pure Devotion to the Saint of Saints, our Great Prophet Mahomet.

I address this Letter to thee; Thee, who bearest the Scars of five and twenty great Wounds; Thee, who hast prayed nine and Fifty Times in the Sacred Porch, and adored the Holy Mysteries in the most retired Sanctuary of Mecha, and hast lived more than seventy Years of Religion amongst the Dervises, where thy Merit caused thee to be elected Superior of the Convent in Natolia.

Thou knowest well, that I serve him, who is Arbitrator of the Destiny of the Universe, I mean the Sultan, Sovereign of the World. Learn what I heard here from the Mouth of Thyrsias, and pardon me, if I have not sufficiently answered thee; but do not accuse me to have deserved Death, for having having seemingly cursed our Holy Law, and Him that gave it us; and if I have seemed to reject his Successors, Ali, Osman and Omar, it was expedient that I should commit some Evil, not to lose the opportunity of doing much Good.

Thou knowest well, I am destined to serve; and, that being absolved from all the Perjuries I shall commit, I may transgress the Law by being permitted to lye. That suffices: Read my Letter, and learn how far their Malice does extend, who are Enemies to our Religion.

To instruct thee better in what has happened to me, I must tell thee, that amongst these Infidels, there is an Order of Religious much in Vogue, called the Company of JESUS; wherein, there is an infinite Company of Men, some more able than others in all sorts of Sciences sacred and prophane; and, according to appearance, ought to be very recommendable for the Holiness of their Manners.

These Religious, who are ordinarily called Jesuites, have the Education of the Youth almost in all the Cities of Europe, as well as in the Indies; and many excellent Wits are brought up in the Seminaries they have establish'd. When they Preach, the People crowd to their Sermons. They are the Confessors of almost all the Princes and Monarchs of Christendom, who discover to them their weaknesses, their Sins, and the Vices whereunto they are enclined; and receive from them, upon their knees, like Slaves, such Penance as they think fit to impose on them.

A Man may say of them, That being Dispensers of Penances, they are also the Masters of Recompences. They are Habited in a long Vest of black Wool, which descends to their Heels. They go not bare-foot, but their Vestments are simple. They observe great Modesty in all their Actions; they march with Gravity, never go alone, and suf-ſer not their Beards to grow. They apply themſelves to edify the Good, and to correct the Bad.

The Founder of this Order was a Souldier, called Ignatius. The Spaniards will have him to have been of their Nation; and the French affirm, that he is of that Part of Navarre, which is ſubject to the Crown of France. If thou wouldſt have me to ſpeak the Truth, I think this Founder was a good Man, ſeeing all his Diſciples are Men of Good Example, of great Modeſty in their Actions, and very Diſcreet in all their Undertakings.

This Ignatius began to ſtudy his Grammar in his Seven and Thirtieth Year, which would make one believe, he took leſs Pains to become a Saint than a Scholar. His Enemies call his Diſciples, the Politicians of the Church; and I, on the contrary, call them the Camels of Eſau; becauſe in bearing the Burthen of the Affairs of their Religion, they are loaded more than others, and forced to couch under their Burthens. There is one thing ſeems ſtrange in them, to wit, that they ſhould name themſelves the Religious of the Society of Jeſus; as if they had a deſign to diſtinguiſh themſelves from other Chriſtians; and that this Title, which is particular to them, ought not only to agree to all the other Religious, but to all the Followers of the Nazarite.

If they follow the Precepts of their Father Ignatius, thou muſt needs approve their way of living. He has taught no other way than that of obedience, to thoſe that profeſs his Order. He ordains, That thoſe who enter into this Society, do abandon themſelves to the Diſcretion of their Superiours. And they affirm, That if the Pope commands them to paſs the Sea in a Veſſel without Oars, without Sails, and without a Rudder, they would obey and muſt paſs. And ſome having reproached them that there was Folly in ſuch blind Obedience:

once: They answer, That Wisdom ought to be observed in the Commandments, and that it ought not to be searched in Obedience. Make Reflections upon this Sentence, which is conformable to our Laws.

To inform thee of the Power and Greatness of this Order, it suffices to tell thee, That during Sixteen Years that this Souldier governed it, he saw an Hundred Colleges in Italy, in Germany, in France, and in Spain; and that in Rome, which was founded by Borgia, hath been, as may be said, the Parent of all the rest. Judge hereby the Number of their Houses, and Disciples.

Having one Day met with one of this Society who understood the Oriental Languages: and who conversing with me, did not believe he discoursed with a Mussulman: I heard him vomit injurious, and fearful Imprecations against Mahomet, against his Law, and against all true Believers. I have so much Horror to write to thee all he said, that I will tell thee but some few of them; and the rather to divert thee, by the knowledge of the Errors of our Enemies; and also, that thou mayst not be afflicted at some Things not very seasonable, which are observed in many of the Precepts of the Law, which we follow. Let this be said, as if I had not spoken it, seeing I pour frankly the Secrets of my Heart into thy Bosom, no ways doubting, but thou knowest to be silent in what may cause my Death. This Jesuite maintains, That the Mussulmans are not wise in following the Precepts of a Drunkard, who forbad drinking of Wine, and committed Excesses himself, when he thought he was unobserved. He maintains further, That it is foolish to give Credit to such a Fellow, who makes a Paradise to consist of Beautiful Women, where one may abandon himself to all sorts of Pleasure and Debauchery, and that he hath not foreseen a Hell, where he, and all his Followers, ought to suffer the Pains due to their Crimes. He adds further, That one must be very foolish to adore a Blasphemer, who hath commanded his Law should be maintained by the Sword, when it could not be supported by Reason.

The Father did not leave off so, he said, That seeing the Alcoran is filled with Dreams, with Bestialities, with Blasphemies and Impurities; the Mufti's, the Doctors and Interpreters of the Law, must be in a great Blindness, not to condemn a Possessed, an Enchanter, who gives for the Precepts of his Religion the committing of Violences, Robberies, and all that may satisfie the most Irregular Appetites. What Extravagancy, urged he, to adore the Heel of so vile a Slave as Mahomet, and to believe, upon his Reports, that Jacob's Father was his Porter, to Deify his Camel, and to place it in Heaven? He adds further, That there is nothing so absurd, as to command the Turks to wash their Bodies, when their Souls are defiled with Filth; to give them at the same time Charity by Precept, and to command them Robberies by Devotion. It seems also to him foolish, to believe that Mahomet is the only True Prophet, the only agreeable Person to God; and to Swear afterwards by One Hundred and Twenty Four Thousand Prophets. He still entertains me with this sort of Discourse.

But all this (O great Dervis) is nothing; he vomits yet this damnable Heresie, That the wickedest ellt Wretches, and the moſt deteſtable that ever liv'd, were Judas, Mahomet, and Luther; That theſe two laſt, as moſt impious, are the more tormented in Hell. Judas, he ſaid, ſuffers leſs pains, becauſe if he betrayed his Lord, he was one of the Inſtruments of the Redemption of all Mankind; whereas the others in damning themſelves, damn'd alſo an infinite Number of other People. This Jeſuit would have continued his Blaſphemies, if Cardinal Richlieu, in whoſe Anti-Chamber we were, had not come out of his Cloſet, to go to the King.

I had been ſilent all this while, becauſe he gave me not a moment's liberty to ſpeak. At length, he aſked me at parting, If I was not of his Sentiments, and I anſwered preciſely thus; My Father, If thou art a good Man, I approve what thou ſay'ſt, becauſe thou ſpeakeſt out of true Zeal; but, If thou beeſt a Hypocrite, I diſapprove all; becauſe thou ſhalt be damned with Mahomet, and all the Muſſulmans.

The Jeſuit ſmiled, not comprehending the Venom which lay hid in my Anſwer. But, doſt thou not believe, thou, who art a Dervis, the moſt illuminated, That a Man, of what Religion ſoever he be, provided he be a good Man, may be Happy after his Death? Tell me, I pray thee, thy Opinion herein; it is a Point very important to be decided.

As for me, I begin really to think, That there may be Saints, even amongſt the Chriſtians, as there are amongſt Us. I have ſeen and underſtand many Things that denote true Piety in ſome of them; and we muſt acknowledge, That the Precepts of their Law have ſomewhat of Juſt; and if they be well obſerved, they ſeem no leſs Holy to me than our own. They have one Article that puzzles me. They affirm, There is but one Truth, so that we are lost, if we are not Christians, he they are damned, if they are not Mahometans.

And this is what I had to say to thee in this Matter; but, I shall not end this Discourse, without some violent Scruples of Conscience. Pray the Great God with me, That he will illuminate my Understanding with inward Lights, until the time promised by our Holy Prophet; the Man, I say, who ought to be born of his Race, be descended upon the Earth; Who is to see all Kings humbled in his Presence, and to unite with Jesus the Two Religions that they may make but One.

In the mean Time let us live as honest Men, who have Sin in horror, like the Plague, which poisons the Soul; and apply our selves, as much as in us lies, to what is truly Good; and above all things, let us carefully observe this Precept, writ in the Book of their Law, but is not always imprinted in their Hearts, Never do to others, as all thy Enemies, that which thou wouldst not have done to thy self. A Duke of Guise gave an Example of this to all France; and 'tis what thou oughtest to preach in the vast Empire of the Musselmans. This Prince surprized a Villain that would have Assassinated him, who confessed that the Interest of his Religion (which was that of Calvin) had obliged him to form a Design to take him away, to deliver himself, and those of his Party, from so great an Enemy. The Duke, instead of causing him to suffer the Pains due to so black an Enterprise, Pardoned him, contenting himself to tell him, Friend, If thy Religion Obliged thee to Kill me, without hearing me, my Religion Obliges me to give thee thy Life and Liberty, now I have heard thee. Go thy ways, and amend thy self. This Prince was then General of Charles the IX's Army.

Sage Bedredin, but Mahomet never the wiser for such generous Sentiments, when he prescribed to his

Law

Law this Precept against Christians, that had never Offended him; When you Encounter the Infidels, kill them, and cut off their Heads, imprison them, and keep them in Chains, until they have paid their Ransoms, or till you find it requisite to set them at Liberty. Persecute them until they have all submitted, or are intirely overthrown.

Observe in this Letter, what may be of use to thee. Pardon my Friendship, the frank Manner of Writing, and remember Maimun in thy Prayers, who personates a Christian, and in his Heart a most faithful Mussulman. If it be in thy Power to succour me, never do me any Injury. God protect and govern thy great Age to the last Moment.

LETTER XII.

To Chirurgi Muhammet Bassa.

THE Queen is with Child, when least expected, which occasions much Joy at Court, especially to the King; who, after so many Years of Marriage, will become a Father.

Thou, who hast applied thy self so long to the Studies of Astrology in the Schools of Egypt, yet makest Profession of this Divine Art, which discovers these Things the most hidden to thee; who readest so learnedly in the Book of Heaven, whatever the Stars have traced there, who hast found the Moment of their Rising and Disappearing, with the Intervals betwixt these two Times, and the Causes which render their Motion quicker or flower; thou who penetrateſt into the moſt hidden Secrets of Men, and knoweſt the Seaſons of Famine, of Shipwracks, of Victories, and of loſs of Battels: Divine in God's Name, Great Interpreter of the Secrets of Nature, wiſer than Albumazar and Ptolomy, what will become of this Impregnation; and whether it be true, that this Child that's to be born, has been more than two Hundred and Seventy Moons in forming?

If thou believeſt what I writ laſt to thee to be impoſſible, ſay nothing of it; it would be no Credit to me, to paſs for the Author of a Novel, that has no grounds of Truth.

The City of Paris is in an inconceivable Joy: and this Joy is ſpread all over France. Thou may'ſt perceive by that, the Paſſion of this People to ſee their King a Father. 'Tis true, they have much to hope by it; but it is as certain, they have yet much to apprehend, ſeeing all their Hopes vaniſh in an inſtant.

Nature uſes all her Power when ſhe forms a Man, the moſt perfect of all Creatures. But, there needs but a ſlight Fall, to deſtroy this Workmanſhip before it is finiſhed, as well as after.

I have heard a great many People queſtion much the Sex and Life of that which will be born.

All the Converſation at the Court, at Paris, and in all the Kingdom, is no more of Wars, of Leagues, of Peace, or Naval Preparations; they all rowl upon the bringing to Bed of Women.

There will be other reaſoning in ſome ſmall time in Chriſtendom; and even amongſt us, if the Queen do not miſcarry; France being no leſs conſiderable amongſt other Kingdoms, than the Bourbons are amongſt Men. Henry IV. who introduced the Crown into this Branch of the Family, was a Prince very brave; and if we live long enough to ſee his

Grand Children, we shall see, whether they will have as much Courage as the Chief of their Family.

As for thee, thou wilt have wherewith to divert thee, and exercise thy Talent, if this Queen be brought to Bed happily of a Prince. I shall in the mean time be very exact to mark, not only the Days and Hours, but the least Minutes; to the End thou may'st know, by the Situation of the Planets, which ordinarily regulate the Inclinations of Men, in what manner, a Prince so long expected, will regulate his Affairs, and consequently those of others.

It is a great while since we have had any Commerce here with the Sun, there being forty nine Days since this beauteous Planet appeared to us; and the Cold is so violent, that it has changed (as I may say) the Waters of the Seine, a large River, into Chrystal. Do not look upon these Effects as extraordinary; it happens here frequent enough; for, when the Days are shortest, the Cold is most intense. Thou knowest, that this Climate is very inconstant. I have often seen, in a little space of Time, Rain, Hail, Snow, and terrible Winds; and presently after, the Air become Fair and Serene. This inconstancy of the Climate, has its Advantages; for, if the fair Weather do not last long, the foul is also of less Duration.

Fail not, upon the Receipt of my Letter, to communicate the News I send thee, to the Grand Vizir, without telling him the Reflections which I make. They are of no use to such great Ministers, particularly by us, who are in comparison of them, but vile Slaves, always subject to the Sentences they pronounce of us.

Love me, and consult the Stars to know, whether thou wilt be always Faithful to me; and, if it be by Force or Inclination.

As

As for my self, I assure thee, that following the Inclination of my Heart, I will conserve thee the Fidelity which I owe by Obligation.

LETTER XIII.

To Carcoa at Vienna.

THE Kaimacham commands me forthwith to send the Pictures of the King of France, the Eldest Son of the Prince of Conde, and of the Cardinal Richlieu. I caused them suddenly to be Copied from the Originals, by an Italian Painter, who passes for one of the best of these Times.

These Three Heads are the principal of France, if not of all Europe: The First, by reason of a great and potent Kingdom, which is this Day more flourishing than all others: The Second by reason of his Nobility or Royal Blood, and by his extraordinary Courage: And the Third, by a Wise Conduct in a Ministry full of Difficulties; being as it were, the absolute Master of Disgraces and Recompences.

As soon as these Pictures are delivered to thee, whole and well conditioned, pay the Express I dispatched to thee, the Sum contained in the Billet, which he will present to thee from me. That done, send the Packet to Constantinople, without loss of time, and address it to the Kaimacham.

I beseech thee order the Business of my Pension so, that I shall not need to desire the Payment of it.

in. Send me presently what is ordered me for my Subsistence. Nothing in the World appears so terrible to me, as to be obliged to ask for it.

I have only Moneys for six days, after which I should eat nothing but raw Herbs and Water. Both cost Money here, and every Thing is sold very dear, except Civilities and obliging Terms, which you have for nothing, and whereof they are very liberal. I must Live, I must have Clothes, change to Court; for all which there must be Bread, Cloth or Serges, and Coach-hire. Thou knowest at present my Wants, suffer me not to languish with Expectation. Thou will injure the Emperor, and not Mahomet, if thou dost not readily assist his Slave.

The great God preserve thy Life, if thou doest not forget me; and give thee Grace to be Sober, in a Country where People do not always drink Wine to quench their Thirst.

Paris, 28th of the 3d. Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XIV.

To William Vorpel, a Christian of Austria.

I Am obliged to thee for the Confidence thou hast in me, in declaring to me thy Loves. Another would have rejoiced in hearing of thy Two Adventures: but, as I do not believe it is a great Evil to lose a Wife, so I cannot think it is a considerable Good to turn Monk. It is impossible for me to forbear telling thee, That I find thy Reso-

Resolution too sudden to approve of it. Thou art not the Cause of the Loss thou hast sustained, and yet retirest into a Convent to do Penance, as if thou hast committed a Crime.

Is it necessary thou torment thy Body for the Death of a Wife, if thou hast not Murthered her? If thou didst love her, because she was Discreet, it is not impossible to find another as Prudent. If her Beauty charmed thee, there are enough that may please; but if thou were weary of being a Husband, why are thou then of being a Widower? Tell me, What wilt thou do at present in the Convent thou art shut up in? The Carmelities are Wise indeed, but know not all Things. It is true, they are very Devout, but not exempted from Sin: Finally, they are Men, and too austere. How canst thou so suddenly accustom thy self to that kind of Life thou hast chosen, and become once Chast and Sober? As for me, who am a Christian as thou art, and more restrained in my Pleasures than thou hast hitherto been, I cannot understand what I see in that Order thou art entred into; neither can I figure to my self, how a Man bare-footed, without a Shirt, covered with a coarse Habit of Wooll, who is no Master of Crowns, and who hath no Armies, should absolutely command, not only another Man, but many, who obey blindly what he requires of them.

To live well in thy Order, thou must Fast; the least Faults are not Pardon'd; thou must receive Offences with Thanks: Finally, the Combat is assured and constant, and there is but little Certitude of the Crown which ought to be the Reward. Thy greatest Friend is obliged to betray thee, and thou wilt be deprived (as it may be said) of the Elements, to make thee desire the use of Water, Air, Earth and Fire. I cannot persuade my self, that there are so many Things required quired to make a Saint; for, when thou loveſt God, as much as it is in thy Power to do, and paſſeſt every Day, as if it were thy laſt, I believe thou wilt Live and Die a Juſt Man. Return me an Anſwer, and let me know, If what I write to thee be Conformidable to right Reaſon; or, that I am deceived in my Opinion. The Friendſhip I have for thee obliges me to write as I do, and to tell thee all I think that regards thee; becauſe after thou haſt taken thy laſt Reſolution, I would rather ſee thee ſuffer with Conſtancy, all the Evils Imaginable, than to ſee thee change with Confuſion. There are many, who have abandoned with ſhame, the Places which they entred in Triumph; and how many have been puſhed by their Deſpair, to commit Follies which ſeemed Actions of Piety, which they had never undertaken in their right Wits?

We ſee in our Hiſtories, That many great Men have cauſed themſelves to be Circumciſed, thereby to have Commerce with the Jews, and be inſtructed in their Doctrines, finding their Ancient Temple Magnificent, Venerable, Holy and full of Majeſty. We alſo read, That Pythagoras cloathed himſelf in white, and ſtay'd ſome time amongſt the Sinuaries of Mount Carmel, to learn the Miſteries of their Religion. His Curioſity was the Occaſion of this great Man's Voyage, as their Ignorance had cauſed the ſame Deſign in others. It is not the Deſire to be inſtructed, which made thee enter into the Convent; the Affliction for the Loſs thou haſt ſuffered, made thee take this Reſolution. Take heed of quitting it by a Repentance, which would prove an Excels of Folly. The Jews are at preſent Vagabonds, without Law, without a Kingdom, without Altars; and according to the Alcoran, they will be Metamorphoſed into Aſſes, to carry the Souls of the wicked Mahometans into Hell. Who knows what will become of the Carmelites?

They

They say Elias is not Dead, but is to return to the Earth, to combate those Men who shall rise to trouble the World about the establishing a New Religion. Stay still where thou art, or return presently from whence thou camest; lest after too long a stay, to come out in form, thou commit a Fault, that God will not easily pardon, which will doubtless happen, if thou perswade thy self, that thou canst not find the Way to Heaven, but out of the Noise of this World.

If thou dost not find I advise thee well, do thou better; but, above all things, govern thy self so, that God may not reproach thee one Day, That a Moldavian gave thee good Advice, and thou didst neglect it. The worst of Turks might give the same Advice that I do, as a good Christian; and it would be no surprizing Thing, if thou Received it better from a Mahometan. These Barbarians are sufficiently Instructed in Morality, to teach others that which they do not always practise themselves. Vertue and Truth are respected every where. Turn thee from East to West, from the South to the North, thou wilt find on all Sides Impious Men, who Blaspheme against the Deity; but, true Vertue has that of singular, That she is always Respected, and even by the most Profligate.

Consult once again thy Forces and thy Courage, and take a bitter Resolution, if thou art not yet well fixed in thy first. Titus salutes thee out of this World; and prays Heaven to give thee the Pleasures of the Happy, in thy Solitude, if thou beest no Hypocrite; and if thou hast not yet Repented of the Resolution thou hast taken.

Paris, 28th of the 3d. Moon, of the Year 1638.

LET-

LETTER. XV.

To Ibrahim, who Renounced the Christian Religion.

THou hast Renounced thy Religion, either to save thy Life, or for some other Consideration. I do not say this to make thee Scrupulous, but in quality of Resident in this Kingdom, to serve here the Sultan Emperor of both Seas, and of the Two Parts of the Earth, Distributor of all Crowns; the Grandeur of whose Majesty I beg of God, may last till the last Day of Universal Judgment. I advise thee to take heed, not to solicite those Infidels, whose Religion thou hast chang'd, to run the same Course that thou hast done.

Thou hast written to thy Brother, that he is become a Beggar, because he Renounces his God a Thousand Times at Play; and that thou art at present very Rich, for having Renounced him but Once, and by this thou exhortest him to turn Mussulman.

I thought good to write to thee, That Souls are not to be gained with a Letter and a Scurvy Jest. Think of becoming a Good Man after thy Change of Religion, and give no Occasion to the Musselmans to say, That thou art Infamous because thou hast renounced thy Faith, and that we are all damned because we are Mahometans. If thou dost not approve the Advice I give thee, I shall be obliged to acquaint thee with what shall come to my Knowledge, which I shall do with Regret, because thou may'st suffer by it.

The

The Great God make thee rather Wise than Fortunate.

LETTER XVI.

To Dicheu Huſſain Baſſa.

AS the Knowledge which I ſhall have of Affairs will augment daily, ſo I ſhall have the more Matter to write; and will omit no Occaſion to remark what occurs, which I will not fail immediately to communicate. Thou who with great Application obſerveſt what paſſeth amongſt Men, and art deſirous of knowing the moſt ſecret Tranſactions of Potentates, thou may'ſt obſerve, That there are more violent Enemies betwixt the Chriſtian Princes of Europe, than all the other Princes of the World: and cannot comprehend whence it is, that theſe Infidels cannot live in Peace; and, perhaps they do not comprehend it themſelves. It ſeems a Decree of Heaven, That Man ought to be contrary to Man; and, that whilſt there are Kingdoms there will be Wars and Enmities.

The Wars which are carried on at preſent in Alſace, look as if they would laſt long. The Death of Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, the ſecond Scourge of the Imperialiſts, who was ſlain Six Years ſince, did not terminate the Differences of Germany; they are greater than ever; and there appears in the Main Generals of the Armies, vaſter Deſigns than thoſe in their Predeceſſors. Perhaps they will revenge the Death of Guſtave, who was kill'd, not as the Christians affirm; but by one of the Forty Germans, who had bound themselves by Oath, never to quit their Swords before they had slain him, as the Turkish Historians do write.

Duke Bernard Weymar, of no less Valour than Gustave, commands the rest of the Swedish Army, with a good Number of French Troops, and many Christian Hereticks of Germany. Victory attends the Arms of this General; and, the Princes which are united for Defence of the Empire, begin to apprehend a Captain, who observes less the Rules of War than the Emotions of his Valour; and whom they perceive seconded by Fortune. But, he doth not consider, That in weakning an Emperor, he doth augment the Forces of a King, who will enjoy the Fruits of his Labours; and suppress him in spite of his Bravery, when he pleases. In the mean time, I am of Opinion, That it is our Interest that Weymar be always Victorious. It may be said of him, That he hath sold to France, all but his Glory, having reserved nothing for himself but Hope.

All that this Duke can conquer from the Germans is for the French King, who furnishes him with Troops, with Arms, and with Moneys, besides wise Advice. Cardinal Richlieu, who is an able States-man, fails not to perswade his Master, That the Places which Weymar shall take in the Empire, with the Army which he commands, are the effects of his Counsels, and his Majesty's Money. The French begin to preserve their Conquests, and know how to defend the places which are subject to their Power.

This Prince makes Acquisitions which are in truth of more importance, than they seem considerable for their Greatness. He took Rhinfeld almost as soon as he had besieged it. The Place was strong, seated near the Black Forest, where the Garrison was furnished nished with Abundance of all sorts of Ammunitions.

John de Wert, General of the Imperial Army, had reliev'd it with Nine Regiments of Horse, and Five Thousand Foot. He defeated Weymar's Horse, took part of his Baggage and Artillery. The Duke of Rohan, a great Captain, and great States-man, was hurt, and taken fighting; and the City relieved with Men, Ammunition, and Victuals, which rendered the taking of it more Glorious.

They write, that two Imperial Generals, the first John de Wert, which hath succeeded Rainfeld, Embaufort, as also Duke Savelli, had been taken in Combat which preceded the Rendition of the Place, besides Thirty Eight Cornets, and Nineteen Foot Captains. These Spoils were gained by the Blood of the Swedes, and sent to the French King; who after he had caused them to march through all the Streets of this Great City, commanded them to be hung up in the Principal Church, where they rendered them, as Marks of the Triumphs of Policy. The Siege of this Place lasted but Eighteen Days.

The Duke of Weymar, after this Victory, marched into the Marquisate of Durlach, where he took the Castle of Rotelen, Defended by the King of Hungary; in which he found great Store of Provisions, and all sorts of Ammunitions, which served greatly for the refreshing of his then needy Army.

In the mean time, Duke Savelli escaped out of Prison, and retired to Lucerne in Switzerland. The Officers that guarded him, were accused of favouring his Escape, which cost them their Heads.

All write there is most trade and thou may'st cause my Letters to be registred. God grant that Rhine, together with all Alsatia, may fall into the French Hands, and that the Emperor of Germany be subjected to the Laws of the Ottoman Em-

seest the Time come, wherein the French make Conquest, without being present at them. The King of this Nation, appears not only Happy, but is so in reality; all things succeeding that he undertakes, his Queen's being with Child, and the Cardinal's Policy, puzzels the Spaniard, the Empire and Italy it self. What will happen none knows, but God and Mahomet. 'Tis our Duty to humble our selves, and say what we see, and not be so rash as to penetrate into the Future.

Do what thou canst by thy Intrigues, to augment the Germans Losses; for the Reasons thou knowest; and particularly to facilitate the Sultan's Conquest in Hungary. Assist, in the mean time, the poor and faithful Mahmut, not with the Sword that cuts every thing; but, by good Counsel, by which we ordinarily perceive, the Re-union of what the Sword hath separated; And I will pray the Most High, that all the Infidels bow the Knee before Amurath, and that all that breathe, may enjoy their Lives, but by an Effect of his Clemency.

Paris, 12th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XVII.

To Ahmet Beig.

I Receive none of thy Letters; I receive none from the Divan; and I have none from any of my Friends, Italy, where there are so many People proper for War, that Province which hath commanded the World, is at this time troubled by the

the Arms of France. The Pope and Venetians, who appear to have the Principal Intereſt there, make no Advance to divert the Storm that threatens them. Piemont, which belongs to the Duke of Savoy, begins to feel the Incommodities that War draws alway with it. That State is in the midſt of the Spaniards, who attack it, and the French ruine it in defending it.

Theſe laſt cannot abandon the Intereſt of the Houſe of Savoy, the Dutcheſs being their King's Siſter, and her Children his Nephews. The French are already ſtrong on that ſide, having a great Garriſon in Pignerol, a Place very conſiderable, which they call one of the Gates of Italy, whereof they have been Maſters ſince the Year 1631. and their Power will much encreaſe, by the Acceſſion of the Fort of Breme, which may be termed a Rampart, covering Casal and Vercelle, and which alſo defends both Monſerrat and Piemont. The Marquis of Leganez, Governour of Milan, having rendred himſelf Maſter of the Field, had laid Siege to Breme; and Marſhal Crequi, having in the Name of the King his Maſter, undertaken the Defence of the young Duke of Savoy, oppoſed the Deſigns of the Spaniards. 'Tis believed the War will be cruel in this Quarter, being theſe are very ſtrong, and the other very expert.

Thou ſhalt know the Event. In the mean time, all the Affairs of the French do not appear ſo Fortunate in Italy; and, at this Hour that I write to thee, the Court laments the Loſs of the General that commanded their Armies in that Country.

There is certain News of the Death of Marſhal Crequi, who was ſhot with a Cannon-Bullet through the Body, as he was going to view the Spaniards Works before Breme. This loſs was by ſo much the more ſenſible to the French, in that they they saw their Enemies make such great Rejoicings at it.

All Men conclude, this Crequi was both a good Souldier, and a good Captain; a Wise Man, and of Excellent Conduct. He had acquired great Reputation, for the King his Master, in Italy. He slew Don Philip, Bastard of Savoy, who challenged him in the Sight of Two Armies. He several Times defeated his Sovereign's Enemies in Montferrat, and in Piemont, and beat back the Duke of Feria to the Gates of Milan. There remains no more of this Great Man, who did so many brave Things, but the bare remembrance of 'em.

Scarce any thing of his Body, save his Entrails was left for his Soldiers to celebrate his Obsequies with. His Soul is before the Throne of God; his Friends honour his Memory with their Elogies: his Kindred mourn for him, his Sovereign praises him, and his Soldiers crown his Tomb with Herbs and Flowers.

The Italians say highly upon this Occasion, That Italy has been fatal to the French, and that it will be so always. They affirm, That the Duke of Savoy will lose his Estate, if defeated by his Enemies, which he will likewise do by the Victory of his Friends. But, these are the Conjectures and ordinary Reasonings of Men, which I write to thee to the end thou may'st not only know what is done, but also the Discourses which are entertained upon the Events that happen. We shall shortly have News of the Siege of Bremen; in the mean time, it imports the French much, to conserve the Opinion had of their Valour and Goodness.

The Business in hand is to defend a great and illustrious House, which moreover pretends to the Sovereignty of the Kingdom of Cyprus, troubled by the Ambition of Kindred, and the Bollicks of the Spaniards. These Engagements import much to Princes, who have as many Maxims as differing Interests; but, we have nothing to do with the Differences of others.

May it please God, that our Affairs be always attended with an Equality of good Luck, for the Ruine of these Infidels. Be thou constant in the Friendship thou promisedst me, and always faithful to thy Friend, who recommends himself to thee, as the Law obliges thee to be to thy Sovereign.

Paris, 20th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XVIII.

To Berber Mustapha Aga.

I This Day entertained a Man, which came from Italy, and hath served in the French Troops. He gives this Account of the Death of Marshal Crequi.

The 17th of this Moon, this General, having approached the Lines of the Spaniards, to view their Works, and to Fight them, in case he judged it Expedient, a Cannon-Bullet separated a Body in Two, and the Bullet being taken up, they were surprised to see a Cross graved upon it, about which were also engraved Letters, which made these two Words IO. CREQUI. This Bullet, the Cross, and the Letters, caused no less Astonishment, than the Death of this Captain did Sorrow, and every Body spoke his Sentiments of it.

Many treat the Spaniards as Magicians, and Sorcerers. Those who are perswaded of the Power of of Negromancy, affirm, That the Devil can carry a Bullet to the Place whither 'tis deſigned: Others are of a contrary Sentiment, and believe, there is no Power without the Commandment of the Great God. There are others, who believe neither Charms nor Characters, nor Magick; who, deſpiſing all theſe Superſtitions, attribute all to Deſtiny; and I believe the ſame. Achmet Celebi explains this perfectly well in his Journal, which begins in the One Thouſand and Twenty Sixth Year of our Hegira; when he affirms, that all Things which paſs here below, are effected by the Orders of Heaven. 'We 'cannot doubt (ſays he) but the Events which we 'ſee, are the Effects of the Will of God; yet we 'muſt believe, he ſuffers all Things to happen by 'Second Cauſes.

Had not Sultan Oſman irritated the Janizaries, and Spahi's, by throwing them into the River alive, when he ran diſguiſed through the Streets of Conſtantinople, and found them drinking Wine in Taverns: And had he not publiſhed his Deſign of Reforming this Militia, and tranſporting the Imperial Seat elſewhere, he had not perhaps been murthered with ſo much Ignominy.

God ſent him a terrible Dream before his Death. He thought he ſaw our Great Prophet ſnatching the Alcoran, which he was then reading, out of his Hand; and taking from him by Force, his Coat of Arms; and ſtriking him down with ſuch a great Box on the Ear, that he could not get up again. Thou knoweſt he conſulted the Aſtrologers, and Interpreters of Dreams thereupon. I will not report what he, who was his Præceptor, ſaid, for it was plain Flattery: But we ſaw, what was foretold by the Aſtrologers came punctually to paſs. Theſe had foretold, That the Emperor ſhould never ſee the Feaſt of Ramezan; becauſe the Star which preſided at his Birth, was much obſcured in its Conjunction with the Planet, that was then Predominant; which made 'em affirm, he would die in a very little time. The Ignominy wherewith his Death was accompanied, was an effect of Destiny; for, never any of the Osmans suffered so much Shame. He had several times seen the fatal Cord about his Neck without dying. A Soldier, in charity, lent him his Handkerchief to cover his Head, which was without a Turbant.

He said, all in Tears, to his Murtherers, Ye saw this Morning your Emperor upon the Throne, and this Evening you are for throwing him into a Dung Cart, designed to carry Dirt into the Sea: You cannot live always, and God will require a Reason for this Cruelty. Thou knowest, his resisting of those that strangled him, caused him to suffer much Pain. They took hold of him by the Secret Parts; and one of his Ears was cut off, and carried to the Valide, who expected the News of his Death. The will of God appears in this Adventure; as also, the Power of Second Causes. Thou may'st see all this in that Journal of Ahmet. Had not Marshal Crequi been in the Wars, he had not perhaps ended his Days by a violent Death; and had he not been so rash as to approach too near to the Enemies Works, the fatal Bullet had not touched him.

We see hereby an Effect of God's Will accompanied with our Consent; because we search by our own Choice, that which we might avoid.

In the mean time, accuse me not of Ignorance or Superstition, if I have been long in entertaining thee, upon a Matter in Action, betwixt Me and the Devil. Thou knowest, that by Magick Art, we number the Twelve Spirits or Angels which preside over each of the Signs of the Zodiack, which govern the Nations, People, and Cities committed to their Care. In like Manner, in the Secret Cabala of the Jews, by the Twelve Angels of the great Name of God; and, according to the Colour of the Stones where these Anagrams were Engraved, they judged of the Future; performing thereby Things very astonishing. They have subjected our Bodies to these Twelve Signs, and divided them into Twelve Principal Members. But, how many surprizing Things are done with the Number Seven, to which they have applied the Seven Planets; by Means whereof, they discover the Secret of the good or evil Fortune of Men? Add to this, the Invocation of Spirits, and the Power of Figures, of Words, of Herbs, of Writings, of holy Characters, and so many other Inchantments, wherewith they consult the Black Angels; and thou wilt find, that Men do many Wonders by this Art, which they cannot do without Supernatural Assistance.

The little Bits of Paper, cut Triangular-wise, which Tockta Cham, the King of Persia's Embassador caused to be thrown in the Night, round about the Imperial Tent of the Great Vizir Asis, (in each of which there was a certain word writ) wrought more considerable Effects, than the Spaniard's Inchanted Bullet, which killed Marshal Crequi. The Ottoman Army revolted the Day following, as if possessed with Furies. The most Seditious took and bound the Vizir, and made him raise the Siege of Babylon. And the King of Persia, who had already dismissed Mustapha Aga, our Envoy, with the Treaty, whereby he Surrendred this Place, being advertised of the precipitate Retreat of our Army, caused Mustapha to be called back; tearing the Treaty he had given him, in his presence; and bad him tell his General, He could not do so shameful an Action, as to surrender so important a Place, to an Army that was running away.

Hast thou ever heard of any thing so strange? Read this Ahmet Celibi's Book, and thou wilt see, that all these Prodigies arrived in one Day. The Historian makes no Judgment upon this Adventure; he only reports it; neither do I believe it was an Effect of the Enchantment of these Bits of Paper, and the Characters contained in them; because it is certain our Army was greatly prest with Hunger. But in Effect, when Mustapha, all in Tears, reproached the Vizir, That if he had gained but two Days time, he had made a Peace equal to a Victory. Asis answered him, How couldst thou with thy Tears, retain an Army possessed with all the Devils of Hell, and resolved to be gone?

If thou finish the reading of so long a Letter, accuse thy Patience, and reproach not me with tediousness for having writ many things to thee worthy of being known. After the Death of the French General, Breme was presently delivered to the Spaniards, by the Cowardliness of the Governor, who incurr'd, in time a rigorous Destiny for it; having his Head cut off at Casal, where they had imprisoned him.

The Great God preserve thee and thine for ever; and protect thee against the ill-will of those that do not love thee.

LETTER XIX.

To Murat Baſſa.

THE Dutcheſs Dowager of Savoy, finds herſelf extremely preſſed by the continual Incurſions which the Spaniards make into Piemont; they having beſieged Vercelle, a Place which covers the Country on the Side of Milan,

She her ſelf appears on Horſeback, with great Courage, being reſolved to remove what is loſt, as well as to defend the reſt, which is in ſome danger; having joined her beſt Troops with great Diligence, to thoſe of France.

A Cardinal, which they call the Cardinal la Valette, commands in the Place of Marſhal Crequi, thoſe Troops of France, which conſiſt of Twelve Thouſand Foot, and Four Thouſand Horſe.

Thou doſt not know, perhaps, what theſe Cardinals are: They be the principal Prieſts of the Roman Church. Their Profeſſion is not to command Armies, though that ſometimes happens, either through want of ſage Captains, which theſe Infidel Kings may ſometime ſtand in need of; or for other ſecret Reaſons, which are not always eaſie to penetrate, and muſt be of great Importance, France not wanting fit Seculars. A Roman Muſti, called Innocent IV. gave the Purple Habit to theſe Prieſts, and obliged them to wear Red Hats, Caps, and Bonnets, that this Colour might always put them in mind, they ought to ſhed their Blood for the Service of their Church and Religion.

I have been told, that formerly that there were but Five and Twenty, and now their Number is ſaid to be Seventy Two; which is that of the Diſciples of the Chriſtian Meſſias; but, they are ſeldom compleat. I was desirous of being precisely informed, what the Dignity of a Cardinal is; and an old Physician, that seems an honest Man, instructs me in all things, that regard the Religion, and Politicks of the Christians. He is such an Enemy to the Circumcision, that he gives often the uncleanest of all Meats to his Patients, such as we think unwholesome, and cannot be eaten without Sin, Thou that art a States-man, and obliged to assist at Council, and in the Divan, ought to know more Things than others, and those more perfectly.

I will inform my self, with Care, of the Life, Actions, and Genius of this Cardinal la Valette, to know, whether the King, his Master, has any other reason than that of his Valour and Experience in War, to make use of a Priest in his Armies, to shed Blood and ruine People; for, I never heard the Mussulmans did ever make use of a Cheik, to command the Armies of the Empire: Besides, they are without Experience, Fearful, and Superstitious.

The Spaniards are more powerful in Infantry, and Cavalry, having Eighteen Thousand Foot, and Five Thousand Horse, whereby they pretend to render themselves Masters of Piemont, and drive the French wholly out of Italy. The Marquis of Leganez, Governour of Milan, affirms, That his King will not suffer the Children of the late Duke of Savoy, to be under the Protection of Strangers. He says, That Pignerol, and other Places in the Power of the French, were usurped upon the House of Savoy, and must be restored. They affirm, That the House of Austria will hinder the Widow, her Children, and Subjects from being Oppressed.

Behold here an Example of the singular Piety of the Spaniards, in Favour of a Widow and her Children; and on the other side, admire the Kind-

neſs of the French, who fight againſt theſe ſame Spaniards, for the conſervation of that which concerns neither of them. It will be difficult to diſcover theſe ſecret Myſteries. Every Prince puts a value upon his Reaſons, as he does upon his Mony.

The Dutcheſs of Savoy came accompanied with a great number of Ladies, and the greateſt of her Court. She was on Horſeback, at the Head of all the Company, both Horſe and Foot, and harangued the Army amidſt the Battalions.

She conjured, not only the Captains, but even the Corporals, and private Souldiers, not to abandon her Defence. She ſhewed all the Sentiments of Grief, that a Perſon of Courage could have, in ſeeing her ſelf expoſed to loſe her Eſtate; or to ſee her Children, in a manner, Captives; and upon this Occaſion, ſhe failed not to mingle Torrents of Tears with the moſt charming Expreſſions, which is ordinarily the ſtrongeſt Eloquence of Women.

The Army being ſenſible of the Dutcheſs's Misfortune, which ſhe had repreſented with all Poſſible Earneſtneſs; the Cardinal Valette cauſed it to diſcamp to relieve Vercelle. He forced the Spaniards Lines, and put Two Thouſand Men into the Place. The Beſieged, fortified with ſuch Succours, made a great Sally, and much Infidel Blood was ſhed on both Sides. But all that the Cardinal could do, with his Care, and the Dutcheſs with her Tears, could not hinder Vercelle to fall into the Hands of the Spaniards. 'Tis ſaid, that the Commander of this Place, and his Garriſon, defended themſelves to the laſt Extremity; and having no more Powder or Lead, they fought at puſh of Pike, with Stones; and finally, when all was gone, with their Fiſts.

But this is not believed here, it being alledged, that the Governour, or the General, did not do their Duty. The Cardinal, say they, failed in his Duty also; for, knowing they wanted Ammunition, yet he did not send it, though he found means to put into the place such a great number of Men. But the Governour is blamed yet more, that did not discover this his Necessity to the General.

I tell thee all these Particulars to inform thee of the Manner how the French make War; many of whose Over-sights would cost us our Lives.

There marched out of Vercelle, Four Thousand Men bearing Arms. Thence thou mayest judge, that our Generals are not cruel, when they cause the Heads of Commanders to be taken off, that behave themselves so ill.

The Princess of Mantua, who has lost her Husband, would, they say, marry a Prince of the House of Austria, called the Cardinal Infant, which is an Effect of the Policy of the Spaniards, to have a better Pretence to attack Montferrat, and drive out the French, who entred there by consent of the Duke of Mantua, who was Sovereign thereof.

The valiant Duke of Roan, is at length dead in a Castle near Berne. I think I writ he was hurt, and taken Prisoner in the Battel fought by the Swedes against the Germans. He was in the Sixty Eighth Year of his Age, and was very considerable for his Erudition, Valour and Experience in War. He was bred a Soldier from his Youth; was always employed in Military Affairs, and had often commanded Armies. He supported, by his Bravery and Experience, for a long time, the Remains of a feeble and dying Party, against the Power of the King. He was illustrious by the Greatness of his House; and his Religion was that of the Calvinists, called the Reformed. His Body was Embalmed, and afterwards brought to Geneva, with with great Magnificence and Warlike Pomp. This City is the Retreat of such as the Church of Rome calls Hereticks, who are all well received here; which gives great Occasion of Complaint to the Pope's Partizans; how reasonably, I will not presume to determine; but, there appears to me much more Splendor in the Ceremonies of those of the Catholick Church, and they pretend to greater Vertue and Antiquity.

These are the Transactions in Italy which came to my Knowledge. I will not fail to write what passed in Germany these last Moons, as soon as I have the Certainty of them.

Pray God the many Differences and Wars, which are amongst the Infidels, may never end; that Italy may be humbled even to the Stirrop of the Horse, on which rides the Great Emperor of the Elect of God, the faithful Mussulmans; and, that all Germany adore the Sacred Porch of Mecha.

I pray God support thee always, that thou never fall; and so conduct thee, that thou never goest astray.

LETTER XX.

To Dgnet Ogiou.

THE Condition I am in at present, makes me think of those long and tedious days we passed together at Palermo, in Slavery. How fruitless were the Tears, which the Irksomness of our Captivity made us shed? yet nothing befel us, but what what is common to other Men: But, thou wert too Young to ſupport it, and I had not Experience enough of the World, to conceive the Unhappineſs whereunto Fortune had reduced me.

Thou art at preſent, at Conſtantinople, where thou haſt all thy Heart can deſire, and I at Paris, where I have a Thouſand things to take Care for. Conſtantinople and Paris, are indeed, Two of the greateſt Cities in the World; but, much differing in manner of Living, Clothes, Language, and Religion. Thou art at preſent in the midſt of Pleaſures, with thy Friends, Children, Wife, with the Liberty of exerciſing thy Religion, which is the True one; and that, and in the Moſques, which our Fathers eſtabliſhed: Moreover, thou art elevated in Dignity. I, on the contrary, am amongſt Infidels, amongſt Idolaters and Hereticks; obliged to live with a Nation much differing from Ours in their Inclinations and Cuſtoms. Finally, I live amongſt the Devil's Peacocks. The exceſſive Liberty they give themſelves, is not ſuch as is enjoyed with true Satisfaction of Mind; ſeeing they do a Thouſand things which carry Repentance along with them.

The Philoſophy of the Stoicks, which I learned during my Captivity, gave me to underſtand, of what Importance it is, for a Man to know himſelf. Thou maiſt remember, perhaps, in the Beginning of our Slavery, that thy Maſter and mine, were no leſs oppoſite in their manner of living, than our Genius's were differing.

My Enquiry was after Books and Writings; and Watching did not weary me, provided I employed it in learning ſomewhat. On the contrary, thou being always employed with different Handy-works, didſt little think, that Heaven had deſigned thee to wear a Sword, and conſequently, to the Employments of War.

How many Things did we ſuffer in thoſe Days, whereat we do now laugh? Thou wert always chained; and I in Priſon, in a Den; thou wert beaten, becauſe thou wouldſt not read; and I was banged to Pieces, becauſe I would not embroider.

The reading of Seneca, could not induce me to pardon my Maſter the Baſtinado's he gave me. That which I endured, was greater than the Pains which thou didſt ſuffer; I was perſecuted for the Pleaſure I took in Reading; and they would oblige thee to ſtudy; whereas thy Inclinations were quite different from mine.

This hardſhip made me reſolve to hide my ſelf in a Celler, without Bread, and without Water. I had nothing but my Seneca with me; and I was reſolved to deliver my ſelf from my Servitude by Death; ſo far had this Stoick perſwaded me not to live. Thou art ſo near Death (quoth he) and in the mean time art a Slave. Judge the Force of my Temptation, by the Authority of this Great Man. Whilſt I was thus hid, my Maſter ſearched me in vain, in the Garden, the Stable, the Kitchin, and had no leſs Pains to find me, than I had to hide my ſelf from him. But, at length I choſe the better Part, which was, to live, and to forgive.

My Maſter owes his Life to Seneca; he taught me ſo well to forget Offences, that my Deſpair changed into Reſpect. I had no more mind to die. I felt my Courage fail, and Fear made me pardon my Maſter. Thou hadſt no knowledge of this Adventure, becauſe I went into the Country, and thou waſt ranſomed, whilſt I was out of Palermo. I was ſo very intent upon my Studies, that my Maſter, vanquiſhed by my Obſtinacy, gave me Liberty to apply my ſelf to them; being himſelf aſhamed to continue ignorant, whilſt I dreamt of nothing but of improving my Mind.

In

In the Course of Four Years and Four Moons, that my Captivity lasted, Nero's Master gave me the first Tincture of Morality; and after that, I went into the Academies, where I writ the Journal of my Life. Plutarch, Livy and Tacitus, made me forget the odious Names of Master and Slave.

The Examples of so many Great Men, whose Histories we find there; of so many Emperors, Kings, Captains, Masters or Slaves of their Passions; some dead by the Hands of their Friends, by Poyson; others by the Sword and Surprize; others, persecuted by their Fathers or their Sons; sometimes by their Wives, and often by their Native Country and Slaves, so often saved and defended by themselves; disposed me to suffer patiently the State whereunto I was reduced; and to acknowledge, That the honest Man is never a Slave, where ever he is, when he can find his Master within himself. I had time then to do a Thousand good Things, which I should never have done, if I had not been in the Condition I then found my self in.

Consider how much we learn by Books, and more yet by the Disgraces that happen to us. We see the Ill as in a Perspective, and the Good in Circle. Disgraces afflict us when they happen, and good Fortune when it leaves us. When I was in my House I lived at rest, because I fansied Serving; and now I am in Service, I am in continual fear of not pleasing. How many Souls hath Amurath sent into the other World, to expect the Universal Day of Judgment? And how many more will he send in this Siege of Babylon, whether he goes in Person, carrying Terror with him, and Forces sufficient to destroy the Empire of the Persians?

He hath commanded me to observe the Actions of the Christians, with all possible Application and Exactness, to give Information of them. He will will, in doubtful Affairs, have me to write to him my own Judgment, and not that of others. He will have me not to ſhorten, but extend my Explications, that nothing may be left that will admit of a double Interpretation, and will rather have me tedious, than appear eloquent by the Conciſeneſs of my Relations. He orders me to receive the Advices of Carcoa, who is at Vienna, and to inform Adonai the Jew, who reſides at Genoa, in what is neceſſary; to the end, that all that paſſes in Germany, Italy and France, may be diſpatched to the Miniſters of the Divan.

The Secretary of State, as Maſter of all that is written, has order to en-regiſter my Letters, and examine them. He, according to his Capriciouſneſs, or Ignorance, may render the Exactneſs wherewith I obey, criminal; by ſaying, I am a Fool, or do not write the Truth. This regiſtring puts me in Pain: For, as many mean things may appear very good at firſt Sight; and are often commended, becauſe of their Novelty; ſo they may appear alſo very deſpicable, when they come to be examined; and may deſerve a Check.

I tell thee what I have reaſon to fear, without telling thee thoſe things which might raiſe a Belief in thee, that I have reaſon to hope.

Our Sovereigns are Mighty, and they diſtinguiſh themſelves from all the Potentates of the World, by the Impetuouſneſs wherewith they give their Orders: And there is no Empire where the Puniſhments and Rewards, work ſo great Effects. Thou knoweſt the reſt, which is ſuperfluous to tell thee, and which Princes do not willingly hear.

Explain to me better, the News I heard of Muſſuladdin Aga, of an Action of Juſtice of old Berber.

He writ to me, That a Creditor to whom he owed for a Shirt, being dead, he had put the Price into into the deceaſed's Hand, and went his ways. This new way of paying Debts, ſeems very extraordinary to me. There is an Author, whether Greek or Latin I have forgot, which tells another Adventure not unlike this, of a Man who not finding his Shooe-maker alive, threw the Price of the Shooes he had made him into his Shop. If theſe Actions be not done for Oſtentation, they ſeem Vertuous; but if out of Vanity, I cannot believe that our Negligence to pay our Creditors whilſt alive, can be excuſed by the care we take to pay them after their Death.

The Dead want nothing in the other World; they are Living that have need of Supplies in this; and who ſuffer ſometimes very much, when they are not punctually paid. The Ancients could never ſufficiently deſcribe the Exceſs which Men committed by their Paſſions, and the Moderns do it as little. They are Juſt, ſometimes even to Superſtition, and ſometimes Unjuſt even to Exceſs. Sultan Muſtapha's Charity for the Poor, was very great. He was not ſatisfied according to the Precepts of Pythagoras, to give Life to Beaſts; his Simplicity went yet farther, not preſidented by any Prince or Saint; he threw Pieces of Gold to the Fiſhes, in Ponds and Rivers; alledging for his Reaſon, That the moſt ſecret Alms were the moſt agreeable to God; and that theſe Animals would never tell of it.

Thou wilt anſwer me when thou haſt time and convenience. God give thee the Succour which is neceſſary for thee; and let our Great Prophet be always favourable to thee.

Paris, 20th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LET-

LETTER XXI.

To the Kaimakam.

MY last Letters ſhew what happen'd in Italy, on the Side of Piemont, which thou maiſt have ſeen at the Divan.

I have informed the Council what the Infidels have done there; where three different Nations, which have but one Religion, fight together; The French make War upon the Spaniards, to aſſiſt the Savoyards; and theſe latter would drive the other out of Italy, and reduce Savoy under their Power, which does what it can to avoid the Yoke of both theſe Nations.

It is to be feared, that new Troubles may ariſe from this War; which will undoubtedly happen, if it be not ſuddenly terminated by a Peace. I will only write to thee what I know, and perhaps what is not come to thy Knowledge. I will not repeat what I have already written; becauſe my Letters paſs ſecurely, by the good Order which thou haſt taken.

The different Intereſt of the Princes of Italy, occaſion ſmall Intelligence betwixt them. As their Eſtates are ſeparated the one from the other, ſo they are divided by their Maxims, their Intereſts, and Pretenſions. They have, however, but one Religion, which they make to ſerve for a Pretext to their Deſigns, which are all different; and there is not one of them which wholly minds his Religion, which can have but one only End.

There are few that can ſuffer the Conqueſts of the French in Italy; becauſe that Nation ſeems reſtleſs, and Men would not ſee the Spaniards more powerful than they are; becauſe they play too much.

much the Masters. But however, as the least of these Princes have their particular Inclinations and secret Interests with these two Nations, thou art ignorant of those of the Republick of Genoa with the Spaniards, with whom they have strong Alliances: But peradventure thou hast not been informed of a Conspiracy, which appears to have been carried on in the City, to introduce the Spaniards into it, which the Republick will in no wise suffer.

The said Conspiracy is thus related: The Marquis of Montecy having finished the time of his Government of Naples, and being embarked with some Gallies, for his Return into Spain, came Incognito in Genoa; having had a Conference in a Village near the Town, with some of the Conspirators, to render himself Master of the Port, and afterwards built a Citradel upon the highest Side of the Port. Some of the most qualified, were to open one of the Gates by Night, and receive the Troops that should be disbarked out of the Gallies. The Marquis of Leganez, Governour of Milan, promised to send to Genoa a Chain of Slaves stronger and more numerous than ordinary, which instead of consisting of condemned Criminals, was to be composed of the bravest Officers of Milan; and some Nobles of the Accomplices, who were to share in the Treaty, were to receive the Troops, and come armed for the effecting of the Enterprize.

After a Design so well laid, the Spaniards were ready to execute so hard an Undertaking; when the Republick, being suddenly advertised of the Plot, caused it to miscarry, without Noise, by redoubling the Guards, which did not a little surprize the Conspirators.

Cardinal Richlieu's Creatures give out, That one Doria, called their Prince, did delude, or hinder the Plot, which was profitable for Italy, but con-contrary to our Intereſts; for thence undoubtedly had ſprung a War which would never have had End, whether betwixt the Subjects of this Commonwealth, who would have ruined each other, or France and Spain; and thou wilt alſo find, that in preferring the Liberty of their Country, and keeping the Spaniards at a Diſtance, they will maintain themſelves ſtill in a Condition advantageous for the Commonwealth, and neceſſary to the Crown of Spain.

They ſay, That the Conſtancy of Doria hath acquired the Honour of having twice ſaved the Liberty of his Country.

This Doria is deſcended from Andrew Doria, that Great Captain, who did ſo many brave Actions againſt our Nation, commanded the Maritime Armies of Charles V. Emperor of Germany; and ſince, thoſe of Philip II. his Son, King of Spain, and who often combated the invincible Ariaden.

I do not believe that Adonai, which was at Genoa, hath writ this Adventure to thee; either becauſe it may not be true, or becauſe the thing being very ſecret, it was in a manner ſtifled as ſoon as diſcover'd.

If thou wilt know the particular Reaſonings, made upon this occaſion, I will tell thee, That the moſt adviſed French believe, that the Spaniards did attempt ſo fair a Blow; but that the Two Parties in the City, the one to preſerve their Liberty, and the other to maintain their Authority, did both avoid the Concluſion.

The Diſcourſe is, at preſent various, concerning this Republick; and the French do as much endeavour to make ſecret Treaties with it, as the Spaniards to hinder its change of Maſter. It being always of great advantage to ſuch who have Pretences in Italy, to be in good Correſpondence with this Place; which may be termed the Principal Port.

The

The French make a great Noiſe with their Pretences upon Genoa; and they, at preſent, revive many Ancient Hiſtories. They affirm, That the Genoeſe, when they had Differences amongſt themſelves, have often-times changed their Laws and their Maſters; and that they had been ſubjected to ſtrange Powers: That Two Charles's, One Lewis, and Francis I. all Kings of France, have taken them into their Protection, having alſo ſubdued them by Force of Arms. They add, That this Francis I. continued a great while to ſend them Governours: And that it was by the Valour and Reſolution of Doria, that this Republick recovered its firſt Liberty.

Theſe are the Diſcourſes that People make at Paris, the Entertainment of Idle Perſons, as alſo of our Politicians. It will be a hard matter to tell what the King thinks, and what are the Sentiments of his Council.

Conſider, in the mean time, with what Impudence People diſcourſe here; they preſume to decide Affairs of State; they divide and accommodate Differences; they ſupport and ruin Commonwealths and Kingdoms: but this is no new Thing, the People in all Times having taken the Liberty to cenſure the Actions of Sovereigns.

It is not for enlarging my Letter that I write theſe Particulars of the Hiſtory of Genoa; but, being an Ancient Nation, which hath formerly wearied the Courage of the Romans by their Enterprizes and Oppoſition, and have performed, upon our Seas, great and noble Actions. The Oſmans have her therefore in Conſideration; and, the rather, becauſe we poſſeſs many Countries, and conſiderable Places, that were under their Dominion in Aſia minor, upon the Black Sea, and in the Archipelago.

I ſhall

I shall ever recommend all thy Words and Actions to Almighty God, and pray him to hinder thee from falling into Error, and prosper all thy Undertakings.

Paris, 24th of the 5th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XXII.

To the same.

HEnry of Bourbon, first Prince of the Blood of France, marching by Bourdeaux, came upon the Frontiers of Spain, where he besieged Fontarabia, strongly seated upon the Brink of the Ocean. His Army is made up of Twelve Thousand Foot, and Twelve Hundred Horse. The Two Nations have had several Encounters and Skirmishings, wherein the Loss and Gain have been equal on Land.

But the Spanish Affairs go so ill at Sea, that thou wilt wonder at the great Losses they receiv'd there. The French have burnt Two Gallions upon the Stock, that were making, and Six others entirely finished, which had not been yet at Sea. They have further taken Eleven great Ships, whereof Six were richly loaden for the Indies; besides the Equipage and Munitions of War; with Two old Gallions that were of no great Use. They further took a Prodigious number of Cannons, which lay upon the Shore, One Hundred whereof were Brass, all with the Arms of Austria.

If all this I write be true, as I verily believe lieve it is: We may ſay that this Prize, where there were more than a Hundred and Fifty Pieces of Ordnance, was no mean purchaſe.

I ſay nothing of the great quantity of Artillery, mounted upon the Ships and Gallions, for fear of troubling thee with the news of a great Victory, wherein the French gained ſo many Veſſels and ſuch great Riches, as will ſuffice to equip a great Fleet.

The Prince beſieges the Place and preſſes it, but the Spaniards defend themſelves bravely; and much Blood will be ſhed there.

The Prieſt of Bordeaux, which theſe Infidels call the Archbiſhop, was come thither with Sixty Sail, whereof Forty Two are Men of War, and the reſt Attenders; with ſome Fireſhips filled with Bituminous Matter, which inflames eaſily to burn the Enemies Ships where they can come at them, ſo that there is nothing wanting in the Armies by Sea or Land.

This Archbiſhop of Bordeaux, makes more noiſe at preſent than the Pope; and 'tis credible, that what he has done, will gain him great Favour with his King.

He has, with as much Courage, inveſted Fourteen Gallies, and Four Frigats, which came from the Neighbouring Ports to the Relief of Fontarabia, with Three Thouſand natural Spaniards.

He fought Six Hours together with this new Army, which he entirely defeated, having burnt and ſunk all theſe Ships, except one Galley, which was ſtranded and rendred uſeleſs. The Admiral of Spain, with Eight Hundred Men, was blown up; which was no ſmall Misfortune to the Spaniards, who loſt upon this Occaſion, a great Number of Soldiers and Seamen: And 'tis believed, they will not be able to appear before their Enemies in Sea this great while.

If

If ſo many Loſſes ſuffered by a Party, are not advantageous to the Grand Signior, becauſe the other is grown ſo much the ſtronger thereby, he will however gain this Benefit by it. That the French and Spaniſh being both Enemies to one Nation and Religion, our Affairs will be in greater Security, when of Two Enemies we ſee One ſuppreſſed.

The French publiſh by their Joy and continual Feaſtings, the Advantage they receive from theſe Succeſſes: And theſe Infidels have reaſon to rejoice, their Victory having all the Agreements poſſible; it is indeed great, and their Loſs very inconſiderable.

They ſay, there were but Twelve of the Ships of France diſordered, and that they loſt not above a Hundred Seamen, and very few Officers. Here hath been made a large Relation of this Victory; and 'tis engraven in Copper, to the end it may be made publick in all its particulars, and the Memory of it conſerved to future Ages. Since the loſs of the Armado, ſurnamed The Invincible, which Philip II. ſent into England, in the Year 1588, to make War upon a Woman, we have not known that Spain ſuffered ſo great a Loſs.

This is the only News I can tell thee at preſent. So many Armies as are in continual Action, will furniſh Matter enough hereafter to divert thee, by reaching the Follies of theſe Infidels, who ſeem to deſtroy themſelves daily, and ruin their Affairs to gratifie us by their Defeats, and make us triumph.

Paris, 17th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LET-

LETTER XXIII.

To Asis Bassa.

IF thou always followeſt thy Inclination, and thy natural Honeſty, thou wilt be indefatigable in faithfully ſerving the Sultan, and thou wilt not be averſe to him that eſteems thee, and loves thee.

Read what I write to thee, and publiſh it when thou haſt read it, that the Council may know, that it is reſolved at the Diet held at Stockholm, the Reſidence of the King of Sweden, to continue the War againſt Auſtria; and, that the Duke of Weymar, and the General Banner, begin already to combat the Imperialiſts. Thou wilt ſee Spain and Germany attack'd on ſo many Sides, and by ſuch powerful Enemies, that 'tis credible there may happen ſuch vaſt Loſſes to all theſe Chriſtians, that the True Believers will have occaſion to rejoice, and to hope yet the Aggrandizing of the Great and Moſt Mighty King of Kings, Sultan Amurath, Maſter, and abſolute Sovereign of both Seas, and Vanquiſher of all Nations.

This King hath ſent an Army into Picardie, under the Command of Marſhal Chatillion, to beſiege St. Omer, a very ſtrong Place in Artoiſe, belonging to the Spaniards; ſeveral Villages and Towns of Conſideration, being already burnt and pillaged.

The faithful Slave Mahmut ſalutes thee, gives thee a friendly Kiſs, and wiſhes thee all ſort of Proſperity.

LET-

LETTER XXIV.

To the Kaimakam.

THE King of France hath ſent forth another Army. I have already informed thee, that this Prince hath already Three Armies in Three Parts of Europe. There is one in Piemont, commanded by Cardinal le Valette; another whereof Prince Henry of Conde is Generaliſſimo, which they hope will quickly take Fontarabia; and a third commanded by Marſhal Chatillion, which beſieges St. Omer.

The Duke of Longueville, is at the Head of the Fourth, which is entred into Burgundy, with deſign to ruin the French County, defended by Duke Charles of Lorrain, one of the Emperor's Generals.

So many Armies, and ſo many Captains march againſt the Spaniards. This Nation ſufficiently manifeſts her Force; ſhe is attack'd on all ſides, and reſiſts and defends her ſelf on all ſides. This vaſt Extent of Countries, which the Auſtrians poſſeſs, though ſeparated from each other, is the Reaſon, that they are always employed in defending themſelves; but they will be eternally expoſed to loſs without any Appearance of Gain.

Thou knoweſt, that the true Secret of preſerving Union amongſt the Good, is to entertain perpetual Differences amongſt the Bad; and thou wilt ſee, that all the Adventures of this Country will render Us Invincible. What I tell thee is a true Saying. The French, at preſent, are too powerful, with ſo many Troops, ſo many Armies by Sea and Land, which are ſeen in the Provinces of their Enemies.

The

The other Christians are in continual Apprehensions. The Ambassadors of Princes which reside in this Town and Court, observe with great diligence, so many extraordinary things, but say nothing; they do like me, they write and advertise their Masters.

I am afraid thou wilt take no Pleasure in the Relations I make thee of the Successes of so great a Power; but I ought to let thee know the Truth. Affairs are carried on here with much Art. The Ministers serve with great Fidelity, and are very secret. Cardinal Richlieu hath an entire Ascendant over the King's Spirit; and, to say Truth, is a Person of great Merit. They say, he aspires to true Glory, and will place the Crown, which Charlemain wore, as Emperor of the West, upon his Masters Head. If the good Fortune of France marches always at this Rate, the Misfortunes of its Enemies must be excessive.

The manifold Wars which this Monarch undertakes, and Richlieu counsels him, do in the mean time make the People (who bear the Burthen, by the Taxes which they are forced to pay) murmur; besides their Grief for the Loss of their Parents and Friends slain in these Wars.

The Cardinal fears Peace, and apprehends his Enemies may destroy him, if they have leisure to cabal against him. Thus he finds his Interest in the War, and the Armies support his Authority.

I cannot yet make any certain Judgment of him, not have a perfect Knowledge of his Manners, no more than of the Extent of his Genius; because the Man hides many things during his Life with a Dress, which will be discovered when he dies. We can see which are his good Inclinations; and it is not easie to penetrate into a Discovery of the Vices which he is inclined to.

In

In few Words, he has much contributed to the Peace of France, divided by diversity of Religion. He hath succour'd Italy, and manifested there the Power of the King his Sovereign; has weakned the Empire of Germany, by the War he hath carried into her Bosom, by the joint Forces of the Princes of the North, and them of France at once; and no less weakned the Power of the King of Spain.

Thou that knowest every thing that passes, and hast Intelligence from all the Parts of the World, canst truly judge of Affairs, which makes thee know and foresee all that may prejudice the formidable Empire of the Mussulmans.

of the Year 1638.

LETTER XXV.

To the Kaimakam.

ALL is in Peace here, the War being carried on abroad.

The Court continues to make Vows for the Queens Health, and happy Delivery. They seem not so much concerned for the King's Welfare as the Queen's; every Body being perswaded, that the Happiness of France depends on her safe Delivery.

I writ to Chizer Mahamet, that he should mention the Queen's being with Child, as a doubtful thing, and which might vanish; but at present, it is most certain: For she will shortly be brought to Bed. She lives in great repose, for fear of hurting her self; she scarce stirs out of her Bed-Chamber; and every Body endeavours to please her.

There is News from Provence, of the arresting of a King's Son by that Governour. The Prisoner is Bro: her to Uladislaus King of Poland.

'Tis said that the King of Spain had made Prince Casimir Viceroy of Portugal, in Recompence of the Troops of Cossacks he had formerly raised to defend the County of Burgundy. They add, that being embarked at Genoa, upon one of the Gallies of that Republick, for Spain, to take Possession of the said Charge, with a small Train of Domestick, and Count Konickpolski, who called himself Uladislaus's Embassador, with the Marquiss of Gazague, his Kinsman; being arrived in Provence, and visiting with Care, all the Ports and Fortresses. This gave no small Cause of Suspicion to the French. He staid Four Days privately in Marseilles; but his Galley was arrested at Boue, the last part of France, by Orders of this King.

'Tis not yet known what obliged France to make a Person of this Quality, Prisoner, having nothing to do with Poland; and King Lewis XIII. having no particular Pique against Prince Casimir: But the Secrets of State being only known to them that govern Kingdoms, I pretend to penetrate no further, but content my self to write what they do, and what they say. Thou who in the Absence of the Visir Azem art the Glory of his Highness's Council, art best able to discover the Reason of so extraordinary a Novelty.

The most knowing Persons at Court say, this Prisoner will suddenly be set at Liberty; and that having no War that may authorize his Detention, it would be unjust to retain him.

The Event will teach me who am Ignorant, and them that will divine, that which perhaps no body body knows at preſent. May it pleaſe the Great God, Maſter and Sovereign Moderator of all Things, that the Intelligences and Gueſſes which I give, may always be profitable and agreeable; and, that thy Life may be of Eternal Duration, for the Happineſs of our Great Emperor and his Empire.

Thou ſhalt ſuddenly know whether Prince Caſimir be retained longer in Priſon, or ſet at Liberty. I would that King Vladiſlaus were in the ſame Misfortune, in the Hands of the Janizaries; and, that he, as well as his Kingdom, were Slaves to the invincible Sultan, King of Kings; to whoſe Power may it pleaſe the Divine Goodneſs, and the Wiſeſt of his Prophets, to ſubject all the Countries of the Infidels; and then to place him with his Wives and all the Prophets in his Paradiſe.

Paris, 20th of the 7th Moon,
of the Year 1638.

LETTER. XXVI.

To the Kaimakam.

HAving given thee an Account of the Impriſonment of Caſimir, I will relate to thee the Voyage of King Vladiſlaus, his Brother, who is gone a Progreſs into Hungary and Germany.

The News here is, That the King of Poland was gon to make a Viſit to the King of Hungary, who, to do him Honour, ſent the Chief of his Nobles to receive him upon the Confines of Moravia.

They write alſo, that Arch-duke Leopold went from Vienna to meet him: They embraced like Brethren; and returned together with the Queen of Poland, and her Sister back to Court. 'Tis added, that the People received this Company with great Acclamations, with the Noise of the Cannon, and all the small Shot of the City.

The Day following, having dined in the Imperial Palace, they went together to Luxemburg, to visit the Empress Eleanor, Widow to the late Emperor of Germany.

If Carcoa hath not informed thee of these particulars, thou wilt receive them from Mahmut, who watches incessantly to give true Intelligence, and penetrate as much as may be, into all that occurs and is done in this great Court, which gives motion to all the Courts of Europe.

Reprove me if I do not well; and punish me if the Emperor be not well served, and thou satisfied.

Paris, 15th of the 8th Moon,
of the Year 1638.

LETTER XXVII.

To Kerker Hussan Bassa.

DO not accuse me of being ill advised or negligent, if I write to thee things that thou knowest already. I am only careful in telling thee what happens here; and my Business is not to examine whether thou art better informed another way. When I am ordered to write all that comes to my Knowledge, I do my Duty in doing it, and I ought not to be reprehended for it.

I am told that the Sultan is gone with an Army, more numerous than all the Leaves on the Trees, to destroy the * Red Heads * Persians, and conquer Babylon. I know that the Mufti, the Grand Vizir, and all the Grandees of the Divan followed him; but am ignorant of what he did in his first Expedition, when he took Revan.

An old English Merchant, who comes from Ispahan, and has served in the Army of the faithful Mussulmans, passed this Way in his Return to England. He hath been an Eye-witness of the great Actions of Amurath. He says, that this mighty Emperor after his taking of Revan, left Twelve Thousand Soldiers in Garrison there; with Two Hundred Thousand Crowns in Silver; besides Copper Money, to pay them.

He saith also, that our Mighty Monarch, being wearied to see so much Blood of the Faithful, yea, of the Heretick Mussulmans, spilt, he had sent the King of Persia a Challenge; offering to fight singly in Duel with him, but he would not accept of his Defie.

He tells how Amurath being fallen in the Water, in passing the River Haret, was in great Hazard of being laid up in expectation of the Last Judgment Day, in the other World, had it not been for a young lusty Solack, who took him by the Arm, and dragged him out of the River. This Accident was the Prelude of a great good Fortune, which happened to this Mighty Prince upon the Bank of another River, called Maky, where he had the News of the Birth of a Son born to him in the Seraglio, at Constantinople, whom they call Alaaddin; whose Nativity hath been celebrated with infinite Demonstrations of Joy.

This Englishman tells us farther, that Amurath has taken Tauris, and appeared publickly here with all the Marks of a formidable power; that he had destroyed the King of Persia's Seraglio, burnt the publick Markets, and caused a Million of fine Trees, which renders the loss irreparable, to be cut down.

Let me know, when thou art at leisure, whether this News be true, and do me the Favour to tell me our great Emperor's Success in the Expedition of Babylon. The Politicians here, attend the News of it with much Impatience. 'Tis allowed, that Amurath is the most Potent of all Princes, the strongest Man alive; and, that only he can vanquish and ruin the King's of the Earth.

Two Strangers of differing Nations, and both of Royal Blood, are dead in this City. The one is Don Christopher, Son of Don Antonio, King of Portugal; who after he had lived Sixty six Years, without ever attaining the Crown of his Father, died in a Convent of Dervises, called Cordeliers, where he was buried, in the same Place where his Father's Brother had been formerly.

The other Stranger was called Zaga Christus, who was the legitimate Successor of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; a young Man of Twenty five Years, Son to the Empress Nazarenne, Widow of Jacob, Emperor of the Abyssins, who died in a Village near Paris. He quitted his Kingdom, as thou knowest, forced by Civil Wars he arrived in France, in the Year 1635 of the Ægyra of the Christians. After many Adventures, he composed the History of his Travels, which he performed with Troubles and Incommodities which seemed insupportable.

What has he not suffered in traversing many Kingdoms, Arabia the Desart, Egypt, Asia Minor, and Jerusalem, where he ran the Hazard of being arrested by the Bassa that resides there; whom he escaped by retiring by Night to Nazareth, amongst the Christian Dervises, where he concealed himself five Moons.

He

He said here, that an Eunuch of the Bassa of Cairo, had much solliciced him to forsake the Christian Religion, to which he would never consent; and refused to go to Constantinople, to humble himself, by prostrating his Face in the Dust of the Grand Signior's Feet; although the Bassa extreamly pressed him to it, with very advantageous Offers.

This King has done much Honour to the Manes of the dead Prince, whilst perhaps, he suffers Everlasting Torments; which neither thou nor I shall suffer, if we always live like Faithful Mussulmans, according to the Precepts of the Law, ordained by Mahomet, and written in the Alcoran.

I shall gladly hear that thy Life is safe, and my Friendship agreeable to thee.

Paris, 20th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XXVIII.

To the Kaimakam.

That which hath been so long expected, is at length hapned: The Queen is brought to bed of a Dauphin; the King is a Father, the Kingdom seems to desire nothing more, and the People witness their Joy by a Thousand differing Festivities.

The Men, the Women, the Children and the Aged, run through the Streets as at Bacchanals. They rejoice with their Friends, they go to Church and thank God, as if a Messia had been born to them.

All the Priests praiſed God in their Temples for ſuch a Preſent; and the Monks not ſo content, deafen the People with the noiſe of their Bells, and do more than the Drums and Trumpets of the Soldiers, and all the Cannon of the Citadel and Arſenal. I did in Company of others, what I ſhould not have dared to perform, if I had been alone, or had not been obſerved.

Thoſe who affirmed the Queen would be brought to Bed of a Son, pretend now they had been adverriſed by ſome Divine Revelation, and will paſs for Prophets; and amongſt theſe, there are many Religious. Obſerve how far their Superſtition extends.

The Court has diſpatched many Expreſſes into all the Provinces of France; and others have been ſent to all the Embaſſadors, to give notice of his Birth to their reſpective Princes.

A Prieſt, who is a Biſhop, hath baptized this Child, without any Ceremony, in Preſence of the Chancellor of France; the Princes, Princeſſes, and Grandees of the Kingdom; the farther Solemnity being reſerved for another time.

The King commanded Te Deum to be publickly ſung; being the Hymn which is uſual to all Chriſtians, to thank God for extraordinary Succeſſes.

Nothing is ſeen in the Streets of Paris, but Bonfires, and Fountains of Wine, which run Day and Night. The People teſtifie their Joy; and the Fires are ſo great on all ſides, that it looks as if the City were to be reduced to Aſhes.

Amongſt ſo many Subjects of Joy, the King has wherewith to afflict him, having been for ſome Days tormented with a violent Tertian Ague; and it cannot be, but he muſt have his Spirits agitated with ſo many Wars at once. He has Armies againſt Spain, in Flanders, Italy, Burgundy, and and the Empire in Germany; without mentioning his Naval Forces, and the Designs and Pretensions which he doth not yet declare. Thou mayest be confident that Leagues will be formed against him, and Conspiracies against his State. The Great ones of the Kingdom are not asleep; having long since had Designs to humble the Favorites and Ministers, whose Deportments displeased them, and to make themselves Masters of Affairs, and the Government.

I have a piece of News to tell thee; but receive it as coming from a Woman, not Mahmut. I seldom send that for assured, which in Appearance is not Truth. What I am going to say, will undoubtedly seem ridiculous.

The Women give out, that the Dauphin has Teeth, and the Nurses will witness it. Those who easily believe Wonders, publish this as a most certain Truth. The People who add Faith to the most Incredible things, raise Stories upon this, and are full of pretended Auguries.

But there being no Law that obliges us to believe that which we find incredible, thou mayest therefore receive this News as thou pleasest, and look upon it as useless, and excuse me.

They give the King the Title of Saint, which they add to that of Just, because of his great Piety, in devoting his Son, before he was born, to the Virgin, (which the Christians say is the Mother of their Messiah) with his Kingdom, People and Person, which he hath put under the Protection of the Mother of his God, which he has made appear by Prayers, Processions, and extraordinary Alms.

This Ceremony is ordinary enough with these Infidels; who, by an inexcusable Idolatry, devote their Towns, and dedicate their Temples to Men that are dead, whom they call Saints; worshiping them afterwards upon their Altars, and invoking them in their Diſtreſs.

I have nothing more at preſent to write to thee, God give thee always the Grace to be juſt to thy ſelf and others.

Paris, 16th. of the 9th. Moon, of the Year 1638.

LETTER XXIX.

To the Captain Baſſa.

THE Birth of the Dauphin of France happened this Month, whereof I forthwith adverti'd the Kaimakam. I find my ſelf in a great City, where they feaſt continually, to teſtifie the Love they have for the King, the Queen, the Young Prince, and the State.

Joy ſpreads equally; the moſt miſerable, to whom Fortune has given nothing but Tears, do now divert themſelves.

The Women rejoice yet moſt; and, it ſeems this Adventure regards them principally. There is not one of 'em that would not lie in; all the Maids would be Mothers, and the moſt advanced in Years do not now deſpair.

It ſeems here, that God only hears the Prayers of the French; for, they believe the Queen had never been with Child, if the People were not holy. Thus all believe, that they owe it to a Miracle of Heaven, not of Nature, that the Child is born, and for that reaſon he is called, Given of God.

If this be ſo, thou muſt conclude, this Prince will be very great, and much to be redoubted, when hath

him God for his Father, and is Heir of a great Kingdom. To say the truth, France was never so flourishing, besides the great Armies they entertain by Sea and Land.

But that which appears most Important to me, is, their vanquishing the Huguenots, and defeating the Rebels. The Birth of a Successor, does much heighten these Advantages, and causes a great Happiness to this Kingdom. I have my Share in the Feasting, being obliged to do as others; for to what purpose should I appear afflicted?

Before I relate to thee a bloody Combat of Gallies, which was fought in the Sea of Genoa, I will inform thee of a ludicrous one in that of Marseilles, which resembled those Spectacles the Ancient Romans exhibited with so much Pomp and Magnificence called Naumachies.

The Count of Alais, Governour of Provence, caused Four Gallies, Two against Two, to combat, first with Cannon, and afterwards with small Shot; and lastly, to board with Swords and Pikes; which was a fatal Presage for Two Nations, who ran in search of each other through all the Ocean, and exhibited a sad Spectacle by Battels, where a number of valiant Men were seen to perish.

Five and twenty Spanish Gallies appeared on the Coasts of Provence, where it was said they were come to surprize some Maritime Place. But the Count of Harcour, General of the Armies of the Levant, for the King, having given them Chace, some of them retired to the Coasts of Genoa; where they were attacked by a like number of those of France, which had still followed them since they were seen before Marseilles.

It was the first of this Moon that they fought. Never appeared more Valour; never was Combat more terrible; and 'tis scarce conceivable what Blood was shed. Thou who art a great Captain, and an excellent Seaman, maist guess. These

These Thirty Gallies having began their Combat with their Cannon and Musquets, the Sea was in a little time coloured with Blood, and covered with dead Bodies. Each Galley having singled out his Enemy, the Fight was the more bloody and obstinate. 'Tis said this Battel was seen from the Walls and Tops of Houses in Genoa, which were crowded with Spectators; and looked on with the same concern, as if they had fought for the Empire of Italy.

The Victory cost much Blood, which the French pretended to; seeing they took Six Gallies from their Enemies, amongst which was The Royal Patron of Spain, the Captain, and the Patron of Sicily, with Eight Hundred Prisoners; having themselves lost but Three Gallies, which were taken by the Spaniards. The following Night there arose so violent a Tempest, that the Sea had well nigh swallowed the Victorious and the Vanquished. The French lost the Royal Patron of Spain, which breaking loose, retired into a little Port of the River of Genoa, where the Inhabitants of Arenzano seizing it, restored it to the Spaniards, which they say here, the French will not fail to revenge.

I am perswaded that all I write to thee is true, because I have it from disinterested Hands, and such as know the Truth of what passes.

They add only, that the Gallies of Spain having more Slaves and Soldiers, the Victory of the French, was by so much the more glorious; and they affirm, that the other had Two Thousand Foot extraordinary, designed for Milan.

God give thee always Victory over thy Enemies, and make thee feared of all the World.

Paris, 24th of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1638.

LET-

LETTER XXX.

To the same.

They do here so highly magnify their Successes, as also those of the Allies of the Crown of France, that I know not what to believe, these Exaggerations being so contrary to the Glory of the Osmans. Having given thee an Account of the Fight betwixt the Gallies of France and Spain, I will at present, inform thee of the Advantage they say the Gallies of Malta have had.

They affirm that this Squadron has defeated a very great Galley of the Bassa of Tripoli, laden with great Store of rich Merchandise. We know well that this Vessel and her Loading are of good Value; but not so great as the Infidels publish. They say farther, That they took upon the Coast of Calabria, Two great Vessels, and a Polacre, commanded by Picose, Admiral of Tripoli, who is a Renegado of Marseilles. They say, there were Two Hundred Turks, Three Hundred and Fifty Prisoners taken, and Fifty Christians Slaves set at Liberty. If what they say is true, there were also a great many Brass Cannon in these Ships. They confess, that the General of these Gallies, did all that was to be expected from a Valiant Man, although he had the Gout; and that they lost but Eight Knights.

Thou who knowest the Truth of this Adventure, punish so great Lye. 'Tis true, that the Christians have taken the Vessels in Question; but it is not true, that their Advantage hath been so great as they make it, seeing there were no Brass Cannon, but a few Christians delivered; and, they having lost much more than they acknowledge.

Thou

Thou art Valiant, thy Employment gives thee the command of the Sea; root out of the World this little Neſt of obſtinate Pyrates, who breathe but by the Goodneſs of Amurath, whoſe Clemency hinders their Deſtruction.

Writ by a

SPY at PARIS.

BOOK II.

LETTER I.

To the Captain Bassa.

WHY wilt thou be more cruel than a Serpent; and give me Poyson, when I send thee so good Antidotes, to preserve thee from the Mischiefs, with which thou mayest be overwhelmed? If thou beest not satisfied with my Friendship, be at least-wise with the Sincerity wherewith I have given my Advice. Thy proceeding, I must confess, makes me repent I did not take another Course; I should thereby, in all probability, have put a stop to all thy ill Practices. Had I made known to the Grand Vizir, what I wrote to thee from Vienna, I should have received Thanks for my Care and Diligence, and thy Chastisement might have been of good Example:

ample: But I tell thee plainly now, that I shall be obliged to accuse thee of Treason, in case thou continuest thy Commerce with the Emperor of Germany's Secretary.

What Interpretation wouldst thou have me give the Correspondence thou holdest with this Minister; when I discover, that he sends thee continually Presents, and receives the same from thee? Be perswaded, every time thou appearest favourable to the Christians, that the Pleasures thou dost them, render thee Criminal to the Mussulmans. For, in fine, what's the meaning of those Persian Horses, those Hungarian Slaves which thou sentest, and that quantity of Magnificent Vests which thou presentedst to thy Friend? What wouldst thou have a Man think of that Silver Hercules, and Clock enriched with Pearls, which one of the Faithful receives from an Enemy of our Holy Law? It signifies nothing to answer my Letters with Passion, and Raging: Go to the Tribunal, where these kind of Questions are to be decided; the Judge will tell thee, whether such a Commerce is lawful, even in times of Peace. Thou much exaggeratest the Obligations thou hast to thy Friend at Vienna, because he used thee well, when thou wert his Prisoner of War. To this it is easie to answer, That if he behaved himself like a Gentleman, thou oughtest to imitate him, like a good Mahometan. Should he happen to be thy Prisoner, take then thy Revenge, and endeavour to requite him.

Again, supposing it should be discovered, that this thy Friend has presented thee with this famous Cypher, composed with such Ingenuity, that it may be fitly called Arts Master-piece; what Opinion can the Mussulmans have of thy Fidelity? 'Tis known with what Application thou usest it to write into Germany, and to decypher the Answers which thou receivest. Are not these sufficient Signs to ſhew, that the Diſpatches thou writeſt, and their Anſwers, are like the Trojan Horſe, concealing abominable and dangerous Myſteries? Be perſwaded, that I had not writ to thee from Germany, the Letter which has ſo greatly offended thee, on ſimple Conjectures. The Secretary thy Friend, ſaid one day, he muſt be a Witch or a Devil that can diſcover the Artifice of theſe Characters; that an Italian, who was condemned to perpetual Impriſonment, had wrought Twenty Years to meliorate this Art, and had brought it to ſuch great Perfection; that he never ſaw any Body that could underſtand his Letters, with they Key it ſelf, which he gave them. 'Tis ſaid, that this Invention is wholly new; and the more admirable, that a Letter of an ordinary Style, of domeſtick Affairs of Love and Compliments, may contain Secrets of the greateſt Importance, without uſing Equivocal Expreſſions particular Characters, Figures, ſuppoſed Names. Hieroglyficks, Juice of Herbs or Liquors; it being impoſſible ever to diſcover what one deſigns to hide. He adds, that one may write in Turkiſh, Arabian, French or Italian, and conceal a ſecret, written in any Tongue whatever.

Thy Friend carries it yet farther, and ſays, he could make uſe of Verſes to decypher Proſe: And this audacious Man affirm'd one day in the Emperor's Anti-chamber, that he would put into French, this horrible Blaſphemy, The Tyrant Amurath will ſoon die; which is found in the following Verſes of an Italian Poet, whereof he immediately made a Proof: And theſe are the Italian Verſes.

Giace l'Alta Cartago, a penai Segni
De l'alte ſue ruine illido de ſerba
Muiono le citta, muiono i Regni
Cuope i faſti, e le pompe arena & herba
Et l'huom di eſſer mortal parche ſi
O noſtra mente cupida, & ſuperba ſdegni.

If-

If it appears that I am too ſharp againſt thee, I will receive thy Curſes without Reply: But if thou knoweſt I have had juſt Reaſons to write to thee, as I have done; Why are thy Anſwers ſo full of Injury? Think better on thy Intereſt, and be always faithful, if thou intendeſt a long life.

Paris, 4th of the 10th Moon,
of the Year 1638.

LETTER II.

To the ſame.

THE ſmall Succeſs which we always meet with at Sea, obliges me to entertain thee thereon. I ſhall take no Notice of this to the other Grandees of the Port, no not to the Kaimakam, to whom I have not written theſe Three Poſts. If thou haſt received my two laſt Letters, thou oughteſt to be ſatisfied with the Care which the faithful Mahmut takes to give thee ſound Advice. Conſider well all the Circumſtances which are related here, concerning the Sea Affairs.

The Loſs of ſo many Gallies, great Ships and other Veſſels, made this Year, by the Friends of the Empire, the True Faithful; do much leſſen the Reputation of the Ottoman Greatneſs.

The Diſcourſes made hereon by the Chriſtians, are ſo many Invectives againſt the Honour of Amurath, againſt thine, and that of our Nation. If it be by a Decree of Heaven, that theſe Venetian Pyrates have taken this Year, all the Gallies of Africk; we muſt then conclude, That God is offended with us, and does not hear our Prayers.

For

For my part, I believe it; but I ſhould not be a good Muſſulman, ſhould I pretend to underſtand the Secrets of Providence.

They write from Marſeilles, That the People of Tunis, Bizerte, and Algiers, are greatly diſmayed at the loſs of their Fifteen Galleys, which General Capello has taken from them this Year. Thou knoweſt how the buſineſs has happened; the Infraction of the Treaty is manifeſt to all the World, as well as the Inſultings over the Fortreſs of the Grand Signior. I cannot imagin what Excuſes the Senators of this Republick can make, for what their Admiral has maliciouſly done againſt us, when they ſhall be obliged to give an Account of their Actions at the Fleet of Amurath. I ſpeak to thee with all poſſible Humility, and thou needeſt not doubt but I ſpeak with zeal. I believe 'tis time for thee to oppoſe, and put a ſtop, not only to the Pyracies of theſe People, but the Incurſions and continual Enterprizes of the Corſairs of Malta, and ſo many Veſſels which infeſt our Seas, under the Banner of the Duke of Tuſcany, and other Infidel Princes. Thou oughteſt to ſuccour thoſe People which are Friends and Tributaries to the Port, whoſe Aſſiſtance thou haſt often advantagiouſly uſed; neither doſt thou want means for this, having at thy diſpoſal the terrible Forces, entruſted to thee by Amurath, and, with theſe, the magnanimous Courage given to thee by Nature.

The Chriſtians have vowed to pierce, this Year, into the Boſphorus, and put all to Fire and Sword. Above Sixty French Knights are determined for Malta, to joyn themſelves with their Comrades, to cruiſe our Seas with them. And thou knoweſt the Reſolution and Courage of this Militia, and the Progreſs they every Day make.

Believe what Mahmut tells thee. Thou haſt Two Seas to keep, and if it be true, thou haſt made

Ali

Ali Piccinino, to come from Africk with ſo many Galleys, deſigned to the keeping of the Coaſts of Barbary, 'tis not to be doubted, but the Divine Providence has ordered, (it concerning ſo greatly Amurath's Honour) that the Guilty be purſued, ſo that not one of them may eſcape his Vengeance.

All People ſay here, that Piccinino has loſt his Army for want of good Conduct. However here are great Rejoycings at our Loſſes; and, if poſſible, more in Italy, where they feel the Advantage of ſo conſiderable a Prize at the ſame time, together with the Honour of the Victory; and where we are hated more than in any place elſe beſides. I beſeech God to chaſtiſe theſe People by thy Hand; and that the Edge of thy Cymiter, in giving Death to our Enemies, may put an end to Slander and Slanderers.

Here's an impudent Fellow, who reports he has ſeen thee ſeveral Times at Conſtantinople. He with great Confidence affirms, the Chriſtian Corſaries will bring thee one Day, laden with Chains, into the Arſenal of Venice, or that of Malta. He grounds his Prediction on that thou art, ſays he, furious when thou commandeſt; and that being too forward, thou canſt not obey the Orders given thee. He adds, that Tobacco, Love of Boys, Wine, and Women, drive thee twice a day into a Condition uncapable of exerciſing thy Reaſon. He moreover ſays thou wanteſt Courage in a Land-Fight, neither art well skill'd in Sea-Combats. I would not write theſe Fooleries to thee, were I not perſwaded that they really are ſo; and that thou wanteſt neither Courage nor Experience. I am moreover perſwaded of the Malignity of thy Accuſers, touching the Debaucheries I mentioned; and it appears to me more pertinent to write thee this, than to the Grand Vizir; though I muſt confeſs, I am enjoyned to inform the Miniſters of the Port of whatever I hear, without any Reſerve.

'Tis ſaid, that as to what concerns the Republick of Venice and Capello who commands its Navy, that this General will be puniſhed for doing too well; that this puiſſant State, will be humbled to the kiſſing the Stirrup of our great Emperor's Horſe; but it will juſtifie the lawfulneſs of the Prize, which this General made, as being no breach of the Treaty with the Sublime Port, whence come the Orders by which the World is to be governed; and that, in fine, the Pyrates of Africk, are not comprehended in the Treaties of Peace made with his Highneſs.

And it is moreover alledged, that ſhould this Republick be obliged to reſtore theſe Galleys which ſhe has taken, 'twill appear, they have been loſt through ſeveral Accidents.

All Chriſtendom is perſwaded, there's no Republick in the World governed with greater Prudence; which will make her avoid all occaſions of Difference with the Port, and ſeek all Ways of Reconcilement with Amurath, to prevent a War which cannot be for her Intereſt.

I hapned into a Company of diſcreet Perſons, who blame Ali Piccinino's Conduct; and attribute his Misfortune to his want of Skill, and to his Raſhneſs. They affirm, that had he had the Courage of a true Soldier, he would have behaved himſelf not only in the Archipelago, but in the Adriatick Sea, like a Captain, and not like a Thief; and, that God has given him this Mortification as a Puniſhment for the Cruelty he ſhewed to the innocent Veſtals, whom he made Slaves at Calabria, together with a great Multitude of Old Men, and Children which was an Act no ways ſuitable to a brave Commander. And this is the Diſcourſe cauſed by the Hatred to our Nation, and eſpecially to Ali

LETTER III.

To the ſame.

I Wrote to thee Yeſterday, what the Senſe of the World was of thee; and I write to thee this Day what Mine is.

Although thou askeſt not my Advice, yet I will give thee ſuch, as perhaps, thou wilt approve of, and may be uſeful to thee in due Seaſon.

Wilt thou be revenged of the Venetians, and all the Chriſtians at once? Paſs over into the Adriatick Seas, with twenty ſmall Galleys; draw near at Night to the Shoar at Ancona; And, before the Sun be up, ranſack the famous Place of Loretto; thou mayſt carry away thence as great Booty, as ever the Conſuls and Roman Emperors did elſewhere.

Couldſt thou conceive the immenſe Riches ſhut up in a little Chamber, (where the Chriſtians affirm, That a Virgin received an Embaſſador from Heaven, under the Form of an Angel; after whoſe Words ſhe found ſhe had conceived the Meſſias, whom the Chriſtians worſhip) thou wouldeſt not defer the executing of what Mahmut counſels thee.

'Tis reported in this Kingdom, as if Piccinin had ſuch a Deſign. Why did not this brave Spark

then execute what he had ſo well contrived? When he was in Africk, he was to ravage all Italy; and he had no ſooner come on thoſe Coaſts, but he loſt all the true African Courage. He let himſelf be taken Priſoner; he ſuffered a mighty Fleet to be loſt, and the Shamefulneſs of his Defeat will for ever blaſt his Name.

If Amurath returns a Conqueror of Babylon, which is very likely to happen, and thou takeſt Loretto; it may be ſaid, that the Ottoman Empire is arrived at its full Height; Loretto being the Mecha of the Chriſtians.

There is no Seaſon, wherein one ſees not arrive an infinite number of Pilgrims from all Parts; who come to offer there their Devotions, with the ſame Zeal as the Faithful go and pray at the Tomb of our Holy Prophet; and they often joyn with their Prayers, Offerings of conſiderable Value. A ſmall number of Prieſts of the Roman Church, have ſuch Treaſures there in their keeping, as cannot be fully valued: Veſſels of both Gold and Silver, with Veſtures and Ornaments, and precious Stones, which ſerve to ſet forth this Temple, the moſt magnificent and famous amongſt the Chriſtians; an infinite number of Lamps, Crowns and Scepters offered by the greateſt Princes of the Chriſtian Belief; and, in fine, whatever can be imagined moſt Beautiful, moſt Great, and Coſtly. Thou that knoweſt not what Fear is, thou canſt foreſee nothing in this Enterprize which may deter thee. The Prieſts of this famous Temple ſleep all the Night long, and ſpend the Day in chanting their Maſſes; and the Soldiers deſigned for the keeping of this Place, are few in number, and can make but ſmall Reſiſtance: If thou beeſt perſwaded of the Truth of what I write, do more than Ceſar; go, conquer, and repoſe thy ſelf. I have no more to write to thee: I ſend the Kaimakam kam a Copy of this Letter. I have writ thee whatever has come to my knowledge, and thou wouldſt farther know, that Mahmut, under the Habit of Titus, has diſcourſed at Paris. I am willing to inform thee, I have anſwered ſome People, who have had the boldneſs to ſay, That the Ottoman Empire will be ſoon ruined, ſhould it receive ſuch another Blow; that if Trees be not wanting in Aſia, the Mehometans will not want Ships nor Gallies; and that they will have as many Soldiers and Seamen as they pleaſe, if the Women do not happen all of them at once to be Barren. Thou knoweſt, that after the Battel of Lepanto, wherein the Great God, and our Prophet, deſign'd to mortify the Faithful; that Selim's Favourite maintained the Glory of his Maſter, in thus ſpeaking to the Bailo of Venice: There is difference between the Loſſes which the Republick makes, and the Misfortunes which happen to the Muſſulmans; that when we took from you the Iſland of Cyprus, we cut off one of your Arms; and when you defeated us in Battel, 'twas juſt as if you had cut off our Beards, which will ſoon grow up again, And if Women and Trees do not fail us, we ſhall ſoon have Ships and Men; but the loſs of your Arm can never be repaired.

The Eternal Lord, without whom nothing can ſubſiſt, make the Sea always navigable, and without Tempeſts, that the Winds may favour thy Deſigns; and when thou haſt finiſhed all thou oughteſt, for the Glory of the Empire, I pray Heaven make thee Poſſeſſor of the Infidels Countries, which thou ſhalt ſubdue.

LETTER IV.

To the Kaimakam.

THis Letter will perhaps prove troubleſom to thee, wherein thou wilt find an odd Mixture; however, thou wilt have no cauſe to complain of me; for, whatever I write to thee, ſhall be put into ſuch Order, that if the firſt News be troubleſom to thee, the laſt will prove otherwiſe. Thou haſt received none of my Letters in the laſt Pacquets which I ſent thee; and, I have found it more to the purpoſe, to make thee know at once, though ſomething later, what I could not write but at Three times; whereby thou wilt be better informed than others, to whom I wrote the firſt Notices I had. There's nothing like to Patience; as in all other things, ſo more eſpecially as to what concerns News; the lame Poſt always bringing the beſt Intelligence.

However, I hope thou wilt pardon me, if I wrote only to one Perſon, who is the Captain Baſſa, thoſe diſagreeable things which I heard, that I might not make a new Recital, which would not pleaſe; beſides that he is obliged, as well as the other Miniſters of the Port, to impart to thee the Advices he receives from me.

Thou wilt find by the Copy of the Letter which I have written, that 'tis not without Reaſon I am angry with him. My Deſign is not to learn thee, what thou knoweſt probably before me, but what thou may'ſt be ignorant of, and yet oughteſt to know.

The Chriſtians expreſs continually their Hatred againſt us, always ſpeaking ill of our Affairs. Although there be no War declared between theſe In- fidels, and the ever invincible Sultan; yet they ceaſe not to be our Enemies; and thou maiſt know by their Diſcourſe, they are ever laying Deſigns againſt us. Thou knoweſt, the uſual Way of the World, is to diſcourſe firſt of Affairs, and then take their Reſolutions. The French are generally excepted from this Rule, for they have executed their Deſigns before they began to ſpeak of them; ſo lively is their Imagination, and ſo ready are they to take their Reſolutions. They do in Affairs of State, what we are wont to do in thoſe of Religion; they decide them by the Sword. They affirm, That Princes who have Valour, have no juſter Tribunal than War; and that their Soldiers are their Lawyers. What meaſure then, moſt Wiſe Kaimakam, can be taken with a Nation which is in continual Activity? The French cannot remain at Reſt; and when they diſturb not their Neighbours, they make War amongſt themſelves. The Miniſters of Foreign Princes, who do, neat the matter, what I do; although they have a Character which I have not, are inceſſantly in Action: They watch without ceaſing, as I do, on what paſſes; and thou maiſt aſſure thy ſelf that the Divan ſhall be fully and certainly advertiz'd of all things.

The Pope keeps here, as his Ambaſſador, a Prelate, called a Nuncio. The Emperor of Germany, the King of Spain, thoſe of England, Swedeland, Denmark and Poland; the Electors, and ſeveral other Princes of the Empire, entertain alſo Embaſſadors, to obſerve the Motions of this Prince, who often breaks all their Meaſures. The States of Italy do alſo the ſame. There are, in this Part of Europe Princes and Republicks: theſe little Sovereigns, are more jealous than others of their Intereſts; and do more concern themſelves in all Affairs which paſs. The Republicks likewiſe uſe greater Precautions in their Conduct, than the Monarchs do.

The Republick of Venice has acquired a great Reputation; France keeps a good Correſpondence with her; the Embaſſador of that State, living here with all the Marks of Grandeur, and the ſame Prerogatives granted to thoſe of Crowned Heads. Neither Perſia nor Moſcovia, keep any Publick Miniſter here; yet, perhaps, they may have ſome that give Private Intelligence to their Maſters. As to what concerns the Princes of the Indies, they ſeem not to me, to have any Intereſt here; ſo that they have, I believe, no Agent in theſe Parts, either publick or private. If the Name of Spy be mean, or diſhonourable, I know no Body that is called one; for I being unknown, my Reputation therefore runs no hazard. I ſerve, without being obſerved. But, to ſpeak plainly, what are the Embaſſadors and Agents of Princes, but ſecret Spies, as I am, who under a pretence of keeping a Correſpondence between their Maſters, inform them of what they can diſcover in the Courts, where they are ſent.

Thou ſhalt be ſufficiently inform'd by the Baſſa of the Sea, of Piccinino's Adventure; he will ſhew thee what I have written. However, there are Sixty Galleys loſt; and our greateſt Conſolation is, that we ſhall not want means to be revenged: If the Chriſtians have cut off one of our Fingers, we ought to pluck out both their Eyes.

'Tis ſaid here, that this Admiral is made Priſoner by the Venetians: If this be true, his Confinement muſt be very uneaſie to him. But, all People are not agreed, whether he be a Priſoner or no; for ſome maintain, he is at Conſtantinople, where he juſtifies himſelf with his uſual Arrogance; laying all the Fault on the Renegado, who commanded the Admiral of Algiers.

I have recommended to the Baſſa of the Sea, the Enterprize of Loretto. If thou haſt leiſure to examine the Project, thou wilt find, though I am no Captain nor Mariner, what I have hinted is worth regarding. The Knowledge which I have of the World, of the manner of Living of the Chriſtian Princes, and Prieſts of Rome; together with the other Notices I have acquired, by reading of Hiſtories, ſhould make me conſidered, as a Man that is able to offer at great things; though I have not yet gain'd much Credit in the World.

The Embaſſador of Venice, reſiding in this Court, ſays, that their Republick will ſatisfie the Grand Signior; affirming, that Ali is a Pyrate; that the Africans have broken the Peace; and, that the Action of their General Capello, is Juſt and Heroical; and, that Amurath himſelf will chaſtiſe Piccinino. He moreover pretends that the Gallies which were taken, will not be reſtored, ſeeing it will be made apparent, that they have been loſt by different Accidents: I think he ſays, they have been all ſunk before the Iſle of Corfou, by the Senate's Order, to prevent the Expectation of a Surrender, the Admiral of Algiers only excepted, which thoſe Infidels have brought in Triumph into their Arſenal, to preſerve the Remembrance of an Event, which they pretend to be very glorious to them. But theſe Misfortunes are not extream, nor paſt Remedy, if God continues the Life of our Great Emperor, and thy Health.

LETTER

LETTER V.

To the ſame.

THey have at length given over talking of our Loſſes, but I give not over deviſing the Means to be revenged of the Chriſtians. Remember, that the Grand Vizir keeps in Priſon a Man fit for great things at this time, who can do the Nazarenes conſiderable Miſchiefs, and procure notable Advantage to the Muſſulmans. If the old Renegado of Dalmatia be yet alive, he is capable of deſtroying all Places in the Mediterranean Sea. Adviſe with him about the Deſtruction of Loretto. There is no Corſary that has done more bold Exploits. He has ſpent Sixty Years in courſing on the Archipelago and Adriatick Sea; where he has made horrid Devaſtations, with infinite Prizes. He has likewiſe moſt conſiderably damnified the Coſſacks, on the Black Sea. He began the Trade at Nine Years old in a little Veſſel; has been wounded in Twenty, or Twenty two Occaſions, taken Priſoner Four Times by our Pyrates, and Thrice eſcaped out of their Hands. And not being able to fly the fourth time, nor redeem himſelf by Money, he redeem'd himſelf by his Religion, which he quitted to embrace ours; and ſince he has been circumciſed, he has brought to Conſtantinople above Thirteen Thouſand Slaves in about Thirty Years ſpace. He has paſs'd full Five Years in the Cleft of a Rock, along the Banks of the Adriatick Sea; which by his Induſtry he made a ſure Place of Retreat. Here 'twas that he hid himſelf with his Men and Veſſel, like a wild Beaſt in his Den; and 'tis hard to imagine how many Snares he laid during that time, for thoſe of his own Religion. He has been often purſued, but could never be taken; and his Name became ſo terrible amongſt the Chriſtians, that there was no Place but dreaded him. But, in fine, having, as 'tis ſaid, attempted to betray his Maſter, in delivering into the Chriſtians Hands the Five Galleys he commanded; he was ſent, by Order from the Grand Vizir, into the Caſtle of Seven Towers, although his Crime was not certainly proved. 'Tis about Two and fifty Moons ſince he has been there kept Priſoner; and he is not only very old, but decrepid. The long Penance which a Man has undergone, that has done ſuch great things, and who is accuſed of having done one ill one, of which he is not convicted, does plead for ſome Indulgence.

I ſhall never go about to ſollicit for the Liberty of a Traytor; yet I muſt ſay, That Men who have dared to execute great Crimes, are often capable of Heroick Actions. This Man was, and is ſtill, at the end of his Life; perhaps if thou wilt endeavour to procure him ſome Advantage, and make him hope ſtill greater, he may repair his Fault, by performing ſomething for the good of the Empire; or at leaſt, give ſome good Advice. Thou knoweſt the Ancient Perſians had a Law, whereby their Kings were obliged, Not to put a Malefactor to Death for One Crime; and private Perſons not to chaſtiſe their Domeſticks or Slaves for One Fault. Thou knoweſt moreover, that Princes ſhould obſerve in the Chaſtiſement of their Subjects, whether the Services they had rendred, have not been greater than their preſent failings, and pardon them if their good Deeds ſurpaſſed their bad. Theſe Laws, although no longer obſerved in Perſia, yet ceaſe not to be wiſe Precepts; to which, if thou haſt no regard, yet thou wilt have ſome to the Zeal and Affection of Mahmut. And, if thou wilt ſuffer me to make here a ſhort Digreſſion, in comparing paring the State wherein we are, with that of the Ancients; thou wilt find, how much our Monarchy ſurpaſſes all others. Doſt thou believe, Generous Kaimakam, that the Ottoman Empire is equal, inferior, or ſuperior to that of the Romans in Pompey's time? Let us content our ſelves with ſuppoſing it equal, to ſpeak without Paſſion, and cut the courſe of Diſputes, which might be made hereupon; and reflect, I pray thee, on the Conduct which Pompey held in the War he made againſt thoſe infinite number of Pyrates which infeſted the Seas of Italy, Africa and Aſia. He was made General of an Army of Five hundred Sail, with abſolute Power to do what he thought fitting, without giving any Account. Thou knoweſt his Conduct was ſo prudent and full of Valour, that embarking with Ten thouſand and Twenty Foot, and Six Thouſand Horſe, he in Forty Days cleared Lybia, Sicily, Spain, Sardinia; and in, in a Word, all the Seas which depended on the Roman Power, from an infinite number of Pyrates; who had, as it were, beſieged the Capital of the Empire by their Incurſions, Rapines and Violences.

Now, although the number of our Enemies be not ſo great, nor their ſtrength ſo conſiderable; yet 'tis to be feared, leſt the Infidels be one Day bold enough, (having joined their Forces, which now are diſperſed.) to fall upon us, and ſhake the vaſt Monarchy of the Ottomans, which they now often diſturb by frequent Enterpriſes in ſeveral Parts.

We have an infinite number of Places to preſerve. We have ſeveral Kingdoms, populous Iſles: We command Warlike Nations, and the number of the Empire's Subjects are innumerable, which ought to incourage us to undertake no leſs than Pompey did heretofore, who was called the Agamemnon of Italy, becauſe he commanded a numerous Fleet, as this Hero of the Greeks formerly did. But, it being already Midnight, I am forced to finiſh this Letter, leſt it ſhould be too late for the Poſt.

I ſhall inform thee by the firſt Opportuniry, of what has happened in Italy and Germaay, and of ſeveral other things which I thought I ought to give thee Notice of by this Expreſs; but, accuſe me not of neglect, in not having written all to thee in this Letter, and receive my Excuſe, which is juſt and ſincere, and grant me thy Favour.

The great God encreaſe thy Proſperity, and continue thy Health and Credit in the Dominions of the Invincible Sultan, under whoſe Glorious Reign we live.

Paris, 7th of the 11th Moon,
of the Year 1638.

LETTER VI.

To the ſame.

I paſs immediately into Monferrat, without leaving France, to tell thee, That the Spaniards have there made themſelves Maſters of a little Town, which the French could not keep for want of Men; and have alſo demoliſhed the Fortreſs which guarded the Place, that their Enemies might not have any deſire after a Reprizal.

The eldeſt Son of Amadeus, Duke of Savoy, is now dead; he was called Lewis Amadeus; he was but Seven Years old when declared Sovereign, and was ſo but few Moons. He died Four Days after the Ceremony of his Baptiſm. The King of France and the Queen of Spain, were Godfather and God-

God-mother to this Prince. Thou wilt ask me perhaps how this could be, seeing they could not be there present? But thou must know, that these Nazarenes assist often at these Ceremonies by Procuration. The Dutchess of Savoy seems to me worthy of Compassion, having lost in one Year, both her Husband and her Son, and a good part of her Estate, and sees what remains to her, exposed to the hazards of War; but she has ever shewed her self a Woman of Courage and Resolution. Her Second Son has been declared his Brother's Heir, and the States have chosen her Regent, during his Minority.

The reason of the sudden Visit, which the Elector of Saxony gave the King of Hungary, is not yet known: We have had advice of his Departure from Dresden, the Capital Town of his Country, with a great Train of Courtiers, and the Three princes his Sons, and that he went to Leutmaritz, where this King expected him; and, 'tis further said, that in the small time they were together, they have had several Conferences, the subject of which is not yet discovered. The King has presented the Duke with a rich Coach, with Six stately Horses, sumptuously harnessed; and given Diamonds and Gold Chains to his Courtiers. But thou being nearer the Place of this Conference, and the Port having every where subtle Agents, thou may'st sooner get this Secret than I: For, 'tis not to be doubted, but there's something hatching against the Ottoman Empire, while Amurath is at that Distance, and the chief Forces of his Empire employed elsewhere.

As to what concerns the Progress of the Duke of Wimar, who carries on the War in Alsatia, there are infinitely different News come from thence, since I wrote to thee; but this is what is most certain. After the taking of Fribourgh, this General made himself Master of the Champaign about Brizac; zac, and his Army seizing on all the Posts thereabouts, the Imperialists put themselves in a Posture of hindring them; but, for Three Months Time, they could do nothing but spoil the Corn, and forage in the Country, whereby they wasted their own Subsistence. They have also fruitlesly endeavoured to break down the Bridge, which Wimar had built at Newremberg; where they met with such resistance, that they were forced to retire with their Army which was in great Danger. But the Duke also met with no Success in his Enterprize on Offemburgh, through the fault of Fifteen hundred Musqueteers, French and Germans, who came not soon enough to plant their Ladders against the Walls, and surprize this Place: And, he has since made different Trials, which have proved all in vain. An Officer had already entred as far as the Ramparts, with a small Party, which he commanded by means of a false Pass-port; but, being discovered by a Sentinel, he was forced to retreat in Confusion, with the Loss of some of his Men. Wimar since defeated Two Regiments of Dragoons, and Two other Regiments of Horse, and seized on the Castle of Mauberg; the Garrison of which Place surrendred at Discretion, to a Swedish Officer. But I am informed, that the Two Armies came near to one another on the Banks of the Rhine; of which I shall say no more than what is necessary.

The Emperor's Troops being discovered by Wimar's Vant-guard, commanded by Turenne, gained an high Ground; on which, fortifying themselves, they sheltred behind a Church and some Houses, before which there was a Battery raised of several Pieces of Cannon, to keep the Swedes at a distance, and hinder them from encamping too near. Some French, imprudently advancing to discover the Enemy's Posture, within less than Musquet-shot, were were almoſt all kill'd on the Place. By this time the Duke of Wimar, ſeeing he could not draw the Imperialiſts to fight, and it being impoſſible to force them on the Mountain, where they were intrenched, retired under the Caſtle of Mauberg, with his Rear-guard, commanded by the Count de Gurbian, a French Gentleman. The next day he joined the reſt of the Army, and being informed by a Moor that ſerved him, and in whom he put great Confidence, that the Imperialiſts began early in the Morning to retire; he immediately therefore put himſelf into a Condition to follow them, making his Army to march in Battel-array. His Horſe conſiſted of Twenty four Squadrons, and his Foot of Eight Battalions; beſides the Auxiliary Troops, of which he made a Reſerved Body.

The French affirm, the Imperialiſts were the ſtrongeſt, as having Four thouſand Men more than the Swedes; of which 'tis hard to know the certainty; but the Particulars of the Battel are worth ones writing. 'Twas very bloody, the Fight being obſtinately held by both Parties, and the Victory long inclining, ſometimes to one ſide, and ſometimes to another: So that the Combatants were ready to retire, weary of ſtriking and being ſtruck; when Fortune on a ſudden declared her ſelf for the Duke of Wimar, who behaved himſelf in the Fight like a Wiſe Captain and valiant Soldier. 'Tis certain, the Imperialiſts have loſt Two Twouſand Men in this Occaſion, with ſeveral of their Principal Officers: And alſo, above Fifteen Hundred were made Priſoners; amongſt which, there were above Two hundred Perſons conſiderable on the Account of their Birth or Employs. I make no mention of the Number of the Cannon; neither do I reckon the Hundred Colours or Cornets, nor Three Thouſand Waggons laden with all ſorts of Ammunition, which fell to the Conquerors: But I greatly value the Box of Writings of Two great Commanders, wherein were found the Inſtructions and ſecret Orders of the King of Hungary, and ſome Treaties made with the Sublime Port; to which, all the Potentates of the World ſhould pay Homage.

It cannot yet be diſcovered what theſe Treaties contain; yet I ſhall do all that's poſſible in order to it. The Booty has been great; however Wimar ſeems not to ſet much by it, as aiming at ſomething more conſiderable. He remained Two Days in the Field of Battel, the better to aſſure his Enemy of his Conqueſt. He moreover pretends in his Letters to this Court, that he had not in this Expedition above Five hundred Foot, and few Cavalry; which out of a Bravado, he ſays he will reinforce with his Pages. This is that which our Emperor who are the Maſters of the World, would ſcruple to ſay in the Preſence of their Slaves; ſo far would they be from ſpeaking ſo before an Army, as this Prince did, in the Preſence of a great King. See the Vanity of one of theſe Infidels Generals.

In Obedience to the Orders which I received from thee, I here end my Letter; ſo that thou wilt receive a very imperfect Relation, of the Events which I began to relate to thee; and I ſhall continue my Diſpatch to morrow, that thou may'ſt the better remember what I have already written to thee, that I may not loſe the Thread of the Hiſtory.

Paris, 24th of the laſt Moon,
of the Year 1638.

LET-

LETTER VIII.

To the ſame.

I Find in the Alchoran, the Chapter which ſpeaks of Limbo's, to be very long; and, I believe I never wrote thee any Letter, wherein there were ſo many Words; Thou ſhalt not receive henceforward any from me, larger than the Hundred and ſix Verſicles of this Chapter, ſeeing thou enjoyneſt me to be ſhort. I have therefore divided this Diſpatch into Two, leſt it ſhould prove tirefom to thee; although I believe thou wouldeſt have found it when intire, not ſo long as the Chapter which treats of Hell.

Wimar loſt no time, but went and encamped before Brizac. He cauſed the Trenches to be opened with great Diligence, and has ſo beſet the Rhine, that nothing can paſs without his Leave. This River is conſiderable for its Largeneſs, and Length of its Courſe; carrying Veſſels of great Burthen, which makes it much frequented.

This Captain perceiving the Town wanted Proviſions of all kinds, uſed all imaginable Artifices to ſurprize it, or carry it by Aſſault. It is the Capital of a great Province, where he is Maſter of ſeveral conſiderable Places, and ſeveral ſtrong Caſtles, from whence, one may ſay, the Place was already beſieged.

Things were in this Condition, and there was no other Diſcourſe in the Swedes Camp, but of Victories, Loſſes and Wounds, when the News of the Birth of the Dauphin was brought there, which cauſed another Noiſe to be heard. The Horſe and Foot, joyned their Shouts of Joy to the Sounds of the Drums, Trumpets, and the Artillery, which was several times discharged.

The Valour of the Duke of Wimar, and that of the Troops which he commands, made not the Imperialists to lose their Courage, having recruited their Army with new Troops. General Lamboye, a Man of Courage and good Conduct, appeared in the fight of the Swedes, having added to his Army Five Thousand Men, with the rest of the Troops of Prince Savelly, and wasted the Country which the Enemy was in Possession of. If thou wouldst know the Situation of the Suedes Camp, and in what manner they made their Trenches, and Circumvallations, I can certainly inform thee; having had some time since a very exact Draught of it. This Camp is Three German Miles in Compass; Fortified on each side by a Trench Sixteen Foot thick with a large deep Ditch, a double Palisado, and several Redoubts. The Lower as well as Upper Parts of the Town, are mightily annoyed by Two Bridges made on the Rhine. The Abundance of all sorts of Ammunition, does much hearten the Army. The Commander, although very ill, yet is incessantly watchful, and seems indefatigable. The Soldiers animated by their past Successes, think of nothing but new Conquests, and new Booty, imagining themselves invincible. The Artillery, which is in the Camp, is Fifty Pieces of great Cannon, with which such Batteries have been made, as drive the Besieged to despair. I mention not to thee several small Skirmishes, which continually happen, yet this is what is most considerable: Some Troops of young Soldiers of the Imperial Army, having taken several Cattle from the Suedes, and made some Prisoners, had Notice of the March of Colonel Sillard, who came from France, and brought a good Sum of Mony for the Payment of the Troops. They went to meet him, and took it, together with ſeveral Young Gentlemen Priſoners, all Men of Note; and, who had alſo a great deal of Mony about them. At the ſame time, the Duke of Lorrain, a Prince of great Valour, who ſerves in the Imperialiſts Party, has undertaken to relieve Brizac, which he knew was reduced to the utmoſt Extremity: And, having choſen, for this Deſign, Forty Companies of Foot for a Convoy of Proviſions; and, being on his March, he met with the Duke of Wimar. And this is the ſhort of the Story: The Prince was ſtill indiſpoſed, by reaſon of his late Sickneſs; yet, this could not hinder him from embracing this Occaſion, which he believed to be of great Importance to his Party; he got therefore on Horſeback, and marched up to the Duke.

The Combat laſted Five Hours, and Lorrain did all that could be expected from a brave and experienced Commander. But, he was conſtrained to yield to the Duke's Fortune, and retire into a Wood, with what he could ſave of his Troops; and, the Suedes Courage was not a little increaſed by ſo great an Advantage, which will certainly be attended with the Surrender of Brizac. The Duke of Wimar remained Maſter of the Field, having entirely defeated the Imperialiſts Foot, and put the Duke of Lorrain's Horſe into a Horrid Diſorder: There lay above Twelve Hundred Dead on the Place, and all the Baggage, together with the Ammunition, fell into the Hands of the Conqueror. A Man would think, Illuſtrious Kaimakam, that the God Mars has united himſelf with this Captain; for, notwithſtanding the Weakneſs of his Body, he performs every Day moſt Heroick Actions with his valiant Soldiers, who are ready to undertake any thing, when he is at their Head. Whether this happens from his not valuing of Life, or his Thirſt after Honour; yet, ſo it is, That he

That he cannot live without nouriſhing himſelf with Victories; and, he begins already to equal the Famous Guſtavus, under whom he has learn'd his Trade. Yet he has loſt, notwithſtanding his Diligence, two Forts he built on the Rhine, which, if he retakes, 'twill not be without the Coſt of much Blood on both ſides. The Germans have already loſt Sixty Thouſand Men there, amongſt which there were Four Hundred Drowned.

The Extremities of Brizac, of which we have already private Advices, is at preſent known by all the World. The Swedes intercepted, the laſt Moon of October, a Letter from the Governor to the King of Hungary, wherein he laid open his Condition, and told him plainly, that Places which wanted Men, Victuals, and Ammunition, could not be defended but by a Miracle; adding, that the beſt Officers and Soldiers were already dead; and thoſe that were alive, were either Sick, or lay Wounded, and ſo greatly tired, that they could do no Service; and beſides, their Victuals would laſt but twelve Days. He ſeemed afterwards to reproach him for letting the time ſlip, in which he had promiſed him aſſiſtance; and put him in mind, he did not believe he could hold out to the 4*th* of the Moon of September; being reduced to ſuch Extremities, that he durſt not mention particulars, leſt his Letter ſhould fall into other hands. Obſerve the Imprudence of the Expreſſion; he dares not write all, and yet he writes more than needs, to diſcover that the Place will be infallibly taken.

If thou beeſt impatient to know the Surrender of Brizac, thou ſhalt be ſatisfied by this Diſpatch. The Poſt is now come, which brings News of the taking of this important Place, and he has come hither in Three Days. The Place was taken according to the Rules of War, ſurrendring the Ninth of the laſt Moon of this Year, according to the Chriſtians Stile. The Governor procured very honourable Terms: and truly, he ſuſtained the Siege with all the Vigour and Courage poſſible, to the laſt extremity. He is called the Baron de Reynech: His Name deſerves a Place in the Letters thou enregiſter'ſt; and that the Divan ſhould be inform'd of a Man, who knows ſo well to defend what is intruſted to him, that they may give to Vertue her Due. There went out of Brizac, only Four Hundred Foot, and Seventy Horſe, who were all Naked, Wounded, and almoſt Dead with Hunger; they were reduced to thoſe Extremities, that they had already eaten the Fleſh of Horſes, Cats, and Dogs; and ſome were ſaid to have devoured Human Fleſh. As touching the Booty, there are different Diſcourſes; but 'tis certain, the Conqueror found above Two Hundred Pieces of Cannon in the Place.

But, there is a ſtrange Story related of a Young Lady, of admirable Beauty, who falling down at the Duke of Wimar's Feet, thus ſpake to him: Sir, I have but ſome few Moments to live, Hunger having reduced me to the Gates of Death; but, I ſhall die deſperate, if you do not revenge me of a baſe Fellow, who has exacted of me a Diamond of great value, which I have been forced to give him for a roaſted Mouſe; I am not angry with him for his taking of me a Pearl-Necklace during the Siege for four ounces of Flour; but I confeſs my Weakneſs, I cannot ſee my ſelf bereaved of what I moſt valued, and die without Satisfaction. 'Tis ſaid, this Prince could not forbear ſhedding Tears at ſo pitious a Spectacle; this Lady dying almoſt at the ſame inſtant ſhe had done ſpeaking; but 'tis not known whether he called this hard-hearted Fellow to an account for what he had detained.

by Sickneſs, Wounds and Famine. Bonfires are made at Paris, for ſo great an Advantage; and, the Duke of Wimar's Praiſes, are every where celebrated; and, great Commendations are given him in the Letters from the Court. Our Empire may have one Day ſomething to fear, from ſo brave, ſo experienced, and ambitious a Captain, were he at leiſure. But, Germany is ſo large a Country, ſo full of ſtout Men, and contains ſo many great Towns, and thoſe ſo well Fortified, as will afford him Work enough, without troubling Us.

'Tis pleaſantly ſaid here, That the Emperors of Germany will no more ſleep quietly; for, in loſing Brizac, they have loſt their Pillow on which they reſted; and, 'tis thought, France may one Day unite this Conqueſt to her Crown. The great God multiply the Years of thy Life, as the Sand of the Sea, and increaſe every Day thy Fortune, and continue thy Health.

LETTER VIII.

To Melec Amet.

I Have heard here a confuſed Diſcourſe of the Diſgrace of Stridya Bey; but, thy Letters have ſatisfied me. Thou ſeeſt, Friend, how Things go. He had the Prince's Favour, and yet could not ſave himſelf. He had moreover great Riches, and yet was obliged to undergo ſuch great Ignominy. He will will be more deformed than he was, having now left his Nose and Ears in the Hands of the Common Executioner. Amurath, in condemning him to this Punishment, has done an Act of Justice worthy of him: For, the honestest Men in the Empire, have ever wished ill to this proud and insolent Greek. This Man, who was but a pitiful Fisherman, and Seller of Oysters, got this intollerable Pride by the prodigious Riches he acquired in this mean Occupation. His great Wealth made him find the means of obtaining the Favour of the Ministers and Favourites of the Prince; and his Highness himself honoured him with his Friendship, gave him Offices, and heap'd up Riches on him. Thou shouldest know all, I say, but I am astonished thou shouldest write to me, That this Wretch, having been put out from the Government of Walachia, by reason of his insupportable Pride and extream Covetousness, should pretend to re-enter on this Office by means of Mony, trying in some sort to corrupt the Justice of Amurath. Observe how many ways, he draws on him the Prince's Indignation: The Emperor must have been more covetous than Stridya, had he favoured his Design; but, 'twas the Decree of Heaven that Stridya should be punished, and, that our Master should give a terrible Example of his Justice, to terrifie those who use their Riches to commit all sorts of Crimes, and to purchase all manner of infamous Pleasures.

The News of the fall of this Slave, had in some sort mitigated the great Melancholy I felt, when I received thy Letter: But, the Death of Zagarabasci, our common Friend, does not a little afflict me; as well as the Marriage of his Son Caragurli, made the same day, does astonish me: For, I cannot comprehend, how there could well be celebrated in the same day, and at the same House, two such different rent Ceremonies, as is a Funeral and a Wedding.

I find this adventure very ſtrange; and though our Friend indeed was very old, yet I bewail him, as if he had died before his time. He was an honeſt Man, of great Piety, and moderately Rich: and this is what makes Mortals happy in this World and the other too. But, thou doſt not inform me, whether the exceſſive Joy he had to ſee his Son married to a Greek, rich with the Goods of Fortune, endued with great Vertue, and a Mute, has not cauſed his Death. I rather think thou wilt ſay, our Friend Zagarabaſci is dead by ſome Exceſs, than yield to what we conteſted about formerly. I always found in this Friend great Marks of Honeſty and Sobriety; and he alſo appeared to me to have great tenderneſs for his Son. I cannot without offending thee, accuſe this old Gentleman of want of Moderation, yet, he is dead with a tranſport of Joy. Thou ſeeſt, I affirmed no impoſſible thing, when I maintained in my Youth, that an extraordinary and unforeſeen Joy is more likely to kill, than ſudden Grief, though never ſo violent. Didſt thou think it a matter of ſmall Satisfaction to a Father, that is a wiſe and ſober Man, to obtain for his Son a Woman that is a Mute; for what greater pleaſure can a Husband have, than to have a Wife that is not talkative? The Chriſtians underſtand not the Wiſdom of the Turks, when they laugh at our Sultans, who find the greateſt part of their Pleaſures in the Converſation of Mutes. Is there any thing more delightful than to hear a Man, that does not ſpeak; and to ſee one reaſon on all things, that has no Tongue; Thou knoweſt how many things theſe Mutes of the Seraglio, do give one to underſtand; and what Eloquence there is in their Signs and Geſtures. Thou remembreſt, that when Amurath would give thanks to the Sovereign Moderator of all the World,

World, in that he had escaped Death, when the Lightning fell on his Bed, and burnt to his very Shirt; he seemed to offer him a great Sacrifice, in putting a Mute out of the Seraglio, which he dearly loved by reason of her Tricks and Gestures. The Muses were one day ready to fall together a Fighting, because they would not receive amongst them a Tenth Companion, sent them by a Mandamus from a King of Italy: But, when this Tenth Muse signified to them, That she was Dumb, all the Voices were for her. Dear Melec, 'tis not without Reason I write thee this. Thou art still young, and designest for Matrimony: Believe Mahmut; there are few Women that are Wise; and they say little that is Good: Think then what those say, who know nothing, and whose number is infinite. When they have talked a whole Day, believe me, they have said nothing. If thou Marriest, follow my Counsel. Take not a Mute, for then thou wilt Marry a Beast, Neither chuse one that talketh; for thou wilt be linked with a Monster. As to our Friend, he died by a particular Grace from Heaven: Yet I cannot but think still of his Death. How many more extraordinary Accidents wilt thou see, if thou livest to old Age; and especially, if thou livest at Constantinople; where are continually beheld strange Adventures, and extraordinary Effects, both of Life and Death, Cruelty and Clemency; as well as of good and bad Fortune. Being in Breath, I could continue still to write to thee; but I think it's time to end, lest I prove tiresome. And I end in praying Heaven to keep thee in Health, wherever thou art.

LETTER IX.

To the ſame.

Paris, where I live, is a very healthful City, and ſo are all the Places thereabouts, free from Peſtilential Airs; and yet there oft happens ſudden Deaths, as well as at Conſtantinople; and, they die here likewiſe of Joy. I will relate to thee what I have partly ſeen, and not what I have heard, to happen in London, the moſt ancient, and chiefeſt City of the Kingdom of England: A rich Old Man falling Sick, and lying on his Death-Bed, ſent to his only Son, living at Paris, where he ſpent his time in Pleaſure, to come over, that he might with his Eſtate, give him his Bleſſing. Think what News this was to a Young Man, to whom the Life of a Father was troubleſome, as being an Obſtacle to his Liberty; and, who waited his Death, to take his ſwing of all the Pleaſures, which his corrupt Nature makes him reſpect as his Sovereign Good. This Young Man intending to get upon Horſeback, to run where he was called, found himſelf embarked for a Voyage, which he did not deſign to make; he fell dead on the Place, and I ſaw him in the ſame inſtant, wherein he was living, and healthful, to expire. Were I of the Sect of our Philoſopher Muſlaadin Saadi, I would tell thee, it matters not, whether one dies ſuddenly, or languiſh a long time; whether a Man dies in his Bed, or at the Gallows. But, I being none of Zeno's Diſciples, and knowing no Peripatetick, or Philoſopher, amongſt ſo many Sects that were in Greece, who diſputed, Whether Life or Death is to be preferred: So, expect not from me any Arguings on the Morals of thoſe Greeks, nor yet of the Perſians.

ſians. But if Death be ſuch a terrible Thing, endeavour to live in ſuch a manner that it may never affright thee when it ſhall approach thee, or when thou ſhalt ſee it invade others; expecting it at all Times, and in all Places. Doſt thou know by what Herb, or by what ſecret Magick Charm I do not fear it? 'Tis by the leading of an innocent Life. Here is publiſhed, and that with great Reaſon, the laſt Words of a Man of great Birth; who died when he was very old, by a Wound he received. He had ſerved divers Kings in Places of the higheſt Truſt; and being mortally wounded in a Battel, mark what he ſaid to thoſe that exhorted him to die like a good Chriſtian, and with the ſame Courage he had ſhewed in Life: His Reply was, That a Man who had lived well Fourſcore Years, cannot be to ſeek how to die well for a quarter of an hour. This great Man, who was a famous Souldier, was alſo a true Philoſopher; and I might ſay, he was a Saint, had he been of our Religion. I believe he was a moſt edifying Spectacle, and the more conſiderable, in as much as the Example he gave of dying well, is more valuable, than that which he gave in ſo many Battels of couragious Fighting. He was call'd Anne de Montmorancy, Conſtable of France; whoſe Life I had the Curioſity of Reading; being to be found in the Hiſtory of the Civil Wars of that Kingdom.

But, before I end this Letter, let me denote to thee the difference there is between the Effects of Grief and Joy. The Meſſenger from England, of whom I already ſpake, finding at his Return, the old Man, whom he had left Dying, ſtill alive; he gave him ſuch a ſtrange Stroke by telling to him the Death of his Son, that Grief having vanquiſhed the Aſſault of Death, reſtored to this unhappy old Man, that Strength he had loſt in his Health; ſo that coming himſelf ſome days after after, to Paris, I saw him bewail the Loss of his only Son.

He that said heretofore, A Man should learn all his Life to die well, uttered no strange Doctrine. Our Days will last long enough, if we be ready to say, at all times, We have lived enough: And, if we love as we ought, our great Emperor, who is Invincible, Holy, and the most Just among Men: And, if we observe what a French Peasant said to all those that passed before his Door, Never fear your Assistance, nor never do any Body any Hurt.

Let thou and I number our Days (as was preached heretofore in the Seraglio, to the white Eunuch by the Persian, whose Eyes were put out because he saw too clearly.) He always insisted on the Slowness, Uncertainty, and Vanity of Human Life. He said, 'Twas short, considering what we had to do in it; uncertain as to what we shall do in it; and always mix'd with what we have done, and what remains for us to do. Teach not thy Son Mehemet yet, for whom thou hast so much Affection, these Precepts. Children have not that Ripeness of Judgment as is necessary, to hear Discourses of Death; they are too hard Bits for their Stomachs; and, which indeed Old Men can hardly digest; and which they swallow not without feeling all the Bitterness of them.

I pray God keep the Imperial City, with those that dwell in it, and shelter it from the Storms which fall on infamous Cities; and I beseech him, thou may'st live without Offence, that thou may never fear Death.

LETTER X.

To Enguruli Emin Mehemet Cheik, a Man of the Law.

WHEN I parted from Constantinople, I gave thee a Stone of excellent Virtue against the Gravel, and thou presentedst me with a Paper, which was to secure me against all Bodily Evils. Time only can decide which of us Two made the best Present to his Friend. Thou hast pretended to teach me in few Words, how to live amongst the Infidels; And I thought in giving thee a Stone, to give thee a Remedy against the Distemper thou art troubled with. I never turn my self towards the Place where Mecha lies, but I remember where thy Amity began, and how far since it has been extended towards me. Absence has not lessened thy Kindness, nor hindred thee from sending me thy grave Counsels; but I am as yet too young, to set about the preparing my self for the other World; and too vigorous and healthful, to hearken to thy serious and melancholy Discourses.

I wish thou were but at Paris, where thou would'st see a great Number of People, who sell a most precious Thing, to purchase a vain and fantastick Title: How many with great Earnestness sue for Placet's from the King, that they may seek their Deaths? Perhaps thou never thoughtest there were any such kind of People. What dost thou think then of the Soldiery in General; are they any others than Martyrs of Ambition, to whom one would think Life is a Burthen? 'Tis a ſad ſpectacle, to ſee how many Dead lie in the Streets; or carried on the Shoulders of their Friends or Kinſmen to their Graves: Yet this is ſo common a thing in Paris, that the People make no Wonder of it.

This way of Living obliges me to do as the reſt. I begin to conſider, That what happens to another may happen to me; there's no avoiding our Deſtiny. This Preface is only to bring in a Story of this King's Goodneſs, which ought to be an Example to all Princes. The French have need of freſh Soldiers to fill up ſo many Troops as they continually entertain: Not long ſince there came a Man full of Years, and overwhelm'd with Deſpair, who deſir'd to be liſted in this Prince's Service. To obtain what he deſired, he told the King, That he was the Father of Twelve Children, Seven of which were Daughters, who were Marriageable; that he could no longer live, being not able to maintain ſuch a great Family; and that being ignorant, as yet how to die, he would learn it in the King's Service. The Prince having appointed him to wait upon him one Day privately in his Cloſet, thus ſpake to him: Thy deſpair makes thee deſirous to be liſted among my Soldiers; and Charity obliges me to retain thee among the Citizens. Thoſe that are Fools when they enter into Troops, commonly come out wiſer; becauſe they learn ſeveral things of which they were before ignorant: But as to thy part, what Time haſt thou to learn, who art ready to fall dead at the ſame moment thou entereſt into the School? Yet I truſt thee; take this Sword; go and combat thy Folly, and take this Purſe to ſuccour thy Family, and be cured; but if thou art baſe, ſay not from whom thou haſt received thy Cure. I know not what Sum was in the Purſe, no more than I do of what Metal the Sword was. But I have this Story from an Officer of the King's Closet, with whom I have that strict Converse, that he told me this Passage as soon as ever it happned.

I'll tell thee, if thou wilt, some of the principal passages of my Life; for I conceal nothing from the Ministers, and the most Venerable Muftis, who knows all that I do: I adore the Sovereign Master of the Universe; and have a great Veneration for his Holy Prophet: I never defiled my Hands in Blood, neither have I ever violated any Man's Bed; I easily forgive my enemies, and hate above all things the Crime of Slandering. If this be not sufficient to merit Salvation, I do not know what is. These are all my Vertues; as to other Qualifications, I have none. I have no Knack at Thieving; my Talents lie not that way; were I qualified, I might, as most do, devise means to put my Art in practice. But living according to these afore-mentioned Maxims, I doubt not, but I shall find entrance into that Paradise, where faithful Souls will enjoy a perfect Happiness, and set their Feet on the Necks of the Enemies of our Holy Law, where, they shall suffer neither Hunger, Thirst, nor Nakedness; free from the parching Heats of the Sun, and the pinching Sharpness of the Colds, caused by the Moon; where, under the agreeable Shade of Trees, they shall gather the preciousest Fruit, standing, sitting, or lying; and drink in Cups of Gold or Emerald, the most delicious Liquors, which spring from a clear Fountain; and be served with inconceivable Magnificence. In this Divine place, they shall be more beautiful and shining than the Stars in the Firmament, whose Brightness enlightens the Darkest Night; their Robes shall be of finest Silk, of a Colour more green and pleasing to the Eye, than the Herbs which spring up in May: And shall farther receive from the Hands of God, a portion, more ſweet and delicious, than can be imagined, as a Recompence for the Good they have done during their Abode amongſt Men. Thou knoweſt, 'tis impoſſible for me to go on Pilgrimage to Mecha, ſeeing I am obliged to abide at Paris. Thou knoweſt alſo, I cannot give my ſelf to contemplation, being forced to lead an active Life; for I muſt not remain among the Derviſes, who paſs their Days in Solitude; ſerving in France, as I muſt do, our Puiſſant and Invincible Emperor. Thou ſeeſt here what my Condition will bear; accuſe me not therefore for neglecting the pious Advices thou giveſt me. I forget not ſo much Death, as I forget that I muſt die.

Be informed of this from me, There's not a Town in the World, where People do learn better to live ill, than at Paris; neither is there any Place where they are better taught to die: I need not tell thee, here are publick Academies (as were heretofore amongſt the Egyptians) wherein dead Bodies lie expoſed to publick View, to make Men remember the indiſpenſable Neceſſity of dying. But I may tell thee, there's no Day, wherein in this great Town, a great quantity of Fools do not teach wiſer than themſelves, Things they have been ever ignorant of; for the Gibbets and Scaffolds, ſet up for the Puniſhment of the Guilty, hinder the Deſtruction of a great many People, whoſe Innocency is preſerved by theſe kind of Spectacles. Here the Poor, who had heretofore plentiful Subſiſtences, teach good Husbandry; the Proud, Humility; the debauched with Women, Chaſtity.

I believe, there is no Part of the World, where there are more Thieves and Pick-Pockets, and who do their Work with greater Art and Subtilty; they exerciſe their Craft in all places; in the Churches, as well as the Streets, Markets, and Bridges; ſo that our People of the Morea, who are are thought by us to be such great Masters in this Science, are mere Asses to them. Adieu.

Paris, 10th of the 1st. Moon, of the Year 1639.

LETTER XI.

To Cara Hall, the Physician.

I Know not whether what I thought I saw last Night in my Bed, be the effect of a Dream, or of a real Vision. I was awaked by a great Earthquake, which made me rise affrighted out of my Bed. But, informing my self by some People, I found 'twas but a Dream.

My Adventure has renewed the Remembrance of one, which proved of sad Consequence to one part of Italy. Physicians are at a loss to find out the Causes of these horrible Fires, which are vomited up at certain times by Mount Gibel, Stromboli, and Vesuvius, Mountains in Sicily, not far from Naples, whose Roots seem to spring from Hell; whence arise often filthy Exhalations, Smoaks and Sulphur, with Flames which cast up Stones and Ashes to the Clouds.

'Tis known, I believe at Constantinople, That towards the Beginning of the Moon of February, there was lost near Naples a little Island, that had Four Miles in Compass. It's related as a Thing certain, That after this Isle was suddenly swallowed down into the Sea, the Fire which it included not finding its usual Vent, there was opened some Days after, a new Way along the Coasts of Calabria, near Messina. There did it appear, having first caused an horrible Earthquake, which overthrew a great Pile of Building, which the Christians call a Steeple, that belonged to a principal Church; which buried under its Ruins a vast Number of People, whose Devotion had at that Time brought thither. Some Towns of the Kingdom of Naples suffered by this Earthquake, with great Multitudes of People, and Herds of Cattle, which were miserably lost in the Fire, by the Smoak and Heaps of Ashes. And amongst those that have been smothered to death, are reckoned several Lords of those Countries, who are Masters but of few Subjects, and yet bear the Title of Princes.

My dear Friend, Cara Hali, these are dreadful Effects of Nature, whose Causes will not be found out by us. Certainly, these Countries of Italy, must be far from Paradise, seeing these Mouths of Hell (if it be true as many people say, they are in these Mountains) do frequently ruine by these Irruptions Calabria and Sicily. Naturalists affirm, That these Mountains nourish Sulphureous Matter in their Bowels, which is easily inflamed, and issues out with more or less Vehemency, and more or less Frequency, according as the Matter is more or less disposed, and the Subterranean Winds kindle and eject these Fires, and open the Mass of Earth, under which they are shut up. But the Opinion of certain Philosophers, who maintain, That meer Chance produces these extraordinary Events, appears to me very ridiculous; affirming, That one Stone striking another, produces a Spark, whence happen these great Inflammations; Nay, they proceed farther, and would perswade us, That a lighted Lamp, left by Chance, by those who searched into the Bowels of these Mountains, to discover the Secrets of Nature, might make these Flames; which lighting on a combustible Matter, and meeting with nothing that is contrary to 'em to extinguish them, do cause these surprising Effects. They also say, That Lightning striking fiercely on some one of the Coasts of these Mountains, may do the same thing; as the Stones striking one against another, or the Lamp left lighted.

These Opinions would not appear so ridiculous, were it possible to make any Demonstration of 'em: But these Events being all extraordinary, and in a manner prodigious, I shall willingly suffer thee to believe, that 'tis a Work of Nature, or Hell, or Chance alone, which causes the perpetual Motions of these Fires, which are so terrible, and so greatly damnifie one of the finest Countries in the World, as Greece is, and this Island which is the Delight and Nurse of almost all the Provinces scituated on the Banks of the Mediterranean-Sea.

We find also in Ireland these Mountains of Fire, yet with this Difference, that their Flames do no Hurt, which make 'em no ways dreadful to the Inhabitants. I think too I have heard my Father say, That being in Company with certain Arabians in our Lycia, he saw these kinds of Fires come out of the Earth, but they broke out gently, and caused no Damage.

I am now perswaded of one Thing, which I would never believe before; which is, That Old Pliny, intending to relate to the Emperor Titus, and leave to Posterity a Relation of the Effects of Vesuvius, and a perfect Discovery of the Causes of so many prodigious Effects; he therefore went himself on the place, because that in his Time this famous Mountain had cast out an horrible Quantity of Fire, Stones and Ashes, with so great Violence, and such terrible Noise, that the Effects of it were felt in Syria, Africk, and especially in Italy. But the Curiosity of this wretched Philosopher losopher having cost him his Life, the Romans expect still with his Return, the Discovery of the secret Causes of so many prodigious Effects. Take care of thine own Health, and let not any of thy Patients miscarry through thy Neglect or Rashness. Continue to love me, though I am at a great distance from thee. Write to me sometimes; and believe, that I am not able to conform my self to the way of living of Strangers amongst whom I reside. I shall be always a good Mussulman, and a Faithful Friend.

Paris, 10th of the 1st Moon,
of the Year 1639.

LETTER XII.

To the venerable Mufti, Prince of the Religion of the Turks.

THY Decree is very cruel, to separate me, without having committed any Crime, from the Communion of the Faithful.

I have read the Holy Answer thou hast made me, with great Veneration; but this has not been without many Tears. Thou hast not untied the Knot of the Difficulties which perplex me, but made it indissoluble. So that I only live in the Certainty of having no Certitude; and my Soul which is encompassed with Fear, will be in Dread till Death.

If I do what thou proposest, how shall I be sure of not failing, seeing I do not understand what I ought to do? I am so dull, that I cannot distinguish guilty, Whether thou exhorteſt me to do what I have ever done, or whether thou forbiddeſt me what I aſked of thee.

I entreated thee to let me know, Whether I might live amongſt the Chriſtians, and do in Appearance, what they do effectually in the Obſervance of the Ceremonies of their Religion: And thou anſwereſt me, That the Circumciſed, or Faithful, ſhould have no doubt in his Law, and needs no other Precepts to obſerve it, than the Law it ſelf. Moreover, That the true Muſſulman muſt be willing to loſe his Eſtate, his Life and Honour in the Sultan's Service; That the Chriſtians are Enemies to the True God, the Emperor and Religion; and that in fine, one ought to ſacrifice all Things not to betray this God, who is our chief Maſter. Tell me, I entreat thee on my bended Knees, Cannot a Man be a true Mahometan, without hating eternally the Followers of Jeſus? And in living amongſt them ſecretly a True Muſſulman, muſt one ſhew ones ſelf to be of another Religion, or pretend to be of theirs? Thou wilt tell me the Alcoran ſpeaks with great Clearneſs, yet how many obſcure Paſſages do we find in the Words of our Holy Prophet, wherein we need thy Expoſitions?

I have no Belief for Tagot, neither will I give Credit to the Devil; my Law expreſly forbids it: For, I believe in one only True God, who knew the Intention of our Holy Lawgiver, and ſees what we cannot diſcover. And the Prophet cries out, That he that has ſuch Principles, leans on the ſtrongeſt Prop he can ever meet with; there being nothing which is able to overthrow it.

Diſperſe, Reverend Sir, as much as thou canſt, the Darkneſs of my Spirit. I conjure thee by the Almighty Father, who can make live Fleſh come on the dry Bones of the Aſs, which died an hundred Years paſt.

I do not discontinue here my usual Prayers, which I make in the Manner they are prescribed me by the Law, with my Face always turn'd to the Side of Mecha. When I fast, I eat only at Night, and I continue my Repast till Aurora advancing the Day, gives me Light enough to distinguish Black Thread from White. And I passover the Day, without taking any Nourishment, till the Darkness be so great, that I cannot see the Eye of a Needle. 'Tis true, I give no Alms to the Poor, because I doubt, Whether it be lawful to do good to those, who continually move Heaven against us.

The Bishops here are in great Veneration. They have not an absolute Authority, because they depend on the Roman Prelate, and the Mufti. Yet their Jurisdiction is very large, the Kingdom being full of Churches, and these Churches frequented by Millions of People. They wear about their Necks a Golden Cross. They live in publick, good Lives; are obliged to know all the Points of their Law; they must be Doctors, are obliged to Celibacy, to be Sober, Hospitable, Prudent, Irreprehensible, without covetting other Goods; they must never be Drunk, or shed humane Blood. Their Habit is a long Vest reaching to the Ground, of Black Silk or Violet. They go little on Foot, but are carried in Coaches, to avoid the Wearisomeness which would oppress them, in a Town which seems the greatest in the World; which thou wouldest do too perhaps, were thou designed to be their Souverain Prelate.

The great Arbiter of the World, favour'd by his Mercy, or by an Effect of his Justice, the inconceivable Honour of suffering thee to sweep during thy Life, his most Holy and only Temple of Mecha, in the Company of Ismael and Ami-

LETTER XIII.

To the Kaimakam.

THE French Armies are at present in Winter-Quarters, and the Court is busied in contriving what they shall do in the Spring. I do not believe I write thee any false News; for it is to be believed, that the sharpness of the Winter will hinder any thing from being undertaken before that Time.

The Eyes of all the Court are fixed on Three Objects, the King, the Dauphin his Son, and Cardinal Richlieu; but they more carefully observe the latter, than the former. This Man has made himself Creatures by his Benefits: the Thankfulness for which, and the hopes of new ones, has bound them to his Interests. Yet 'tis to be believed, he has more Enemies by means of the great Credit he is in with his Prince, and the Occasions he finds to increase it. His Anti-Chamber is always full of Attendants, who aspire to Employs, of such as are in Offices, and several other Persons who are desirous to be Witnesses of his Actions. Those who threaten him in secret, do but increase his Courage, and make him more carefully stand on his Guard; and those who have most Experience of the World affirm, this Cardinal knows too much to be surprized.

Their

Hear the Recital of one of the least of his Actions, whereby thou maist figure the greatest, and give them the due Price they deserve. For Three Years together, was observed in this Cardinal's Anti-chamber, a Man who was not far advanced in Years, and as assiduous to make his Court, as he was modest in his Discourse; very reserved and patient; and which is very rare at Court, was never heard to complain. The Cardinal who pretends to read the Souls of Men, and who is inferior to none perhaps in this Art, caused this Person who had so long attended, to be called to him, and thus spake to him: I know who thou art, and how long time thou hast spent in observing me; although thou outwardly appearest a French-man, thy great Patience assures me thou art of another Climate; get thee to Rome, and wait but half the time in the Pope's Anti-chamber, as thou hast done in mine, and I doubt not but thou wilt penetrate into the most hidden Secrets. Part then immediately for Italy, and observe the Actions and Motions of the Wisest and most Dissimulative Court in the Universe; discover not thy self to any Body: Send me an Account every Week what thou canst discover; and in this manner thou wilt be useful to me, and avoid Idleness. My Secretary will give thee a Cypher, and my Treasurer has order to give thee what's necessary for thy Voyage, as well as to keep thee when thou art at Rome.

The Cardinal studies to extend the Bounds of the Kingdom, and for that purpose consults those who can any ways advance his Projects: Especially, the King being now certain of a Successor, by the Birth of the Dauphine, who seems very likely to live long. All Hands are employed at Thoulon and Marseilles for the fitting out of Gallies and other Vessels; and 'tis thought, the chief Designs of this Minister, are on the Coasts of

Italy,

Italy. I am told he was heard to say, That the Romans could never have conquered all the World, as they did, had they not before been Masters of Italy; That Hannibal had the same Design, and after Hannibal, Pope Alexander VI. intended to see whether such a Design would take Effect; but, his Pride and Cruelty made all his Projects prove abortive, and that he could meet with greater Success than Hannibal, could he be so happy as to obtain one thing. And here he ended his Discourse.

He so greatly minds whatever passes in the Royal Family and Kingdom, that he can discover, as he pretends, all the Thoughts, yea, and the very Dreams of the Grandees, Governours of Provinces, and those that command in Places.

He says, he has learnt several useful Things in the Relation given us of the Government of the Chineses, having from them the Way of discovering the most difficult Matters, without its appearing he does any thing for this Purpose. And this is the Method of governing he observes in this Kingdom, wherein are so many restless Spirits.

He maintains near all People who are in any considerable Offices, Persons that depend only on him, and who are known to no body else; who in all Places wear mean Cloaths, and incessantly watch over the Actions of the Officers and give him notice of whatever passes. He makes use of these kind of People about his Master's Embassadors in foreign Courts. He always carries a Book about with him, which he calls Richlieu's Soul; which Book contains the Designs, the Interests, the secret Practices, and Inclinations of all the Princes, who hold a Correspondence, and have any Tyes with France, and on whom France has any Pretensions. The most skilful Astrologers in Europe,

Pope, have also sent him the Horoscopes of all the Kings and great Men, with their Judgments touching the Term of their Lives, and what they may probably undertake in all times. The Cardinal said on another time, That he kept a great many Courtiers, yet he could well enough spare them; that he knew what passed in remote Places, as soon as what was done near him. He once affirmed, he knew in less than Two Hours, That the King of England had signed the Warrant for the Execution of ——— If this Particular be true, this Minister must be more than a Man. Those who are his most devoted Creatures affirm he has in a private place in his Closet, a certain Mathematical Figure, in the Circumference of which, are written all the Letters of the Alphabet, armed with a Dart, which marks the Letters, which are also marked by their Correspondents: And it appears, that this Dart moves by the Sympathy of a Stone, which those who give and receive his Advices, keep always at hand, which hath been separated from another, which the Cardinal has always by him; and is affirmed, that with such an Instrument, he gives and receives immediately Advices. This great Man, who knows all these Reports, only laughs at them; yet he says with a serious Air, That God has given him Two Angels, one White and another Black, to inform him of both good and bad Matters; and that with their Assistance he shall overthrow the Cabals of his Enemies. He sent some days past, a Man to the Gallies, that was accused for cutting in pieces the King's Picture; but having been better inform'd, and knowing this, he told those about him, That this Man should be pardoned, because he had done no hurt to the Original. Here are Theatres and Feasts preparing to entertain the People, in Honour of the King and Cardinal, and his whisper'd, that the Queen is again with Child.

Heaven preserve thee ever from the Sultan's Anger, and all other Misfortunes which may sower the Comforts of thy Life.

Paris, 25th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1699.

LETTER. XIV.

To Egri Boynoq, the White Eunuch.

IF thou goest into Prussia in Bithinia, as thou writest, above all things remember to prepare thy self not to live long, and never to inform the young Sultan Mustapha of the Misfortune of the Grandson to Solyman the Great, and Son to poor Bajazet, whom his Grandfather caused to be strangled in his Infancy. This unhappy Place make me fearful of thy Life, as well as that of the Princess the Care of whose Education is committed to thee. I cannot forbear weeping every time I call to mind what passed between the Victim and the Executioner. Thou thy self toldest me, That this unhappy Child embraced and kissed several times him that was to give the fatal Stroak, even in the Moment when he was putting about his Neck the Silken String which was to strangle him. All Asia is informed of the rest of the History; and 'tis known, That this Child although strangled, yet triumphed at his Death over his Murderer: For, being softned by the Caresses of this Infant, whom he was about destroying, he drops down in a Swoon; and Bajazet's Son had by this Occasion e-

escaped Death, had not the other Executioner, more cruel than the former, done the work.

Although thou doſt not certainly know who Muſtapha's Father, yet thou maiſt well preſume he is the Emperor's Son. Thy Age and Prudence ſo long experienced, and the Office of Chief of all the Eunuchs of the Empire, which thou haſt ſo long enjoyed, leaves no place of doubting, but that thy Pupil is of Royal Blood. Arm thy ſelf then with Courage, and ſtudy to perform well thy Duty in this Solitary Place: Nothing is ſo troubleſome as the Inſtructing of Children, when they will be taught as Maſters by their Slaves, and will not ſubmit to Rules, like private Perſons.

Thou maiſt be ſure, I ſhall render thee all the Service I am able, ſeeing I conſider thee as a Friend that is extream dear to me: But why doſt thou ſeek amongſt the Chriſtians, an illuſtrious Subject, which may ſerve for a Model to form a Child born in the Religion of the Muſſulmans?

Did I not know thy Wiſdom, I ſhould think thou art very ſimple, in ſearching after Examples amongſt the Enemies of our Holy Law, to propoſe them to be followed by the Ottoman Children. Thou haſt choſen for this purpoſe Henry of France, termed the Great; and art thou ignorant that this ſo famous a King, was the moſt implacable Enemy of the Empire? Be it known to thee, That this Prince undertook the boldeſt and dangerouſeſt Deſign as was ever imagined, to deſtroy the Monarchy of the Muſſulmans; and might probably have ſucceeded, had not Heaven, by an unforeſeen Stroak, ſnatched him from the Earth, to appear before the Tribunal of the True God, who judges Kings as well as other Men. But leſt thou ſhouldſt imagine I make this Pretence to excuſe my ſelf from ſatisfying thee in what thou deſireſt, receive at leaſt one Part of what thou expecteſt.

Thou

Thou wouldſt have me ſend thee the Hiſtory of this Prince; conſent thy ſelf with a ſhort extract of it, otherwiſe I muſt be forced to ſend thee a large Volume. However, make not uſe of his Example in all Things; the Way of Living, the Laws and Cuſtoms of the French, do not ſuit with the Turkiſh Way of Regiment. If thou wilt make thy Pupil accompliſhed, form him on the Model of ſome one of thoſe Hero's which the Eaſt has given us. Muſtapha will read with greater Profit, the Hiſtory of Alexander and Pyrrhus, than that of Charlemain and Henry; and, ſhould one wonder at the Defaults of the King of Macedonia's Son, and at the ſmall Fortune of the other? Pray ſhew me what Men there ever were, who had at the ſame time the Frailties of human Nature, and the Perfections of the Divinity.

And if thou wilt ſearch into Perſia and Egypt, thou wilt find a Cyrus, and an Artaxerxes, Ptolemy, Pſammeticus, Campſon and Tomombein, all great Princes, whoſe Actions honour Antiquity. And how many Hero's wilt thou find in our Greece, if thou wilt take no Notice of thoſe whom Rome has ſent into the World? But not to go out of the Ottoman Family, thou knoweſt very well, that we Turks have for proverbial Speeches, the Modeſty of Solyman; The good Mein of Alis; The Juſtice of Nonquirevan; The Majeſty of Oſman; The Gravity of Humer; and the Juſtice of Abubekir; not to mention the Courage and Magnanimity of Amurath, who is, at this Day, more valorous than any of his common Soldiers; whether he be in his Seraglio of Conſtantinople, or in his Tents before Babylon.

Ten Days ago I received thy Letter, and I have employed a great deal of that Time, in collecting what thou haſt deſired of me; and to ſpeak truly, thy Commands have ſuppli'd me with matter wherewithal to divert me. Thou wilt be wishing, I am surprized, that two Men who long served this King in meaner Employs, have discovered several particulars of his Life with which the French themselves, perhaps, are not acquainted. My Sentiments never been, That 'tis more necessary to know the Manners and Customs of Men, than to know the Number of Places they have besieged or taken; and to be informed of their Good Qualities and Vertues, than to learn the manner of their Enterprizes, and the Number of the Battels which they have won or lost. All Histories contain the Actions of Men, and the principal is, to know them, and to instruct others; for Histories do generally rather divert than instruct Men. These will teach thee better what thou art to learn, than the Histories themselves. Christian Authors are, at present, like the Elements, always in War, and ever contrary to one another, and never agreeing.

These two above-mentioned Friends, who are now very old Men, have served King Henry above Thirty Years, and ever held a strict Correspondency with one another; One was his Barber; and the others Business was to divert him with reading to him, when he was going to Rest.

That which is related of Henry's coming into the World without weeping, is certainly a Fable; but it is certain, the Queen of Navarre, his Mother, sung a French Song, in the Time of her Labour, whereby this Princess seemed to shew other Women that 'tis possible to be brought to Bed without Crying out. The first Milk which this young Babe drank, was an Ambrosia, which the Wife of our Friend, the Poet Ogier, never failed of. His Father made him drink in a Golden Cup, of the strongest Wine that could be gotten, wherein he put and squeezed a Clove of Garlick, which he thought proper to strengthen his Temper.

and render him more vigorous. He was accordingly bred up like Cyrus, spending his first Days in woods, and conversing in the Company of Shepherds. He went always with his Head bare, whether exposed to the scorching Heats of the Summers Sun, or during Winter, to the Rain, and most vigorous Frosts, Snow and Hail. It seems as if he had begun his Life in Prison; being confined to the Fields, distant from all Converse, clad in course Hair-Cloath, to accustom his Body to Fatigues, and couple his Spirit to the Accidents of Fortune.

He was but Nine Years old, when he lost his Father Anthony, King of Navar. The Death of this Prince may serve for a Lesson to Ambition; for, having received his Death's Wound, at the Siege of a considerable Place, he made the Wall of the Chamber where he lay, to be broken down, that he might be carryed into his own Bed, dying as it were in Triumph, into the Town: Miserable Ambition of Great Men, who strip not themselves of it all Death strip them of their Lives. Seven Years after the Death of Antony, the Young Henry was declared Head, and Defender of the Hugonot Party; and when Eighteen Years old, he was in a considerable Fight; but 'tis not well known, whether he himself was engaged. Fortune was so contrary to him in the beginning, that having lost a Battle, he was obliged to fly for Six Months, together with the rest of his Army; and to traverse almost throughout all the Provinces of the Kingdom, without taking any rest, for fear of being surprized. I don't have never read, I believe, of any Captain that made a Flight of that durance, before him. The Queen his Mother, being a Woman of a Masculine Courage, and Firmness of Mind, died poison'd by a pair of Gloves. At Nineteen Years of Age, he married the King's Sister, who then Reigned, named Charles IX. and ... Wedding was solemnized with such Bloody ... dies. 'Tis hard to believe what an infinite ... ber of Huguenots was then massacred; the ... was secretly laid, during the Celebration ... Wedding, and executed six Days after, ... Noon. 'Tis said, that in one Day, all Fr... died with the Blood of these poor people; ... being at least an Hundred Thousand of them ... amongst which were Twenty Lords of ... sideration, with the Great Admiral of the ... dom; and, at the fewest, Four Thousand ... massacred in Paris. Henry did not perish ... unhappy Day, but he was very near Dead; ... the King having called him, thus spake to ... with an angry Tone, and fierce Countenance: Henry, thou art alive, because I would spare thee; but I will not spare thee if thou persist in thy Fly: Chuse one of these two things; either the Mass or Death. If thou knowest not what the Mass is, I shew thee in another Letter. This Prince chose to go to Mass, rather than to lose his Life: And therefore publickly abjured the Religion he professed. These two old Men affirm, That Nero of Caligula's Court, were never corrupted as that of France was then. No people were more in Fashion than Buffoons, and never did the worst sorts of Debaucheries so abound, Sorceries, Empoysonings, Assassinations, and all other sorts of Crimes were permitted in such a manner, that all the Laws of good Order seemed to be overthrown. 'Tis not known, whether the King of Navarr took up the former Religion through policy or some Conviction he saw amongst the Catholicks; however he returned some time after to Calvinism, whereunto he was so obstinately addicted, that having lived several Years in this Sect, he was forced to offer Violence to himself, to enjoy peaceably the dom of France, and accommodate himself with the Pope of Rome, and to make again publick Profession of the Roman Religion.

Never any Prince more loved Women than he did. This Passion prevailed over him all the Days of his Life; and there were Two different Natures observable in his Person, an invincible Courage in the Field; and such a Passion for Women, as made him be often seen to weep amongst them. He has had greater Weaknesses than Hercules, and he gloried in them. He challenged the bravest Man in all France, the Duke of Guise, to a single Fight; but the King interposed his Authority to hinder the Combat.

This King performed an Action during his Youth, which our Dervises would have certainly set down in their Registers as greatly remarkable. On a certain Day wherein he was to fight a pitched Battel, being on Horseback in the midst of his Army, he made publick Reparation to a young Woman whom he had deflowred, and spake in these Terms: I have forced this Woman you see here, and used Threats, when Entreaties would not bring her to my Lust. Let all that hear me, detest the bad Example I have given. And as for your part whom I have thus wronged, chuse an Husband, and receive from me such a Portion, as may seem in some sort to Amends for the Injury I have done you.

It seems as if this so laudable an Action was approved of by Heaven: For having immediately hereupon given Battel, he overthrew a mighty Army with a few Troops.

The Ladies who bore Henry no ill will for his Tenderness to their Sex, greatly interessed themselves in the Affairs of War, wherein this Prince was always Head of the Hugonot Party: And they gave Occasion to a Proverb, which lasted a great while.

while. There being some who were for making a Peace, and others War; this War was called The Ladies War. This Prince had been in so many Fights, that I believe one may truly say in this particular, never any Prince came near him: For who ever in one Day was in Two Battels, and came off Victorious?

King Charles IX. dying during this time, the Queen Mother sent for her other Son in great diligence, who had been elected some Months before King of Poland, by the Death of Sigismond Augustus. 'Tis said, that Charles's Successor, having been advertised of the Death of the King his Brother, fled in the Night from Cracouia, only with Two Persons who were his Confidents, and retired to Venice; and 'tis said, That the Courtisans of this famous City, assured the Crown to our Henry: For having been infected with this Distemper, which the French call the Neapolitan Disease, and others Nations the French Pox; he became incapable of having Children to perpetuate the Crown in the Branch of Valois.

After his Death, which was violent and perpetrated by a Christian Peruise, Henry III, dying without an Heir, and his Throne being sought by different Pretenders: Henry, to whom alone his Birth had given Right, became Master of it by his Patience: His Fatigues in War, and his Courage made him vanquish all Obstacles. He maintained his Right with an unparallell'd Valour, and carried himself with the greatest Prudence; yet his greatest Successes, are owing to the Greatness of his Heart. He met sometimes with Disadvantage, but often came out Conqueror from all Engagements; and 'tis observable, he was the greatest after the Battels won, because he had before appeared extraordinary familiar with the Soldiers who had helped him to win them. He was very

to be often in his Stables to see his Horses, and often slept amongst these Creatures whom he termed his most faithful Courtiers. How difficult soever the way was which was to lead him to the Throne, he would not be disheartned; these difficulties serving only to encrease his Courage. He saw the Spaniards confederated with his Enemies, yet he alone, without any other Assistance but of some few faithful Troops, sate down before Paris, which was the most famous Siege since that of Jerusalem by Titus. He reduced the Inhabitants of this Capital of the Kingdom, to live on the most abject Meats one can imagine, after they had consumed the Rats, Mice, Dogs and Cats; which were for some time the richest Delicacies the best People of the Town could meet with. But he was for all this (after he had given several Assaults) forced to raise the Siege, and accommodate himself with the Prince, who commands all the Priests amongst the Catholicks; and he again renounced Calvinism wherewith he was infected, and which served as a Pretence to his Enemies. He was crowned in the same manner his other Predecessors had been before him. He began to govern his Kingdom, ruined by so many Wars, Pillages and Concussions made by all sorts of People, and so repaired it by his good Government, that he was soon in a Condition to embellish it. He built several magnificent Bridges, raised stately Edifices, and forgot nothing which might re-establish those good Orders which the Licentiousness of the times had overthrown.

But what this King designed against us as soon as he was setled on the Throne, will appear at the same time so thee both dreadful and admirable. As soon as ever he had made a general Peace with his Enemies, he laid the Foundations of the most Heroick Design that ever Man invented, wherein he shewed himself not inferior to the first of the Cæsars, nor the Conqueror of Asia. He

He undertook to overthrow all the Monarchies of the World, to give a new Face to all the Affairs of it, and to destroy in a short time, the Empire of the Ottomans. But before he began such a great Enterprise, he was for paying all the Debts of the Crown, and his own in particular, which amounted all together, to near an Hundred Millions, and 'twas a prodigious thing to find so much Money without selling the Kingdom, or engaging the People; yet it is true that he got this Money, and paid those Debts with it.

He was for dividing Christendom into Fifteen great Dominations, five of which should obey Kings that were so by Succession, and Six to be subject to Kings that were Elective, and the Four remaining should be Republicks.

By this Division, he left the Pope the Countries belonging to the Church, and added thereunto the Kingdom of Naples, with the Homage of Sicily, and the greatest part of Italy modelled into a Republick, with Obligation to give the Pope every year a golden Crucifix, and Four Thousand Sequins. Only Venice was left in the Condition 'twas in, with its Laws and Customs. But there were allotted to this Republick, Kingdoms and Isles, which were to be taken from us in the Archipelago, with an Homage to the Roman Prelate, of an Embassy to kiss his Feet; and at the end of every Twenty Five Years, a small Statue of Gold, representing St. Peter, whom they term God's Vicar on Earth.

Flanders should make a Republick with the rest of the Low-Countries, which would be a loss for the Spaniards; and to this Republick, should be added some of the neighbouring States.

The Franche County, Alsatia, Tirol and Trent were added to the Democratical State of the Swisses, with the Homage every Fifteen Years, of an Hunting-Dog, with a golden Collar about his his Neck fastned to a Chain of Gold, which this Republick should present to the Emperor of Germany.

The Emperor should be obliged to renounce the aggrandizing of his Family, and only dispose of vacant Fiefs, the Investiture of which he should not bestow on any of his Kindred; and there should be a Law inviolably observed in the Empire, That never two Princes of the same Race should enjoy successively the Imperial Crown.

The Dutchy of Milan should be added to the other Provinces belonging to the Duke of Savoy, together with the Title of King of Lombardy.

The Kingdom of Hungary should be inlarged with the Principalities of Transylvania, Walachia, and Moldavia: And the King who was to be Elective, should be chosen by the Suffrages of the Pope, the Emperor of Germany, the King of France, England, Spain, Swedeland, Poland, and Denmark; and, Bohemia should be submitted to the same Laws.

France, England, Spain, Poland, Swedeland, and Denmark, should not change their Form of Government; when for the general Affairs, these Kingdoms were to be subject to the Universal Republick of which the Pope was to be the Head.

Things thus established, Henry was to be the Umpire of all Christendom, to decide all Differences which might happen between the aforesaid Princes and States, with Fifteen Persons chosen from amongst the most Famous for Learning and Arms, which could be found among these Fifteen Dominations; and besides these, there was to be established a Great Council, consisting of Sixty other Persons, for all the Differences which might happen in all the Kingdoms and Republicks, between those who governed them; and this Great Assembly, should make their Residence in the Capital City, Rome.

Every State was to be obliged to furniſh a certain number of Troops, and Sum of Money to make War againſt the Turks: And, the Buſineſs of Poland and Swedeland ſhould be, to make War together againſt the Muſcovites and Tartars. There were afterwards Three Generals to be choſen by common Conſent for the conquering of Aſia, One for the Sea, and Two for the Land: And Three Hundred Thouſand Foot entertained, with One Hundred and Fifty Thouſand Horſe, and Four Hundred Pieces of Cannon; and the Naval Army was to conſiſt of an Hundred and Fifty Veſſels, and One Hundred Galleys; and a Fund was to be raiſed for this, of an Hundred Millions of Gold.

This Treaſure was to be put into the Pope's Hands; the Iſle of Malta was to be the Store-houſe of all things belonging to the Sea, the Port of Meſſina the Arſenal of the Galleys, and the City of Metz one of the Principal Magazines for the Land-Forces.

All the Chriſtian Princes, were to be obliged to leſſen their ordinary Expences, and to contribute to this great Deſign according to their Ability.

There were to have been ſeveral Spies in Conſtantinople in the Habit of Greeks, who were perfectly skilled in the Eaſtern Languages, to obſerve the Motions of our Empire: and beſides theſe, Forty reſolute Men, who were at a certain Time and Signal, to ſet Fire to the Seraglio and Arſenal, and ſeveral other Quarters of the Town.

There was found in this Hero's Cloſet after his Death, a Memorial written with his own Hand, wherein he had already mark'd Twelve Embaſſadors for ſeveral places in Chriſtendom, for the negotiating of ſo great an Affair; and, the Pope, Republick of Venice, and Duke of Savoy, had been already acquainted with it.

In the mean time, this King had an Army already already of Forty Thousand Foot, with Eight Thousand Horse; and he was, under Pretence of visiting the Frontiers of Flanders, thence to begin the Execution of his Project, affirming, That as to his own Part, he had no other Pretension, but the Glory of delivering Christianity from the Tyranny of these Barbarians.

'Tis said, he applyed himself for Ten Years together, in searching the Means to make his Project take; he gave great Pensions to the Cardinals at Rome, and in Germany to several Officers; and, he had in France, besides the Troops I have already mentioned, Four Thousand Gentlemen, who were so devoted to him, that they were ready to mount on Horseback on the least Order from him.

He had already Fifteen Millions in the Bastile; and he that had the Superintendency of his Treasure, promised to add thereunto in less than three Years, Forty more Millions, without touching the ordinary Revenues.

I have no knowledge of the Manner how he would divide the Estates of the Sultan. But Henry was assassinated just as he was ready to leave Paris, to begin so great a Work, being killed in his Coach in the Arms of his most faithful Courtiers: And the fatal Stroke which carried him out of the World, delivered the Empire of the true Believers: This Empire whose Throne is so high, that it reaches up to the First Heaven, whence it scares the Infidels, and secures the good Mussulmans from the Insults of the Christians.

One of these old Men I mentioned, has assured me, he heard the King speak these following Words some Days before his Death: I shall never get out of this Town; I know not what withholds me; I shall never accomplish what I design, never see the Destruction of Constantinople; for I am told ly Aſtrologers, I ſhall be kill'd in a Coach. I muſt then always go on Foot, and never ſtir out of Paris.

Such was the End of this Prince, ſo highly venerated by the French. He was really a Man of great Courage and great Penetration; and ſo much the greater, in that he regarded the Deſtruction of the Ottoman Empire, as one of the difficulteſt things in the World. And truly, no other Prince did that Honour to Mahomet nor his Succeſſors. But yet not finding his own Forces ſufficient to invade and deſtroy the Turkiſh Empire, he invented a Chymerical Project to find Poſſibility in a thing which ever appeared impoſſible.

In the very Moment I am Writing, I have received certain News of my Ruin. If I be not taken off this time at Paris, I ſhall be perhaps more fortunate than ever, and more ſucceſsfully and fully ſerve our great Emperor, whoſe Clemency is equal to his Grandeur, and who is above all the Powers on Earth. Cardinal Richlieu has ſent for me to come to him; I therefore finiſh this Letter in haſte, which perhaps will be the laſt I write, being greatly afraid I am diſcovered. If my Fear be vain, I ſhall learn thee in another Letter, the moſt remarkable Events of Henry's Life. In the mean time I am reſolved and diſpoſed, to ſuffer the Martyrdom. If I dye, my dear Egry, we ſhall ſee one another in the other World; if it be true, That we ſhall have Eyes there, and remember what has paſt here below. Pray the great God for Mahomet, and take care of thy Health.

LETTER XV.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem, at the Camp under Babylon.

Cardinal Richlieu made me come in his Presence, and yet I am alive; he has not attempted any thing against either Life or Liberty; has has done me the same Honour, as to other foreign Churchmen; for he believes I am of Moldavia calling me Titus, not knowing any more of me, than what I told him. It seems on the contrary as if he intended me Kindnesses, supposing me a bitter Enemy to the Turks; and perhaps, I shall receive some Present from him: For, having served him already as an Interpreter, I shall tell thee, Invincible Vizir, what has past between him and me, without any fear of being tedious to thee. I serve thee faithfully, and write to thee as oft as my Duty requires.

As soon as I was in his Closet, he thus spoke to me; Titus, What dost thou do in Paris? What Business hast thou in this Town? and what is really thy Country? I answered him, That I was a poor Clerk of Moldavia, and came to study Divinity and be a Priest; that I knew no better place to become Wise and Learned, and that I would willingly sacrifice all things to render him Service, He afterwards ask'd me, Whether I was acquainted with any of the Eastern Languages; and, Whether I had ever been at Constantinople? I have been, replyed I, in this great Town when I was a Child, and that my Father and Mother were then in Slavery. My Father is dead, and my Mother is married again to a Christian Greek; I understand Arabick and Turkish; *and am perfectly skill'd in the School-*Greek. What do

You mean by School-Greek? replyed the Cardinal: It is different from the Vulgar Greek, answered I, which is ſo corrupted, that learned People will not give themſelves the Trouble to underſtand it. He afterwards bade me go into a little Cloſet, where I ſhould find one of his Secretaries, who would need my Help; where I had no ſooner entred, but the Secretary preſented me with a Turkiſh Manuſcript, to turn into Latin or Italian, if I could not do it into French. I immediately tranſlated it into Latin, and will now inform thee (wiſe Miniſter, and Governour of the Great Empire of the true Faithful) of the Contents of it.

The Chriſtian Derviſes, called in France Cordeliers, keep, as thou knoweſt, in Jeruſalem, the Sepulchre of their Meſſias, by a Priviledge which Zelim the Conqueror of Paleſtine granted them. Theſe Religious, have neither Peace nor Truce with the Greek Chriſtians, and they have ſuch Differences together, as are of ill Conſequence to all; they perſecute one another without ceaſing, and ſpread abroad moſt bitter Satyrs againſt each other. Each Party makes ill Reports to his Superior of that which is oppoſite, and mixes among ſome Truth, a great many Lyes and abſurd Stories. But it appears to me, That the Greeks, who naturally love Cabals, and have the Reputation of great Romancers, are more dexterous than their adverſe Party to do Miſchief.

The Chriſtian Derviſes, have repreſented a great many things to this Cardinal, to authorize their Pretenſions againſt the Greeks by means of the French Embaſſador. They not only reproach the Greeks with ſeveral Injuſtices and Violences, but accuſe the Cadi's of Cruelty and Tyranny: and the Soldiers which guard Jeruſalem, of inſupportable Exactions. Thou ſhouldeſt be throughly informed, whether theſe Complaints be on juſt Grounds: For they they affirm, their Patience is beyond the Cruelty of the Officers thou employeſt; yet, that they can no longer ſuffer the Inſolencies which are now put on them, and are on the point of hazarding all by a Stroak of Deſpair. It does not belong to me to be Advocate in the behalf of thoſe who are ſubmitted to thy Authority, and eſpecially of thoſe who ought to bear the Yoke of the Mahometans; but 'tis the Duty of Mahomet, thy Creature, to inform thee of the true Circumſtances of Affairs which come to his Knowledge. Yet, if the Oppreſſion of the Derviſes be ſo great as they make it, thou that art the true Light which enlightens the Empire of the Faithful, and ſcattereſt the Darkneſs of it, thou wilt not permit thoſe that live under the publick Faith to be oppreſt; and that four wretched Greeks ſhall be the Cauſe of ſuch Diſorders as may happen in Paleſtine, the Complaints of which have reached the Ears of the greateſt Princes in Europe, and to whom ſuch things may give falſe Ideas of the Government of thoſe who are choſen by God to command all the World. Invincible Baſſa, I have diſcovered the true Circumſtances of this Affair, in the Turkiſh Manuſcript which Cardinal Richlieu's Secretary has put into my Hands. I have fully diſcovered the falſe Reaſonings of the Armenians and Greeks, who by common Conſent, have offered ſeveral things to the moſt Venerable Mufti, which I am ſure thou wilt not approve of; for they make moſt wretched Excuſes, to colour over their Perfidiouſneſs. They ſay the Romaniſts ought to be ill uſed, on purpoſe to get rid of them from Paleſtine, being like the Jews, bitter Enemies in their Hearts to the Welfare of the Empire: That the time of the Priviledges granted by Zelim and his Succeſſors is expired, and that moreover, 'tis a great Imprudence to ſuffer Pilgrims to come over from diſtant Countries, who under Pretence of visiting the Holy Sepulcher, and other Places, which Superstition has consecrated in Palestine, come to espy the Actions of the Turks, examine the Form of their Government, visit their Places, and measure the Roads and Ports which they possess on the Seas, which may prove of dismal consequence to the Honour and Interest of the Ottoman Empire. I cannot inform thee how this Memoir came into Richlieu's Hands, but it was either sold or intercepted at Constantinople, where it was addressed. However I must not forget to tell thee one Remark which this Minister made, whence thou may'st guess, whether he reasoned like a wise and prudent Man: Were I, says he, the Sultan's chief Minister, I should have added Priviledge to Priviledge, to the Monks Cordeliers, not only because Justice requires it, but by reason of the Advantage which might redound thereby to the Turks. I would make the Ways to Jerusalem easie to all People; I would lessen the Tribute; the Pilgrims should be well used; the Christians in general as well as the Cordeliers; and I would severely punish the Officers and Soldiers who guard Palestine, and the Sacred Places, if they did otherwise. And then turning himself towards me, Does it not appear to thee, says he, that the best way to enlarge a Kingdom, is, to procure it an Advantage which encreases the Number of its Subjects? 'Tis not enough that the Prince shews the Ornaments of his Principality, he must shew also the Prince, otherwise he will be like the Philosopher who was brought into Herod's Presence; I do not see, says the King, any thing else but the Beard and Cloak of a Philosopher. If the Turks do as the Scythians, when they made themselves Masters of Athens, they will do better; for they would not burn the Books which were gathered together in this Famous Town; alledging, that those who applyed themselves to Study, were not wont to do any great hurt. If the Christians meditate on Death, in visiting and honouring the Sepulchers; the Mussulmans should consider, that if they make War against them, they have only to do with Contrite and penitent Persons, who will therefore be the more easily defeated.

And this is a Faithful and Exact Account of the Conversation I had with this Chief Minister of State. Suffer now that I add, as a Note of the Justice of the Christians Pretensions, what some Particulars of this Kingdom have given me to understand, touching the Justice and Antiquity of the Priviledges of the Religious Christians at Jerusalem. They make appear, that for above Three Hundred Years, these Places do belong to the Roman Catholicks; That, Robert d' Angou bought them of the Soldan of Ægypt, and made thereof a Present to the Roman Church, and put them in Possession, not only of the Holy Sepulcher, but of Calvary, of Bethlehem, and their Dependencies; which Settlements lasted till Zelim; who therein confirmed the Religious Christians, with an Augmentation of Priviledges, as soon as ever he had conquered Ægypt and Palestine.

Francis I. King of France, having made an Alliance with Solyman II. he inserted in his Treaty an Article, which confirmed the aforesaid Priviledges, which were since solemnly renewed, till Amurath's Time, who is now on the Throne of the Mussulmans (an happy Emperor, and Master of the Universe, for whose sake alone the Sun enlightens the Earth) and confirms what his Predecessors had done in favour of the Christian Roman Dervises, whom he has maintained, without any regard to the vain Pretensions to the Greeks and Armenians, in their lawful Possessions of Calvary, the Grotto of Bethlehem, and the Two little Mountains thereunto belonging, and granted to them the keeping of the Stone on which their Saviour Christ was embalmed, as well as that of the Two ſmall Domes covered with Lead, under which is the Holy Sepulcher.

Thy humble Slave Mahmut, has an unpleaſant Task impoſed on him by this French Miniſter. He deſired me to give him ſome Memoir in general of what I know, and bade me not wonder at his Curioſity; it being his Maxim, to make Friendſhip with all Strangers of Merit, whereby he has learnt ſeveral Important Matters, and diſcovered Secrets of great Importance; and that it lay in my Power, to oblige him greatly in giving him an exact Account of the Forces of the Ottoman Empire, and where they lay moſt open to be attack'd. I anſwer'd him very modeſtly, That my Buſineſs being only to ſay my Breviary, he could not expect any great Capacity from me in theſe Matters. He ſmilingly bade me try what I could do in that Matter; yet however, he would not lay any thing upon me which might make me uneaſie; adding, That tho' he were a Cardinal and a Prieſt, yet he knew ſomething more than Divinity, and that ſeveral Roman Prelates had made War with great Succeſs from St. Peter's Chair. In fine, I could not but promiſe to gratifie him; and thou ſhalt know in due time, how I diſcharged my ſelf; for, I ſhall rather part with my Life, than act contrary to my Allegiance. However, I muſt avoid giving him cauſe to ſuſpect me, and acquaint thee alone with the Conferences I have had with him.

The Holy Prophet multiply thy Line, that the Empire may not want Miniſters of thy Lineage; and the Great God ſo aſſiſt thy Valour, that thou may'ſt ſee the Empire of Amurath without Bounds.

LETTER XVI.

To the ſame.

THE Winter is ſo far advanced, that the King's Armies lie quiet. It's no Fable, That the Dauphin was born with ſome Teeth, and that no Nurſe dare preſent him the Tear, for fear of being bit with them. 'Tis ſaid alſo that there being no Woman to be found about the Court which can endure the ſuckling of him, there is a certain Peaſant, a very healthful and hardy Woman, that has undertaken that Employment.

Here are four Poſts arrived at the ſame time; one comes from Rome, the reſt from the Armies; but what News they bring is not yet known: 'Tis thought that he which comes from Germany, brings News of Alſatia and Briſac. The King of France is very well; here are great Preparations at Court for the Carnival, in which time the Chriſtians play a Thouſand mad Pranks.

'Tis commonly ſaid the Queen is with Child again. Here are alſo many Reports of the Grand Signior's Expedition, both in Prints and News-Letters; and ſeveral Prognoſticks are made on his Enterprize on Babylon.

I ſhall inform thee by the firſt Opportunity, what is ſaid here further of our Ever Victorious Emperor, and of thee alſo, who art his Chief Miniſter, and the Right Arm of his Empire: And at the ſame time tell thee what News come from the Northern Parts, of which I ſuppoſe the Kaimakam has given thee ſome Notice, as well as of the moſt conſiderable Events of the War of Alſatia. The Immortal Being award thee the taking of Babylon and all Perſia, as a Reward of thy Fidelity and Valour, lour, and Pains thou haſt taken in ſerving faithfully thy Maſter; and give thee the Good Fortune, of leading triumphantly in Chains the Sovereign of this Empire, that he may be humbled to the kiſſing of the Stirrup of the Invincible Amurath's Horſe.

LETTER XVII.

To Bekir Baſſa, Chief Treaſurer to the Grand Signior.

Eliachim the Jew, whom thou thoughteſt ſo wiſe and vertuous a Man, concealed his Qualities at Conſtantinople, to diſcover 'em more advantagiouſly at Paris. It was not his fault, that my Affairs were not intirely ruined. The Villain gave Marks of his Treachery, in the very Moment he ſaw me receive the Money from Carcoa of Vienna, upon thy Order. I wrote to thee, I thought this man would be faithful in inſtructing me in the Things which were neceſſary for me to know, and that I would be upon my Guard in thoſe Things wherein he might do me miſchief. Thou maiſt eaſily imagine, how I am vexed at preſent; for I can neither accuſe him, nor draw from him a juſt Revenge. He made me believe, That a Lawyer's Son at Paris, a young Man of great Hopes, having received ſome Diſpleaſure from his Relations, was reſolved to be Circumciſed, and embrace the Mahometan Religion; and that he would not loſe ſo happy an Occaſion of doing me Service; and therefore had contrived to hide this young Man, in a cloſe cloſe Cellar, underneath the Houſe where I lodge, without diſcovering to him the place where he ſhould be. He added, he had promiſed him Money, and to procure him a conſiderable Employ in Conſtantinople; and that he had, in fine, fill'd him with all the Hopes which are wont to be given to thoſe that through Fickleneſs, or Temporal Advantages, forſake the Religion of their Fathers, to profeſs another. He alſo aſſured me, I ſhould have no trouble by this Buſineſs, having taken all neceſſary care, to tranſport his Convert immediately to Tunis or Algeirs, and from thence to Conſtantinople. I yielded to the Reaſons he alledged, and this young Man was brought in the Night to the Houſe where I lay, and hid without my ſeeing him. But, the next Day was not opened, without a ſtrange Scene in the Houſe. I was aſtoniſhed to ſee a Woman in a great Rage ſtand before me, demanding Satisfaction for violating her Daughter and taking away her Life; charging me with having forcibly carried her away, and then murthered her; and ſhe made me all theſe Reproaches, in the Company of a great many Officers of Juſtice.

Think then the Confuſion I was in; the more I denied the Crime, the more fiercely they charged it on me. I was threatned with Death, if I did not confeſs it, and give the Satisfaction required of me; and at the ſame time, this ſly Jezabel gave a Sign to one of the Rogues her Companions, to go down to ſuch a Place, and bring up her Daughter, who was found alive, in Man's Cloaths, and melted into Tears. It ſignified nothing, to alledge Reaſons, to prove my Innocency; ſo that I was forced at laſt to throw out to theſe hungry Wretches, all the Money I had; and they withdrew not, till they had abuſed and reviled me, in a moſt bitter manner. They got from me about an Hundred and Eighty Four Sequins of Gold, and and about an hundred Piaſters of Silver. Eliachim has the Confidence to affirm, he knew nothing of the Cheat; and thinks to juſtifie himſelf in ſaying, That if he who is a Jew was deceived by this young Man, who pretended to become a Turk, there were a Thouſand French People who had been cheated in like manner. I ſhall not here mention what I alledged to him to make him own his Perfidiouſneſs, this being fruitleſs. On the other hand, reflecting on the Employ I had, and my preſent Circumſtances; it appeared to me neceſſary, to diſſemble this truth, and to wait for ſome favourable Occaſion, to ſend this Villain out of Paris, and to lay ſome Snare for him at Conſtantinople. I give thee notice of this Event, for Two Reaſons; that I may have more Money, and provide for my Safety; believing my ſelf in great danger, as long as I live where ſuch a Fellow comes. I ſhall not mention the Intereſts of Mahmut's Life; for I ſhall ever think it well ſpent, ſhould it be loſt in the Sultan's Service, who is the only prop of the Univerſe.

Thou wilt not want Opportunities, wherein thou maiſt draw out of Eliachim's Purſe the Money he has robbed me of; neither wilt thou want Means, to remove from me ſo dangerous a Companion. Thou ſhould'ſt know, what the Chriſtians, who are always irreconcilable Enemies to the Jews, ſay of them. They affirm, That theſe infamous Wretches, are the Slaves of all Nations, excepting Turkey; and eſpecially in Conſtantinople, where they are Maſters, they are at the ſame time, careſſed and curſt in the midſt of Abundance, they appear always miſerable; and yet they lay Hands on all others Properties. They add, that they be Vagabonds like Ulyſſes, yet in whatever Place they are, they find a Country like Homer; That they are all Perfidious, and in Publick, affect to appear Religious,

Religious; but live in grievous Diſorder and Luxury in their own Houſes, ſticking at no ſort of Crimes; bragging, That tho' it be not permitted them to purchaſe Lands, yet they have found means to get into their Hands, a great part of the Gold in Europe. The Chriſtians alſo ſay, their Number muſt needs be great, ſeeing they never go to War; and there are none amongſt them that do not Marry. They are, ſay they, ever Cowards and Paltroons, where there's any Danger or Pains, but bold, when they foreſee any certain Gain in the Markets they make. They never ſpeak the Truth, but when 'tis to deceive; they are ever Lyars, and there's no Impiety or Sacrilege at which they will ſcruple; and theſe ſame Chriſtians affirm, they will commit one time or other, ſome horrid Crime in our great Imperial City; being the Turks concealed Enemies, tho' they put great Confidence in them: And that we are willing to be deceived by them. I have written to Carcca, to ſend me ſpeedily ſome Aſſiſtance; and I have been forced to borrow Money of this ſame Eliachim, that Traitor who has brought me into the Condition I am in. He could not deny me, though he pleads (like a Rogue as he is) extream Poverty.

This Trick which has been put upon me, will oblige me henceforward to keep a Vallet, but I will take one ſo little, that no Man ſhall reproach me with chooſing much of an ill Thing. Abandon not the poor Mahmut, who prays God that he would give thee all ſorts of Proſperities, and make thee live in perfect Health! and wiſhes, that all the Monarchs of the Infidel Nations, may become Slaves to the Sultan, who ſhall be ever Invincible! and that their Riches may increaſe the Treaſure thou guardeſt.

LETTER XVIII.

To Carcoa at Vienna.

I Have received the Money thou didſt ſend me, and immediately loſt it; yet without my Fault. Bekir the Treaſurer, has been informed by my Letters, of the loſs I ſuſtained, and of another Affair which is not neceſſary for thee to know: I alſo writ to him, I expected a ſpeedy Supply from thee; for I ſhould demand it of thee. The Grand Signior's Intereſt requires, that thou doſt not oblige me to give thee any other Reaſon, and that thou deferreſt not to ſend me, as ſoon as may be, a ſufficient Sum of Money. I can only inform thee, that in the Attempt which was made on me, I loſt only what I can recover. My Life is in Safety, and by a Miracle my Affairs are in the ſame Condition; for, no Body has, as yet, diſcovered who I am. If thou writeſt any thing to Eliachim the Jew, be ſure be careful, and do not truſt him more than need.

Send without loſs of Time to the Port the Packet I addreſs'd to thee, and let me not languiſh in Paris in the Expectation of Money. 'Tis true, Gold is a rare Commodity, becauſe every Body deſires it. In this great Town of Paris, one may ſooner find an hundred Saints, than one Liberal Perſon. The French ſay, it belongs only to Sots to be free of their Money; that a Man ſhould ſuccour his Friend with good Counſel, and there's no need of any thing elſe. Learn, Carcoa, to have no need of other Peoples Help, and have a care of being too free. Men that are accuſtomed to receive good Turns, are generally wont to reckon them as Debts.

The

The Vanity of that Philoſopher, who died with Miſery, is a great Example of Mens Inſolency. When Pericles would give him ſome Succour to prolong his Life, he had the Audaciouſneſs to ſay to him, Thou carrieſt Oyl, O Pericles, becauſe thou haſt need of a Lamp.

The Sovereign Moderator of all things, keep thee from falling into Neceſſity: This is the beſt Wiſh the poor Mahmut can make for thee, in the low Eſtate he finds himſelf.

LETTER XIX.

To Dgnet Oglou.

Birkabeb's Father was a Rich Man in Arabia, and his Vertue was equal to his Riches. He had Nineteen Children, who all died of the ſame Diſtemper, when they arrived to ſome Years. Never Family was more united and regular. Birkabeb was naturally of a quiet, ſoft Temper, but ſo holy a Man, and at laſt died ſo poor, that a Thief coming into his Chamber one Night to ſteal, and finding nothing, he called him to him, whilſt he was going away, and gave him his Bed, as not being willing he ſhould depart empty handed, and loſe his Labour. Being forced after this to lie on the Floor, he received Aſſiſtance from Heaven by the Hands of his Wife; and ſcarce were Twenty Moons paſt ſince this Adventure, but there happened another more ſtrange than the former; for he became on a ſuddain very Rich, and at the

ſame inſtant ceaſed to be Wife. He had a Wife of as haughty a Diſpoſition, and noiſy Humour, as his was quiet and humble. This Woman kept the Flocks, and with a florid Youthfulneſs, was endued with great Beauty; and 'tis not known by what Accident, a Prince of the Race of the Sophy of Perſia, who fled from his Sovereign's Diſpleaſure, met with her. 'Tis certain, that having recommended himſelf to her, and intreated her to ſave his Life, and not diſcover him, ſhe led him into a very thick Wood, which was never frequented; where the Prince lived for Fourteen Years concealed. But, growing at length tired with this ſort of Life, he perſwaded this Woman to go to Iſpahan diſguiſed in Man's Apparel, and find Arſamus, who had been his Governor, and was a faithful and wiſe Man; who would give her Money and Jewels, and a Water, which would ſo diſguiſe his Countenance, that his neareſt Friends could not know him; by which means he might hold on his way to Rhodes, as he had determined. This Woman ſoon arrived at Iſpahan, with the Prince's Tokens; which were ſome ſtrange Characters, and a Ring, which he uſually wore; which Arſamus knowing, he intruſted her with a conſiderable Sum, and ſeveral Diamonds, together with a little Golden Pot, wherein was this Water before-mentioned. This Meſſenger returning in leſs than Forty Days Time, found the Prince dead in the Grotto, where he withdrew, with a Paper in his Hand, wherein he intreated the firſt, which Chance ſhould bring thither, to bury his Body at the foot of a fair Oak near by; and alſo intreated the Party which had his Ring, to carry it to the Sophy, and beg Pardon for the Offence he had given him. Birkabeh's Wife then diſcovered to him all that had happened; led him into the Wood; ſhewed him the dead Prince, the Letter, the Ring, and the precious Stones; and only reſerved to her ſelf the Secret of the Water, which ſhe would not intruſt him with. Having after this reſolved to go to the Sophy, they went together, by whom they were well received, and laden with Riches. Birkabeb took up his Abode at Iſpahan, tarrying there Four Years, and there led a voluptuous and diſhoneſt Life. Whilſt his Wife leaving him, ran away with a Young Perſian, and made ſeveral different Voyages into Aſia, under ſeveral Figures, and by means of the Water which ſhe had received of Arſamus, ſhe deceived her Husband, and as many Lovers as ſhe pleaſed.

Stones

The unhappy Birkabeb being by his Wife's Lewdneſs become again Poor, reſolved at laſt to return into his own Country, where he died in his Houſe full of Years, and in ſuch Repute for Holineſs, that the common Report is, he wrought divers Miracles. He left Four Sons, of which I knew only Ababar, who is he thou mentioneſt in thy Letter. And this is all I can tell thee of Birkabeb, of his Son, and Grandſon Ababar, whom I look upon as a very honeſt Man, and in whom I believe thou maiſt put Confidence; yet, with this Reflection, That he which is honeſt now, may ceaſe to be ſo. Salute this Perſon from me, and continue to love me. Anſwer my firſt Letter, if thou haſt not done it; and this laſt alſo, if it be not too troubleſome to thee. Farewel.

LETTER XX.

To Egri Boynou, the White Eunuch.

I Am ſtill alive, and in Health; my Fear has proved vain, and I have eſcaped the Cardinal's Hands without any Danger; which will make me hope the ſame good Fortune, ſhould he ever ſend for me again. But thou ſhalt not know his Buſineſs with me, that being a Secret I am obliged to conceal.

Thou haſt, I hope, received the long Letter I wrote thee, containing ſeveral Particulars of Henry IV's Life. I ſend thee now ſeveral of his Sayings, which may be termed Sentences. Read them with Attention, they are as pleaſant as profitable for Muſtapha's Uſe; who will find this great King, to have had an Invincible Courage in Adverſity, and great Clemency and Generoſity, when he was in his Proſperity; he was Valour it ſelf amongſt the Soldiers, Wiſe and Pleaſant amongſt his Courtiers, Terrible in Battels, Eaſie and Free amongſt the Ladies, full of Heat when any Action offered it ſelf, and Courteous and Affable to all ſorts of People.

Henry dyed in the ſame Manner as moſt of our Sultans, that is to ſay, a Violent Death. He had lived Fifty Seven Years and ſome Months, and reigned about Twenty Years. Several of his Courtiers named him, like the Firſt Cæſar, All Women's Husband; becauſe 'twas believed, he never ſaw any that he fancied, but he obtained her. He had Fourteen Children, Six by the Queen, and the others by Four of his Miſtreſſes. She who was called the Beautiful Gabrielle, of the Family of Eſtree ſeemed to have more Power on his Heart than all others; he often carried her about with him in his Army, and to the Places he beſieged in Perſon. Henry was wont to ſay, 'Twas as difficult to know how to Love well, to prepare a Feaſt, and to dance at the ſame time agreeably, as to draw up an Army for Battel, conſiſting of ſeveral Nations.

And when he was more advanced in Years, he ſaid he loved Dancing, for it made him appear Young. He loved Play, for it ſhewed he could be angry; and Ladies, becauſe he ſaid he believed a Man ought to love all the Days of his Life.

He was ſo impatient at Play when he loſt, that he ſeemed to be as much concerned at the Loſs of an Hundred Crowns, as at the taking of a City from him.

He often diſguiſed himſelf like a Peaſant, to approach his Miſtreſſes, without being known; and he has often carried on this Humour to that Degree, as to drive Aſſes laden with Fruit, and ſometimes carry a Truſs of Hay on his Shoulders.

When he was peaceably ſettled in his Kingdom, he ſaid to thoſe who were his greateſt Intimates, That he that grew weary at Difficulties, did not deſerve thoſe things which might be acquired without Trouble. I ſaw my ſelf a King, ſaid he, without having a Kingdom, an Husband without a Wife, a Captain without Soldiers, and Liberal without having any thing to give. I have had in fine, a Kingdom, Children in lawful Marriage, my Troops are numerous, and I can diſpoſe of ſeveral Millions.

This Prince has been wounded ſeveral times, has received Three Wounds in the Wars, and Three others on his Throne, in the Calms of Peace. The Actions which have gained him moſt Glory, have been the winning of Four Battels whence he came out Conqueror, having very few Troops, Troops, and his Enemy having very numerous Armies; the general Peace he gave to Europe; the Reconciliation of the Venetians with the Latin Church, which had Excommunicated them; and the great Project I ſpake to thee about in my fore-going Letter.

The Pope's Nuncio having one Day asked him how long he had made War, his Anſwer was, All the Days of his Life; and my Armies have never had any other General but my ſelf. He was ſeen once for Forty Hours together on Horſeback, and he led at that time an unhappy Life, yet he bore up with Invincible Courage, which made his Soldiers call him the King of Iron. At the ſame time he held a Morſel of coarſe Bread in one Hand, he would with the other form on the Ground the Deſign of an Entrenchment; and when he would ſhew his Friends the fineſt Gallery of his Palace, he would at the ſame time, lead them down into his Stables to ſee his Horſes. He was wont to ſay, That a King who would reign happily, muſt not do all things which he may. He had ſuch a Greatneſs of Mind, and was ſo merciful, that he pardoned thoſe who conſpired againſt his Life. He ſhewed oft to thoſe that were about him, a Soldier that was a Stranger, and had wounded him in a Battel; whom he recompenced for doing his Duty, and made him one of his Guards.

Though he was not Learned, yet he read Books of his Religion, and took a ſingular Pleaſure in Hiſtory, and converſing with learned Men. Hearing one Night the Annals of France, and being almoſt half aſleep in his Bed; he bade his Reader continue his reading, for he would ſleep no more that Night.

Having laid Siege to a moſt important Place, in a moſt cold Seaſon, he ſlipt one Night, wrapt up in his Cloak to the Places where the Labourers were at at work, and heard a Soldier there curſing both God and himſelf; yet without concerning himſelf any further, he whiſper'd in this Soldier's Ear, God hears thee, and the King too, for all thou knoweſt; if thou canſt not Work, hold thy Peace and be gone. The Night following, the King ſetting to work himſelf, to excite others; he cauſed this Soldier to be called to him, and thus ſpake to him, Help me to remove this Earth, and do not ſwear, for now the King hears thee.

To correct the Vices, the Injuſtices and Violences of others, he did not uſe Leſſons, but gave Examples. And one day, that he heard one of his Captains in a Rage, for that his Creditors had ſeized on all he had, to his Horſe and Sword; he thus ſpake to him: I that am thy Sovereign have paid my Debts, and ſold all that I am worth for that End; and thou that art my Subject, ought to do the ſame thing, without murmuring: And then taking him apart, he gave him ſome Jewels to help him out.

He often ſhewed the Marſhal de Biron to his Friends, and thus ſpake to them about this Captain; This Man knows to Act, as well as Talk; and I have a great Love for him. Yet he ſometime after cauſed him to be put to Death, having Three times pardoned his Diſloyalty: This Captain having continued his Plots againſt his Life, and againſt the State; yet remembring he had loved him, he would ſpare one part of the ſhame of his Puniſhment, and therefore ordered he ſhould be executed in Priſon.

A Scholar, Two Monks, and a Fool, attempted ſeveral Times to Kill him, and, as I have already told thee, he was ſeveral Times wounded, and at laſt received a Mortal Stroak. A Woman that had undertaken to Poiſon him, was burnt alive; and this fooliſh Creature ſaid at her Death, thinking thinking to leſſen her Crime, That having foreſeen the King was to have been Stabb'd to Death by the Hand of a Ruffian, ſhe would therefore procure him a more eaſie and honourable Death.

Henry extreamly loved Hunting, and one Day being in purſuit of a Stag, and far diſtant from his Company, a great Spectrum appeared to him with a black and terrible Countenance, with all the Equipage of a Hunter, having a Leaſh of Dogs, and ſaid theſe Words to him in a diſmal Tone; Expect me, and hear me, repent and amend thy Life; doſt thou underſtand me? Thou maiſt eaſily believe, this Viſion did not a little diſturb him. Yet he was more troubled, at what a Peaſant one day told him, who ſpake to him with great Freedom; and his Diſcourſe gave him that Diſturbance, which he could never get rid of. This Man talk'd to the Prince often with great Familiarity, when he found him in the Field; and one day held this Diſcourſe to him: We are here Two Men; thou art a Great King, and I a poor Peaſant; yet I am perhaps a better Man, becauſe I am more innocent; I have ſaid all the Good I can of thy Perſon to my Friends, being ſenſible of thy Juſtice, thy Bounty and Liberality. But all theſe Vertues are horribly ſoiled by a grievous Vice, which God will never forgive thee, unleſs thou leaveſt it off; thou committeſt, Great Prince, continual Adulteries.

'Tis certain this Prince acknowledged to ſome of his Confidents, That he had that day heard a particular a Preacher, who without any skill in Theology and Rhetorick, had more moved him, than all the Doctors of the Sorbonne put together could do. This Sorbonne is a College at Paris, famous for Learned Divines.

This Prince put a pleaſant Trick on his Confeſſor, who often urged him to forſake his Miſtreſs, and content himſelf with the Embraces of his Wife:

Wife: He order'd a Cook, who was wont to dreſs this Doctor's Victuals, to give him nothing every Meal but Partridges; which ſo greatly tired him, that he could not forbear complaining to the King himſelf, that this Cook was ſo whimſical and humourſome, that he would let him have nothing but Partridges; ſo that he grew ſo weary with that kind of Food, as made him Sick at the Thoughts of it; the Prince only anſwered him; Always the Queen, always Partridges.

He loved Learned Men, and was a great Patron of them; yet he ſaid, That Neceſſity obliged him to follow Arms; but had he been left to his own Inclination, he ſhould have choſen to have been a Scholar.

He had no great Eſteem for Phyſicians, as believing theſe kind of People wiſh ill to Men; being of Tiberius's Mind, who thought that a Man of Thirty Years of Age, needed them not.

But on the contrary, he moſt eſteemed Hiſtorians, and gave Penſions to ſeveral of them in Germany, Italy, and other Places; ſaying oft, That if any one could find the Books of Titus Livy, which are wanting; and thoſe of Tacitus, that he would willingly beſtow on him the ſame Gift of Three Cities, which Xerxes made to a Greek Captain, the One for Bread, the Second for Wine, and the Third for Cloathing. And therefore there are above Fifty Authors who have written his Hiſtory. He envied Auguſtus, by reaſon of the Happineſs of having ſo many Learned Men in his Reign; and, that he more eſteemed Mecænas, living a peaceable Citizen at Rome, than Alexander, triumphing over all Aſia; and, That Mecænas's patronizing and recompenſing Illuſtrious Men that excelled in Rome in all Arts, had rendred his Name Immortal, together with that of his Sovereign.

He bewailed the great Pains he had taken, to obtain the Command of others, and for his having learn'd nothing himself; affirming, It had been better for him to have learn'd to command himself. He was also wont to say, That a Wise Prince ought never to refuse a Peace, unless it be found more prejudicial than War.

Being one Day conversing with the Spanish Ambassador, he began to walk very fast; and perceiving the Astonishment of this Minister; You see, says he, that I can still mount on Horseback, and march on Foot too, if it be necessary, and that the Gout has not deprived me of the use of my Legs. His Valour was so admirable, that a Grandee of Spain, being at a Ceremony, wherein the Sword of this Prince was carried naked before him, he stopt openly him that carried it, and kiss'd it, saying, He did this Honour to the Sword of the First and Chiefest Captain of the World.

A Chymist, one Day, presented him with a Receipt to change Lead into Gold; to whom he answered, in making a great empty Coffer to be brought to him; When thou hast filled the Coffer with the Metal thou talkest of, come to me, and I will give thee as much Lead as thou will have.

Being at Fountain-Bleau, a Place famous since several Ages, and shewing all the Buildings there to a Foreign Prince, who told him, when he had shewed him the Chappel, That he had lodged God in too narrow a compass: He answered, That God was better lodged in the Heart, than in great Edifices of Stone.

When he drew the Designs against the Ottoman, which I mentioned in my other Letters, he did an Action of Generosity very beneficial to the Moors, who were driven out of Spain; permitting above Fifty Thousand Men, who had past the Pirenees, to embark themselves in the Ports of Provence, and Languedoc, to retire into Africk. I cannot call to Mind that Time, without bewailing the Loss of a Million of Persons, who perished by divers Accidents and Miseries.

After a Battel, wherein Henry ran a great Hazard; he said, He had often fought for Victory, but at this Time he fought for his Life.

He had used more Boots than Shooes, and he vaunted he had been less Time in Bed, than the Duke of Magenne had been at Table; this latter commanding then the Army of the League.

This King desired to be thought a real Father to his Subjects; he therefore applyed himself in searching the Means of redressing the infamous Abuses of the Bar; but he advanced not much in the Business, whatever Care he used; it being impossible for him to bridle the Covetousness of the Lawyers, and to hinder the Length of Suits, or correct the Injustice of Judges, to leave nothing to be done by his Successors. He seemed to be much troubled many times, when he spake of these kind of Things, in that there were in Paris more Courts and Lawyers, than in all the vast Empire of the Turks; his Design being, after the Example of the Mussulmans, to make all Suits, which were everlasting, by the Knavery of the Lawyers, to be decided in Three Days. And he therefore designed also to burn the Books of all those, who had written infinite Commentaries on this Subject; which served only to ruin the People, and caused oftentimes amongst Relations, Friends, and Neighbours, such Broils, as may be said to do more Mischief than a Civil War. He affirmed, That in imitating herein the Turks, he ſhould uſe his Subjects as his real Children, and hinder them from devouring one another; That he would cauſe ſharp Nails and Raſors to be faſtned to the Seats where the Judges ſate, that thoſe who ſuffered themſelves to be corrupted, might ſit thereon, and indeed, in this particular, I cannot but wonder at the Chriſtians Blindneſs.

We ſee oftentimes decided in one only Campaign, the Differences of Two great States; but a Suit in Law for Twenty Sequins ſhall often laſt a Mans whole Life, and perhaps be entailed on his Heirs.

But hear a remarkable Example of the Sincerity of this Sovereign. There were who would have perſwaded him to have apprehended the Duke of Savoy, who came to Paris to terminate ſome Differences he had with him. He anſwered, thoſe that adviſed him with this, That Francis I. one of his Predeceſſors had learnt him, A Prince was more obliged to do what he had promiſed, than to obtain what he deſired; that 'twas in his power to have apprehended a Prince far more conſiderable, but would not do it, ſuffering the Emperor Charles V. to paſs out of his Kingdom, who had come thither on his Word; after this, added he, ſhall Henry give ſuch an Example to Princes? If the Duke of Savoy has often broke his Word with me, it does not therefore follow I muſt imitate him; Crimes can never be authoriſed by Examples. The ſame Duke of Savoy having asked him, What Revenue he drew from his Kingdom? He anſwered him in theſe Terms, I draw as much as I will, becauſe I make my ſelf beloved; whence it is, that my Subjects count all as Eſtates are common.

He anſwered very pleaſantly, to a Prince's Ex-voy, who came with a Complement of Condoleance for the Death of his Son, who had been dead near a Year; That he was no longer grieved at that Loſs, ſeeing God hath given him Two more ſince.

A Captain of great Reputation having ſaid, That the Kings Liberalities, tho' ſeveral Times reiterated, could not oblige him to love him; Henry ſent him Word, He would heap ſo many Favours on him, that he would force him at laſt.

He often uſed this Proverb, That more Flies are taken with a drop of Honey, than a Tun of Vinegar.

A Monk entertaining him one Day about Military Affairs; Open your Breviary, Father, ſaid he, and ſhew me where you learn'd theſe fine Leſſons.

One Day a Taylor preſenting him with a Book of Politicks, he ſaid to the Chancellor, who was there preſent: Monſieur Chancellor, cut me out a Suit of Cloaths, here's a Taylor who underſtands your Trade, and tells me how I ſhall govern my Kingdom.

One Day when the Pope's Nuncio was at a great Feaſt, where there were between Twenty and Thirty Ladies of great Beauty, he told this Prelate, He had been in ſeveral Battels; but never found himſelf in ſo great danger before.

Nothing ſeems more agreeable than the Anſwer he made to the Provoſt of the Merchants of Paris, who was urgent with him to conſent to an Impoſt, which was to be laid on the Fountains of the Town, to furniſh the Expences of Forty Deputies of the Switzers, who came into France to renew their ancient Alliance with this Kingdom; and his Anſwer was, That this Magiſtrate ſhould find ſome other Expedient, than to change Water into Wine; which was a Miracle that never any Body wrought but Jeſus Chriſt, who is, as thou knoweſt, the Chriſtian's Saviour; and for thy further Inſtruction, 'tis neceſſary for thee to know,

The Switzers love Wine above all things in the World, and that not without Reason.

This Prince went to the Wars at the Age of Fifteen, and at Seventeen killed an Enemy, and in the Year following, he saved the Life of one of his Captains, and had his Horse killed under him. He was in Five Battels, and in more than an Hundred Combats, and at the Siege of above Two Hundred Places. He sustained Seven different Wars, in which his Enemies acknowledged, That he had Fifty Five Armies upon him at several Times, and in different Places; and always obtained some considerable Advantage.

Those that have given him the Term of Great, have given him his true Name. He was highly esteemed by all Nations, and thou knowest very well, that our Sultans, though the mightiest Monarchs in the Universe, have admired this great Prince's Fortune and Valour.

I will leave thee at present, the Liberty of comparing this King with those, whom thou wilt chuse from amongst the Hero's.

If Mahomet XI. has not done more than him, he may be compared to him in Warlike Actions, with this Difference, That King Henry Conquered the Gauls who were of his Patrimony, and Mahomet Conquered Twelve Kingdoms and an Empire, because he was perswaded, that all the Earth belonged to him. Henry subdued the City of Paris, and Mahomet made himself Master of Constantinople.

The King of France left an infinite Number of Marks behind him of his Grandeur, on Marble, and in the Writings of Famous Authors; and Mahomet left only on his Tomb, those which shewed ſhewed what he had deſigned to execute, but never could do it; which was, to take Rhodes, and ſubdue proud Italy.

We muſt alſo acknowledge, there was never found in any Mahometan Prince, the admirable Clemency of Henry; ſhewing himſelf herein greater, than in vanquiſhing his Enemies. Contrary to Mahomet, who ſhewed only great Kindneſs to an One, whom he cauſed to be carefully fed, becauſe he would never forſake the Tomb of his Maſter, whom this Prince had killed; abiding always by it, and expreſſing his Sorrow by horrible Bellowings. In all other Occaſions, he was very cruel; far from the Humour of this French King, who heap'd Benefits on thoſe who drew Blood on him. Mahomet, by a barbarous Cruelty, cauſed the Bellies of Twenty of his innocent Pages to be rip't open, to diſcover him that had eaten a Melon in his Garden.

Henry was a great Lover of Ladies, and an extreme Admirer of that Sex; and Mahomet, jealous of the too great Beauty of his Miſtreſs, cut off her Head himſelf in a full Divan. And farther, if Mahomet gave in the Eaſt a great Example of Juſtice, in putting his own Son to Death, for deflowring the Daughter of the Baſſa Achmet in a Bath; Henry gave a greater in his own Perſon, in repairing, at the Head of his Army, the Outrage offered to a young Girl, from whom he could not fear any vexatious Conſequences.

Be ſure, however, to be ſilent in theſe Judgments I make, and ſhew thy ſelf diſcreet, if thou intendeſt to hold any Correſpondence with me.

Imitate the Bees; gather from ſo many Flowers preſented thee, what appears to thee ſweeteſt, and moſt proper to form Muſtapha's Mind, and ſupple his Spirit like Wax.

I could relate to thee more Things touching this Henry, but there's no Neceſſity of writing all; that thou may'ſt have ſpace to imagine what ſuch a Prince might have done, who had re-eſtabliſhed his Fortune by his Valour alone.

Let me know of thy Departure; and when thou ſhalt arrive at the Place of thy Retreat, forget not thy faithful Friend, Mahmut, who wiſhes thou may'ſt prove an happy Tutor to the Son of a Prince, and a faithful Miniſter of a wiſe Emperor.

LETTER I.

To Muſtu Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

SCARCE had I finiſhed my Letter to Egri Boynou, when News came from the Coaſts of Provence, of ſo extraordinary and ſcandalous an Event, that I cannot but inform thee, who art a wiſe and experienced Perſon, of it; and becauſe I would have thee ſet it down in the Sacred Regiſter-Books of the Empire, of which thou haſt the Charge.

Aſſam Baſſa, a Corſary of Algiers, dyed at the Age of 40 Years, the Relation of whoſe Death was tended with ſuch horrid Circumſtances, that even the Enemies of the Alcoran do deteſt them.

'Tis ſaid, That being ſenſible he was near his End, he cauſed two young Chriſtian Slaves to be ſtrangled, who were nobly deſcended, and for whoſe Ranſom great Sums of Money might have been expected, without alledging any Reaſon for his Cruelty; nay, after he had confeſſed he had no cauſe of Complaint againſt them, having obſerved from certain Tokens in their Countenances, that they were of a ſweet Diſpoſition, and inclined by Nature to be Faithful. When he was laying out, there was found a kind of fine Scarf about him, with theſe words embroidered on it in Letters of Gold; Aſſam Baſſa will have the handſomeſt of his Slaves to be buried alive with him, being deſirous of good Company in his Voyage into the other World.

The Report of ſo terrible an Adventure, has encreaſed the hatred of the French againſt us, and that in ſo exceſſive a manner, that I am forced to keep my ſelf concealed, leſt I ſhould by my Zeal diſcover my ſelf, being not able to endure the Blaſphemies of our Enemies. There's no queſtion, but this cruel Monſter is kept by the Black Angels in the other World.

God grant that ſo horrid a Crime may not corrupt the reſt of Africk. However, may I be ſo free as to counſel you, let the Body of this Impious Wretch Aſſam be dug up, and burnt, and his Aſhes thrown into the Sea, to drown the Memory of him.

Mahmut ſalutes thee from the Town of the Univerſe, the fulleſt of Noiſe, and wiſhes thee at Conſtantinople, or wherever elſe thou art, a long ſequel of happy Years, and after Death the enjoyment of the Bliſs of our hundred twenty four thouſand Prophets.

LET-

LETTER II.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem, at the Camp under Babylon.

BEfore I give thee an Account, Great and Magnanimous Vizir, of whatever I have done to ſatisfie the Curioſity of Cardinal Richlieu, I am obliged to tell thee how I ſpent my leiſure Hours.

'Tis impoſſible I ſhould obſerve exactly the Motions of this Court, without following it, and holding a Correſpondence with People of all ſorts, as Tradeſmen, Soldiers, Scholars, Seamen, Politicians, and even Muſicians.

The Court conſiſts of all theſe Profeſſions, and there are ſome particular Perſons who are Maſters of all theſe Sciences, of which number is Cardinal Richlieu. He is not content with this his Knowledge, but ſeeks ſtill for further Light in the Commerce of all Perſons of Merit who arrive here; neglecting nothing which may enrich this Kingdom with new Diſcoveries in Arts and Sciences, out of love to his Country, and deſire to render his Miniſtry more Famous.

Thou ſeeſt by this, Invincible Baſſa, that to keep company with Courtiers, who have ſo many different Qualities, a Man muſt have ſome for his ſhare, that he may ſay ſomething in his Turn, and not be always a bare Hearer of other People's Diſcourſe.

For this purpoſe, the particular Study to which I applyed my ſelf, whilſt I was a Slave in Sicily, does much help me, though not ſufficiently. 'Twas Books I read in this Iſland, not Men. Now, knowing my Buſineſs required much Diſſimulation, and Awakened Mind, an eſpecial Prudence, Eloquence and Learning, to ſpeak properly in Occaſions; great

Reading

Reading to obtain the Knowledge of Ancient and Modern Things; a Refined Policy, to discover or conceal one's self, and to counterfeit sometimes a mighty honest Man; nothing, I say, appeared to me more conducing to this purpose, than the turning over Histories. And therefore I have earnestly applied my self to this Work. And because few Books are not sufficient, and a great many breed confusion, I have happily got Admission into the Acquaintance of an Ancient Learned Man, whose Study consists of none but choice Books, and has travelled over most Parts of the World; not like Apollonius, to learn the Language of Birds and Beasts; but to know the Customs, Laws, Vertues, and Defects of Nations. I was first for informing my self of all the Prodigies which the God of the Jews has done, in favour of that ungrateful People. I afterwards enquired into the Life and Doctrine of the Messias whom the Christians Worship. I also look'd into what had been done considerable at Athens and Sparta, Thebes, Rome, and Carthage, and carefully remark'd what Divinities were adored in those so famous Places, and found that the great Philosophers and Captains, who made such a noise about their Religions had at bottom none at all. Having run over what the Christians call the Old and New Testament, the Histories of Josephus, Xenophon, Polybius, Thucydides, Livius, and Tacitus; my greatest Application has been, and shall be for the future, to read and meditate on the Works of the Great Plutarch, especially his Lives of Illustrious Greeks and Romans, related by him with so great Exactness. And thus far I have arrived in this short space, and here I have stopt. I have learn'd, by the reading of Plutarch, to amuse the Cardinal Richlieu, to whom I offered my self two Days ago; and have put into his Hands the following Discourse, made after the manner of Christians, ſtians, and have ſtript my ſelf, if a Man may ſo ſpeak, of the Manner and Style of the Turks, as I have done of their Habits, the better to diſguiſe Titus, the Faithful Slave of the Great Amurath.

Great Cardinal, and moſt Sage Miniſter of the Greateſt of Chriſtian Kings, Titus of Moldavia is come to wait on you according to your Commands, not to entertain you with the Riches of Aſia, nor in what manner, by the Wiſdom of your Counſels, and Forces of the King your Sovereign, you may deſtroy the mighty Turkiſh Empire, of whom you have no reaſon to complain; but, to tell you what ſeems moſt agreeable to the Greatneſs of your Genius. Know then, Sage Moderatar of the French Monarch, that I ſhall not offer any thing which may make you hate me, and repent of believing me, ſeeing, what I propoſe, is an eaſie Enterprize, and full of Glory. Thy King has a Son, who will one day inherit the Greatneſs and Authority of his Father; you know not the Temper and Diſpoſitions which this Heir may have, being as yet ſo much a Child, that a Man cannot gather any thing certain of this matter. But, a Prince that has been ſo long look'd for, requires extraordinary Deſigns to be laid for him, and great Preparations made betimes, to raiſe a Palace that may be worthy to entertain him.

I would propoſe to you a Palace, I ſay, of miraculous Architecture, the like was never ſeen or imagined, and which you may with your own Hands rear up in Paris, which muſt be of a ſquare Form, whoſe Corners ſhall regard Europe, Aſia, Africa, and America, and whoſe Richneſs ſhall draw all Nations to it. You will not need Stone, Sand, Wood nor Iron for this Work. The Architects which you ſhall employ, ſhall have the Secret, with their Pen, Ink, and Paper, to raiſe this Edifice, which ſhall be of a more laſting Durance than the Pantheon of Agrippa, and whereon, as on the Temple of Solomon, there ſhould be no noiſe of Hammers.

Think not, Wiſe Miniſter, they are Chimera's which Titus has in his Head. Hear then the Deſign of this Majeſtical Palace, whoſe Foundations are already laid by Plutarch, with Materials more precious than Gold or Rubies. Thou knoweſt the Happineſs this Philoſopher had, of rendring immortal the Actions of ſo many great Men, of whom, perhaps, there might have been no mention, had Plutarch lay ſilent. Men now read in the moſt remote Provinces of the Indies, written on Leaves and Barks of Trees, the Lives of Alexander, Cæſar, Scipio, Pompey and Xerxes. Amongſt the the Solitary's of the moſt deſart Parts of Arabia, and amongſt the Derviſes, who dwell at Medina, are found written in Arabian Characters, the Hiſtories of Numa, Ariſtides, Cato, Lycurgus, and Epaminondas. The Spaniards and Portugueſes, have rendred this Author ſo famous in China and Japan, that theſe Barbarians, not contented with having tranſlated into their Languages all the Lives of the Greeks and Romans, they have ordered (if I miſtake not) that every Five Years new Copies be made, to the end they may be eternally preſerved. I have ſeen my ſelf at Conſtantinople above an hundred Volumes in Silken Paper, wherein the Works of this famous Greek are read with Veneration by the greateſt Captains, Lawyers and Divines; and theſe Works are enriched with moſt Curious Notes in Arabick, in Perſian and the Turkiſh Language, by the expreſs Orders of the Sultans, who make them be preſerved as Illuſtrious Monuments of the Ancient Greek Eloquence. You are not ignorant of the Eſteem which Solyman the Great had of Pompey, Cæſar, Pyrrhus, and Alexander; and that he never undertook any Military Enterprize; till he had conſulted theſe great Maſters in the Art of War, being wont to ſay, he knew not whether Alexander ander or Pyrrhus, had ſhewed more Valour in Engagements, than Plutarch had ſhewed Wit and Judgment in deſcribing them. But in a Voyage I made into Germany, what did not an old Rabin tell me, in ſhewing me the Lives of Illuſtrious Men of this Incomparable Author, tranſlated into Hebrew, which he carried ever about with him? He aſſured me, that the Curious of his Religion ſet ſuch a value on them, that there are above Ten Thouſand Manuſcript Copies diſperſed in the Synagogues, both in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Parts.

Men, Women, and Children know of what Account this Famous Author is, in all our Europe. He now ſpeaks all Languages: The Engliſh, the Spaniards, Italians, Germans, Polanders and Hollanders have naturalized him among them. And you know very well, Sir, that in this Kingdom of France, the Learned not content with having him Tranſlated into their Idiom, they carefully adorn their Libraries with this Author in his own natural Tongue, and have collected the Latin, Italian, and Spaniſh Verſions of him.

But 'tis now Sixteen Hundred Years ſince Plutarch keeps ſilence; ſo many Men famous for their Knowledge, and ſo many great Captains who have lived ſince, are unknown to the World, becauſe they have met with no Plutarch to know them. And this is the ſtately Building which I offer you to finiſh, who are ſo great a Lover of Glory: for God has given you a Mind, with a neceſſary Power, to finiſh what Plutarch has ſo profitably begun. Raiſe up immediately, by your Authority, on the precious Foundation, which this Incomparable Philoſopher has laid, the Walls and Roof of this vaſt Building. Order Lodgings to be made ready for all the Hero's, who could not enter into this firſt Edifice; I mean, thoſe Illuſtrious Dead, whoſe Lives have not been carefully Collected; and who ſhould honour Europe, Aſia, and Africa, where they were born, and the New World will yield you wherewith to fill this Palace with Atabalippa's and Montezuma's.

Hereby wilt thou be the Reſtorer of thoſe Ruines which Time has made; and in raiſing the Statutes of ſo many Excellent Perſons in Civil Adminiſtrations, in War and in good Letters, you will raiſe up an infinite Number throughout the World, as the firſt Emperor of the Romans did. 'Tis to no purpoſe to ſay, there are a great many Authors that have written, ſince Plutarch, the Actions of ſeveral Great Commanders, Kings and Great Miniſters, whoſe Vertues were eminently eminently conſpicuous both in Peace and War. I hope I ſhall not give juſt Offence, in ſaying, That few of theſe Writers have obſerved Plutarch's excellent Method; for, either they appear obſcure, by reaſon of their great Conciſeneſs, or the Facts are ordinarily confounded in General Hiſtories, or written by intereſſed or paſſionate Pens, who diſguiſe the Truth, and impoſe Fabulous Relations on the World. For a Proof of this, be pleaſed to examine particular Events related in the Lives of Francis I. King of France, and of the Emperor Charles V. and you will find there are thoſe who aſſure us, that Charles died a Saint, and that ſcarcely was he expired, when Flower-de-Luces were ſeen to ſpring up in his Chamber, which yielded a moſt admirable Scent: Whilſt others affirm, That this Hero died an Heretick, by the Aſſiſtance of his Confeſſor, who had embraced the Lutheran Doctrine. And, how many Romances are made of Francis I.? Has it not been ſaid, That he fought a Duel with this Emperor; and that this Prince paſſing through France, the King, by a Motive of Generoſity (beyond any Precedent) offered him his Kingdom? That Charles had one day ſat on France's Throne, and condemned a Malefactor, and afterwards reprieved him, as a Mark of his Authority? And has it not been

moreover ſaid, That Francis took Charles in a Battel? How many falſe Relations have been made of Andrew Doria, and Barbaroſſa, Two Famous Sea-Captains, the one a Chriſtian, and the other a Muſſulman, and both of them Chief Admirals of Two mighty Emperors, Charles V. and Solyman? Has it not been confidently affirmed, That Barbaroſſa being in the Archipelago, gave a Viſit in the Diſguiſe of a Monk to Doria? That in an Iſland where this Interview was made, they had ſworn, one on the Goſpel, the other on the Alcoran, to help one another to conſerve their Authority which their Employs gave them at Sea; and, to make themſelves more neceſſary to their Sovereigns, they were always to avoid a deciſive Combat, that they might not ruin one another: That they had moreover both ſigned this Treaty with their own Blood: Has there not been added to this Fable, That the Turkiſh Admiral ſent to Doria a Moor, who pretended to be a Fugitive from the Ottoman Army, and wore two Pearls of an ineſtimable Price in his Ears, and that in Exchange, Doria had aſſured Barbaroſſa not to interrupt him, whenever he pleaſed to invade any of the Coaſts of Italy.

It is time, that under thy Auſpicious Conduct, the Lives of great Perſonages be cleared from those false Relations which corrupt them, and be orderly inserted into the Books of the most excellent Plutarch, with such a kind of Title:

Here's the Rest of the Lives of Illustrious Men, from the Emperor Trajan, to Lewis the Just; of those that have excelled in Arms, Learning, Affairs of State, and of those who have held the first Rank in the Church in all Parts of the World; and these Histories have been Collected by a College of the Learnedest Men in Europe, consisting of Spaniards, French, Italians, and Germans, under the Auspicious Conduct of his Eminency, Cardinal Richlieu.

I would have three Persons of each Nation to attend this Work, and who should make their Abode in Paris, as being the principal City in France. And, I propose Spaniards, Italians, Germans, and French, as the most polished Nations, and who have furnished the World with the most able Men. Now, every Nation having its particular Way of Speaking and Acting, the Edifice will be the more agreeable, and each Architect will have greater Room to shew his Skill. Those who shall read these Works, will find in the Softness of the French Style

where-

wherewithal to mollifie the too ſevere Gravity of the Spaniſh Eloquence. The Sincerity of the Germans, ever attended with ſome kind of Drineſs, will appear without Rudeneſs with the Flowers and good Senſe of the Italian Writers. And, as all the World will be intereſſed in this Magnificent Deſign; ſo we muſt not doubt but the wiſeſt of all theſe States will take care in the choice of the Subjects which they will propoſe. And, in fine, if thou wilt have the chief Men in the World, thou needeſt not want the Secret of raiſing up Plutarch's. Be not weary of giving Marks of thy Liberality; for, if thou wilt have Titus Livy's, become Mecænas.

It doth not belong to me, to ſay in what manner 'tis neceſſary on this occaſion, to ſeparate them of ſeveral Nations, and to diſtribute theſe Employs: Thou art equitable and prudent, ſo that this Work being begun, the End will have a Succeſs anſwerable to its Beginning. I ſhall only put thee in Mind, that thou wilt not a little contribute to render thy Immortality more Glorious, if thou remembreſt the Turks thy ſworn Enemies; being perſuaded thou may'ſt find amongſt the Ottoman Emperors, Baſſa's and Vizir's wherewithal to enrich the New Plutarch. Let not the Greatneſs of the Work diſcourage thee; how great ſoever it be, thy Wit and Cou- rage are above it, and thou wilt not want Ancient and Modern Authors to assist thee. Suetonius will furnish thee with the Lives of the Cæsars, which may be left entire as they are. Diogenes Laertius gives as good an account of many of the Philosophers. You'll receive Advantage from the Works of Æmilius Probus, Paulus Jovius, and several others, who have acquired immortal Reputation by the Books which they have given the Publick. You will find a Draught already made of the History of Two Hundred and Twenty Eight Emperors, from Julius Cæsar to Ferdinand III. and Ibrahim I. the one Emperor of Germany, and the other of Turky; which thou shalt cause to be carefully examined by the College, to clear up such things as are obscure, adding what is wanting, and retrenching Events of which there is no sufficient Proof, and which seem fabulous; and, in a Word, for drawing up particular Lives which are to be met with in general Histories, which have been the Method of most Writers of late Ages.

I would have also Plutarch's Manner followed, of comparing the Illustrious Men of one Nation with those of another; where the discreet Writer having weighed the Reasons which makes for the one and the other, pronounces a Sentence which does both delight and instruct the Reader.

The

The moſt important Inſtruction then which can be given, being the Secret of knowing Men perfectly, who ſeek with ſo great Care to hide themſelves; the true means for this, is the choice of Matter, that the Reader may not loſe his Time, ſtudy in vain, but gather the Fruit which all Men of Senſe ſearch for, which is, to know what is Good, that they may follow it; and Evil, to avoid it. On this ground you will be eaſily perſwaded, there's greater Pleaſure to behold the Firmneſs of Scipio, who paſſes with one only Galley to find out Sifax, than there is in conſidering him, when he gives Battel to Hannibal in the Plains of Rama. We are more edified in ſeeing this young General a Conqueror, and yet ſo continent, as to ſend the fineſt Woman in the World, who was his Priſoner, to Lucius the Spaniſh Prince, her Husband, without touching her; than in the Relation of an hundred Sieges of Places, where, the Effects which the Soldiers Fury produces, Hunger and Thirſt, and the Effuſion of Human Blood, yields Horror inſtead of Diverſion. In like manner, Sir, you will acknowledge, That a Prince, or Captain, will be more inſtructed by ſeeing Francis, who lived like a King, though in Priſon at Madrid, who careſſes and recompenſes Learned Men all the World over; and

in seeing Fabricius, who refuses and despises the greatest Honours which are offered him with immense Riches, and who snatches away the Poyson from the Mouth of the greatest Enemy of the Roman People; than all the Combats, and most bloody Battels fought by Pyrrhus, Charles V. and the Great Tamerlane.

I have made you this long Discourse, as a Mark of my Obedience; and Titus of Moldavia, at the Feet of your Eminency, supplicates you to consider, that when by your Negotiations, Councils and Armies which receive your Orders, you shall have added new Kingdoms to that which your Master holds; when for the benefit of Trade and Navigation, you shall have joined all the Seas together; and when, in a Word, you shall raise Bridges in Paris, Pyramides with more Palaces than were built by the Cæsars, and all the Kings of Egypt: These Pyles will not be Immortal, but subject to the Injuries of Time; whereas on the contrary, if you send for the Twelve Architects which I mentioned, to raise the stately Palace afore-cited, all the World will bless the Name of Armand, Cardinal de Richlieu, Restorer of the Republick of Learning almost ruined; and who, like another Archimedes, hath known by the Example of the Vertue of Illustrious Men, snatcht away by Death out of the World, to combat and destroy the Vices and Ignorances of the Living.

If thou approvest not, Magnanimous Vizir, what I offered to the King of France's Minister, punish me not for a Fault which was not designed, having, on the contrary, imagin'd to do thee a very agreeable piece of Service. I thought I could not take a better course to conceal thy Slave Mahmut, and to divert this Cardinal from some Projects, which I am informed he designs against the Turkish Empire. Should he undertake the Great Work I set before him, thou seest the Sultans will have some Share in it; and he will, I say again, have by this means, not to mention any thing else, his Hands so full of Business, that he will not have the least Time or Ability to molest us.

I supplicate thee, prostrate at thy Feet, to call to mind, the general Dislike of what happened to Athens, when 'twas sackt and taken, such prodigious Numbers of Books being burnt, in all Arts and Sciences, which had been a collecting several Ages, and preserved with such great Care; and so much the more, inasmuch as one may be assured, there's nothing to be feared from those that make Learning their whole Business, who are always averse to War, as finding their reckoning only in the Tranquility of a well established Peace.

Thou shalt receive, by the first Opportunity, whatever I can discover of Importance for thee to know, either for the Good of the Empire in which thou holdest so great a Rank, or to satisfie thy Curiosity, provided the Frosts hinder not the passage of Couriers, as they will assuredly retard the Progress of the Armies, which are constrained to lie still during this rigorous Season.

God give thee an entire Victory over the Enemies of the Mighty Amurath, and make thee the Conqueror of all Nations.

LETTER. III.

To Lubano Abufei-Saad, an Egyptian Knight.

THE King, some Days ago, was present at a Ball, where there was a great number of Persons of Quality of both Sexes. Cardinal Richlieu, who never loses the sight of this Prince, was there also. 'Twas observed, that at the end of this Divertisement, the Cardinal would have went out before every body, but dared not; and indeed, could not get through the Crowd; which made him so impatient, as was remark'd by all, even the King himself, who taking him a little apart, very seriously bid him pass on, seeing he was Master. Now, what did this Minister do in this astonishment, but answer nothing; and taking a Flambeau out of the Hands of one of the Pages, he carried it himself before the King, with a Countenance that shewed neither Despite nor Confusion. Those that took notice of the Name of Master, which the King had given him, interpreted it in his Favour; and there were them who thought, that in abasing himself so low, he plainly shewed the design he had of raising himself the higher; however, every one thereupon spake what he thought most proper.

I give thee an Account of this Paſſage, remembring what thou didſt in the preſence of thy Maſter, throwing thy ſelf out at a Window, to take up a little Note which Amurath had by chance let fall; which Action of thine, being known in this Country, this of the Cardinal was compared with it; yet with this difference, That the Cardinal without riſing from the Ground, has made a greater leap than thou. God preſerve thee from falling into a Precipice, if thou beeſt Fool enough, to leap a ſecond time.

LETTER IV.

THou haſt recovered from a great Sickneſs, and I expect one. I have had for ſome Days, a Faintneſs, which does extreamly depreſs me, but by the Grace of God, I need not yet the Phyſician. The Letter which I received from thee this Moon, has given me ſome eaſe in my Indiſpoſitioneſs, which is no new Thing with me, being neceſſitated to live ſo far from my Friends, Country, yea, and Religion too. And though it may ſeem difficult to be a Saint, in paſſing ones Days in a Prophane Place, yet think not my Piety grows luke-warm, or my Friendſhip diminiſhed; ſeeing I have made a Moſque of my Heart, where Friends are ever preſent. Be then perſwaded, 'tis impoſſible for Mahmut to become Unfaithful, and loſe the Affection he has for his Friends; for he never ceaſes ſes to love, where he has once begun. 'Tis true indeed, that I call my ſelf Titus at preſent, and am cloathed in an odd ſort of Dreſs; yet that is no Hindrance of my Affections to my Religion, my Country and my Friends.

The Ancient Greeks have written a great deal about Friendſhip, and the Duties of a Friend: but there remains ſtill behind, more than what they have ſaid, as there remains more to do than they have done. The Word Friend is a common Name, and appropriated by moſt People; but where wilt thou find a Man that gives Proofs of a true and unfeigned Friendſhip? I think I am no Hypocrite; be thou as true to me at Conſtantinople, and inform me what paſſes in the Seraglio, and how it goes with our Friends and Relations in all Parts.

I ſhall give thee no Account of the Tranſactions of the Infidels, amongſt which I live, being tired with writing them to the Grand Vizir and the Kaimakam. Imitate me not herein, for thou aboundeſt with Leaſure; let me then hear from thee every Moon.

I have had ſeveral Fits of Laughter, at the pleaſant Adventure of the Chamber-Maid to the Old Slave, with the Eunuch Melec Aubi. Bleſſings on the Heart of Mahomet, I believe the Holy Prophet will laugh himſelf in his Paradiſe, when the Angel his Meſſenger, who brings him News from this World, ſhall give him an account of what theſe Two Perſons have ridiculouſly done in Honour of him. Could there ever be a greater Simplicity, than to eat every Night a Verſicle of the Alcoran, written on a piece of China Satin? Whence did this Eunuch, thy Comrade, learn this ſtrange Superſtition; and by what Spirit did he authoriſe that of this Slave, in taking the Pains to write theſe Verſicles with his own Hand? And what could they imagine both of them, they ſhould make an end of this Feaſt, ſeeing the whole Alcoran could not be eaten in leſs than Six Thouſand Forty Three Days, the Book containing ſo many Verſicles? Pray let me know what is done to them. They deſerve not, in my poor Judgment, an over rigorous Puniſhment, their Crime being only a ridiculous Devotion. The Great and Venerable Mufti will ſoon decide the Buſineſs; yet I would fain know the manner.

I ſhall now impart to thee an Account of a Viſit which I gave a Solitary in my Travels into Germany, who ſpent his Days far from the Commerce of the World, in a little Hermitage, about Fifteen Miles diſtance from Vienna. This Man, who is now very Old, has paſt Forty years of his Life in great Auſterity, doing every thing our Famous Santons are celebrated for; and thou ſhalt know what moved him to this ſevere Penance, and to retire after this manner. 'Tis ſaid, That in his Youth, having been threatned for ſome Miſdemeanour with Impriſonment, he hid himſelf in the Houſe of a Faithful Friend, lying in a Barrel covered over with Straw, where was brought him privately his Diet. Whilſt he thus lay concealed in the Veſſel, a certain Perſon went up into the Garret his Priſon, with his Hoſts Siſter; when theſe Two Perſons thinking themſelves alone, came to ſuch Familiarities as much ſcandaliz'd this new Diogenes, who ſaw all that paſt, through the Crevices of this Tub; and being not able to contain his Reſentments, he thus paſſionately brake out, God ſees you, you Wretches, and Man too. In a Word, his Indignation was ſo great, that the Tub or Barrel was overthrown; with the Noiſe of which, and his ſcrambling up, the Two Lovers were ſo affrighted, that the Gallant for haſt broke his Neck down Stairs, and the Nymph lay dead in a Swoon on the place. This ſtrange Surprize to all, eſpecially the Sight of ſo Filthy and Tragical a Spectacle, ſo affected this young Man, as made him retire from the World into the Solitude, where he now remains. He lives only on Bread and Water; and the Averſion which he has conceived on this occaſion, to Women, is ſo great, that there is none dares appear before him. There were Two who had the Curioſity of ſeeing this Hermit, in Mens Cloaths, but they ſoon repented of their Viſit; for this Solitary, full of Rage and Indignation, thus welcomed them; Get you gone, you Dæmons, fallen from Heaven for Mens Deſtruction; I know very well what you are, and cannot behold you without Horror. He makes excellent Exhortations to young Men who viſit him, and having ſhewed them the Care they ought to take to live with Purity, and rule their Paſſions, to which corrupt Nature renders them ſubject; he alſo exhorts them to hold a Glaſs before their Faces when ſeized with Anger, or when carried forth to the Commiſſion of any Brutiſh or unſeemly Action.

My Letter is longer than I intended; receive, as a Mark of my Friendſhip, the long time I have entertained my ſelf with thee, when I thought at firſt to ſpeak all in two Words. Give this Letter, directed to thee, into Zelim's own Hands; it contains things which concern his Life. As to what remains, Love ever thy faithful Mahmut, whilſt I ſhall pray the Sovereign of the Greateſt Monarchs, as well as other Men, that he would, after this Life, give us eternal Felicity, and the Grace to appear Innocent before its dreadful Tribunal, at which all Men ſhall be Judged.

LETTER V.

To Zelim of Rhodes, Captain of a Galley.

MEhemet, Page of the Seraglio, will deliver, or cauſe to be delivered to thee, this Letter, which is written to thee by Mahmut, Slave and faithful Miniſter of the Great Sultan, the Invincible and Happy Amuruth, who commands me to ſerve him in theſe Parts. There is no neceſſity of my ſending the Picture of a Man, who ſets forth from Legborn for Conſtantinople, with a deſign to kill thee. Thou may'ſt eaſily know him, ſeeing he has been Six Years a Slave in thy Galley. Adonai the Jew ſent me this Advice from Genoa, ſo important for thy Life; adding, he ſet out with his Brother, being reſolved to periſh, or be revenged of a great Injury which thou haſt done him.

He has filled Italy with Diſcourſes of thy Cruelties. He affirms, That having tried all Ways to make him a Turk, ſeeing neither Preſents nor Promiſes could perſwade him, thou haſt made him ſuffer the moſt cruel Torments a Man can undergo; and, that being laid faſt aſleep, by a Potion which thou cauſed'ſt him to take, thou haſt made him be caſtrated. The Weapons he bears to rid himſelf of thee, will ſtrike thee without Noiſe, ſo that thou needeſt be much on thy Guard. He hides that which is to do thy Buſineſs, in a little Prayer-Book. Revenge, which does uſually make Men induſtrious, has put him upon concealing in this Manual, a little poiſoned Steel Dart, which is encloſed with ſuch great Art in the Leather that covers it, that 'tis ſhot thence as from a Bow, and ſtrikes with ſuch Violence and Swiftneſs, that the Stroke can't be avoided, nor ſcarcely felt by him that receives it,

It causing not one drop of Blood to follow, nor Wound to be seen; so delicately tempered is the Mortal Weapon, that the Man must unavoidably die, whom it hits.

I do not doubt but this revengeful Spirit will cunningly conceal himself, so that 'twill be hard to discover him. But having had this Advice, it belongs to thee to take care of thy self. And, in the mean time, correct this cruel and severe Temper of thine. Thou commandest a Galley mann'd with Slaves, who live at thy Charge; thou reckonest amongst thy Riches Three Hundred Christians, who dress thy Gardens, and serve thee at Sea; and thou hast never remembred, they are Men which may save, or take away thy Life; and that ranging the Seas as thou do'st, 'tis possible thou may'st meet with the same Fortune, and be made a Slave thy self. Thou hast never considered, that Death is more supportable than Slavery; and that those that despise their own Lives, are Masters of thine. God preserve thee, and encline thine Heart to use gently thy Slaves, who are so useful to thee. Follow my Advice; thou hast Three Hundred Enemies in thine House, do what in thee lies to gain their Love. Learn this of a Famous Roman, who made his Slaves born in his House, to be nurst with the same Milk his Children were. If thou art not for such an Indulgence, at least cease to be Cruel, otherwise thou wilt be more a Slave than those that serve thee. If thou wilt not spare these People in Love to them, pity their Condition, and spare them in Love to thy self; whereby thou wilt live in so great Tranquility, as cannot be imagined, The Holy Prophet guard thee from the Danger threatned thee, and destroy this rash Christian who would assassinate thee.

LETTER VI.

To the Invincible Vizir Azim at the Camp before Babylon.

THere are various Diſcourſes here of the Grand Seignior's War-like Preparations. And 'tis common for People to confound here, the Ancient Babylon, with Suſa and Bagdat; but this is no great matter. 'Tis certain, all the Infidels Wiſhes are in thy Favour; for they deſire to ſee thee Conqueror, not only of Babylon, but all the Eaſt; that Amurath may be the longer in his Return to Greece, and chuſe a Place far diſtant from the Seat of his Empire. 'Tis diſcourſed in this Court, as if the Invincible Sultan carries along with him to this War, Four Hundred Thouſand Foot, an Hundred and Fifty Thouſand Horſe, and Two Hundred Baſſa's, and moreover Twelve Princes Tributary to the Port. 'Tis alſo ſaid, Bagdat is a Place not to be won by Force; that a River, the ſwifteſt in the World, runs through the midſt of it; and, that the Place has an Hundred Gates of Braſs, and its Walls, which are very high, be defended by Three Hundred Pieces of Cannon; That the Perſian Forces are great enough to tire out the Ottoman Army, and that the Example of Cha Abbas, Father to the Sophy, who now reigns over the Perſians, will encreaſe their Valour and Obſtinacy, to ſuffer the greateſt Extremities, rather than to think of a Surrender. The raſh Reſolution of this King Abbas, in the laſt Siege of this great City, is ſo cried up and magnified here, that ſcarce is there any Room left for the Praiſes of Amurath. This Prince's paſſing and re-paſſing more than once, in a Bark, in the Sight of Two Hundred Thouſand Turks, to ad-vertize, in Perſon, the beſieged of the Condition of Affairs, and to give them a freſh Courage, aſſuring them they ſhould be ſoon ſuccoured, and having at the ſame time about him wherewith to hinder him from falling alive or dead into the Hands of his Enemies; was an Action which they think is above all Elogium's, and appears to them greater than Story could ever parallel. 'Tis ſaid, That this King carried in his Bark Two great Stones faſtned to one and the ſame Cord, to put them on his Neck to ſink himſelf into the River, which was of an unfathomable Depth, in caſe he was diſcovered. To which they add, That Amurath, who can never have his Fill of Blood, will recompence thy Services in the ſame manner he did thy Predeceſſors.

Theſe Infidels hold moreover other Diſcourſe, which are very impertinent, confounding ſuch things as are true, with falſe; as they do the Juſtice and Liberality of the Generous and ever Invincible Sultan, with the Cruelty and Avarice wherewith they reproach him. 'Tis ſaid likewiſe, That the Sequins which he diſtributed the Day whereon he was proclaimed Emperour, were not by one half of the Value which was ſet upon them; That he cauſed Mehemet, Baſſa of Cairo, to be ſtrangled, for no other Reaſon but to become Maſter of his Wealth. 'Tis further added, That this Prince having had advice that a Gally was taken, having Seventy Five conſiderable Officers belonging to the Port on Board, whilſt he was diverting himſelf in a Pleaſure-Houſe at the entrance into Aſia, he ſaid by way of Jeſt, Let's drink the Health of theſe Stout Blades. 'Tis moreover ſaid, That having given his Word, and promiſe a ſecure Paſſage to the brave Facardin, an Arabian Prince, he cauſed him to be ſtabb'd in a Thouſand places in his Sight. But what do we they ſay of his deſtroying the Mufti, and Cyril, the

Greek Patriarch? In fine, they ſet forth Amurath as a Sacrilegious Wretch, that deſpiſes his own Religion, an Heretick and Enemy to our Holy Prophet. They relate the Particulars of Cyril's Death, which makes me doubt there be Traytors at the Port, who advertiſe the Infidels of the moſt Secret Matters which paſs there. Some ſay, his Eloquence rendred him ſuſpected to Amurath, and that he ſaid theſe Words, when he was led to the Caſtle of Seven Towers, Could I ſpeak but once to our Great Emperor, he will be forced to love me, or repent. And 'tis ſaid, That having voyaged into England, he had learn'd Magick there. Many People believed he would introduce Novelties in Religion, and for this End held ſtrict Correſpondences with the Latiniſed Monks; and 'tis known here, that when his Sentence was pronounc'd, he ſaid, He would riſe again, to torment the Emperor, and perplex his Affairs. The French having blamed what I now mentioned, do extremely praiſe the Moderation of Amurath, when he took the Perſian Spy, who ſlid into his Camp in Turkiſh Habit, and crouded amongſt the True Faithful; for he careſſed him, and ſent him back with rich Preſents. They alſo admire the Patience of this Prince, in only condemning to the Gallies the Thirty Indian Pilgrims, who occaſioned his Fall from his Horſe in the Capital City of his Kingdom: For the Horſe was affrighted at the Apparel of theſe Men, and the ſtrange Figure they made, when they threw themſelves on the Ground to beg Money of him; but they at the ſame time charge this Emperor with Brutiſhneſs, for killing with his own Hand immediately the Horſe that threw him down. The Diſcourſes of this Nature, however injurious they are, be not of great importance. But if I be not miſtaken, there is ſomething carrying on againſt us with the Republick of Venice. I obſerve, its Embaſſador ſince

the Loss we have made of Fifteen Gallies at Valentia, has frequent and secret Conferences with the King, and Cardinal de Richlieu. As 'tis not doubted but that the Ottoman Empire will be revenged of so deep an Injury; so 'tis also judged, that the Venetians will use their utmost Endeavours to unite into a Confederacy the Christian Princes; and 'tis to be feared, lest they take the Time, when the Emperor is employed in the Siege of Babylon, to form some Enterprize, or put themselves into a Condition wherein they cannot be attacked. I shall carefully observe all the Motions of the Venetian Ambassador; and, if need requires, dispatch an express Messenger to the Kaimakam. I adore thy Grandure, buried in the Dust of thy Feet.

Paris 10th of the 4th Moon,
of the Year 1639.

LETTER VII.

To the same.

THE Courier not parting till the Morrow, I make use of this short Time to write again to thee. Brizac, as I have already given Advice, was taken by the Forces of France and Swedeland; and the Duke of Wimar, who commands the Army, brags, that being become Master of this Place, which has always been besieged in vain, he shall take several others, there being none which henceforward can resist him.

The Mareschal de Bannier, one of the Generals of the Swedish Armies, wearied out the Imperialists in Pomerania with continual Alarms. He took Gratz, a considerable Place, and has beaten Galas, one of the Empe-

Emperor of Germany's Generals. But Fortune having chang'd her Countenance, has favoured the Emperor againſt the Troops of the Palatine, who is taken Priſoner, with Prince Rupert his Brother, having been like to be drowned in the River of Weſer, whereinto he was drawn in his Coach by his Horſes, who took Fright at the Noiſe of the Cannon: And theſe unfortunate Princes have loſt in this Occaſion, with their Liberty, whatever was moſt precious to them. The Swedes have, in the mean time, encreaſed their Strength, by the Conjunction of New Troops. They made frequent Incurſions on the Imperialiſts, and 'tis thought this War will laſt a conſiderable Time, by the great Preparations which are made on all Hands, and eſpecially by the French, to whom it ſeems important that it ſhould not end ſpeedily.

There is News from Italy, That a Diſcovery has been made in Piemont, of new Cabals of the Princes of the Houſe of Savoy, who deſigned to put by the Dutcheſs from her Regency, and make themſelves Maſters of the Government, during the Minority of the Young Duke. There is a Cardinal of this Name, an Ambitious Man, a great Lover of War, and given to Liberality. He would fain have the Chief Share in the Government, and be the Maſter of his Nephew's Fortune. This Cardinal lay concealed in the State of Genoa, being cloathed in an Habit little becoming his Character, and whence he ſent his Orders, for the Execution of whatever he had concerted with his Partiſans; but the Conſpiracy got Wind, and proved a Bloody Tragedy to his Accomplices. 'Tis ſaid, that this Prince having Twice diſguiſed himſelf in the Habit of a Peaſant, had entred with a Bag of Fruit on his Back, into one of the moſt conſiderable Towns of Piemont, to give by his Preſence more Heat to his Party; and that with a greater Boldneſs he had entred into Turin, in the Habit of a Capuchin, with a long thick Beard, and abode there Two Days; not with design of ridding himself of the Prince, or his Mother, but to become Master both of one and the other, to govern the State alone. But the Conspiracy having been discovered, and the Accomplices seized; Fourscore of them were put to Death by the Common Hangman, and he escaped by a new Stratagem. A Secretary of State of Savoy is to be reckoned amongst this Number. Another Cardinal, who commands the Army of France, sent to the Assistance of the Duke and Dutchess, had also put to Death the Governor of Casal, accused of Treason, though he was not fully convicted of it.

Turin,

'Tis written from Rome, That Two Embassadors from the King of Hungary, who is lately Elected Emperor of Germany, had made a magnificent Entrance into that great City, clad after the Hungarian Manner with Vests, called here a la barbaresque; That they had above an hundred Horse, whose Harness were of Gold, and their Shoes of Silver; and 'twas especially observed, that all the Foreign Ministers in that Court, had sent their Retinue to accompany them in their Entrance, that it might appear more Magnificent; and that these Two Embassadors of the New Emperor, being arrived in the Presence of the Infidels Mufti, whom they call the Pope, they told him, their Prince would continue to render him the Obedience which his Father Ferdinand, now deceased, paid him; and that he recommended to his Holiness his Person, his House, and his State, as a New Emperor, elected by the Suffrages of the Princes Electors of the Empire.

Observe, Magnanimous Vizir, the Authority of this Mufti: Those who are so audacious, as to resist the Musulmen, will yet abase themselves at his Feet, which they really kiss before they open their Mouths to speak to him. The greatest Christian Princes Princes are wont to chuſe from amongſt the moſt conſiderable Perſons of their State, the Embaſſadors which they ſend with great Expence to pay their Homage to this Supream Head of their Church. Moreover, theſe Embaſſadors of the New Cæſar, have aſſured the Pope, as from him, that he will never ceaſe to make War with the Enemies of the Chriſtian Faith; and 'tis ſaid, they received this Anſwer:

That, He ever reſpected the King of Hungary, the late Elected Emperor, as his Son, to whom he would never be wanting in Counſel, and all other neceſſary Aſſiſtances; and exhorted him, to employ his Victorious Arms againſt the Enemies of the Croſs; and that, on his ſide, he would employ the Succours of his Prayers, that the Church ſhould open her Treaſures by granting Indulgences; and that, he would beſides this, give Supplies of Men and Money.

People who are idle, amuſe themſelves with Diſcourſes on future Events, and thoſe that conſult the Stars to penetrate into what is to come, have made a Marriage between the Dauphin of France, a Prince born ſome Months ſince, and the Infanta of Spain, lately come into the World. 'Tis true, that at the Moment this Princeſs ſaw the Light the King of Spain, and the Grandees of the Kingdom, tried who ſhould out-do one another in Feaſtings, to ſolemnize this Birth: And the like was done in France, for that of the Dauphin; both being accompanied with extraordinary Magnificence, and prodigious Liberalities.

The Catholick King has given the Quality of Grandee to the Duke of Modena, who was Godfather to the Infanta, and has declared him Generaliſſimo of the four Seas, with a Penſion of Twenty Thouſand Sequins of Gold. He has moreover made magnificent Preſents to the Dutcheſs his Wife, eſteemed at an Hundred Thouſand Crowns; and beſides beſides, made Knights of the Order of St. James, ſeveral Gentlemen of this Prince's Court.

The Elector of Brandenburg, has alſo given ſeveral ſplendid Entertainments in his Houſe and Sute, for the Marriage conſummated with the Duke of Saxony's Son; and whilſt I am writing, I am told there is a Son born to this King of Hungary, now Emperor of Germany. But whilſt theſe Rejoycings are in ſeveral Parts of Europe, an unforeſeen Tempeſt has ruined whole Countries in Germany: the Damage done thereby in Franconia, and near Francfort, is incredible: And it lackt but little, but this ſame King of Hungary, now mentioned, being at the hunting of a Boar, had been ſlain through a Whirlwind; which having pulled up a great Oak by the Roots, of prodigious Greatneſs, fell ſo near this Prince, that he received ſome ſlight Hurt by a Branch of it.

I pray Heavens, that all the Wiſdom of our Holy Prophet, and the Bleſſing of the Great God be always upon thee, and in thee, and ever augment thy Strength and good Fortune, to the Ruine of theſe Perſian Hereticks, whoſe Country I hope will be ſubjected by thy Sword to our Dread Emperor.

LETTER VIII.

To Brereden, Superiour of the Derviſes, in the Convent of Cogni in Natolia.

THou art happy in living long and holily too; I cannot chuſe but reflect with regret on thy great Age, conſidering how infirm I am. After Fifteen Fifteen Days Illneſs, my Strength quite failed me, ſo that neceſſitated I was to look out for a Phyſician; for I cannot eaſily commit my ſelf to the Hands of thoſe of this Countrey, who kill ſuch as truſt them, in the ſame manner as if they were their Enemies. When I diſcourſe theſe Doctors about the State of my Health, they tell me I am in imminent Danger, and that my Cure is hazardous. In writing thus, think not I rave, for I ſpeak the pure Truth. They will certainly kill me, ſhould I diſcover to them under what Climat I was born; whereas if I tell them I am of Moldavia, they may chance to do me good; though that Countrey Air is very different from that of Arabia, where I firſt drew my Breath. To how many Miſeries is the Life of Man ſubject, eſpecially mine, when I cannot ſpeak the Truth, though it be to ſave my Life? Pray for me, Holy Dervis; and if you hear no more from me, believe Mahmut is dead. Pardon likewiſe the Offences I have given thee, which yet have been againſt my Will. Adieu; we ſhall ſee one another in God, with God, and in the Boſom of God.

LETTER IX.

To Ocumiche, his Mother, at Scios.

PArdon me, my dear Mother, if I write laſt to thee: Pardon me, moreover, if I have not written to thee, to pay thee the Marks of my Duty, whilſt I was in my Health; and let me ſeek after thee, when perhaps in ſeeking for me, thou wilt no longer find me. I am ready to die; afflict not.

not thy ſelf, if God calls me to him; though I am amongſt Infidels, yet Death holds his Empire here, as in other places. The worſt News I can tell thee is, That commonly thoſe who deſire to live longeſt, are ſooneſt taken away; and I am not aſhamed to tell thee, I am one of that Number. I cannot willingly, as yet, leave this Lower World. O unhappy Life! O unwelcome Death! What Apprehenſion have I not? And with what Terrors am I not ſtruck, ſince I have lived among the Chriſtians? They preach againſt our Alcoran, and we declaim againſt their Goſpel. They affirm that Mahomet was a great Impoſtor; and we worſhip him. They believe they only know the Truth, that they be the only Saints, the Elect and Choſen of God; what then will become of us, if we be wedded to Errors, and our Alcoran be only a parcel of Lyes?

I have neither good nor bad News of thee, no more than of thy new Spouſe: God grant the merry Greek, thou art married to, have the Vices of thy firſt Husband, my Father. Thou knoweſt my meaning. He called himſelf Vicious, becauſe he hated the Vertues of the Vulgar.

I thank thee not for my Life; for that is what thou leaſt thought of, when thou becameſt big with me. But if thou expecteſt ſome Recompence for ſuckling me at thy own Breaſts, expect only Words of Thanks from a poor Slave who poſſeſſes nothing. Love and Hate, all the Time of thy Life; this is the greateſt Inheritance can be expected from a Son who is juſt a dying. Engrave theſe Words in thy Heart; Love ever what is honeſt, and hate always what is contrary to it. Thus will theſe different Paſſions be ſetled on their Proper Objects.

If my Brother Peſteli be ſtill alive, give him my Love with an innocent Kiſs, and a Touch in the Hand. Our Great Prophet protect and ſuſtain thy Age with the Staff of Mount Liban, and obtain for for thee from the Mercy of the most High, That thou may'st enjoy thy Senses to the last Hour of thy Life. Adieu.

LETTER X.

To Pestelihali, his Brother.

BElieving my Life is near its End, I therefore, with all imaginable Eagerness write to thee, in the third place, although indeed thou holdest the first in my Heart. We shall see one another, dear Pesteli, in that World, where every one receives according to his Deserts. When I arrived in this great Town, I was astonished at the Confusion I met there, but I received no other Hurt. Although the Weather be very inconstant, yet the Air is good, and Provisions are wholsome, and agreeable to the Taste; the Water of the Seine is sweet and clear; the Men are good Company, and the Women have done me no harm; the King has not ill used me: Cardinal Richlieu, his Chief Minister, does not hinder me from living after my own Fashion; our Great Emperor is not displeased with me, yet my Distemper is impetuous; a sad Faintness has seized my Heart, and I begin to fall into such a languishing Condition, as makes me despair of Health. If thou still conservest any Affection for me, read this Letter with Compassion. Forget the ill Offices I may have done thee; and if I parted without discovering to thee the Occasion, give God Thanks for the Ability he has given me, of sacrificing the tenderness which I have for so good a Brother, to the

Obedience which I owe to the Emperor's Commands.

Our Mother will salute thee as from me, in giving thee a Kiss; receive it as coming from me. Keep thy Gravity, and be honest in Asia as well in Europe; and if thou goest to Africa, suffer not thy self to be corrupted by ill Examples. 'Tis not without Tears I write thee this Letter: but lament not if I die, neither rejoice if I escape; for I shall be thereby no less Mortal; and that Tribute which I do not pay to day, we both shall pay, with all other Men, on a certain time. Prepare to part willingly; study more how thou shalt die, than how thou shalt live; and if thou would'st live till thou art Old, live as if thou wert to die when thou art Young.

The Great God preserve thee in the perfect Use of thy Understanding, and guide thee into all Truth; and if thou desirest to be the best Captain and Commander in the World, learn to conquer thy self. Adieu.

LETTER XI.

To Dgnet Oglou.

SHould I tell thee I am in Health, I shall write an Untruth; for I am really out of Order, and expect a Fit of Sickness, which I wish 'twere in my Power to avoid, though it may prove short and Mortal. An Hectick Fever puts me oft in mind, how frail and brittle a thing is Man; and that he ought in Multiplicity of Business, in Times of Prosperity as well as Adverſity, to think of diſlodging hence. The Bread I eat has no reliſh; Solitude appears diſmal to me, and Company wearies me; for I cannot attend to what's diſcourſed, and yet I do not like they ſhould ſay nothing; there's nothing pleaſes me but Drink, yet all the Sea will not quench my Thirſt. I am reſtleſs in Bed, and find my ſelf more tired thereby, than if I ſat up; and that which I loved Yeſterday, I hate to day. Thou knoweſt how I loved Books, this Humour is quite changed. If the Sun ſhines into my Chamber, I ſoon ſhut my Windows, being not able to endure it; and having remained a Minute in Obſcurity, I am impatient for the Light. Paris, where one may ſay Strangers come from all Parts, to ſee the Varieties and Diverſions there to be met with, appears to me now an Hoſpital of Fools: I long for nothing more than Conſtantinople, and to be with my Friends, imagining I ſhall find eaſe in their Company. And this is the unhappy Condition of thy Friend, without hope of ſeeing any more Turbans and Muſſulmen. I loath as much the ſight of an ignorant Phyſician, as the Emperor Severus did a corrupt Judge, and I look on a little Valet that ſerves me, as a neceſſary Evil: Yet I'd a little divert thee, maugre the Illneſs which has ſeized me. 'Tis not above Six Months ſince I entertained this Enemy in my Houſe, which is a French Valet, who makes himſelf a Fool; of a Pigmies Stature, yet a Giant in Roguery; he is clad like the Graces, being half naked, and wears Buſkins like the Poetical Divinities; his ordinary Function is to ſweep every day my Chamber, which yet is as naſty as Augis his Stable; when I am awake he is aſleep, and he's always awake when I am aſleep; for this Thirteen Years that he has ſeen the Light, he cannot remember he has been Two Hours without eating: When he eats not openly and before Folks, leſt he ſhould ſhame me, he will yet be ſure to keep his Chaps a going, on ſome thing in Corners. When I went abroad, I was forced to follow him; and now that I keep my Bed, 'tis hard to judge which of us two is the Maſter, for he never parts with his Hat from his Head. He's more ready to pull of my Cloaths, than to put them on; which makes me chiefly careful of him at ſuch times, that he leaves me not ſtark naked. He's moreover a Politician, as much as any Florentin: When he's to do any good Office, he falls into the Spaniſh Pace, but to perfect a bad one, he's as nimble at Cæſar was in the quickeſt of his Expeditions; whence it is that I am a Debtor to my own Arm and Hand for the Service I draw from him, being like certain Drugs which never yield an Odor till well beaten: as to his Religion, a Man would imagine he held the Metempſychoſis, ſo carefully does he preſerve the Lice that eat him, leſt in killing them, he act contrary to the Precepts of Pythagoras. He is moreover beſides, an irreconcileable Enemy to all Neatneſs, to Water and to Truth; and he is more ſtinking than a Synagogue, drunker than a Swiſs, and a greater Lyer than any Oracle. In the mean time my Illneſs encreaſes, and my Domeſtick Enemy is ſo well, that he aſſuredly waits my Death, to live more honourably on my Spoils. I differ much this Day from what I was Yeſterday, and I know not whether I ſhall not to morrow go to my long Home. Pray the Immortal for me, and remember we were once in Slavery together. Should I eſcape, I ſhall have the Joy of never ſeeing thee in the ſad Condition I am; and if I cannot eſcape Death at this time, I ſhall have the ſatisfaction of ſuffering it before thee. However, believe I do not deſpair, though I much complain. I ceaſe writing to thee, but I'll never ceaſe loving thee. Muhmut embraces thee in this Country of Infidels, having having thee always in his Heart, and praying for thee continually.

Paris, 12th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1639.

LETTER XII.

To the Kaimakam.

THE King of France has a Dwarf called Osmin born in a Village of the Morea, and carried away in his Infancy into Italy by Pyrates. He was bought by a Spaniſh Lord, who afterwards made a Preſent of him to this King, with ſuch a boon Grace, as entitles Magnificence to the ſmalleſt things, after the manner of that Nation. The Spaniard having preſented his Dwarf, ſaid no more, the Dwarf making this following Diſcourſe.

Sir, I am a Chriſtian, although my Parents be Turks, If thou willingly receiveſt me for thy Slave, I receive thee yet more willingly for my Maſter, being a Juſt and Merciful Prince: But I am obliged to tell thee, Thou wilt behave thy ſelf like a Maſter, whoſe Liberality is guided by Prudence, thou wilt never do me any Hurt, or ever do me any great Good. Should'ſt thou give me Opportunities of acquiring Riches, and throw open the Gate of Honours to me; I ſhall thereby, perhaps, become vicious and inſolent. Beſtow only one thing on me, which will not be afterwards in thy Power to take away: Give me good Education, and let a Man of Learning take the Charge of me; by which means I ſhall be revenged of Nature, in making me but an Atom of a Man; and perhaps make thy Courtiers, one day, repent of their preſent Laughter at me.

Oſmin

Osmin has behaved himself so well, and gained such Credit by the Subtilty of his Wit, and Readiness of his Answers, that he is, at present, one of the Courts choicest Entertainments, and the Scourge of debauched People. Coming one day to divert and comfort me in my Illness, he told me, That being in private Discourse with one of the Women belonging to a Lady of the first Rank; he was forced to conceal himself speedily behind the Hangings, to prevent being surprized in the Chamber, where this Lady unexpectedly entred with the Venetian Ambassador, who ordinarily resides in this Court, and where he heard the following Discourse from this Minister's own Mouth:

Madam, I shall willingly discover to you, now that we are alone, the Intentions of the Republick I serve, touching the Turkish Affairs, provided you promise me to do me Two different good Turns. 'Tis absolutely necessary, we make War with these Barbarians, before they declare it against us. The Ottoman Family is like the Mathematical Compass, which enlarges it self the more 'tis pressed. You are not to be informed of the famous Victory gained by our General, Capello, who has led in Triumph all the Gallies of Africk; but though Amurath be employ'd on the Frontiers of Persia, in the Siege of a most important Place, yet does he already threaten to be revenged for the Defeat of these Barbarians. The Ministers of the Port do earnestly press him to shew his Resentment; and we certainly know by secret Relations from the Turkish Camp, lying before Babylon, that the Grand Signior has said in full Council, That he will himself throw the first Fire-ball into our Arsenal. That, Madam, which lies in your Power, is, to perswade the King to engage in the Common Cause; and for this end, make up a Peace with his Enemies, that he may joyn his Naval Forces with ours. On the other Hand, we could wish you would offer the contrary to the Cardinal Richlieu; because cause this Minister usually slighting Womens Counsels, will come to our purpose, through his obstinate Humour of contradicting you: And I do not doubt but this Artifice will succeed, if you persuade him, the King is resolved not to give us any Assistance. There runs a Report, as if our Bailio has been laid hold on at Constantinople, and retained Prisoner in the Castle of Seven Towers, by the Order of the Kaimakan. And 'tis added, That the Grand Signior offers a Peace to the Persians, to return speedily into Europe; that having no Diversion on that side, he may turn all his Forces against the Republick.

The Pope promises much, and we need not fear but he will keep his Word, being the Person most interessed in our Affairs. He will furnish Money, join his Gallys to those of the Republick, and moreover, send us several stout Men. The King of Spain promises us Forty Galleys, with all Necessaries, together with Fifty Vessels of War. The Great Duke of Tuscany will assist us with Eight Vessels well set out, and Six Galleys well armed. The King of Poland promises to send into the Infidels Country, an Army of Fifty Thousand Cossacks; and other shall cruise about the Levantine Seas with their Brigantines, and especially the Archipelago. As to what respects the Republick, the chief Families in Venice have already proffered to set out, and entertain at their own Charge, a Vessel, till the War be ended; and all the great Castles and Towns on the firm Land, freely offer to furnish the Republick with Fifty Thousand Duckats a Month. This Kingdom (which is so full of Men, amongst which there are so many good Officers, which are rich in Money, and at present so considerable at Sea) must not only not trouble so noble and necessary a Project, in continuing a War with Spain; but also gives its Assistance, by Supplies of Men, Money and Vessels. If you can, Madam, oblige the King to enter into this League, you will merit an Everlasting Remembrance, and have an Hundred Thousand Crowns, which lye ready for you at Venice, to be paid when and where you please.

This is God's Cause, the Occasion is favourable, and all things seem in a readiness. You may immortalize your Name, and with your Beauty, your Credit and Eloquence give good Grounds of Hope to Christendom of Success, by obtaining the Assistance of the most potent of the Christian Monarchs.

This is what the Dwarf heard, and what he entrusted me with since; were I in a Condition, the serious Kaimakam, to relate particularly the Life of Osmin, I am perswaded thou would'st give intire Credit to the Discourse he made me.

Osmin is born a Turk, he loves me dearly, and has a certain Sympathy with me; which obliges him to seek me often, and entrust me with all the Adventures of his Life, treating me not only as a Friend, but living with me, as if I were his Brother.

There being some days, since I languished in Bed, tormented with a Distemper, which at its Beginning threatned me with vexatious Consequences, and which causes me to droop and languish; thou wilt pardon me, if I reason not much on an Adventure so extraordinary. Should God restore me to my Health, I shall double my Care and Diligence in observing the Measures of this Court. Order thy Prudence and Valour, that the Preparations of these Infidels against the formidable Monarchy of the true Believers, may vanish into Smoak: And the great Sovereign of the Lower and Upper World grant thee perfect Health; which is sought for by his Highnesses Slave, and thy Servant, Mahomet.

Paris, 12th. of the 4th. Moon, of the Year 1639.

LET-

LETTER XIII.

To Iouf his Kinſman.

NOtwithſtanding my Weakneſs, I force my ſelf to write thee this Letter, to thee with whom I am engaged by Intereſt, as well as by Blood. My Diſtemper lies ſo heavy upon me, that there remains only the time to ſpeak Two Words of Devotion to thee. Iouf, thou oughteſt towards the End of the Moon in May, to go to Mecha; carry me along with thee, though I am at this diſtance. I entreat thee, when thou ſhalt arrive with the Caravan of Pilgrims, at the Mount of Arafat, to offer there a Sacrifice in my Name; immolate a Sheep in commemoration of Abraham: And, if thou arriveſt in Health at the Holy Moſque, and in full ſtrength, offer devoutly my Prayers to our Great Prophet. I ask not Honours of Mahomet, no more than Riches; I only beg, that Heaven would reſtore me what I have loſt; 'tis Health I deſire, whereby I may ſerve our Great Emperor, and live more Holy than I have done. But before thy Departure, diſtribute a good Dole to the Poor, and if thou wanteſt Money, go and find Dgnet Oglou; borrow of him in my Name Seven hundred and fifty Aſpers, which thou ſhalt immediately deal out to thoſe that have moſt need.

Thou knoweſt how greatly the Works of Charity are recommended to us; they multiply the Benedictions of Heaven, and encreaſe our Wealth. I neither do, nor can do this in the Infidels Country; thou knoweſt my Inability, ſpeedily ſuccour me in the Neceſſity I am of doing Good, and let nothing hinder thee, no Argument of good Husbandry nor Superſtition. If thou neglect my Prayer, the ſhame of the Fault will lie at thy Door; and thou alone ſhalt bear the Iniquity, if thou executeſt not the Will of a dying Man, eſpecially having the Power. I forgot what I had of greateſt Importance to tell thee, and which is the moſt Holy, and aimed at to obtain with the greateſt Earneſtneſs. Endeavour to get for me a little Piece of the Cloth, wherewith the Temple of Mecha every Year hung, and which the Pilgrims tear in pieces to have each of them a part; and ſend, as ſoon as thou canſt, this Holy Relick, in a little Silver Box, to Carcoa at Vienna, who will take care I receive it. If thou beeſt a good Muſſulman, give ſpeedy Help to a Diſciple of the ſame Law; and if thou beeſt a real Kinſman, aſſiſt me, love me, and take on thee my Defence when neceſſary. I embrace thee with all my Heart, and Strength; and though I believe my ſelf very near Death, yet I wiſh thee a long and happy Life.

Paris, 12th of the 4th Moon,
of the Year 1639.

LETTER XIV.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem, at Conſtantinople.

IF thou beeſt the ſame that commanded the Army of the true Believers before Babylon, I write to thee without congratulating thy Reſurrection. The People at Paris, have kill'd thee by their Diſcourſe, becauſe they wiſh'd thy Death, and 'tis generally ſaid thou waſt ſtrangled by Four Mutes. But if I write to another, raiſed to the chief Dignity of the Empire, I pray the Great God, who will one day judge judge all Men, that he will long continue thee in Amurath's Service, ever happy, and alway attended with Victory; and give thee better Fortune than all the other Vizirs, who have governed in the vast Empire of the Muſſulmen.

I have been ſick during the ſpace of Eighteen Moons, and my health is not yet fully reſtored: I have lived all that time, in continual Expectation of Death, and ſo many odd things have happned in my Sickneſs, that I ſhould fall into it again, ſhouldſt thou oblige me to make the Recital of them.

The Charity of the Chriſtian Derviſes has been very great towards me, having neglected nothing which might be any ways ſerviceable to my happy Departure. The graveſt of them have often attended me with Diſcourſes of the Immortality of the Soul, of Hell, their Purgatory, Paradiſe, and the Merits and Indulgences of the Church. Several Phyſicians have come to ſee me, and uſed their utmoſt Skill to keep me alive, and imagine I owe my Life to them; but if it be ſo, they have paid themſelves for their Care, by drawing ſo much Blood out of me, having, I think, quite emptied my Veins, to reſiſt, ſaid they, the ſeveral Diſtempers which aſſaulted me, and to take from me the Turkiſh Fever which I nouriſhed; for I aſſuredly brought it from Conſtantinople.

The greateſt Sin I committed during the Courſe of ſo long a Sickneſs, was the pretending to confeſs my ſelf to a Captain Dervis, as the Chriſtians do in the Principal Feaſts, and when they are ready to die. I uſed this Ceremony but once, and I do not think I have committed Sacrilege, for I have told no Truth; and if I may ſpeak freely to thee, Invincible Vizir, hear what a pleaſant Penance was enjoyned me, for an imaginary Crime of which I accuſed my ſelf. I confeſſed I hindred, by an Apology I had made, a Mehometan from embracing the Law of Jesus; and the Dervis said to me his Passion, You are not then a Catholick: I am, answered I, and only dissuaded this Barbarian on Account, I had observed it seldom happened, That a Turk, who changed his Law, came to a good End; and that those who ceased to be Mussulmen, seldom prove any others but bad Christians. Your Reasoning is also as false, replyed sharply the Monk, as the Design you have had is bad; for you never ought to hinder any thing which is good, for the fear you may have that in the End it may cease to be so. And I enjoyn you for Penance, to scrape out with such Exactness, all the Characters of your Apology, that there remain no Mark of it, so that the Paper become as clean, and fair, as if there had been nothing written on it, that so black and detestable a Discourse be entirely defaced by the Pains which you shall take to hinder the remaining of any Trace or Mark: After which, you shall pray to God as long as you live, that he would destroy the Temple at Mecha, so famous by the Impieties committed there, and enlighten the Eyes of the blind Mahometans. But I am constrained to stop here, being so feeble, and indisposed, that I have not the Strength to write that I am now recovering.

The Mars which has made Germany Tremble, I mean the Duke of Wimar, is in fine dead at 36 Years of Age, and buried in the same Field wherein he gathered his last Lawrels, that is to say, at Brizac. I shall distinctly inform the Kaimakam of whatever has hapned during my Sickness, that I may not give thee the Trouble to read the Relation of several Adventures, which have been already published in the World, whilst thou art employed in the great Affairs of the Empire. As soon as I am able, I shall, if possible, do with greater Diligence the Offices of my Place, and henceforward punctually advertise thee of the Cabals, Intrigues and Designs of the Nazarenes, that thou mayst not be unprovided against all the Attempts of the Infidels.

I entreat the Being of Beings to accompany thy Life with all the Happiness thou can'st desire on Earth; and that thou may'st never undertake any thing for the Good of the Empire, and its Religion, without Success.

Paris, 15th of the 10th Moon,
of the Year 1640.

LETTER XV.

To the Kaimakam.

THOU wer't but little mistaken, when thou thoughtest I was dead. I have been so near the Grave, that I may have received four of thy Letters, without being able to read them; so far was I from the power of Answering them. I have been sick a whole Year and six Months, out of the Commerce of the Living, and without receiving any Consolation from any one; abandoned to Physick, and become the Prey of the Physicians; and in short, out of hope of ever recovering; but the Day wherein I am to be judged, is not yet come: I am in fine, still alive, and shall soon, I hope, be well again, if thou, to o'erwhelm me, chargest not my long Malady, as a Crime upon me, and suspectest me not guilty of Infidelity.

I have informed my self, within these few Days, of several Events which have hapned during the Course of several Moons, which I shall relate to thee, if I can, in this Letter, to make amends for the time I have lost. But in so few Words, as will occasion thee to think I am still sick; for which thou muſt not blame me, ſeeing thou loveſt Brevity.

France, during the time I have not writ to thee, has given me Marks of its Power and Policy. Four places have been beſieged in the Year 1639. whoſe Succeſs have not been equal. The French have met with Diſadvantage before Thionville, by the Valour and Conduct of Picolomini, one of the Emperor's Generals, who was born in Italy, and brought up from a Child in the Trade of Arms. 'Tis ſaid, he has attack'd and vanquiſh'd his Maſter's Enemies, with ſuch ſpeed, that one may compare his Action with that of Claudius Nero, when he defeated Aſdrubal who had enter'd Italy: He has broken the Enemies Army, routed the Horſe, took the Cannon, kill'd the French General, and immediately rais'd the Siege; but in revenge, the ſame French, who were beaten before Thionville, have made themſelves Maſters of Hedin, Salins, and Salſe; which laſt was taken by the Young Prince of Conde, who gives the Marks of an extraordinary Valour; but the Spaniards have re-taken theſe Places, which have coſt them dear. 'Tis ſaid that the Governour left by the Prince of Conde there, being preſs'd by the Spaniards to ſurrender the Place, threw out to 'em an hot White-Loaf, ſaying, That thoſe who eat of this Bread, would not ſurrender themſelves, before the Enemies came to the time wherein they might eat Ice.

Yet the Place was ſurrender'd, before the Spring-time was come to change the Face of the Earth; ſo far were they from holding out till it was cover'd with Snow or Ice.

This King immediately appeaſed the Inſurrections which were made in Normandy. But what wilt thou ſay of Caſimir, the King of Poland's Brother, who being return'd a Second Time into France alone and diſguiſ'd, was diſcovered and carried Priſoner to the Caſtle in the Wood of Vincennes near Paris, where he is carefully guarded.

The War has been very cruel in Italy between the Three Parties, who are extreamly animated againſt one another. Prince Thomas of the Houſe of Savoy, drove out by ſurprize the French from Turin; but thou wilt ſoon underſtand that our Capital Enemies the Spaniards, have been beaten and entirely defeated under Cazal, by the Count Harcourt, of the Houſe of Lorrain.

The Spaniards and Dutch have made a great Noiſe in the Ocean with their Fleets; the former came with Fourſcore Veſſels of War, to land Fifteen Thouſand Men in Flanders; but having been met by Van Tromp, a Commander of great Courage and Experience, there was a bloody Battel fought, which laſted long, but at length ended in the Defeat of the Spaniards.

The Dutch have taken Thirteen Ships, and about Twenty of them have been driven by the Weather on the Coaſts of England, where they are loſt, and Eight others have had the good Fortune to get into Dunkirk.

The Victory of the Dutch is compleat, having loſt but one Ship in the whole Engagement, againſt ſo puiſſant an Enemy, and whoſe Subjects they were formerly.

Bear with me, Illuſtrious and Happy Kaimakan, wanting Strength to continue on writing, though it were the Victories of Amurath which I were to relate.

I ſhall make known to thee, on the firſt Opportunity, whatever ſhall come to my Knowledge In the mean time, the Creator of all things, direct thee in all thy Ways, and proſper all thy Undertakings.

Paris, 15th. of the 10th. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER XVI.

To Dgnet Ogiou.

I Am in a manner raiſed from the Dead, by reading thy Letter, there is not a Line or Syllable, but ſhews the Marks of a true Heart, and a tender and real Sympathy with my Condition: I pray Heaven, we may do nothing either of us to leſſen this Affection.

Thou informeſt me in thy Letter of the Departure of Iſouf for Mecha: I give thee a Thouſand Thanks for the Money thou haſt given him, for the offering of a Sacrifice in my Name on the Sacred Mountain, and to diſtribute here below the Alms which I enjoyned him. I admire thy Bounty, and the Charitable Care thou haſt had of the Salvation of thy Friend Mahmut, in ſending one of our Devotes to Medina, to go the Pilgrimage, and ſay the Prayers for me. In a Word, I ſee thy Kindneſs makes thee foreſee and provide againſt all my Wants; there is no Place or Time, wherein I receive not Marks of thy Favour.

Seeing I am ſo dear to thee, and loving thee ſo greatly as I do, let not diſtance of Place, Poverty, Diſgrace, Impriſonment, or any other Misfortune, extinguiſh, or ſo much as damp our mutual Affection.

I have, in a manner, ſtole the time I write to thee: for I have nothing which is truly mine, and I make thee a Preſent of a thing which I owed the Kaimakam, for whom I ought to employ more time in writing. But let us lay aſide all theſe troubleſome Affairs, and entertain one another with an entire Confidence and Familiarity. Thou wanteſt not Wit, employ it in the Study of Hiſtory, after ſufficient ficient Inſtruction in the Matters which concern Religion. If thou wilt be a Prince among other Men, ſeparate thy ſelf from the Crowd, by thy Application to good Authors; read much, and yet read little; read ever good Books, there being few of them, and thus thou wilt read much. If thou can'ſt attain to the knowledge of whatever is known of Men, thou wilt be a kind of God amongſt them; whereas thou wilt be of the Number of Beaſts, if thou faileſt of acquiring the Notices thou oughteſt to have. I wiſh thou would'ſt mind more for thy Friends ſake, what paſſes in the Seraglio, in the Divan, and in the Prince's moſt ſecret Councils, to know what is ſaid there againſt me, and for me: Good and ſeaſonable Advice does oftentimes hinder much Miſchief, and does a great deal of good. Friendſhip makes thoſe things which are otherwiſe hard, very eaſie: 'He that is not ready (ſays an 'Holy Man amongſt the Chriſtians) to ſuffer all 'things, and to loſe all, and his very Will too, 'for the ſake of him that he loves, deſerves not 'the Name of a Friend.'

Let us ever forget the words Mine and Thine; Thy Good Fortune is mine, even as thy Diſgraces are: If we thus eſtabliſh our Friendſhip, why may we not, though Modern Turks, compare our ſelves to thoſe Ancient Greeks, who have given ſuch glorious Marks to the World of their Friendſhip; Why may we not be the Imitators of Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who contracted ſo ſtrict an Union, that nothing could change it? Although we were not born the ſame Day, in the ſame Climate, and in the ſame Town as Poliſtratus and Hypoclides, who were born in the ſame Houſe, at the ſame Hour, and lived always together, and fell ſick at the ſame Time, and loved equally; yet let us ſurpaſs them in Affection. Love we one another more than Theſeus and Pirithous; more than Damon and Pithias;

Pithias; the former of which contracted in Arms, and the other in Studies, that ſtrict Amity that has rendred them ſo recommendable to Poſterity. If thou knoweſt any Secret whereby to reſtore my Appetite which I have loſt, ſend it me. I am here Spectator of a Million of Mouths, who eat four times a Day, and conſume 15000 Oxen every Week, and 15000 other Pieces of Animals, beſides Mutton, Veal, Hogs, not to reckon all ſorts of Fowl, and Fruits produced by the Earth, and the Fiſhes from the Seas and Rivers.

I am forced to die with Hunger with my Meat in my Hands; and in a Town where there is an Abundance of all ſorts of things, I want all things. Bread, which is ſo pleaſant to the Eye, and ſo ſavoury in the Taſte, to all other People, is nauſeated by me. Wine only, becauſe 'tis forbidden by our Law, rejoices the ſight of me, and ſtirs up a deſire of drinking. Let me hear oft from thee; let thy Letters be inſtructive, and be levelled againſt my melancholy Temper. The God of Mahmut keep thee ever in Health, and make thee love me, as thou do'ſt, continually.

LETTER XVII.

To Adonai the Jew at Genoa.

THou art as Lazy in Writing, as Inconſiderable in thy Judgment of Things. Thou haſt written to the Grand Vizir, That this Republick is diſpoſed to join its Forces to that of Venice, for its Aſſiſtance in the War againſt the Port; but what

Ground

Ground haſt thou for this Advice? And if the Grand Vizir ſhould oblige thee to give a Reaſon for this, how can'ſt thou ſatisfie his Curioſity, and hinder him from accuſing thee of great Lightneſs?

I now received a Copy of the Letter thou didſt write to Conſtantinople, for which I thank thee: 'Twould have been better I had received the Original; for I would not have ſent it. There's no likelihood that a Republick, ſo deſirous of eſtabliſhing a Peace in her Dominions, will diſturb her own Quiet, for the Service of a State, with which ſhe is always at War.

Had the Genoeſes any Cauſe of Complaint againſt Amurath, they would want neither Soldiers, nor Arms, nor Veſſels, nor Money, to raiſe Enemies againſt him. But at preſent, whilſt their Affairs are in a full Calm, both abroad and at home, they make (with greater Prudence that the Venetians) War in the Spaniſh Indies with their Regiſters, and Arithmetick; and they have always the Advantage in this kind of Combat, wherein there is no Example they ever loſt: Let this Nation alone in Peace: Write rather to the Port, That the Genoeſes, condemned by Nature to dwell in the Rocks and Deſart Mountains, have found the means of making theſe the moſt delicious Abodes in Europe.

Tell the Grand Vizir, That ſo many extravagant Philoſophers, who continually ſearch for what they will never find, have at length ſhewed, That there is no other Place where are more perfect Chymiſts to be found, having coverted into Gold almoſt all the Stones of the Country, changed the Horror of their Diſarts into moſt pleaſant Gardens; and the Cottages of the ancient Ligurians are transformed into Palaces, enriched with Marble and Porphyry, with ſo great Magnificence and Propriety, that no Houſes are comparable to theirs. To which thou mayſt add, That the Inheritance of the pooreſt

Genoese, does at this time much surpass those of their Predecessors. Shew him, they have begun to give considerable Succours to great and puissant Monarchs, by immense Sums; and that, in fine, in the Registers of particular Traders, one may see the Names of the greatest Monarchs on Earth, to whom they are become Creditors.

Be more careful of what thou writest for the future; and when thou givest Advice, set down what thou knowest without Exaggeratings, and be reserv'd in what's doubtful: Never write Falsehoods in thy Dispatches. Be also never the Author of vulgar Rumours, and Stories made by People at leisure, who abound with Extravagancies. God help thy Understanding, and heal thy Distempers, if thou hast any.

Paris, 10th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1640.

LETTER XVIII.

To the Kaimakam.

THE Christians are become Magicians; or, to speak better, the Spaniards who make War in Piemont, have fill'd the World with Astonishment by an extraordinary and new Enchantment. I wrote to thee, there were two great Armies before Turin, one to take it, and the other to succour it; but I have not yet made known to thee, that the Cannon of the Spaniards are become Couriers, who carry their Dispatches in the Air, into the besieged Cities; and moreover, Ammunition, Powder, Salt-Petre, and Money, a marvellous Invention, which fills me with Admiration in writing it.

it. There is a Man in the Camp of General Legannez, who makes Brass Bullets so artificially, that having shot them into the Ditch of the Place, they have for a long time succoured the Besieged. 'Tis said, that being made in a Vice, and hollowed within, they have served for Two Uses, to convey into Turin what was wanting, and to bring back into the Spaniards Camp the things they most needed. But this Industry proved in the end useless; for after several Conflicts, Turin has fain again into the Hands of King Lewis, who has therein re-established the Dutchess of Savoy, to the great Satisfaction of her People, who have thereupon shewed the Signs of the greatest Joy. This Re-establishment is owing to the Valour and Conduct of Count Harcourt, who has sustained and repelled the Assaults of Two Armies, stronger in Number than his own. This Captain has made his Name as famous in Italy, as were heretofore those of the Heroes of Rome and Athens. The Marquis of Leganez undertook the Siege of Cazal, an important Place belonging to the Duke of Mantoa, situated on the famous River of Po in Italy. Count Harcourt not being able with all his Army to put Succours into the Place, he took the Party of forcing himself the Besieged, entring on Horseback into the Lines with his Sword in his Hand, where he was followed by some of his Gentlemen. The Spaniards being surpriz'd and astonish'd, found no Safety but in Retreat, which they made disorderly; and the French, under such a Captain, bore away that day, the greatest and most glorious Victory they ever won in Italy.

If thou requirest an Account of me of what has past in Germany, I can tell thee, that the War has been carried on there this Year with equal Success and Losses to both Parties, to whom Fortune has been sometimes favourable, and otherwhiles contrary.

But

But I am informed, there's a design of making a great Assembly at Cologne, to re-establish a Peace between all the Christian Princes; and that the King of France has named for his Plenipotentiary there, the Cardinal Julius Mazarin, an Italian by Nation, a Man of great Parts and Experience in Busines.

Prince Casimir is set at Liberty, at the Intreaty of the King of Poland his Brother, and has been since well received by the King, who made him dine at his Table, and presented him with a rich Diamond. The Town of Arras which the French have taken in the Spanish Netherlands, is of great Importance, and is a considerable Loss to the Catholick King, who will give great Reputation to his Enemies, that have taken the place in the sight of a great Army, commanded by the Cardinal Infant, Governour of the Low-Countries; which Conquest has mightily raised the French Courage, and encreased the Glory of their Prince.

The Queen is brought to Bed of a Second Son, who was born the 21*st* of September, and he is named the Duke of Anjou.

The Spaniards are as unfortunate on the Sea, as at Land. Their Fleet which returned from the West Indies, richly laden with Commodities of all sorts, have been most of them dispersed by the French Naval Army, commanded by the Duke of Breze. The Spaniards truly fought with much Valour, but Fifteen Thousand of their Men were slain, and Two Hundred taken Prisoners, together with Five great Vessels richly laden. One of their great Gallions was burnt, and it is said, the other Ships were saved, having first thrown the best part of their Lading overboard, which they had brought with such great Care and Pains from the other World.

That which has past on the Ocean, has not hindred the Archbishop of Bourdeaux from shewing

the Strength of the King his Master on the Mediterranean; where he has sought an Occasion of fighting the Spaniards with a lighter Army, consisting for the most part of Galleys. He had sent a Defiance to the Duke de Ferrandine, General of the Spanish Galleys; who being unwilling to accept of the Challenge, this Prelate advanced towards the Coast of Naples, where he did some Mischief.

One may say, that the Misfortunes of Philip King of Spain, are as great this Year, as is Power is. But it is said, these Losses are not comparable to what he is threatned with, if Portugal and Catalonia shake off the Yoke of his Domination, as the common report runs.

I have heard much talk in general, on these considerable Affairs, without being however informed of any certain Particulars. But henceforward, when I shall be able to leave my Chamber, to go into the Churches, Walks, and Gardens about the City and the Court, I shall let nothing pass without a strict Enquiry, and give a faithful Account of whatever deserves thy Notice; and should'st thou desire any particular thing of thy Slave Mahmut, 'tis but mentioning it, and thou shalt not want an exact and humble Answer.

It makes me tremble in telling thee, that a Report runs here, of the Death of the Invincible Prop of the World, the Mighty of Mighties; in fine, of the Glorious Amurath. 'Tis false News, I hope, yet however asserted with great Confidence. The Arbiter of Heaven and Earth confound all our Enemies, and give the Grand Signior, and thy self, a Life which knows no end, and attended with a Happiness which cannot be encreased.

Paris, 7th of the last Moon, of the Year 1620.

LETTER XIX.

To Dgnet Oglou.

THE Lovely Greek, after whom thou enquirest so earnestly, is long since retired into France, and has been married Eighty Moons to a great French Merchant, with whom I am not acquainted, but am informed is very Rich, and Fortunate in his Dealings: but infinitely more Fortunate, in being the Husband of Daria Lena Maani, by whom he has several fine Children.

This charming Greek does now profess the Roman Religion, which is the only Fault I find in her: I never knew Woman, whose whole Carriage is so graceful, who does all things with such a careless Exactness, and whose Vertue is less morose. Mere Chance brought me acquainted with her; whom I no sooner saw, but was struck with Admiration. She came to Paris the last Year, to solicit a Law-Suit against a Stranger about an Estate. It was at Court, and in the Presence of the King himself, that I first saw Daria: She spake to him so sweetly, that she soon obtained what she desired; and at the same instant, I felt such inexpressible Passions and Longings after her Acquaintance —— Suffice me, my dear Dgnet, to tell thee, That never any Creature made such deep Impressions in the Heart of a Man, as this charming Greek did in mine.

I drew near to her as soon as I could; I spake to her in her own Language, telling her, I was an Arabian; and she answered me with as great Modesty as Benignity. I went the day following to give her Visit in her own Lodgings; where this adorable Person received me with the greatest Civility, not forbidding me a Return; being pleased ſed perhaps to meet with one that could ſpeak her own Language, which is very rare in theſe Parts.

Since then, I could not for my Life forget her; I have ſerved her with the greateſt Diligence, and ſo doted on her, that I forgot my ſelf and thee, and if I may dare to ſay ſo, the Grand Signior too. Pardon this Infidelity on the account of a Paſſion, which knows no Moderation, being not able to withſtand the Force of ſo invincible an Enemy.

Daria is young, of a generous Temper, and in whoſe whole Deportment, there's no Grace wanting. Her Vertue is far above Lucretia's, for this Roman Lady killed her ſelf, having firſt endured the Violences of a Tyrant; whereas ſhe would die before ſhe would come to ſuch a Tryal. If you have ſeen her at Conſtantinople, you muſt have known her Perfections: I, for my part, who only knew her at Paris, have remark'd four Beauties in her Perſon, which I believe is not to be found in any of thoſe Ladies kept in the Seraglio. Her Eyes, her Mouth, her Teeth, and her Hands, ſeem to have been made only to furniſh the God of Love with Darts. She is ſure to ſtrike where ſhe will with her fine black Eyes full of Fire: and ſhe has alſo the Secret of healing the Wounds ſhe makes, when ſhe pleaſes. As ſoon as ever ſhe opens her Mouth, the three Graces are ſeen to ſit ſporting in her Countenance; and her Body is moreover ſo proportion'd in all its Parts, that had ſhe lived in the time of Phidias, he had certainly taken her for the Model of his Venus, which was the Admiration of all the World.

I have plyed this fair Greek with Viſits, loved her even to Idolatry; my Reſpect has been ever equal to her Vertue; and the greateſt Favour I obtained from her, was to ſuffer me thus to ſpeak to her, I love you, Daria; Daria, I adore you; but ſhe would would never ſuffer the leaſt Expreſſion which might make her underſtand any thing elſe.

This Incomparable Beauty often ſaid to me, Mahmut, I have a great Reſpect for thee, becauſe thou art Diſcreet and Vertuous, and ſhould alſo love thee were thou not a Man. Live on ſtill as thou haſt done, and thou wilt thereby oblige me to reſpect thee yet more; but think not to obtain from Daria any more than an innocent Affection; I owe all to my Husband, and I will never be unfaithful to him. If I ever attempted to ſnatch any ſmall Favour, it was always in vain, having ever repelled me in ſuch a manner, as made me loſe all Hope, and at the ſame time feel a new increaſe of Paſſion. Conſider, dear Oglou, what paſt then in my Heart, and what a War I was to ſuſtain.

In my great Inquietudes, and ſharpeſt and cruelleſt Pains, Philoſophy ſupplied me with no other Remedies but Patience; ſhe ſet before me the Examples of the Eſteem which the Ancients had for Pudicity; but ſhe hindred me not from alſo remembring that we find in Hiſtory almoſt all the Philoſophers more tranſported with Venereal Pleaſures, than retained by the Precepts of Wiſdom: Diogenes and Ariſtotle, became they not Fools hereby; And Seneca, whoſe Morals are the Rules of the Wiſeſt, was not he driven out of Rome for his Adulteries? I tell thee plainly, the Precepts of Philoſophy have influenced me not a whit; I derided them, and was reſolved to love on, and that more exceſſively than all the Philoſophers together. Daria's ſoft Severity has laid on me ſtronger Laws than all the Dogms of the Stoicks; ſo that nothing can make me change my Reſolution of loving her eternally. If it be true that Love is a Weakneſs, only Men, who are noble Creatures, are thereunto ſubject; it being certain, that mean Souls cannot love, becauſe they have no Heart: Natures Original and is far higher than Reasons; One is the Work of God, whereas the other comes from Man. Be not then astonisht, if Reason does so oft yield to Nature.

Daria had a mind to learn Italian, which she thought a better Language than others. I taught her a great deal of it in a little time; but business quickly deprived an unhappy Master of the most perfect of Scholars. She said once to me. 'Mahmut, 'let us have a perpetual Amity for one another, but 'let us love and esteem Vertue far before Friendship, 'Teach me History and Geography, to the end that 'knowing Kingdoms, Towns, and Provinces, and 'those that govern them, I may know into how 'many Parts, this Earth which appears so admirable, is divided; I may now learn the Forces, Methods of Government, Manners, Religions of Nations, the Difference of Seas and of Mountains, of 'Lakes and Rivers, of inhabited Places, Islands and 'Desarts, that I may not confound the Barbarous 'with the civilized Nations, and Republicks with 'Monarchies.

My worthy Friend, so noble an Inclination joined with a singular Grace, and attended with so many rare Qualities, as well Spiritual as Corporal, have reduced the poor Mahmut to a Slavery, more rigorous than that which he suffered with thee in Sicily. How many nights have I past in horrible Restlesness; and how many times have I vainly believed I was with Daria, whom I sought in my Chamber; when Sleep succeeding long Watchings, represented her to me in a Dream more complaisant than ordinary? In a Word, Daria so filled my Thoughts, that I forgot my Books, and avoiding also the Company of my Friends; she alone was my daily Study, and I renounced all other Divertisements; the finest Ladies were nauseous to me; the finest Gardens seemed horrible Forests which

ſerve for a Retreat to Savage Beaſts. In fine, my Paſſion (Friend Oglou) comes to that Exceſs, that I can find no Remedy. My Tears were of none effect to ſoften Daria, and I have caſt my ſelf a Thouſand times in vain at her Feet; all my Cares and Reſpects have ſerved only to give me Proofs of her Virtue. Receive as thou oughteſt the Confidence I put in thee, and if thou haſt not an Heart that can love ſo ardently, at leaſt have ſome Complacency towards a Man whoſe Paſſion has no bounds, and reproach me not with having had too much Weakneſs for having been vanquiſht by a Woman. 'Tis Women that have always won the greateſt Victories; it is their Trade to conquer, and even thoſe too who ſubdue all things. It is impoſſible for me to comprehend, how I could love ſo ſtrongly without dying; neither can I imagine how I ſhall live, if I be long deprived of the Sight of her I love. Daria has left Paris, and is diſtant thence above Three hundred Miles; conſider then the condition I am in, I reckon my ſelf in a ſolitary Place, although there be above a Million of Inhabitants in the Town where I dwell. I ſtir not out of my Chamber; and as to my Books, they will yield me no Comfort. My only Care is to nouriſh my Diſtemper; whereby I ſtudy to make my ſelf more miſerable, becauſe it is not in my Power, ſo much as to ſeek the way to the only Happineſs I wiſh for. Mahmut may be ſaid to be the Son of Sorrow; my Beard is naſty and overgrown; I am out of love with my ſelf, comfortleſs, avoiding all Society, and am become inviſible to all People. I have no hope amongſt ſo many Cauſes of Deſpair, but the Aſſurance which Daria has given me, that I poſſeſs a place in her Heart; and I believe it, becauſe ſhe ſays ſo. Heaven has given her a frank and generous Soul, and promiſes her great things in the courſe of her Life. I have ſecretly drawn her

Horoſcope; as far as I could find, all the Planets are favourable to her; ſhe is to live a great while; Fortune will ſecond her Intentions; ſhe will enjoy an uninterrupted Health; and this lovely Perſon will ever gain the Advantage on all that ſhall oppoſe her. Happy is he that ſhall be of the number of her Friends, but more happy is he that ſhall be beloved of her, for he may aſſure himſelf of being beloved of the handſomeſt and moſt deſerving Lady in the World.

Read my Follies with ſome Indulgence, and be not angry with me when thou knoweſt I was ready to renounce my Religion for that of Daria's; ſhe began to convince me, and I began to believe, that the Religion of the moſt perfect and moſt vertuous of Women was the beſt. If thou haſt Intereſt enough in the Grand Vizir, or the Kaimakam, obtain for me the Permiſſion of leaving Paris for Six Hours only, but by no means let them know the Occaſion. I love much, abſent from Daria; but it ſeems to me I do not yet love enough: I would have more violent Tranſports, during her abſence, than thoſe I ſuffer whilſt I ſee her; to the end I may ſay, that all times, and in all places, never any body loved ſo much. I have diſcovered to thee my whole Heart; excuſe my Paſſion, if thou wilt not excuſe thy Friend ſo horridly tormented with it; and remember what the beautiful Roxalana ſaid to the Great Solyman: That the Pleaſure of Commanding, and making one's ſelf Obeyed, is to reckoned but in the Second Rank of Pleaſures; whereas that of loving, and being beloved, is the firſt.

Henry IV. was one of the greateſt Kings of France, than whom no Man ever more greatly loved. When he reproached the Duke de Biron with the love he had for a Lady, mark what this Caviſier told him; Great King, how is it poſſible thou ſhouldeſt not be indulgent to Lovers, who haſt ſo often ſaid when thou waſt in love, thou forgetteſt thy ſelf, thy Kingdom and Subjects? And this, dear Oglu, is what has hapned to me at Paris, with this admirable Perſon whom thou could'ſt no longer find at Conſtantinople. But alas, I ſhould be an unhappy Friend, if with ſuch a Love as mine I ſhould prove thy Rival. I will not imagine it; yet I muſt tell thee, that rather than yield thee Daria, I will ſacrifice to thee all the time I have to live. I have given my Picture to this Charming Greek, who has received it very courteouſly, yet rather as the Work of an excellent Painter, than the Picture of a Lover.

But being full of Goodneſs, and perfectly Diſcreet, ſhe ſaid thus to me, when I gave it her: Mahmut, thank Heaven thou art not Handſome; ſuch ſort of Men have not ordinarily all the Succeſs they pretend to in their Amours. Wiſe Ladies think theſe kind of People doat too much on themſelves; and thoſe that are diſdainful, find them not ſubmiſſive enough and reſpectful; and ſuch as fear evil Tongues, dare not look on them; and alſo theſe Gentlemen imagine Ladies Favours are granted them, becauſe they cannot withſtand them, and they expect oftentimes to be intreated to receive them: Whereas thoſe to whom Nature has not been ſo liberal of her Favours do more than have love; they adore their Miſtreſſes, they are always humble, and know how to gain the cyeſt Beauty by their Reſpectfulneſs. As to thy part, who art none of the faireſt, thou wilt be happy, if thou changeſt not thy manner of living with me.

It is impoſſible for me to ſay, whether Daria has any conſiderable Imperfections, being too greatly prepoſſeſſed by my Paſſion, to diſcover Defects in a Perſon whom I regard as an Angel. Time and her Promiſes, will one day ſhew me, whether ſhe has the Vices uſual to thoſe of her Nation, which are commonly an Infidelity, cover-red over with the moſt ſpecious Pretences, and a continued Diſſimulation.

However, ſend me a Cask of the white Balm of Mecha, and of the beſt Sort for Scent thou can'ſt get; and at the ſame time, ſend me alſo ſome of that precious Eaſtern Wood, whoſe Scent is admirable to perfume the Body. I have promiſed the fair Daria this Preſent, let me ſoon have it, to the end I may accuſtom Daria to the Neatneſs and Delicacies of the Mahometans. Preſerve alſo thy Health; and if thou enviеſt me, love as much as I do; but love with Continency, if thou wilt love long, and be long beloved.

The Great God preſerve thee from loving however ſo exceſſively as thy Friend Mahmut does; the Dolors being therein always certain, and the Fruition uncertain.

Paris, 10th of the 1ſt Moon,
of the Year 1621.

LETTER XX.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem.

THE Chiaus arrived here this ſame Moon in which I write to thee, and is in perfect Health, with all his Attendants.

I do not tell thee in what manner he was received by the People at Paris, it being of ſmall importance; ſeeing they have no other part in the Government of the Kingdom, than that of Obeying.

The Populacy curiouſly obſerved his Habit, his Beard, and his Gate, all as extraordinary. 'Tis certain (Invincible Leader of his Armies, in whom God has placed his Authority of governing the Earth,) our Envoys are not esteemed where-ever they come, unless amongst the most Rational and Honest part of Mankind; which are always the least Number.

Not only the Common Sort run to see our Ambassadors, for the Vestments they wear, to which their Eyes are not accustomed; but, even considerable Persons have the same Curiosity. Some silently approve, others lift up their Hands, to note their Astonishment; and others, by an insolent Murmur, discover their Contempt, not understanding the Justice due to Strangers, whose Manners and Fashions ought never to be blamed; it being impossible, but whole Nations must have good Reasons for their Customs and Practices since so many Ages.

But he was not thus received at Court, where the King and his Ministers do all things with great Prudence: being respected as a Man that brought good News, and sent by the Greatest and most Puissant Emperor in the World. As to the Subject of his coming, every body speaks diversly. The Ministers of Foreign Princes are fearful, lest the New Sultan should attempt the entire Ruine of Christendom, and prove more terrible than Amurath. In the mean time, this Heathenish People shew Incredible Joy at the burning of the Imperial City of Constantinople. But, the King has no part in the Sentiments of his Subjects.

Many say, That the King of Red Heads will renew the War with the Empire, and is perswaded to this by the Great Mogol; and there are some who affirm he has already laid Siege to Babylon. But those who speak with more Sense, and less Hatred, affirm, That all the Port's Enemies are like Reeds exposed to the Wind, which will be easily overthrown, if the French take not part with them; and it is the Folly of this Nation, (who believes her self superiour to all others, and the Arbiter of the World) to think too well of it self, because she is respected as a Friend to the faithful Mussulmans.

The Jews (Invincible Vizir, Principal Minister of the Empire, favoured of God) are the curs'd'st Race of all Nations; the Christians accused them of having set Constantinople on Fire; and greatly praise the Greeks for quenching it, to which, say they, they have no less contributed by their Hands, than by the Fervency of their Prayers; and that Heaven has preserved it from a total Ruin, because of the Sacred Relicks of so many Christians, whose Bodies lie buried in our Mosques.

The News which come from Foreign Countries, does every day denote the Disorder there is in all Parts; there being nothing heard from the side of Spain, but Secret Conspiracies, and Publick Revolts.

The People of Catalonia are in a continual Commotion, and so irritated, that they give no farther Quarter to the Spaniards. And, from Portugal, there comes more surprizing News.

London is as full of Disquiet, new Parties every day forming themselves against their Sovereign Charles, Master of those Three so famous Islands; whence it appears, that the God of the Nazarenes, is angry with these unbelieving People.

I shall not fail to inform thee in due time, of such Events as deserve thy Knowledge. For if things do not soon change their Posture, these Countries, forsaken of Heaven, (seeing the true Law, established by our Prophet, is not received here,) will soon change their Masters, their Manners, and Religion.

I adore with the profoundest Humility, and with my Head lying at thy invincible Feet, the Authority which the Sultan has intrusted thee with;

and which thou deserveſt, as well for thy Faithfulneſs, as the greatneſs of thy Actions.

Paris, 20th of the 1ſt Moon, of the Year 1641.

LETTER XXI.

To Cara Haly the Phyſician at Conſtantinople.

SInce I received thy Letter, and the Marks of thy Remembrance, I imagine my ſelf much better. I make Two Meals a Day, I walk about in the Morning, my Appetite increaſes, I have no more of thoſe nauſeous Belches, I can read longer, and I ſleep a-nights more ſoundly: Yet I cannot ſay I am in perfect Health; ſo long an Illneſs has deprived me of that which I do not find return. There's wanting to my Intellectual Faculties a certain kind of Vivacity, and Readineſs, in their Operations, which is extreamly abated; but I know not whether this be an Effect of the Pain I ſuffered, or whether it comes not from Nature weakned; as ſoon as our Life advances to throw it ſelf, as it were, into the Arms of Death, which is what is moſt certain for me. I would willingly entertain thee on the Condition wherein I find my ſelf, could I overcome the Weakneſs of my Diſpoſition, and the Coldneſs of the Seaſon, which pierces me, in ſpite of all my care to prevent it in this Icy Climate. The Ink I write with freezes on my Pen, and a Body may ſay the Fire freezes too, wanting, as it does, its uſual activity, the Cold being ſo ſharp, that it extinguiſhes the Natural Heat. The City where I dwell, appears on a ſudden transformed into Chryſtal: the Northern

Wind

Wind has in one night frozen the River; and all the Fountains, which were wont to quench the Thirst of a Million of People, are dried up. All Trade seems to have ceased; the Rich are retired to their Fires, and the Poor are creeping about the Streets; where, notwithstanding the Exercises they use to oppose the Cold, they seem already starved. The Bread is become like Marble, or an hard Stone; all things are frozen, and ancient People affirm, never the like has happened in their Days, or in the Times of their Fathers. There has been found some few Miles from Paris, in the great Road, Two Men clad in very course Stuff, without Shirts, their Legs naked, Heads shaved, and Cords about their middle, dead with Cold. They were found embracing one another, thinking thereby to communicate mutual Heat, to keep off, or at least retard their Deaths. These People are Dervises of the Latin Church, which are called Capucins; whose Life is a continual Penance. They rise in the Night to their Devotions, and spend their time in Contemplation. They live upon Alms which they receive of the Christians, which consist of Bread, Roots, and Herbs; and if the Charity of these Nazarenes extends to the giving any thing more, they use it with Sobriety. They sleep on Straw, and are obliged to wear the Habit Night and Day, which is dreadful to look on, and in which they are buried when they die. When their Occasions require them to travel, they are not permitted to go on Horseback, in a Coach or Chair, but only in Vessels when they go by Sea, or on Rivers; so that they have only that granted them, which Cato was so afraid of, and every body else, but Fools; which is, To Travel by Water.

In fine, their Life is accounted a continual Hell; and they will be finely chousèd, if they find not a Heaven, when stripp'd of their Mortality.

These Religious are under the direction of one General; observe a long Silence, which is a great Vertue among them; and with this are so exactly obedient to their Head, that they have no Will left.

They have very obscure Prisons under Ground, wherein they thrust those who scandalize their Order by their Crimes: For, notwithstanding the Holiness of their Rule, and the Vigilancy of their Superiours, to make it observed; there's never wanting some who wander from the right way, and often make use of the Esteem which Men have of their Piety, to commit such Enormities as would be soundly punished by the Men of the World. These kind of Dervises, cannot handle Money without being guilty of a mortal Sin. Notwithstanding this Profession of Poverty, I have seen these Dervises dress'd up with greater Magnificence than our Mufti, in the time when they celebrate their Masses, ascending up to the Great Altar, covered with the finest Linnen, and thereon Vests embroidered with Gold, the most delicately wrought as can be imagined, and oft enriched with Pearls and precious Stones. In their Sacrifice they eat the consecrated Bread, which they call the Messias his Body; which they are wont to place on a Plate of fine Gold; and they also put into Cups of the same Metal a Liquor, which they say is changed into the Blood of their God, as the Bread into the Body, as soon as they have pronounced certain Words, which they secretly mutter.

The Sacrifice is offered every day, and not only the People are present at it, but the greatest of the Kingdom, with their Monarch on his Knees, and in a supplicating posture. There stand about the Altar several stately Candlesticks, wherein burn white Wax Candles, which renders the Sacrifice still more solemn.

I re-

I relate to thee what I have often seen; for I chuse to be frequently in these Infidels Churches, and at their solemn Festivals, the better to conceal who I am.

Yet happy is he that lives satisfied with himself, assured he serves God in the manner he will be served. Thou hast this good Fortune, and that of being in thine House at thine Ease; when thou goest out, thou weares a long Vest down to thy Heels, lined with soft and warm Furrs, whil'st I am obliged to cover my self barely with a black short Cloak, which scarcely reaches below my Knees, and is too thin to resist the piercing Northern Blasts; and is, in truth, a very ridiculous Habit; yet which I am obliged to wear, for the service of him whose Slave I am, which cannot cover my Bandy-Legs, and Ill-shap'd Body. I expect, with great impatience, the Season which o'erspreads the Gardens with Flowers, the Fields with Grass, and crowns the Trees with Blossoms, and brings back the pretty Birds, who publish the joyful News of the Spring's approach; that being the Time wherein I may expect my Health.

As to what remains, thou wilt oblige me in making Trial of my Friendship, that thou may'st know, there's not in all the Empire of the true Believers, a more faithful Friend, and one that loves thee more cordially. Adieu.

LETTER XXII.

To the Kaimakam.

THE Court of France is an Aſſembly of Politicians, who diſcover or hide themſelves according to their Intereſts; and are more wont to hold their peace, than to talk. They explain themſelves in more than one manner, on the things which they cannot conceal; and, I draw from them what is neceſſary for my Inſtruction, and thy Information. There have happened ſuch ſudden and ſurprizing Motions in Spain, as cauſe conſiderable Advantages to be hoped for by France, which ſeems to have had a great hand in them, on which thou may'ſt make what Reflections thou thinkeſt convenient.

The Mountains which divide France from Spain, are called the Pirenees. Catalonia is a Province watered on one hand by the Mediterranean Sea, and bounded by Navarr; it lies ſituated at the Foot of theſe Mountains: The People have taken up Arms, and vigorouſly oppoſed the Catholick King's Miniſters; and the Portugueſes have done the ſame thing, but with different Succeſs. This Kingdom is compriſed within the States of Spain, and the richeſt under her Dominion. Her Situation is advantageous, lying between Galicia and Caſtile, and watered with the Ocean, which brings her immenſe Riches.

The Principal Town of Catalonia, is Barcellona; and Lisbon is the Chief Town of Portugal. The firſt has taken for the pretence of its Inſurrection, The Inſolencies committed by the Proteſtant Troops, which ſerved the Catholick King, and were quartered in this Province. And the other, having long concealed cealed its Design, has at length shaken off the Spanish Yoke; and set up a King of their own Royal Race.

'Tis said, That Count Olivarez, the King of Spain's Chief Minister and Favourite, designing to mortifie the Catalonians, horribly charged that Country with Soldiers, and sent thither the most licentious Troops to Quarter; imagining to chastise the Pride of this People in this manner, without any Form of Process.

This Minister's Design has had so far its End, the Province being full of Divisions and Slaughters, there wanting nothing to compleat their Miseries. The Soldiers exercise unheard of Cruelties, they shed indifferently the Blood of Infants, Old Men, and Women; overthrowing Altars, and ruining Temples. The most courageous Peasants gather together to repel Force with Force, and revenge themselves most cruelly on as many of the Castilians as they can light of, without sparing the King's Ministers; killing all they meet, seeking those who are hid, to punish them with the greatest rigour, running after those who seek their Safety by flight, not pardoning the very Priests, if never so little suspected.

The Count of St. Colomme, commanded not long since in Catalonia, with the Title of Vice-Roy; which poor Man is now before God, where he receives the Recompences or Chastisements he has deserved, being the first Victim sacrificed to the Peasants Fury. His Blood was the Prologue of a dismal Tragedy, which will not end without more dismal Events to the Spanish Monarchy, and the Catalonians themselves.

The Vice-Roy withdrew himself into the Arsenal of Barcellona at the first Insurrection of the Peasants, where he was besieged by a great Multitude of these Seditious People; and seeing he could not remain there in Safety, he went out to go on board the Gallies; but the Groſsneſs of his Body hindring him from haſtning as faſt as thoſe who accompanied him in his Flight, he remained alone; and being tired fell into a Swoon, and lay dead for ſome time on the Sand between the Rocks which lie upon the Sea. His Servant, the only one that remained with him, brought him again to himſelf by caſting the Sea-Water on his Face; but he opened his eyes only to ſee his own departure more nearly. He was ſet upon in this Condition, wherein he could not ſtir himſelf, by a crew of Blood hounds, who firſt ſhot at him, and then hack'd him in pieces, having firſt ſtabb'd him in a Thouſand places. His Servant defended him as well as he could, in covering him with his Body, but his Zeal was fruitleſs; and all the Wounds he received, ſaved not one from his Maſter. He was an African, and had been his Slave. The Courage and Fidelity of a Man of ſo mean a Birth, deſerves, at leaſt, that it ſhould be ſaid of him, That he died in imitating the Vertues of thoſe Ancient Romans, which are this day praiſed and admired by all the World.

The Vice-Roy's Death ſtopt not the Peaſants; they proceeded to exceſſes ſcarcely imaginable; and their Barbarity made them commit ſuch horrible, together with ſuch ridiculous Actions, as can hardly be expreſs'd.

Theſe Wretches went to the Palace of the Marquis de Ville Franche, General of the Gallies; where having cut the Throats of as many as they met with, they burnt and battered all the Houſhold-Stuff, and carried in Proceſſion on the top of a Pike, a little Braſs-Figure, which they thought a black Angel; which Figure was only that of a Man, wherein a Clock was included, whoſe ingenious Springs made him move his Eyes; which Sight ſo ſurprized theſe Peaſants, who had never seen or heard of such a Machine, that they remained in such a Stupidity, as retarded for some time the Effects of their Fury. But there was one more bold than the rest, who approaching to the Piece, cried out, 'Twas the Familiar Spirit of the Marquiss de Ville Franche, and ought to be seized on, and thrown into Prison, to take away its Power. Which he had no sooner said, but laid Hands on it, and tied and bound it fast on the top of a Spear, and with great Shouts, walked it about the Town. The ignorant People, capable of any ridiculous Impressions, as well as the Women, who are not hard to be deluded, followed them, convinced that the Marquiss's Devil was carried triumphantly along the Streets. Having run through all the Town of Barcellona, this Rabble gave the Clock into the Hands of the Bishop and Inquisitors to exorcise it, and drive out the Devil, whom they thought capable of destroying their whole Province.

Affairs are carried on more seriously in Portugal, and at a more moderate rate; the Inhabitants of Lisbon, as well as the Nobility, have treated the Castilians with more Humanity: They immediately elected a King, who reigns peaceably, as Heir of the Crown, and thereby ascertain'd of being maintained by the Affection and Fidelity of the People. There is already News of his Coronation; the Ceremony of which was performed with great Pomp and Magnificence. The People, as a Mark of their Affection, have presented a Million of Gold to their new Lord; the Clergy Sixty Thousand Crowns, and the Nobility Four Hundred; and the new King has taken on him the Name of John IV. King of Portugal, instead of that of Don John, Duke de Braganza.

Never any Plot better succeeded: The Portugueses have driven out from them a puissant and politick

politick Nation without Blood-ſhed, ſaving that of a Villain; but of that thou ſhalt hear more the next opportunity; for I ſhall carefully inform my ſelf of the Particulars of ſo extraordinary an Event, to give an exact Account to the Vizir. 'Tis ſaid, King Philip is the moſt unfortunate Prince that ever aſcended the Throne, committing his Affairs to the Management of another; ſo that it may be ſaid, the Duke who reigns as Sovereign in Madrid, has choſen Philip IV. for his Favourite. The Miniſter Commands, and the King Obeys; the Maſter's Weakneſs authorizes the Servant's Power; the Confuſion of that Nation being ſo great, that thoſe made by Heaven to receive Orders, are the only Perſons who give them.

I kiſs the Hem of thy Garment, with all the Submiſſion poſſible to a poor and humble Slave.

of the Year 1642.

LETTER XXIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

TO what purpoſe do'ſt thou bewail the Ruines which the Fire has cauſed in Conſtantinople, if there be no Remedy for the Loſſes thou haſt ſuffered? Not all the Vizirs together, nor the Prince himſelf, whoſe Authority knows no bounds, could reſiſt the Fury of this Element. What then can we do, Wretches as we are, liable to all Injuries and Diſgraces? Art thou the firſt honeſt Man that has been ruined? 'Tis true, Heaven had enriched thee; thy Chambers were hung with the fineſt Perſian Tapeſtry; thou haſt a great number of Slaves, fine Gardens, and Bathing-places, beſet with delicate Fountains; muſt thou deſpair for the Loſs of the greateſt part of theſe? Comfort thy ſelf, ſeeing thou art not in a Fault, nor haſt contributed to thine own Misfortune.

Thou telleſt me, that the burning of the Chief City of the Univerſe, has deprived thee in one day of all the Commodities and Conveniencies thou haſt laboured for many Years: And, I anſwer thee, That he which gave thee theſe Goods, expects Thanks from thee, in that having enriched thee with what thou had'ſt not, he did not take from thee thy Life at the ſame time.

Haſt thou ſo ſoon forgotten Seneca's Demetrius? Haſt thou loſt any thing, which thou did'ſt not receive from the Liberality of Fortune? And, if whatever thou had'ſt was given thee, wherefore do'ſt thou afflict thy ſelf, as if thou could'ſt not obtain again as much? Stretch out thy Hand towards Heaven; pray and beſeech: He that has given thee once, is not impoveriſhed by the Liberalities he has ſhewed; but, rather ask of him Spiritual, than theſe Temporal Gifts, which do all wither and die.

If thou liveſt, thou wilt ſee thy ſelf in the ſame Condition again; I cannot give thee a better Conſolation, I will not lament with thee, it ſeeming to me a fruitleſs thing. If thou beeſt deſirous to forget the Loſſes thou haſt ſuffered, conſider the great Damages the ſame Fire has cauſed to ſo many Believers, in the ſame City where thou bewaileſt thy Misfortunes. How many People that had leſs than thee, have loſt more? And, how many better People than thy ſelf, as more ſubmitting to the Will of Heaven, have ſuffered Miſeries infinitely greater than thine?

So

So great a Conflagration, wherein the Chief City of the World ſaw it ſelf near reduced to Aſhes, muſt needs have been a very diſmal Spectacle. When I read the Relation which thou haſt made me, I tremble with Horror to ſee ſo many magnificent Houſes, and ſtately Moſques, devoured by the Flames, and reduced to nothing; with ſuch Riches, Goods, Houſhold-ſtuff, and ineſtimable Merchandizes, publick Regiſters, and choice Manuſcripts, whoſe Loſs can never be repaired, being become the Prey of this Element which devours all things. But thou and I are not the firſt, neither ſhall be the laſt, who bewail the Ruins of our Country. How many Towns in Aſia, how many in Greece, have been ſwallowed up in an inſtant by dreadful Earthquakes? And how many Ruines are to be found in the famous Cities of Syria and Macedonia? And, how many times have the Iſles of Cyprus and Paphos been entirely depopulated? We ſee not only the moſt ſolid Edifices periſh, which are the Works of Men, but even Mountains annihilated. There are whole Countries which have (as it were) vaniſhed; the Sea has covered ſuch ſpaces of Land as might have made whole Provinces, and which were extreme Populous. How many Promontories do we ſee, which were heretofore certain Guides to Pilots, but are now buried in the Sands, and cauſe often times Ship-Wrecks? And, if the Works of Nature be expoſed to ſuch great Ruines, what may not Mortal Men expect to ſuffer? But I ſpend time in relating ordinary Accidents, when I might remember thee of greater Ruines, which the Fire made in the ſame Imperial City, after it had been built by the Great Conſtantine, to whom ſhe owed all her Splendor, before the Mighty and Succeſsful Emperors of the Muſſulmans had therein eſtabliſhed the Seat of their Empire.

Under

Under the Reign of the Emperor Leo, if I be not miſtaken, the whole Continent lying along the Boſphorus, between both the Seas, was entirely ruined by Fire. And Twelve Years after, under the Reign of Baſil, the famous Library, ſo carefully collected, and with that extream Charge and Trouble, and which conſiſted of above Two hundred thouſand Manuſcripts: with the Skin of a Serpent 220 Foot long, whereon were written the entire Works of Homer, was conſumed. The Fire which happened in the time of Juſtinian, might make one forget others; the famous Temple of St. Sophia, which is, at this day, our chief Moſue, could not be preſerved from the fury of the Flames, being almoſt wholly conſumed by it. I ſhall not mention the Ruines which have happened by Earthquakes, under the Reign of the Emperor Zeno Izoria. There was a far greater under Bajazet II. for, in Pruzia, an entire City, with its Houſes, Walls, and Three thouſand Inhabitants, were buried in the Entrails of the Earth: Which muſt convince us, there have been in all Ages ſuch Events, as may inſtruct us to bear our Misfortunes with Patience, and to believe a Providence, and ſubmit our ſelves wholly to it.

Let us (my dear Friend) for once rejoyce, in an Occaſion wherein all others mourn; in that we are able to perſuade our ſelves, There's nothing here below deſerves our Care. I do not ſay, we ſhould laugh like Nero, when he ſaw Rome burning, which he himſelf had fired, and ſang the Paſſages of Homer, wherein the Conflagration of Troy is diſcribed: Rather do as Æneas, who having ſaved from the Flames, which devoured his Country and Eſtate, his Tutelar Gods, his Father Anchiſes, his Family and himſelf, became an Hero that ſerved for an Example to Poſterity. He did not ſpend his time in bewailing the Goods he had loſt, but always kept an undaunted Courage in the midſt of the the Tempeſt which threatned to overwhelm him, as ſoon as he was on the Sea, and which forced him to wander from Port to Port, void of all Help, perſecuted by a Goddeſs, and other Gods who were of her Party; and having gallantly endured ſo many Diſgraces, he became the Founder of the braveſt and famouſeſt Nation of the Univerſe. Æneas, in ſaving his Gods and his Father, who were the Companions of his Fortune, drew down the Graces of Heaven, which put an end to his Miſeries, in ſetling him in a Country, where he laid the firſt Foundations of an Empire; which ſince has given Laws to all the World.

Our ſins have kindled the Fire at Conſtantinople; the Debaucheries, Impieties, Hypocriſies, and continual Rapines which remain unpuniſhed, are the Cauſes of the Deſtruction of the famous City of the Univerſe.

Can we imagine, when God ſends his Judgments down upon us, that we can be able to reſiſt them? Amend thy Life, if thou deſireſt to be revenged of Fortune, and be Proof againſt all her Darts. Encreaſe in Vertue, if thou wouldeſt be invulnerable; be as good in Proſperity as in Adverſity. Nothing but good Works can make thee happy in this World, and live when this World ſhall be no more.

If Reaſon cannot ſtop our Tears, Fortune I am ſure will never do it. We ſeem herein very unreaſonable; for when we firſt ſee the Light, we weep; and when we leave it, we groan.

Live ever with me more nearly than an intimate Friend, and imitate (if a Man may ſo expreſs himſelf) the Fire, which (according to what appears to us) conſumes all things, and converts them into its own proper Subſtance; but which yet, according to the Rules preſcribed by its Creator, burns not the Air, nor the other Elements; but keeps them them united, warms and conſerves them. God has endued them with an Inſtinct which ought to do the ſame thing; he has faſtned them one to another, with ſuch Bonds as nothing can break, I mean, the Intereſt and mutual Needs which they have of one another. There being no body that can be happy, and become rich of himſelf; there muſt be Dependencies and Commerce, without which 'tis impoſſible to have what is moſt neceſſary. There is alſo a more refined Commerce, to wit, the Marks of Eſteem which Men give one another; Succors in caſes of Need, whether of Money or good Counſel; the latter of which, is all that can be expected from thy faithful Mahmut.

LETTER XXIV.

To the Baſſa of the Sea.

THE Veſſels of Africk have again been worſted by the Infidels, the Particulars of which muſt needs be known to thee, before they could come here; where there is much Diſcourſe of the Accident at Goulette, and the Battel of Caraoge, to the great Diſadvantage and Prejudice of the Mahometan Name. Theſe Heathenish People make Publick Rejoycings for the Victories obtained by another Nation. 'Tis ſaid, that of Five Gallies, and Three other great Veſſels, only One Ship ſaved it ſelf by Flight; ſeveral being ſunk to the Bottom, together with the Admiral of Caraoge, the reſt having been brought into Malta; and that there were Six Hundred Muſſulmen kill'd; in whoſe Death

Death, our only Conſolation is, that they died Martyrs, and their Blood will cry for Vengeance againſt the Infidels that have ſhed it.

'Tis hard to find the Iſle of Malta in the Chart, and yet harder in the Sea; it being a meer Atom of inviſible Earth: But 'tis not ſo with the Knights, who are the Maſters of it, they being a Hundred, often ſeen and felt by us.

Malta is a Seminary wherein are brought up the braveſt Sparks in Chriſtendom, picked out from amongſt the moſt Illuſtrious Families. Theſe Perſons know not what Fear is; they have impoſed on themſelves the neceſſity of Vanquiſhing, or Dying; and therefore they get the Maſtery of whatever they attempt; and with thoſe few Veſſels they have, they make the Ottoman Fleets tremble. They wear a Golden Croſs on their Stomachs, which is always dip'd in the Blood of the faithful Muſſulmen. Eclipſe this Impious Order, by oppoſing the Sacred Silver of the Ottoman Moon againſt the Force of ſo ſmall a Number of Knights. My Zeal obliges me to ſay ſuch things as may be troubleſome to thee; and which, perhaps, thou knoweſt as well as I; which is, That I am perſuaded thou wilt be the Conqueror of theſe Pirates, provided thou once reſolveſt to draw out in good earneſt thy Cymiter, and caſt its Sheath away.

The King here is very well; he ſaid publickly, when he heard the Victory of the Malteſes, That if he were not a King, he ſhould chuſe to be one of the Knights of that Place. Thou wilt gain greater Honour, and more Trophies will be raiſed to thee, than was to Ariademus and Cigala, if thou undertakeſt effectually the Deſtruction of this People. Thou haſt my Prayers, That our Holy Prophet would ſtrengthen thy Arm; and, That God would give thee ſtill Favour in the Sight of our most puissant Emperor, chosen to be the chief Commander of the World.

LETTER XXV.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem.

AN Illustrious Woman of the House of Savoy, governed not long since in Portugal, in the Name of Philip IV. King of Spain. Her Name is Margarita, and commonly resides at Lisbon; but this Princess, with the Title of Vice-Queen, had not the Credit or Authority necessary to sustain the Dignity; though she had otherwise all the Prudence, and Courage requisite thereunto.

Michael Vasconcelli, her chief Secretary, having usurped all the Authority, carried all things with a high hand; to which he added a most griping Covetousness, which was no less disadvantagious to his Mistress's Reputation. And, the Marquis de la Puebla, a Castilian Minister, an Accomplice of Vasconcelli, had established himself in this Court, as a rigid Censurer of all the Vice-Queen's Actions.

The Christians call these two Men two Pedants, set over the Princess, as if she had been still in her Minority, to correct and regulate her Actions.

The too great Authority of these two Ministers, became at length a kind of Tyranny. The Nobility complained for the loss of their Privileges, and the People at their being oppress'd with Taxes; which made the Ministry of Vasconcelli seem insupportable, portable, in which 'twas ſeen the Vice-Queen had no part. This Princeſs not having the Power to ſtop the Courſe of the Miſchiefs, which began to ſpring up, gave Advice of it to the Court of Spain, and expected thence the remedy: But, whether the King was not in a Condition to give any, or his Miniſters concealed from him the ſtate of things; the Miſchiefs encreaſed, and Vaſconcelli's Friends, by excuſing him, made it almoſt impoſſible to avoid them.

When Margarita repreſented the Danger wherein Portugal lay, ſhe was heard as a weak and credulous Woman, and was often accuſed of being over-timorous; which cauſed a general Revolt in this Kingdom, which was few Days in contriving, and as few Hours in executing.

If thou wilt hear thy humble Slave, I'll relate to thee all the Circumſtances of ſo great an Event; which will ſeem a Fable, ſhould we refer our ſelves to only Reaſon; but which however is a real Hiſtory, as is now well known throughout all Europe.

Never was there a greater Hatred between Two Nations, than that which was between the Spaniards, and the Portugueſes: And, though they had one and the ſame Religion, and almoſt the ſame Humour, yet 'tis not to be imagined, how far their mutual Averſions carried them.

The Portugueſes have a Common Proverb, which ſays, That a Man is obliged to treat and love another Man as his Brother, whether he be a Turk, a Jew, a Pagan, or a Moor, without excepting the moſt Barbarous of Mankind; yea, though he were a Spaniard.

They have lived with great Patience, under the Domination of Philip II. and his Succeſſors, (ſince the Death of their King D. Sebaſtian, who was kill'd in Africa in a Battel againſt the Moors,) whilſt they they were ſuffered to enjoy the Priviledges which were granted them. Moreover they ſtill expected the Return of their Sovereign; who was ſaid not to have dyed in the Field, but having long wandred about in ſtrange Countries, was in fine about to return. But the Example of the Catalonians, made them at length reſolve upon what they now executed. The Nobility were the firſt that began the Revolt, and paſt over thoſe Bounds, which Reſpect does ordinarily place between the Sovereign and his Subjects. They alledged ſeveral Pretences for their Rebellion; but the moſt ſpecious was their unwillingneſs to be ſacrificed in unjuſt Wars: wherein the moſt dangerous Poſts were committed to them, as they ſeveral times reproached the Duke, Favourite and Miniſter of King Philip IV.

They immediately carried on their Intelligences with great Secrecy; and when they came to declare themſelves, the greateſt Perſons conſented to the Conſpiracy, and the boldeſt amongſt them have executed it with great Valour.

Dom Juan, Duke of Braganza, is the greateſt Nobleman in this Kingdom, and perhaps in all Spain, and already of the Age wherein Men are wont to have Wiſdom, together with Strength of Body. He wants not for Ingenuity and Sweetneſs of Temper. He received the Crown, after long Preſſings and Refuſals; and indeed is the more worthy of it, as being the lawful Heir to it.

The Favourite Duke was well enough informed of the Reputation and Authority of the Duke of Braganza; and conſidering him as a Prince who might lawfully pretend to the Crown, he made uſe of ſeveral Artifices to drive him out of Portugal, or ſeize him Priſoner. But having always tryed this in vain, whether by reaſon of the extraordinary Watchfulneſs of Dom Juan, or that the Heavens, on which depend the Things here below, and otherwise ordered it, 'twas impossible for this Minister to get so good a Prey into his Hands.

This crafty Minister has tryed all Ways, and sometimes made use of the Fox's Skin, and otherwhiles of the Lyon's Voice, to bring about his Ends. Sometimes he tryed to draw him to Court, offering him the most honourable Employs there, perswading him to accompany the Catholick King in his Voyage into Catalonia. But, the Duke knew how to defend himself against the Snare, and timely withdrew to Villa Viciosa, the ordinary place of his Abode: and whence he excused himself from going to Madrid sometimes; for that he had not sufficient to bear his Charges according to his Quality in such a Journey; and otherwhiles, on other Pretences, with which the Favourite Duke was obliged to seem contented. Though he was not, yet he feigned himself to be satisfied, to put in practice the most exquisite piece of Policy he ever made use of.

He sent him Forty Thousand Pistols, to buy Necessaries, and at the same time sent him also the General Command of the Troops in Portugal; with Order to come to Lisbon, and as High Constable of the Kingdom, to observe the Motions of the United Provinces, which threatned Spain and Portugal with a powerful Fleet. But he had sent the following Order, to D. Lopes d' Ossio: Thou hast the Command of the Naval Army, get immediately before Lisbon. Dom Juan de Braganza has Orders to visit the Vessels; as soon as he shall enter the first Gally, clap him in Irons, and immediately depart with the Prisoner to Cadiz, where I have appointed People to convey him to Madrid.

Don Lopes could not execute his Commission; his Army was lost in the English Seas, and 'twas written in Heaven, That Don Juan should live, and be a King. This Artifice having fail'd, the Duke had recourse to another; which was to send an Order to the Duke of Braganza, to visit all the Forts on the Frontiers, where there were strict Injunctions to detain him. But he perceiving the Project of this Spanish Minister, knew so well to excuse himself from undertaking this Business, that he made the design of his Enemy to vanish this time also, and got leave to retire to Villa Viciosa. Those who penetrated not the Artifices of the Court of Spain, were astonish'd at the Accumulation of so many Favours and Honours on the Person of the Duke; affirming, the Court had Intentions of raising him to the Throne, or bringing him to the Scaffold; in which last they were not mistaken.

Order

Olivarez, who let slip no Occasion of laying Snares for Braganza, grew the more obstinate by the Difficulties he met with. He sent him a new Order to raise Troops, and to lead them himself into Catalonia, for the Chastisement of the Rebels; this being of absolute Necessity, said he in his Letters, for the upholding of the Spanish Monarchy, to which the Revolt of this Province caused great Mischiefs.

The Duke obeyed in part; he raised a considerable number of Troops at his own Charge; but he took care of his own Person. He wrote to the Court, to excuse him from that Voyage, and added to his Excuses most earnest Prayers; representing, That being sick of the World, he had retired to his own Estate, to lead there a quiet Life, free from the Vexations of Business; which obliged him to entreat his Catholick Majesty, to grant him that Rest, which was the only thing he desired. The Duke de Briganza's Letter drew no Answer from the Spanish Minister; but his Designs were discovered; and the Nobility foreseeing how likely they were to be brought under a more strict Subjection, began to murmur, saying, 'Twas their Duty to rid themselves of those Oppressors, who had had so long peeled them, and set up a new Form of Government. The Poor, who suffered most by the Taxes, were the boldest, and encourage the rest. Some were for setting up an Elective King; Others proposed the raising to this Honour, the Family of Braganza, who alone seem'd worthy of it. Some there were who were for putting themselves under the Domination of France; and other Persons of credit among the People, were for a Democratical Government; and others again, were for turning the Kingdom into a Republick.

The Nobility were in great Perplexity in the Choice they should make, for 'twas not known whether the Duke of Braganza would receive the Crown, in case 'twas offered him again; for the most qualified Persons of the Kingdom had proposed it to him.

There was none but D. Gaston Cattique, a Gentleman as eloquent as stout, whom Heaven design'd for the perswading of this Prince, that could accomplish it. He pretended to fight a Duel with a Nephew he had; whom having slightly wounded, he left Lisbon, as a Man that had brought himself into Danger; and wandring about from thence, uncertain, as it were, of the place of Retreat he would chuse, he went at length to Villa Viciosa; where having found Braganza in his Solitude, he thus spake to him:

I bring this day a Crown, which the Nobility of Portugal presents thee; and if thou hast the Courage to receive it, we are ready to put it on thine Head. This Kingdom belongs to thee, as the undoubted Heir of our Natural and Lawful Princes. If thou accepest of the Crown, the Kingdom justly belongs to thee; and if thou darest not receive it, we will chuse another Sovereign of greater Resolution, and who is willing to command us. The Scepter shakes in King Philip's Hand, by reason of the Wars made against him from all Parts. Consider, if thou receivest not at present

what Fortune presents thee, thou wilt be obliged against thy Will to obey another: Neither the Nobility, the Clergy, nor the People, will any longer suffer the Arrogance of the Castilians. It belongs to thee, at present, to declare, whether thou wilt reign, and be a happy Prince. All the faithful Portugueses breath after thee, and desire thee for their Sovereign. Resolve to accept of what is so advantageous, and let us alone for the executing of our parts.

Don Juan answered coldly to such a bold Proposition; more affrighted at the Peril there was in such an Enterprize, than flattered with the Hopes of possessing a Kingdom.

But in another Conference, wherein the Duke was told, the Conspirators were resolved to raise on the Throne another King, if he came not to a speedy Resolution; the Dutchess his Wife, who has a Man's Heart, and is more courageous than her Husband, coming into the Conversation, thus spoke to him with great Assurance:

My Lord, the Catholick King has sent for thee again to Court; at Madrid thou wilt certainly meet with thy Death, and in receiving the Crown which is offered thee, thou art still in danger of it: but if thou must perish, which way soever thou turnest thy self, is it not more honourable to die a King in thine own Country, than to die with Chains in a Prison by the hands of thine Enemy.

So couragious a Discourse brought Don Juan to a Resolution; wherefore he sent word to the Nobility, of his readiness to comply with them.

The Conspirators were ready at the hour appointed for the Execution of their Design. Being well armed, and each of them accompanied with a good number of young Men, who were to follow them, although they knew not the Design. As soon as ever the Signal was given, they all set forth from the Places where they were assembled; and those that were fartheſt diſtant, joyned the neareſt, and altogether ſoon poſſeſſed themſelves of the Palace of the Vice-Queen; they immediately made themſelves Maſters of the Guard, finding no reſiſtance from them, and this without ſpilling a Drop of Blood, or doing any Violence. They afterwards cried out altogether, Long live the New King, D. Juan de Braganza, and let them die that govern ill. They ſeized on the Vice-Queen, and entreated her to retire into an Apartment, where ſhe ſhould be treated with the Reſpect due to a Princeſs, but not obeyed as having Authority to command them.

Vaſconcelli, who knew himſelf faulty, and to whom his Conſcience reproached his Crimes, in this moment hid himſelf in a great Preſs, under an heap of Papers; where, having been diſcovered by an old Woman, he had immediately his Throat cut, and his Body thrown out at a Window; where he ſerved for ſome time a May-game to the People, who left not one part of his Body free from ſome Mark of their Indignation.

One of this Miniſter's Domeſticks threw himſelf out at the ſame Window his Maſter was thrown; not in a deſign of following his Fate, but of ſaving himſelf; and he died without its being known whether 'twas by his Fall, or the Muſquet-ſhot which he received.

The Confederates with as little trouble ſeized on the Galleys and other Veſſels in the Ports, whence they drove the Spaniards; they afterwards commanded the Vice-Queen to retire. This Princeſs thought ſhe ought in this Occaſion to inſiſt on the greatneſs of her Birth; ſhe threatned the Conſpirators, and afterwards flattered them, aſſuring them of the Clemency of King Philip: She ſet before them the greatneſs of his Power, and forgat not to ſpeak of the Authority of his Favourite, who muſt needs be much much offended in this Occasion; exaggerating the Offence committed against her, both as a Princess, and Depository of the Catholick King's Power. But as well her Promises as her Threats were in vain; and she her self was at length glad to accept Conditions from them, who a while before, by Connivance from the Prince, might have executed an absolute Power.

In Eight Days time, all the Castilians were subdued, or driven out of the Kingdom. All the Forts were rendred, without any trouble to the new King, except the Castle of St. John; which having made some slight Resistance, was sold for Forty Thousand Crowns by the Governour.

The Duke of Braganza appeared immediately afterwards in the City of Lisbon, where the People, soon shewed the Affection they had for him; the Prison Doors were set open, and all poor Debtors freed, and a great part of the Taxes taken off. Such an astonishing Success, was attended with whatever might set forth the Joy of the People, who solemnized the Festival with the Sound of Trumpets, and the Noise of the Cannon, and by Shouts and Acclamations, which reached up to Heaven, whom the Portugueses thanked for the Liberty which they believed they had recovered. This event was accompanied with so many miraculous things, that the Wisest as well as the Vulgar, were perswaded, 'twas mark'd in Heaven from all Eternity by the Finger of God. The Clergy, the Nobility, the Citizens and Peasants, were profuse in their Liberalities on this Occasion, to give their new Soveraign ample Marks of their Affection, and even the Poor hid their Misery, that they might not lessen the Publick Joy.

The Spanish Vessels which returned from the New World, which then entered into the Ports of Portugal, remained at the Disposal of the new King, the Pilots not knowing what had hapned: So that the Coffers of the Prince were filled thereby (as 'tis said) with some Millions.

This King was exalted to the Throne in the last Moon of the last Year; and wise People do hope he will reign very happily, all the Planets being too well disposed, not to make him finish his Reign with the same Fortune as he began it.

The vigilant Portugueses have ordered out several Vessels, fill'd with good Soldiers, and necessary Provisions, to seize of Places and Forts, which this Nation possesses in the New World, and in the East Indies; and 'tis to be supposed, they will meet with good Success, if Fortune prove as favourable to them in America and the Indies, as she was to them in Europe.

As soon as the Duke of Braganza was proclaimed King, he sent Manifesto's into all Parts, and dispatched Couriers and Ambassadors, to give Advice of his Promotion, in the Courts of France, England, Holland, Swedeland, and Denmark. 'Tis not to be imagined the Joy which this Adventure gave to the Catalonians. The King imparting to them what had happened, offered them also his Assistance; and these People answered him with the same Offer. And this is the end of Sixty Three Years of the Despotick Authority, which the Spaniards have exercised on the Portugueses.

The News of so strange a Revolution having been carried unto Madrid, hear, and consider well the unhappy Condition of the Catholick King, to whom his Favourite declared this News.

Sir (said he) I come to rejoyce with your Majesty at the good News I bring. Your Majesty is now become Master of a considerable Dutchy. Dom Juan de Braganza, has had the boldness to make himself be proclaimed King of Portugal; has thereby fain into the Crime of Læsæ Majestatis; All his Estate belongs to you, and is devolv'd to the Crown, and his Person will soon be in your Power.

Crime

Dom Juan was Son to Theodosius Duke of Braganza; Grandchild to Donna Catharina, who was the Daughter of Dom Duarte, Brother to Henry King of Portugal; and Philip II. King of Spain took away the Crown from this Katharine, to whom it is said it did rightly belong.

The Titles he assumes, are, King of Portugal, of Algraves, Africk on both sides of the Sea, Lord of Guinea, of the Navigation and Commerce of Æthiopia, Arabia, Persia, and the Indies.

This new King is not above 37 Years Old; of a middle Stature, but well proportioned; his Face marked with the Small Pox, his Hair inclining to Yellow, an Aquiline Nose, high Forehead, lively Eyes, his Mouth indifferent great, and a Masculine Voice. His Carriage is grave, affects great Modesty in his Cloaths, is temperate in his Dyet, affable to all sorts of People, unless Slaves, and such as he believes are Hypocrites; and his common Word is, That mean Cloaths will keep out the Cold, and ordinary Meats satisfie Hunger.

This Prince is not much versed in Books, is of an healthful Constitution, loves laborious Exercises, especially hunting, wherein he is never tired. He's also musically given, and so light of Heel, that there are few People can out-walk him. He is wont to go to Bed late, and rise early, as knowing that Sleep does take off much from Man's Life; and to compleat his Happiness, he has Children of both Sexes. His Wife is a Spanish Lady, of extraordinary Merit, to whose marvellous Courage and good Qualities he owes his Crown.

The Kingdom of Portugal contains 120 Leagues in length, 40 in breadth, and has several Millions of Subjects, comprehending those in the Two Indies. It has Three Archbiſhopricks, and Eight Biſhopricks, keeping ordinarily Forty Veſſels, which find Ports in Eight places of the Country. They can maintain Thirty Thouſand Foot, and ſeveral Regiments of Horſe. The Revenue of this Kingdom may amount to Twenty Millions of Gold, reckoning in the Riches which come from the Indies, Braſil, Angola, and ſeveral other Iſlands.

The French Monarch will hold a good Intelligence with the Houſe of Braganza. England will enter into an Alliance with her; the Pope will concern himſelf on neither ſide; the Emperor, united by Blood and Intereſt to the Spaniards, will be an irreconcilable Enemy, but unable to do them any Hurt; and the States of Holland will find greater Advantage than all others in this ſtrange Revolution. Theſe are the Sentiments of thoſe that pretend to penetrate into the Future, and to know more than others. And if it be true, that this new Sovereign has had, as all Men in his Place would have had, a ſecret deſire of being King; he has ſo well concealed his Ambition, that 'tis to be ſuppoſed he will prove a moſt Judicious Prince, that will uphold his Authority more by his Wiſdom and Prudence, than by Force. The Juſt God cut ſhort the Courſe of his ill Deſigns, ſhould he have the courage and deſire of revenging one Day the death of his Predeceſſor, Dom Sebaſtian, on the Faithful Muſſulmen of Africk.

Thou wilt find, invincible Vizir, the faithful and reſpectful Mahmut always ready to execute the Orders which thou ſhalt ſend him for the Emperor's Service; and ready to obey the leaſt Signs of thy Victorious Hand, to Death, whether Natural or Violent.

LETTER XXVI.

To Enguril Emir Mehemet Cheik, a Man of the Law.

TEll me this once, whether thou beeſt alive, and at Liberty; and whether thou doſt really love me, or only pretend it. My Friends return no Anſwers to my Letters, which makes me ſtrangely ignorant of all things; I know only by Conjecture, that which is never ſo little doubtful; and that which is certain, cannot be known here truly as it falls out, as being related according to Peoples Paſſions and Intereſts. There's no body dares write to me freely what he thinks; and there are few that will inform me of what is come to their knowledge, leſt their Letters ſhould be intercepted.

I know very well we have a new Maſter, but I know not whether he be thought a more able Prince than Amurath, and has the ſame Courage and Fancy for War. The Chiaus that lately arrived in this Court of France, is very reſerved to me, and makes a Myſtery of every thing.

Amurath is dead: thoſe who ſay he was Cruel, yet declare him to be the moſt Dextrous, Valiant, and Compleateſt Man in his Empire. The Chriſtians are Fools, who will not hence gather, That our Monarchs moſt certain Maxim, to reign with Authority and perfect Security, is, To make themſelves be feared, and not to be ſhie of ſpilling the Blood of thoſe who ſerve them ill; who are ſuſpected by them, or may prove troubleſome to them. Thoſe Troops of Mutes, which abide always in the Seraglio, ready to obey the leaſt Sign of thoſe who give them Orders; maintain, encreaſe, and render Farmidable the Ottoman Power: For, the Empire would never be at Peace, but in continual Trouble, ſhould all the Sons and Nephews of our Sultans be ſuffered to live: and we ſhould have a whole Nation of Princes, who would be always a biting, and tearing, and ruining one another by Civil Wars, as is often ſeen to happen among the Chriſtians. Whence this certain Maxim is practiſed, That it is better it ſhould coſt innocent Perſons their Lives, than not to deſtroy thoſe who may be Faulty.

Indeed, I muſt confeſs I knew not, that Amurath himſelf kill'd, with his own Hands, his own Siſter. Thou that knoweſt the ſecret of this Tragedy, can'ſt tell whether he was tranſported to that Exceſs, becauſe ſhe anſwered with great Haughtineſs to the Sultaneſs her Mother, who reprehended her on ſome Secret Love ſhe entertained: If this be the caſe, ſhe died not innocent, and I have a great Curioſity to know the Particulars of it.

But do not relate to me the unhappy End of his Two Brothers, Bajazet and Orcan, leſt thou make an Old Wound bleed afreſh. Poor Princes, what Crime have they committed, if their Brother reigns? Cruel King! how great was thy Inhumanity, ſeeing they obeyed without murmuring?

But Amurath was a dreadful Lover, who tamed his Paſſions with a Poignard; he ſtabb'd the moſt beautiful of his Sultaneſſes; and for what Reaſon? The Chriſtians pardon him the Blood of his Brethren, which he ſpilt of his Siſter, and of the brave Fracardin, ſeveral Vizirs of his Friends, and ſo many brave Commanders, and illuſtrious Perſons; but they will not pardon him the Death of a Miſtreſs: for, they cannot conceive how a Prince, a Muſſulman, can play the Hangman, in ſuch a delicious place, where he has nothing to do, but to think of giving his Love agreeable Marks of his Paſſion. But you will tell me, perhaps, ſhe was ſo bold as to wear in his Sight, Flowers and Perfumes which came from his Brother: It is certainly a great Crime, not to obey thoſe who have all Power to command us; but 'tis a greater Crime to lay on Commands, to have an occaſion for Cruelty. They ſay, a man which does ſuch an Action, is a Monſter, but I do not ſay ſo.

Inform me what the new Sultan Ibrahim does, of his Humour and Inclination. It appears he is ſtill infirm, and ſtupified with his long Impriſonment. What Alterations has his Entrance into the Empire produced? Will he be Sanguinary as his Brother was, or gracious and merciful?

Speak to me once, my dear Friend, with all Freedom, void of Diſguiſe; Is he amorouſly enclin'd? I much value ſuch Princes, for they are generally mild; and this Paſſion ſoftens them, how cruel ſoever they may be; makes them liberal, and Strangers to Covetouſneſs, that cruel Monſter, which clouds and ſullies the brighteſt Vertues. How many Perſons are employed to chooſe fine Women for the Seraglio, to contribute to Ibrahim's Pleaſure? Happy will the handſomeſt Woman of Aſia be. But the Eyes of this Monarch will be made like other mens, which are not always allured with the greateſt Beauties. Hence it is, That we have ſeen in our Emperor's Seraglio, Ladies which ſurpaſſed in Charms all others, and yet died Virgins, and neglected by them to whoſe Pleaſures they were conſecrated.

The Chiaus has only inform'd me, that Ibrahim appears often on Horſeback in the City, and ſeems a juſt and merciful Prince, and deſigns to make the Shepherd Haſſein, Prime Vizir; he that was ſo long the Companion of his Priſon. 'Tis ſaid, he often made it his Employment to divert Ibrahim in his Confinement, by playing on his Pipe, and making him Diſcourſes without Art and extream innocent, of what he did when he kept Sheep. He told me alſo, that he often went for his Diverſion on the Black Sea, to take the Air, and enjoy that Liberty of which he was ſo long deprived; That he's alſo much delighted with the reading of Greek Books, eſpecially Xenophon and Plutarch; That he's very devout, though not ſuperſtitious, according to the Humour of the Devotees of our Law, who will have our Soveraigns be implacable Enemies to the Chriſtians. If this be neceſſary to Salvation, to perſecute a Religion contrary to Ours, what will become of all thoſe who are dead and never did it? I am of Opinion, That true Holineſs conſiſts in doing Good, and living in Charity with all Men.

The Infidels, with whom I live at preſent, for the Emperor's Service, whoſe Subject I am, do glory in their ſtrict Obſervance of this Precept which is in their Religion, and they are happy if they keep it. But tell me, Doſt thou think our Emperor is like to have Children, as is already reported, and that he cannot live long? They are not only the idle People that talk at this rate, but thoſe whoſe Intereſt obliges them to know, who is to be the Succeſſor; and many of the ſolideſt think, it will be the King of the Tartars, and that thoſe of the Race of Mula Honkiar will be excluded.

This Race is really Illuſtrious, but every body knows not the Riſe of it. The Head of this Family, deſcends from Tamerlane; thou knoweſt the reſt, and I will not diſpute with thee about Genealogies.

Whatever paſſes here below is ſo uncertain, that thou may'ſt accuſe me of Imprudence in diſcourſing of things at this diſtance; for, in Effect, Ibrahim may be a Father by this time. Pray to God, who diſpoſes of Thrones, makes Races endure, or decay; merit from him, by Faſtings and Prayers, and beg of him, that he would give me the Grace to live blameleſs, and die innocent; that I may enter with thee into Heaven, and there enjoy thoſe unſpeakable good things which are reſerved for the Faithful.

Love me, though diſtant from thee; and let me have Tokens of thy Friendſhip, by ſtealing ſome Moments of Leiſure from thy ordinary Buſineſs to write to me.

BOOK IV.

LETTER I.

To the Venerable Mufti, Prince of the Religion of the Muſſulmans.

THERE is now found in one Man alone, whatever ſeveral Perſons of great Ingenuity could acquire by long Experience; and, this Man is Cardinal de Richlieu, to whoſe Reputation thou art no Stranger. He was deſigned, like thee, for the Affairs of his Church, and dedicated to Religion; but he is not ſo much employed about them, but that he applies himſelf with as great Care to the Affairs of the World; and 'tis he, who under the Authority of the King his Maſter, governs the Affairs fairs of the French. I obey thee, Venerable Mufti; thou haſt enjoyned me to inform thee of the particular Actions of this famous Prelate; but I ſhall not ſay much of him, it being impoſſible to fathom him. He is the moſt dexterous and ſubtle Politician that lives in all the Countries of the Unbelievers. The famous Greek, Lyſander, was never ſo cunning; neither did Tiberius ſhew half ſo much Diſſimulation at Rome, nor Judgment in Affairs, as he; no not in the time when he ſet himſelf to remove his Rivals, and take away all Obſtacles, which might hinder his obtaining the Empire. He interprets all the Doubts which ariſe in his Religion; he's the Arbiter of Rewards and Puniſhments, and the King, who knows his Zeal and Ability, leaves to him the Direction of his Kingdom and People; which he governs and leads as Jacob led the Flocks of Laban. This Cardinal wants only the Art, which this Great Patriarch had, to make Men be born as he pleaſed, as this holy Iſraelite made the Sheep.

There came, ſome days ſince, a Perſon from Germany, who went immediately to the Palace of this Miniſter, and ſent him word by his Captain of the Guards, that the Letter B was come. The Officer was unwilling to deliver this kind of Meſſage to his Maſter, and therefore deſired the German to explain this Riddle; but he only told him, laughing, That the Cardinal's Alphabet was like the famous Knife of Delph, which ſerved to all purpoſes; ſo that he needed only to mention the Arrival of the Letter B, and he would be underſtood; which was no ſooner done, but the German was privately introduced into this Miniſter's Cloſet, where he had a long Conference; but I could never hear the Subject of it.

thy Health; and make thy Authority ever adored, and feared even in Rome it self.

LETTER II.

To the Reis Eſtendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

I Come but now from learning an Adventure, which yet happened ſome days ſince; but all things are carried on with ſuch Secrecy in France, that it is almoſt impoſſible to know any thing before 'tis made publick.

There were apprehended here, in the laſt Moon of January, certain Ruffians, in the Habit of Hermits, who were to aſſaſſinate Cardinal Richlieu.

Theſe Wretches confeſſed before the Judges, as ſoon as they were put on the Rack, their Intention of killing the King's Favourite, becauſe he was no Friend to the Duke de Vandome, who is Natural Son to the deceaſed King, Henry the Great. This Adventure has greatly ſurpriz'd the Court; each Man ſpeaking of it according as his Intereſt or Affection inclines him. The Duke of Vandome's Friends have declared themſelves againſt the Cardinal: And this Miniſter's Creatures have much aggravated this Attempt, to render this Prince's Family more odious, and heighten the Cardinal's Reputation: But, the Duke de Mercœur, the Duke of Vandome's Son, rode immediately to Paris, with the Duke de Beaufort his Brother: the firſt, incognito, to conſult his Friends, and the other, to preſent himſelf to the Cardinal, to obtain that their Father

Father might juſtifie himſelf before the King, from the Accuſation laid againſt him.

The Grand-child of Henry the Great, has ſince deſired to be confronted with the Hermits, and has obtained it; but his Departure at the ſame time into England, has wrought much amazement.

Some ſay, he has taken an unwiſe Courſe; and others ſay no; becauſe he could not prudently expoſe himſelf to the Teſtimony of ſuch Wretches, who would not matter what they ſaid.

However, theſe Hermits were publickly executed, and their Accomplices are not yet diſcovered; neither is it yet known, whether any perſons of Quality have had a part in the Conſpiracy; which is not the firſt that has been carried on againſt this Favourite, and it's believed will not be the laſt. He has a great many Enemies; and the abſolute Authority with which he governs, by the favour of his Prince, will always raiſe him ſuch Adverſaries, as will either ruine his Fortune, or take away his Life.

If I write not oftner to thee, thou oughteſt not to think my Affection ever the leſs. Set down in thy Regiſter what I inform thee. Let me have thy Friendſhip, and Protection in things which are juſt, and change not thy Opinion of me, till I am changed my ſelf.

LETTER III.

To the Kaimakam.

JUlius Mazarine, a Man about Forty five Years of Age, of a ſolid Judgment, and incredible Perſpicacity; of whoſe Family I know no more, but that he is originally from Sicily, and born in Italy, in the chief City of it, Rome; is lately introduced into this Court. He has, by his ingenious Carriage, gained the Favour and Confidence of Cardinal Richlieu; and he begins already to be employed, in the moſt important Buſineſs. Thoſe who make Reflections on the Affairs of the World, and carefully examine the extraordinary Talents of this Italian, are perſwaded one may expect great things from him; yet however, the beſt way is not to be haſty in judging of the good or bad Qualities of a Man. He has already been employed in Quality of Plenipotentiary for the King of France in Piemont, to negotiate an Accommodation between all the Princes of the Houſe of Savoy. And he has laboured ſo fortunately, that every body is aſtoniſh'd that his firſt Undertaking ſhould meet with ſuch happy Succeſs; eſpecially conſidering the Hatreds and Pretenſions between the Dutcheſs of Savoy and her Brothers in-Law. Thou may'ſt remember that I wrote to thee, that the Differences of this Family were like to laſt, and unlikely to be determined without great Blood-ſhed, both of the French and Spaniards. But Mazarine, who is a moſt expert Courtier, and dexterous Agitant, has ended this Affair, much to his Maſter's Honour, to the Satisfaction of the Parties intereſſed, and the Cardinal who procured him this Commiſſion. He eſtabliſhed the Peace in Piemont, and an Union betwixt the Parties, Parties by bringing over to the French Intereſt Two Men who were Enemies to it; who were, Prince Thomas, a Captain of great Reputation; and the Cardinal of Savoy his Brother, a Perſon of a conſummate Policy, and an excellent Soldier, though a Church-man.

It is mentioned in the Treaty, That theſe Two Princes ſhall be received into the King of France's Protection: That if the Young Duke dies without Children, and the Cardinal Marries, his Children ſhall be the Heirs of the Eſtates of Savoy; and in defect of thoſe, Prince Thomas's.

'Tis moreover declared in the ſame Treaty, That the King of Spain ſhall be ſought to, touching the Liberty of the Wife and Children of Prince Thomas, who are detained Priſoners at Madrid: And he ſhall be alſo ſollicited, to ſurrender the places he holds belonging to the Duke of Savoy. And in caſe the Catholick King ſhall not reſtore them, and ſet at Liberty the Wife and Children of this Prince, he ſhall be obliged to ſerve againſt the ſaid King in the Army of France. 'Tis moreover inſerted among theſe Articles, That the Moſt Chriſtian King ſhall procure a Marriage to be made between one of the Children of the ſaid Prince, with the Duke of Longueville's Daughter, who is a rich Heireſs; and that France ſhall never make any Treaty with Spain, without comprehending the Liberty of the Princeſs, and the foreſaid Princes.

King Thomas is now expected here; and it is ſaid, he will command the Army of France in Italy, againſt the Spaniards, it being certain, they will never reſtore what they have once taken, neither will they ſet their Priſoners at liberty.

The Prince entertaining himſelf, ſome Days paſt, with the Ambaſſador of a Foreign Prince, ſaid to him theſe words: When the Spaniards ſhall reſtore to the Duke of Savoy, the Places they keep from him, him, I ſhall willingly diſcharge my ſelf of the Burthen of the Government of thoſe I keep. And the Cardinal has publickly expreſs'd himſelf to this purpoſe: That his Maſter's Deſign was only to humble the Pride of the House of Auſtria, and reduce it to ſuch a Condition, as that its Neighbours might have no ſuch great cauſe of fear from them; ſeeing the leaſt Motion of theirs, raiſed Alarms among them, That his Endeavours were not laid out in aggrandizing the Dominion of France, ſeeing the Bounds of it were large enough already; his Intentions being only to give his Sovereign the laſt Proof of his Zeal and Affection, by leaving the Kingdom in a profound Peace, which might make his Majeſty beloved of his Neighbours, and feared by thoſe who are jealous of his Greatneſs and Power; he being hereby the Arbiter of Europe, and reigning more abſolutely by this means, than if all the Eſtates belonged unto him. What I have written to thee, happened ſome time ſince; but what I am now to inform thee of, is quite new.

We have an Account, That the Princes of Savoy have not kept their Word with the King, Cardinal Richlieu, and Mazarine; and Deſigns are now taking in hand, to puniſh ſo great an Affront; and theſe are buſied, in thoughts of revenging a Widow-Princeſs, who has been ſo long forced to behold bloody Tragedies in her Houſe, by the Wars which the Princes of the Blood make continually; wherein Strangers do intereſt themſelves, who ruine the Eſtates, and keep them up in perpetual Diſcord.

This Buſineſs will cauſe new Troubles in Italy, and thou ſhalt therefore not fail of Intelligence of the Particulars. However, the Princes of Savoy are blamed by all the World, and charged with want of Sincerity. But, this being almoſt a Rule amongſt the Chriſtians, To obſerve their Word no longer than they find their Advantage in it; thou needeſt not therefore much wonder at what theſe Princes have done: Whereby thou wilt know, That a mean Intereſt being the Motive that ſets them at work, and which is all their Reaſon of State; he that will one day equally judge all the World, and can overturn all the Univerſe in leſs time than he created it, will deſtroy the little Powers of theſe weak Politicians, who acknowledge the Law of the Nazarite, to the immortal Glory of the Venerable and Holy Name of the faithful Muſſulmans.

LETTER IV.

To Dgnet Oglou.

I Muſt forget my ſelf, if I forget thee; but thinking often on my ſelf, I cannot forget thee; becauſe thou art my ſecond ſelf. Be perſuaded I ſpeak my Heart, and that I have no other deſign, but that of loving thee, that thou may'ſt anſwer me with the ſame Affection: for, I deſire thy Happineſs as I do my own.

I am endeavouring to procure thee the Confidence of the Invincible Vizir Azem, without his perceiving my Deſign; and this is the beſt manner I could deviſe of doing it. Thou ſhalt pretend to receive from ſome Friend which thou ſhalt leave at Palermo, the Memoirs which I ſend thee with this Letter; and it will not be difficult to make it be believed, thou holdeſt a Correſpondency in this Town of Sicily, conſidering the time we have lived there together, during our Slavery.

The

The Auguſt Vizir, who rules and governs the Empire, under the Orders of the Moſt Mighty and Dreadful Potentates of the Earth, will receive by this Ordinary, an ample Information of extraordinary Evenes which have happened in Portugal: And I have alſo inform'd him of the ſtrange Revolutions of Catalonia, which do much weaken the Strength of Spain, and notably mortifie the Pride of this haughty Nation. I have made known to him, that Portugal has already made choice of a King, and that Catalonia is departing from her Allegiance. But, I have given him no Account of the choice Memoirs, which I ſend thee; with which thou may'ſt make Advantage, if thereby thou canſt find the way of introducing thy ſelf to the Grand Vizir.

Thou may'ſt then ſay to this great Miniſter, That thou haſt received the Memoirs thou preſenteſt him with, and aſſure him, thou haſt tranſlated them out of the Italian into Arabick; and thou muſt tranſcribe them with thine own Hand, that they may not appear to come from me.

The King of Spain, Philip II. died of a ſhameful Diſeaſe, which happens only to baſe People, which appeared a Chaſtiſement from Heaven, for having like David, numbred the People which dwell in the Countries ſubject to him, to make known to all Nations the Greatneſs of his Power.

'Tis certain, this Monarch reckoned as far as 750 Cities, erected into Biſhopricks; therein comprehending 60 Archbiſhopricks: that he had Abbies 11400, Chapters 9230, as many Collegiate Cathedrals; Pariſh-Churches 127000, Hoſpitals 4000. Confraternities 23000, Congregations of Seculars 2300, Houſes of Entertainment for Pilgrims 3000, 46000 Convents of Religious People; and of Virgins 13500 with 15200 Chapels, wherein Maſs is ſaid, as well as in publick Churches, as particular Houſes and Priſons.

And

And after an exact search, this King found, that to serve so great a number of Churches, Monasteries, Convents, Hospitals and Chapels, there were 12900 Religious Monks, Priests or Clerks; amongst whom there might be found 12400 Priests, which celebrate what the Christians call the Mass. And, to maintain so many People, 'twas computed that the Revenue for this amounted to 3000000 of Roman Crowns, without reckoning the Alms which were distributed every day, which amount to the Summ of 4000000 of Gold.

The curiosity of this Prince went farther; he would know the Number of all his Royal Officers, Governours of Provinces, Towns, Castles, and Citadels; and, in fine, of all Officers as well of Sea as Land, Judges, Justiciaries of all kinds, and of all those who had Patents from him or his Viceroys. And he found they were 83000 who were employed under Letters sealed with his Hand, and 360000 who had them signed under his principal Ministers.

He would not know the Number of Persons that lived in his States, lest he should become too proud; and to prevent his fall, said he, into the Sin of David. Which he yet could not avoid in his own Person, as I have already said; God having spared his Subjects, who had otherwise sufficiently suffered.

One may now say, that this puissant Monarchy begins to be dismembred by the loss of so many Provinces, Kingdoms, and Places; and that Philip II. knew not the full Extent of his Power: Philip III. knew not the Greatness of his Forces, nor the Riches which he possesses, because his Ministers governed him: and Philip IV. not seeing when he might see, could not see at last when he would.

I think I have said enough to thee to be understood. Do now what thou can'st, to make thy self understood by Persons to whom these Advices may may be agreeable or profitable: And if thou believeſt, the Knowledge of theſe things may be acceptable to the Invincible Vizir, who is one of the Lights of the World. Endeavour to procure the Favour of this Great Man, who governs all the Faithful, and to whom the Divine Alcoran ſerves for a Law. I embrace thee, and cordially kiſs thee with the Lips of my Soul, if a Man may ſo expreſs himſelf. Adieu.

LETTER V.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem.

THE Poſts which came ſome few Days paſt here, have brought ill News. One of the King's Armies has been defeated by an Army compoſed of Foreigners; at the Head of whom was a Prince of France, and ſeveral Malecontent Lords, who followed him. This Loſs has much afflicted the Court, and Paris ſeems to be Thunder-ſtruck. The People diſcourſe and argue hereupon according to their different Humours, moſt making the Loſs greater than 'twas. But thoſe who have loſt their Kinſfolks, threaten Revenge; and only thoſe that have heard of the Death of their Friends, are ſilent, becauſe their Grief is above Expreſſion. But all in general appear in ſuch a Conſternation, as would make a Man imagine this Stroak is irreparable; ſo true is it, That Loſſes are inſufferable to thoſe that are not accuſtomed to loſe.

One would think, to hear the French talk, that the Spaniards are already at the Walls of Paris, and that theſe rebellious Princes are ready to give an Aſſault to this great Town. They have retired into into a place which they say is impregnable, and which belongs to a French Lord; which Place is called Sedan, and 'tis not far hence where this bloody Battel was fought, wherein the King's Party were worsted; but the Malecontents are much afflicted at the loss of their General, who was kill'd in the heat of the Fight. Some say, he died by Treachery; Others, by the Enemy: and there are who affirm, That Cardinal Richlieu got rid of him by means of an Assassin, whom he entertained in his Troops: Others also say, he killed himself, by lifting up the Vizor of his Helmet with his Pistol, which discharged it self; however, there is dead in the Person of this Prince, a Prince of great Valour.

I shall make thee a Recital of this Adventure; I shall learn thee the Motives of this War; inform thee who were the Malecontents, and their Qualities; and, in fine, by what Cabals this Tempest is raised; that thou mayest know, Great and Principal Prop of the Ottoman Empire, that Ambition and Jealousie cause Disorders in France, as well as in other Countries.

Lewis de Bourbon, Count de Soissons, was a Prince of the Blood; he had such a fierceness in his Youth, as drove away all from him, who once came near him; but having got over this Humour, which disobliged every body, he became popular, and so Courteous, that he was now followed as much as he was shunn'd before. He used the Nobility as became their Quality; had acquired the Friendship of other Princes, and those of inferiour Rank could not enough admire him. He was adored by the Soldiery, beloved and esteemed by the People; and he had, in a word, so behaved himself, that he had gotten the general Applause.

Cardinal Richlieu has a Niece named Madam de Combalet, who having been married to a Gentleman, aſpired to an higher Match, ſeeing all things to give place, and humble themſelves before her Uncle.

The Cardinal deſigned by the Marriage of this Niece, to procure himſelf ſuch a puiſſant Prop that nothing ſhould be able to overthrow his Fortune, or oppoſe his Authority: He pretended alſo his Life would be more in ſafety; and that ſuch an Alliance, with thoſe he already had, would put him out of a Capacity of being ever attack'd by any Enemies, ſecret or declared, whoſe number encreaſed as faſt as his Authority.

Several affirm, this Prieſt had Ambition enough to give an Heir, who might one Day aſcend the Throne; when it appeared by the Queen's Barrenneſs, the King could have no Child to ſucceed him.

But the State of Affairs being changed, he took other Meaſures; and thinking of having the Count in his Alliance, he cauſed the Propoſals of this Marriage of his Niece to be offered the Prince, by one of his moſt intimate Confidents; who offered him at the ſame time conſiderable Sums of Money, and Dignities, to make him Heir of all his vaſt Eſtates, and to procure him the greateſt Office in the Kingdom, which is that of Conſtable.

The Count of Soiſſons Anſwer to him that made the Propoſal, was a Box on the Ear; being in an extreme Paſſion, at any one's daring to offer him a Match ſo greatly beneath him, when Madam de Combalet was the Widow of a Gentleman of a mean Condition, and Niece to a Cardinal whom he hated, and himſelf a Prince of the Blood.

The Cardinal's Meſſenger, deſirous his Negotiation ſhould ſucceed, was not repelled by this Affront. He inſiſted on the Vertue of the Cardinal's Niece, ſaying ſhe would be courted by the Greateſt of France: and added farther in Commendation of this Lady, that she was a Virgin, although married; because her Husband, out of respect, dared not approach her; and that Heaven had so ordered it, that this Adventure should be found written in the Anagram of her Name.

This Minister could not dissemble his Vexation at the Refusal; his Choler became excessive, and he resolved to practise his usual Maxim, of violently persecuting those, whose Friendship he had sought with most eagerness. He therefore wholly set himself against this Prince, spake all the Ill he could of him, publickly threatned his Enemy; but he valued him not, looking on the Cardinal as beneath his Notice.

In the mean time, the Cardinal plotted to put his Threats into Execution, and brought the King in to Countenance him by his Authority; which obliged the Count to absent himself, and make a Voyage into Italy, to avoid the Storm he was threatned with. Yet his Voyage lasted not long, and at his Return the Cardinal did all he could now to win him; he procured him suitable Employs in the Armies, and made him at length be declared General of that which the King sent on the Frontiers of Picardy. Yet this haughty Prince received all with Indifferency, saying only, That a Captain was given to the Army, and not an Army to a Captain.

The Grandees of the Court, who observed afar off what past in this Intrigue, instead of mollifying the Count's Humour, did all they could to sharpen it. The Duke of Orleance, the King's Brother, who was always this Minister's Enemy, link'd himself with Soissons, exhorting him not to yield to the Cardinals Pursuits; and it is said, he drew a Promise from him under his Hand, that he would never accept of the Marriage proposed, and they afterwards swore Fidelity to one another; and that they would join together for the Deſtruction of the common Enemy; and for this effect they took meaſures with Prince Thomas, of the Houſe of Savoy, who is at preſent General of the Spaniſh Army in Flanders: They alſo brought the Duke de Valette, and ſeveral Lords of the Kingdom, into their Party. Almoſt all the Conſpirators were for killing the Cardinal, and the time of the Stroak ſhould be, when he viſited the Quarters of the Army which beſieged Corbie; but the Count alone would not conſent to dip his Hands in the Blood of a Prieſt.

But the Duke de Valette, who ſaw the Danger wherein he was, when the Conſpiracy came to be diſcovered, reſolved to ſhelter himſelf by the blackeſt Treachery that could be imagined; he diſcovered to the Cardinal all the Accomplices, of which the Count de Soiſſons having Notice, he ſpeedily withdrew to Sedan. I ſhall not make thee (Invincible Leader) a Deſcription of this Place, which regards on one ſide Luxemburgh, and on the other France; it not lying in my way to make Draughts of Fortifications like an Engineer, but to give thee a full Account of what the Infidels do, and diſcover their Deſigns, whereby thou may'ſt gather what may make for the Advantage of our Great Monarch, whoſe Power cannot be ſhaken, but by the entire overthrow of the Univerſe.

Sedan is a Dominion which formerly belonged to the Dukes of Cleves, who were Sovereigns of it, and at the ſame time Dukes de Bouillon. When the Count was in this place he thought himſelf ſafe; the Mareſchal de Bouillon, who was the Maſter of it, by the Teſtament of the laſt of this Family, declared himſelf of his Party, either to make War together againſt the Cardinal by open force, or drive him out of this Kingdom, or to get rid of him by Death. Here it was they made their ſecret Treaties with thoſe who commanded for the Spaniards in the Low-Countries; and a Prince of the Houſe of Lorrain entred into their Cabal. He bears the Cardinal as much ill will, and appears as reſolute as the reſt for his Deſtruction: he is called the Duke of Guiſe.

There wanted only to this Party the Duke of Orleans, the King's only Brother, and therefore the Duke of Guiſe diſpatched a Meſſenger to him, who ſold in one day both his Maſter, and all the reſt that were of the Conſpiracy. He diſcovered all the Secrets of the Cabal; and the better to carry on his Deceit, he cauſed himſelf to be apprehended and thrown into Priſon, having given his Diſpatches to the King's Brother, which he had before ſhewed the Cardinal. This Traytor was not contented with revealing theſe Gentlemens Secrets, who had ſent him, but alſo made it appear, That the Prince, the King's Brother, was guilty as an Accomplice of the others Rebellion. Thus theſe great Men, grown deſperate at the Diſcovery of their Projects, which were indeed contrary to their Sovereign's Intereſts and the Kingdoms, were forced to throw themſelves into the Arms of the Spaniards, and to joyn with them.

They have raiſed Troops amongſt their Vaſſals and Friends, and openly declared themſelves; and fought with great Valour, as I have already mentioned in the beginning of my Letter. The King's Army has been very ill handled, and it appears that the Advantage was wholly on the Confederates ſide; but it has coſt the Count of Soiſſons his Life, who was General, and Chief of the Party, and it is at preſent diſputed, to whom is due the Honour of the Victory.

I proſtrate my ſelf continually at thy Feet to kiſs, with all Humility, the Duſt of them; aſſuring ring thee, thou haſt in me a moſt faithful Slave, that will never change.

LETTER VI.

To Solyman his Couſin at Conſtantinople.

Pontius Pilate was an honeſter Man than thou. He, although a Pagan, excuſed himſelf of the falſe Sentences he ſhould pronounce on the Chriſtian's Meſſias, by waſhing his Hands before the Jews, who ſought his Death: And, thou that art a Mahometan as I am, and waſheſt thy whole Body in the Baths at Conſtantinople, in the Preſence of our Friends, accuſeſt and condemneſt me raſhly without any Scruple. Thou uſeſt me like a Rogue; ſo maliciouſly art thou ſet againſt me, who am of the ſame Religion which thou profeſſeſt. How canſt thou juſtifie the Hatred thou beareſt me, in endeavouring to make the Kaimakam believe, I have been corrupted by the Cardinal, who is the King of France's Chief Miniſter? Adding that he ought no more to heed my Letters, and Relations ſent to the Sublime Port (where lie proſtrate all the Powers of the World,) as not written by an Arabian, but by a Sacrilegious Heretick; That I deceive the Muſti, ſo venerable for the Authority which he has in ſuch an Holy Religion, of which he is the worthy Head; and that I amuſe him by my Letters, the better to conceal my Change, ſeeing I adore in my Heart, and publickly profeſs an entire Submiſſion to the Decrees of the Roman Prelate.

The Quality of thy Couſin, which I have whether I will or no, is ſo far from with-holding thee, that 'tis made uſe of to carry on thy pernicious Deſigns. O unworthy Kinſman! Infamous Hypocrite! Thou wilt diſcredit me, and break off the courſe of my Employment, becauſe I ſerve effectually the greateſt Prince of the Univerſe. Thou approveſt not only my Conduct when I began my Endeavours, under the Orders of the Miniſters of the Divan; but thou applaudeſt me, gave me Praiſes: And now, when all the Miniſters are ſatisfied with me, and approved of my Behaviour, and gave me their Commendations; thou art the only Man who thinks it fitting to traverſe me to obſcure my Reputation, and blacken my Actions. Is this the Fruit of thy Studies with Hippo at Athens, to whom thou oweſt thy Knowledge of Greek Authors, which thou ſo greatly braggeſt of? Anſwer me, unjuſt Couſin, What is thy deſign of having me called away by thy baſe Defamation? When did I offend thee, and wherein I pray? But thy Artifices, how great and malicious ſoever they be, will not prevail over the ſincerity of my Heart; and, as I ſhall always exactly perform my Duty, ſo I fear not the Loſs of my Prince's Favour; he will approve of what I do, and thou wilt die with Envy and Deſpite.

I needed not have been miſtaken: I might have ſeen the Falſeneſs of thine Heart by thy Countenance. Thou art an Heraclitus, always Melancholy, and out of Humour, that cannot rejoice, ſhould Heaven favour our Invincible Monarch's Projects. Thou art a falſe Zeno, who under the affected Appearances of a Stoick, concealeſt a Cynical Heart, whoſe Critical Humour is always biting on the Actions of others. Nature has covered thy Face with ſadneſs, mixt with a deadly Paleneſs, becauſe thou art always buſied about ſome doleful matter.

In like manner it appears, That Pythagoras has inſtructed thee to ſpeak little, as knowing thou art not fit to ſay or do any thing but what is hurtful. I know not what is become of Iſouf, having no Account of him. I am afraid thou haſt corrupted this my Kinſman, that I might have no Ally, or faithful Friend. Thou haſt not failed to inſtruct him well, having given him ſo good an Example; and he has, without doubt, been ſo ungrateful, as to imitate thee. He is returned from Mecha, and makes me no Anſwer, giving me no Account whether he has made the Offering for me on the Mountain, whether he has ſacrificed the Sheep, whether he has diſtributed the Alms I enjoined him, and whether he will ſend me, as I entreated him, a ſmall Piece of the old Hangings of the ſacred Moſque. But I will not concern my ſelf as much at what others do, my Intention being to complain only of thee, becauſe others Offences are not comparable to thine, thou having left no Stone unturn'd to ruine me.

Continue then in thine ill Nature: I write only to acquaint thee, that I am not ignorant of whatever thou has done againſt me. There's no body but old Baba thine Uncle, who can work a Change in thee: go to him; be not aſhamed to ſee a Man who is employed in the meaneſt Works, to have more Judgment than thee: Shew him the Infirmities of thy Soul; or, to ſpeak better, confeſs to him all the Ill Things thou haſt done, if thou haſt any Intention of becoming an honeſt Man. Although he be but a Carpenter, he knows better than thee, to form the mind; he can teach thee how to poliſh and ſquare thy Soul, as he poliſhes a piece of Oak, though never ſo hard and knotty.

He is perfectly inſtructed in the Law; he is brought up in the Principles of Religion; he will guide thee, if thou wilt ſuffer him, in the way which leads to Perfection; he will not permit thee to lye; he will put thee on making Reſtitutions to thoſe whoſe Good Name thou haſt unjuſtly taken; and he will comfort thee, if thou beeſt really ſorrowful for the ill thou haſt done, and if thou ſheweſt any Regret at thy former Purpoſes, of deſtroying a Kinſman that loved thee, and ſtill wiſhes thee all kinds of Happineſs; if thou repenteſt of thy unjuſt Perſecutions, and if of a bad Couſin, which thou haſt been, thou wilt become a ſincere and hearty Friend.

LETTER VII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

I Say not that thoſe are Fools that are in Love, but I muſt needs think, that thoſe who believe lightly, are not overladen with Diſcretion. 'Tis hard for a Man always to keep himſelf from falling into a Paſſion; but 'tis not ſo hard for a Man to keep himſelf from believing things with too great Facility, and from being caught with Falſhoods, which are the moſt conſtant Attendants of Women.

Thou haſt ſpoke the Truth to me, in ſending me the Balm and Aloes I wrote for; and I ſhall not anſwer thee with Lies, in ſpeaking of Daria, who is the Subject of the Letter which I received from thee. Let me thank thee, without ſaying any thing of the Preſent thou madeſt me, which is very magnificent and acceptable; and ſuffer me to complain to thee freely of the Hurt which another has done me. I need not conſult my Regiſter, to remember member whatever I wrote to thee about this Greek, my Heart which is yet full of it, reproaches me every Moment for having ſaid too much to thee on that Subject.

Never any thing appeared to me ſo deſirable, as that Herb which Homer call'd Nepente, to cure me of the cruel Diſtemper, with which I am tormented. This Prince of Poets makes a Queen of our Ægypt, to preſent this admirable Simple to Helena, which has the Virtue of appeaſing immediately all Dolours, and makes us forget the Vexations and Offences offered us. But thou wilt not underſtand me, unleſs I tell thee clearly, That Daria has forgotten all the Promiſes ſhe made me, as ſoon as ever ſhe was from me; not remembring in any ſort my Love. 'Tis true, ſhe wrote twice to me ſince her Departure, but in ſo cold a Style, that it is plainly ſeen, her Heart is as cold as Ice to me. As ſoon as ever ſhe ſaw her ſelf in the Arms of her Husband, ſhe made him a ſacrifice of my Paſſion; and, the better to make her Court to him, and perſuade him of her Fidelity, ſhe delivered to him my Letters. The Husband laughed in reading them, and ſaid to her, in a Jear to me: A Man then, ſo deſperately in love, has only ſighed and wrote? He has done ſomething more (replyed this diſſembling Woman) having promiſed to ſend me a Box of white Balm of Mecha, and Aloes-Wood, to perfume me, which yet I do not expect to receive ſo ſoon, and perhaps never: For, if Mahmut be not become a Fool, he will as ſoon forget me, as I ſhall certainly forget him. And what haſt thou promiſed this Barbarian? replyed immediately the Husband. I promiſed, replyed Daria, to ſend with my Picture, that of the moſt chaſte of all Women; which yet I do not pretend to do, without your Conſent; nay, and Command.

What I now inform thee, comes from a Place which makes me not at all doubt the certainty of it. But having learnt by what I related, the Virtue of this Woman, now hear what the Husband's was; who having ſeen my Picture, and commended the Painter that drew it, embraced tenderly his Wife, whom he reſpected as a moſt ſingular Example of Conjugal Fidelity. Thou wilt wonder at Daria's Weakneſs, in ſhewing him my Picture; ſhe did do it, and her Confidence has turned to Account, ſhe having received a Thouſand chaſte Embraces for a Recompence. Thou ſeeſt here the Happineſs of the Chriſtian Women, who have Husbands who take ſo favourably the Offences done them during their Abſence.

In the mean time, Daria's Picture does not come; ſhe returns no more Anſwers to my Letters, which has diſcouraged me to write to her for ſome time. My Paſſion begins not to be ſo violent; and, this great Fire which conſumed me, will ſoon turn into Aſhes. I have been mightily miſtaken; for it is only amongſt Perſons of an equal Condition, where true and laſting Friendſhips are to be found. Let us love, my dear Dgnet; let the Bonds of our Friendſhip be ſuch, as will never break nor be diſſolved. Daria is really a great Example of Fidelity to her Husband; but, ſhe is alſo an Example of Inconſtancy and Treachery to a Lover, who had ſacrificed all to her.

I am reſolved henceforward, to love no Woman; and I am certain, my dear Friend, that my Reſolutions ſhall hold. Rejoice with me at my Cure, and believe, that if a fine and charming Woman diſordered my Brains, the good humour and Patience of her Husband, has brought me again to my Senſes. My Adventure ſhould make thee careful, to avoid the like Inconveniences; but, thou canſt not run that Riſque, being happy with the other Muſſulmen of Conſtantinple, who have Laws which retain and hinder them from falling into the like Irregularities.

I hope

I hope alſo thou wilt give over being my Rival if thou haſt ever had any Kindneſs for this Ungrateful Greek. If Men muſt love, once in their Lives, let them have a care of falling into thoſe Exceſſes which deprive them of their Reaſon, and make them repent of their Love all the Days of their Lives. My Repentance is great; and though my Paſſion be not wholly extinct, yet I feel a Joy which makes me know, that I ſhall by degrees loſe my Paſſion for her.

Thou mayeſt be well tired with this long Diſcourſe; but I ſhall end it, in ſending thee a Deſcription which one of the greateſt Wits in Spain has made of Women.

He ſays, They be the Sources of Life and Death; that they are to be conſidered as Fire, becauſe they uſe all that come near them as that Element does, yet they give Men a certain neceſſary Heat: They are fine things; bring Joy to Families, and whole Towns; but are dangerous to keep, enflaming all that comes near them, and reducing them commonly into Aſhes. They uſually give a great Luſtre, but this Luſtre is never without ſuch a Smoak, as darkens the Underſtanding, and makes them often ſhed Tears, who only behold them. He that has no Commerce with Women, ſpends his Life in Melancholy, and yet they are ſeldom ſeen without Danger. The way to manage them, is not to do exceſſive things for them, no more than wholly to neglect them. A Man oft obtains them eaſily, and commonly loſes them more eaſily. Fire and a Woman, are exactly the ſame; and he that ſaid, Women are Fires which burn all things, has ſaid likewiſe, That Fire is like Women, which conſumeth all things.

But our Religious Arabians have ſpoken yet more Elegantly, when they wrote, That God made a particular Paradiſe for them; becauſe, ſay they, ſhould they enter into that of Men, they would ſoon change it into Hell.

Eve plaid her part ſo well, when ſhe was ſuduced by the Serpent in the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, that ſhe deceived her Spouſe alſo, that he might lye under the like Condemnation. But however, this Sex having, among ſo many Defects, ſomething that is amiable; let us love them, at leaſt, becauſe of their Uſefulneſs for continuing the Species, but not for their Beauty; whoſe Enchantments corrupt the Mind, and hinder all the excellent Operations of it: For Men perhaps would be Angels, were there no Women; I mean bad ones; for good Women, as well as good Men, can do no Hurt. Adieu.

LETTER VIII.

To Carcoa at Vienna.

THE Courier which is now arriv'd, has brought me Letters and Money from thee. I ſhall receive the Money upon the Bill of Exchange, when it is due, under the Name of Titus. I am extremely obliged to thee, for the Care thou haſt taken, in procuring it me, being in a Countrey where good Words are of no Credit. I have received alſo the Box, wherein is the Balm and Aloes ſent me by my Friend Oglou, all in good Condition, and come in good time. I want only to know, how it is with Iſouf; for he writes no more to me. I am informed he is returned from his Pilgrimage, and yet has not ſent to thee what I deſired him to bring from Mecha.

I will not complain of any body; if I do, it ſhall be of my ſelf. Take care of the Letters I ſend thee, thee, and let me know, whether we may hope well from the Grand Signior, and what is reported at the Court where thou art, and if there be any likelihood of making War afresh against the Infidels.

My Health is indifferent. I live here without Suspicion; and though Cardinal Richlieu be an Argus, he is blind as to what concerns me; for he knows nothing of my Business, or feigns so at least; neither do I do or say any thing which may make me suspected for an Enemy.

I assure thee I love God, have a great Respect for his Law, and follow my Business with great Fidelity. If thou wilt have me do more, advertise thy Friend of it, whom thou knowest; shew me the Example, and live happily.

LETTER IX.

To Berber Mustapha, Aga at Constantinople.

WE are arrived to the End of the Year which the Infidels solemnize by Bonfires, and which I mark by an extraordinary Sadness. I complain not, in that Time making it self the Master of my Heart, will soon begin to weaken it. I understand the Follies of those Vows, which are made to Heaven, for the obtaining of a long Life. Those that desire it, are wont to make contrary ones, when they become overwhelmed with the Infirmities which attend for the most part old Age. The Occasion of my Complaints, is of another Nature; I am troubled at the being so far from my Friends and Country, and at my being banish'd into an Enemy's Country, where I must live like a Man that is in continual Fear, among People who seem to matter nothing.

Thou art now above 50 Years of Age, and I not above 32; and yet I know thou reflectest not much hereupon, thinking thou hast still a long time to live. Thou art of a strong Constitution, art a lover of Pleasures, searching them every where, without any thoughts of Death, who will spare thee no more than others, whose Health is decayed; for he comes taking great strides towards us all. Thou art very fortunate, I must needs say, in conserving in a Body so near Old Age, a Young Man's Spirit; which is far from my Disposition: For when thou art in pursuit of Divertisements, I am continually thinking of Death; because I believe I have lived too long.

Should the King, or Cardinal, near whom I live, know this Night, that Mahmut, who writes to thee, is one of the Grand Signior's Spies, I should lose my Life, perhaps, before the next Light: Yet the fear of such an Adventure gives me no Disquiet; having entirely sacrificed my self to the Master I serve, who commands all Men on the Earth. Should these Barbarians put me to Death, I shall only finish, a little sooner, that Course which I must certainly one day put an end to; and if I live, I shall have neither Recompence to expect, nor Pain to apprehend.

Here is much talk about the Duke of Lorrain; yet there has been more done against him, than said. The French affirm, that in stripping this Prince of his Countries, he has been very mercifully dealt with; for Justice required more. There are, on the contrary, other People, who do not believe lieve it is poſſible to do a greater piece of Injuſtice. In fine, every Man ſpeaks after his manner.

'Tis ſaid moreover, that this Sovereign being come again into the King's Favour, who had given him a Thouſand Teſtimonies of good Will, after what had paſſed in 1634, when this Court had great reaſons to complain of his Conduct; he drew down again afreſh the Indignation of France upon him, by a Fault which cannot be excuſed. I think this Duke had concluded Two Treaties that Year, promiſing a Submiſſion and Eternal Obedience. He had the Honour to Dine with the King; and having rendred him Homage for the Dutchy of Bar, he again threw himſelf into the Arms of the Auſtrians; although he had ſworn on the Goſpels, (a Book as much reſpected amongſt the Chriſtians, as the Alcoran is among the True Faithful) That he would never forſake the Intereſts of France, what Wars ſoever ſhe might find; that he would be perpetually fix'd to the Intereſts of that Crown, and never hold any Correſpondence with the Houſe of Auſtria. In conſideration of which, Lewis ſhould re-eſtabliſh this Prince in his Eſtates, which he was to ſurrender entirely, bating ſome Places, and the Capital, called Nanci, which he would retain during the War, as a Pledge for the Performance of what he had ſworn to; and, which yet was to be given up, after the Concluſion of the Peace. 'Tis added, That this Sovereign having occaſion to complain of the Spaniſh Miniſters, and the Grandees of this Nation, who carry on the War in Flanders; he had written to the Cardinal Infant, Governour of the Low-Countries, a Letter to this purpoſe, and very near in theſe Words.

The King of France having required me to joyn my ſelf with my Troops to his Army near Sedan; I would not obey this puiſſant King, much leſs your Highneſs; ſeeing the Towns ſubject to the Spaniards, treat me as if I were an Enemy.

Th:

The Ladies have had a great part in this Accommodation of the Duke of Lorrain; which has had like all the Works of Women, a direful Event. This Prince being become amorous of a French Lady, was for repudiating his lawful Princeſs, to whom he owes all his Eſtate; beginning to ſeparate from her, that he might give himſelf entirely to the Counteſs of Cantecroix, whom he uſed as his real Wife.

Good People are ſorry for this Prince's Diſgrace, as believing his Condition to be paſt Remedy. The devout party ſay, That having been unjuſtly deprived of his Eſtates, God will work Miracles in his Favour; conſidering, no leſs than Three Hundred Saints, as they ſay, have been of his Family, which muſt needs reconcile him to the Favour of Heaven; amongſt which, is the famous Godfrey of Bullen, who won Jeruſalem, and all Paleſtine from the Saracens; whom we muſt own to have been a great Man, whether we conſider his Courage or Zeal for his Religion, which ought to make his Memory famous to all Ages.

I can tell thee nothing more certain on this Subject, having endeavoured to be informed of what I write to thee to ſatisfie thy Curioſity: and whatever I now recite, has paſt in France with little Noiſe, or rather with great Silence, as to me; for indeed, I muſt with ſhame confeſs, that I have ſcarce heard in Paris this Event, ſo famous throughout all Europe.

Man has nothing but what comes from Heaven; and commonly the ſtrongeſt, when he has Right on his ſide, ſubdues the weak, and enriches himſelf with his ſpoils.

By the Law of Nature, every one has Right of judging his own Neceſſities, and the Greatneſs of the Danger wherein he finds himſelf; and, if it be contrary to Reaſon, I ſhould be Judge of my own Danger, Danger, 'tis reasonable another should be so. But the same Reason which establishes another Judge of what concerns me, has made me his Judge; and consequently, gives me Authority to judge of the Sentence which he shall give against me; and to decide, whether it be just, when 'tis favourable to me, or unjust, if it be contrary to my Interests.

Nature has given all to Men, and thou and I, and all Men have an equal Right to all things, and hence we have Power to do whatever we will, to possess and enjoy what we think is fitting; and yet such an extensive Right, is just as if we had Right to nothing: For, at the same time, I have Right to a thing which pleases me, another stronger than my self, by virtue of the same Right, takes it from me, and enjoys it in spight of me. Hence it is that one Man invades another with the same Right with which he defends himself; whence do, and will spring up always, the occasions of Jealousies and Discords which are among Men; which make them at continual Defiance with one another, and keeps them in a continual Watchfulness over their Neighbours.

'Tis this Liberty founded in Nature, which makes it lawful, in time of War, to resist and invade, not only by open Force, but with all the secret Arts and Stratagems that can be devised; and, when a Man would avoid the Danger he is in, in fighting, and has his Enemy in his hands, he has right to use all means to avoid him, and secure himself from him.

Thou wilt approve of these Reflections, which shew thee the Natural Right thou hast of commanding me, as being thy Inferiour; and, I hope, by what I have written, to have satisfied thy Curiosity; and by my Submission and Obedience, to have given thee a Proof of my profound Respects to thee.

Paris, 24th of the last Moon, of the Year 1641.

LETTER X.

To Bereredin, Superiour of the Derviſes of Cogni in Natolia.

LET me, moſt holy and patient Derviſe, proſtrate thee with my Head bowed down to the ground, with the greateſt Humility I am able. I now come to thee with my Feet naked, without either Hoſe or Shoes, as a Mark of my Reſpect and Veneration which I have for thy Old Age, and the Admiration I have at thy incorruptible Innocency.

The Kindneſs thou ſhewed'ſt me by the long Letter I have received, has given me ſuch Joy as I cannot expreſs; as makes me forget my paſt Pains, and hinders me from thinking of thoſe which are happened to me; for I can now willingly leave this World, having had ſuch Teſtimonies of thy Affection. Thy great Age does not aſtoniſh me, ſeeing thy Father, who is yet alive, is 107 Years old, and thou art above 82; which makes me hope to ſee a great while yet, both one and the other, draw down, by their Prayers, and Merit of their good Actions, the Bleſſings of Heaven on the glorious Empire of the Ottoman Court, to whom all the Empires and Monarchies of the World ought to ſubmit. The Thirty Brethren who preſented themſelves to Selim, to be enrolled in the Troops which were to ſerve againſt the Perſians, made the Father, who had them all by one Woman, to paſs for the happieſt of all the Muſſulmans, in having the good Fortune to beget ſuch a Number of the moſt Noble Sons in Nature. But thou and thy Father muſt needs be more happy than this fertile Parent. Thy Father has fought, and come out Victorious from the Perverſity of the Age, full of Scars and Suffering, through through the Force of his Courage, the Innocency of his Manners, and his great Sobriety: And, as to thy Part, what haſt not thou done to make thy ſelf the worthy Son of ſo glorious a Father? Thou haſt not only done, what thy Father did before thee; thou haſt acquired the ſame Virtues, and haſt ſo far out-done them, that one may ſay, thou haſt ſurpaſſed Virtue it ſelf. Thy Strength is admirable in the midſt of Abſtinencies, and other Auſterities which thou undergoeſt; in which, 'tis certain thou canſt not be imitated. But Heaven, to whom only thou liveſt, will recompence in this World thy pure Faith, which the Enemy of Mankind can never weaken.

The Chriſtians ſay, When God gave them the Commandments, he promiſed only long Life to ſuch who perfectly honoured thoſe, who, under God, brought them into the Light. If this be true, as 'tis very likely; 'tis not to be doubted, but that a long Life, is the Recompence which God gives thoſe who live well: And the Nazarenes who are Criticks, affirm, That Sin alone is the cauſe that Men do not live ſo long as they did before the Deluge, for then they remained ſuch a while in Life, as would tempt one to think, they were to have been Immortal. They ſay that after the Deluge, God changed the Nature of Men; and inſtead of that great Number of Years, which made up the Courſe of ſo long a Life, they cannot live at furtheſt above 120 Years, and that there are few which arrive at 80; and whatever is beyond this, is Miſery and Torment, or a kind of Senſleſneſs, which makes Men like Beaſts.

I know few People but what are agreed, One may cure or mitigate the Inconveniences which happen to us; but, few are of Opinion, That Life can be lengthned; yet, if this be poſſible, we may then believe a Story which is believed here, and which happened the Year paſt in Paris.

An

An Ancient Man went to a Dervis of this great Town, and thus accosted him: I am come, Reverend Father, to know of you, whether I may in good Conscience determine to live no longer, being quite weary of living. I have already arrived to the 120th. year of my Age, by means of a Liquor which Chymistry has taught me, whereby I did scarce perceive from any thing I felt, that I was going down; yet however this long Life appears at present to me irksome and intolerable. My Blood is so putrified in my Veins, that I have remained without any of those Passions wherewith Mankind is generally Subject. My Taste serves me no longer to discover the Delicacy of Meats. My Ears, although they be not deaf, yet will not let me distinguish true Harmony from what is only a Confusion of Sounds. Mine Eyes are open to see, but are not cleared with any Object. My Faculty of Smelling, is struck with Scents, yet they make no Impression on it. I touch, but I feel not what I touch; and I touch all things indifferently. Mine Heart is no longer sensible, nor affected with Tenderness, and Passion for my Friends. Bile in me has no longer its usual Heat. Joy and Sorrow, Anger, Desire of Having, Hope and Hatred, are extinguished in me; whereby I am become insensible in conserving, if I may so say, all my Senses. I am resolved therefore to let my self die, provided you can assure me I may do it without Sin; for should I remain two days without taking this precious Elixir, I am certain I shall soon expire, and so be delivered from the Vexation which overwhelms me. 'Tis said, that the Dervis answered this Philosopher; That he might not desire Death, but on the contrary, preserve his Life; and supposing he made use of no Secret of Magick to prolong his Days, he should believe that the marvellous Potion, of which he had found the Secret by his Study and Travel, was a Present from Heaven: That 'tis true he would be rid of a troublesome Life, but he could not procure the End of it without a Crime; and that he was obliged to preserve it, to suffer with greater submission the Pains he complained of, which could not be comparable to the Pleasures he had received, by enjoying the Gift which God had bestowed on him.

The Great God preserve thy Days beyond those of this Philosopher; and accompany them with whatever may give thee Satisfaction: But I beseech him above all things, that he never let slip out of thy Memory the Promise thou hast made me, of having always a particular Respect to thy Servant Mahmut, who reverences thy Holiness.

LETTER XI.

To the Redoubtable Vizir Azem.

I Make thee an Answer, invincible Warriour, by whose Counsels the formidable Empire of the Ottomans is governed, under the Orders of the most mighty of the Princes of the Earth, and, whose Arm is terrible to all the Potentates of the World. I have read thy Letter, with which thou honourest the most submissive of thy Slaves, with all the Humility which is due to thy sublime Grandeur, whereunto thy Merit has raised thee. And, having cast my self at thy Feet in Spirit, seeing I cannot really kiss them, I obey the Orders thou sendest me, which are to me inviolable Laws.

Banniere, the Swedish General, is dead; when Picolomini, one of the Generals of the Emperor's Army, lay just by him. In half an hours time, he saved himself, the Army, all the Baggage and Cannon, and retired with incredible Swiftness over Mountains and Forests, where the Beasts alone could could make Paſſages, having continually the Emperor's Army at his Back. He was a Man of great Valour, had been highly ſerviceable to the Growth of Swedeland, and acquired the Reputation of an excellent Commander. The Emperor had offered him ſome time before great Recompences, and the Dignity of Prince of the Empire, if he would change his Maſter, and forſake the Confederates Party. He had alſo offered, thinking this might more move him, to make him General of his Army againſt the Grand Signior: but he refuſed all theſe Offers, his Fidelity being unmovable.

This great Captain was born in Swedeland, and when a Child, he fell down from an high Window, without receiving any Hurt; which made the King imagine, Heaven deſign'd him for ſomething extraordinary. He travelled much in his Youth, and he was ſeen never tired in running to all Places, where there was any War; ſometimes in Poland, and other whiles in Muſcovia: And being become General of his King's Army, he ſoon acquired the Reputation of one of the greateſt Captains of the Northern Parts. He was perfectly skilled in the Art of Encamping, and no body could ever better draw up an Army for Battel. His way of Retreat from before an Army ſtronger than his, muſt needs be admired by all the World. He ever choſe good poſts; and when once he was poſſeſs'd of them, he knew well how to keep them; ſo that he was never defeated, whatever Forces his Enemy might bring againſt him. He has deſtroyed Fourſcore Thouſand Men, in different Rencounters, and Swedeland glories in having above Six hundred Standards. He was ſo like King Guſtavus, that they have been often taken for one another. He was never covetous; but was obſerved to be a good Husband. Among ſo many Occaſions wherein he ſignaliz'd himſelf, what he did when the Swediſh Army was worſted at Norlinge, is moſt remarkable markable; he preſerved the Reſt, though wholly forſaken by the Allies; and ſo ordered the Matter, that he raiſed freſh Troops almoſt in an inſtant, and gave his Party Time and Courage to riſe up: And, this is all I could learn of this Great Captain, whoſe Reputation has given thee Curioſity.

Although Don Duarte de Braganza, the new King of Portugal's Brother ſerved with great Reputation in the Emperor's Army; yet 'tis ſaid, the Spaniards had been very urgent with this Monarch, to make him be apprehended, as ſoon as ever they heard the King his Brother was raiſed to the Throne. But 'tis ſaid, the Emperor was ſcandaliz'd with ſuch a Propoſition, alledging this would be againſt the Rules of Hoſpitality: But the Empreſs's Confeſſor found ſuch Reaſons in his Divinity, as brought over the Emperor to yield, he ſhould be delivered into the Spaniſh Miniſter's Hands, who conducted him with a very ſtrong Party to the Caſtle of Milan; whence he is not like to ſtir out, till his Brother ſhall reſtore the Crown of Portugal to Philip IV. of Spain.

I ſhall write what remains behind, to the Kaimakan, who has the Honour of being thy Lieutenant; that I may not tire thee, who art to be reverenced as the Inſtrument of the Wills of the Maſter of Lights, and all whoſe Hours are deſtin'd to the Government of the World.

May it pleaſe him, who of Nothing has created All Things, that thou may'ſt lay, one day, at the Feet of the Grand Signior, the Crowns of all the Monarchs who command in the Infidels Countries, and become thereby the Arbiter of the Univerſe.

Paris, 18th. of the 1ſt. Moon, of the Year 1642.

LET-

LETTER XII.

To the Kaimakam at Conſtantinople.

THis King here has mortified his Parliament, by the Advice of Cardinal Richlieu. The Parliaments are Bodies of Learned Men, who decide all Affairs in the Kingdom, as well Civil, as Criminal; and the Parliament of Paris has a larger Juriſdiction than all others, and as conſiderable Prerogatives. What I have to ſay on this Subject, has happened from the beginning of the laſt Year; and I now relate it, becauſe I forgat to do it when the thing happened: And I will inform thee, before I enter on the Matter, what obliged heretofore the Kings of France to ſet up this great Seat of Juſtice.

The ancient Kings of France gave it Authority of approving and verifying the Edicts and Declarations which they ſhould make, which was a Bar which theſe wiſe Princes would fix between the People and the Sovereign Authority. Whence it appeared, that Monarchy was mix'd with Ariſtocracy; without which, the Wiſe have thought, that States could not long ſubſiſt. And the Princes of this Age have ſubmitted to a Tribunal re-eſtabliſhed by themſelves the Reſolutions they take; to the end they may diſcharge themſelves toward God, to whom they are accountable, as well as other Men; and, to obtain Confidence from their Subjects, in taking from amongſt them Arbiters to regulate them. Yet they have ever reſerved the Liberty of making uſe of their abſolute Power, as is ſeen in their Letters Patents, where they forget not to inſert theſe Words, [For ſuch is Our Will and Pleaſure.]

These Monarchs also thought hereby to have found out a way to defend themselves from the Importunities of the Grandees, who often demanded such things which could not be granted without Prejudice to the whole Kingdom.

The Authority of the now reigning King being out of danger of being shaken or destroyed, this Monarch having his Exchequer well stored, has valiant and experienced Captains, stout Soldiers, and numerous Armies, and good Fleets of Ships at Sea; whereby he would make known to this puissant Tribunal, That if it had been set up to assist the Kings by its Counsels when required, yet it must not pretend, that its Decrees should become Laws to their Sovereigns. He went to the Parliament with all the Marks of Grandeur with which he is usually attended on these Days of Ceremony, and with such a great Company of Lords, as made the Power of this Monarch easily discerned. He gave these Gentlemen to understand, he would have them ratifie, without more ado, the Orders he would send them, which they term Edicts, requiring them to be immediately enregistred. He afterwards gave them an express Charge not to concern themselves henceforwards in Affairs of State; and to humble them the more, he declared to them, That he would be henceforward the Disposer of Graces and Offices, and bestow Recompences to such as deserved them. He added hereunto an Order of giving an Account every Year to his Chancellor of their Deportments, and to come and receive every Year His Majesty's Approbation to continue them in their Offices. And, as a Mark of his Indignation and Authority, he put by the President, and some Counsellors from their Places.

This bold and politick Action was done (as I may say) in the midst of Dancings and Divertise-ments the more to denote the Monarch's Authority; and in the time of ſuch Magnificent Feaſtings, as became the Pomp of the greateſt Emperors in the Palace of the Cardinal for the Marriage of his Niece, Madamoiſelle de Breze, with the Prince of Conde's Eldeſt Son, called the Duke D' Anguien; a Prince from whom the World expects great things, and whom all France believes will prove one of the Famouſeſt Princes in Chriſtendom.

The Catalonians are obſtinate in their Revolt; their Deputies have been already ſeen in this Court, to entreat a good Supply from this King; and, it is not to be doubted, but they will earneſtly ſue for his Protection: And, France has already ſent Troops near thoſe Parts, and its Fleet appears on the Coaſts, to encourage this Nation, and mortifie the Spaniards. There are a great many Troops raiſed here; and this Monarch will have in the Spring, Eight Armies, commanded by Generals of great Valour and Experience, beſides theſe Two Fleets; ſo that Germany, Lorrain, the Low-Countries, Catalonia, and Italy, are like to be expoſed to the Miſeries of an impoveriſhing War. Only Germany ſeems to me able to defend it ſelf.

The vaſt Genius of the French Miniſter aſtoniſhes all the Princes of Europe; he breaks all their Meaſures, and makes a ſecret War againſt them in their own Courts. Nothing can eſcape his vigilant Care; he keeps his own Secrets ſo ſtrictly, that his neareſt Friends cannot diſcover them. His Power and Authority are ſo great, that the Princes of the Blood are nothing in compariſon of him; and his Fame makes him as much reſpected Abroad as at Home.

His Friends affirm, He is ignorant of nothing which is projected in Europe. England is the Place which he has laſt attack'd, its Civil Wars owing their Original to his Deſigns.

I pray

I pray Heavens favour thy Juſt Pretenſions, and every day Increaſe thy Heroick Vertues.

Paris, 15th of the 1ſt Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER XIII.

To the moſt Excellent and moſt Venerable Mufti, Sovereign Prelate of the Holy Religion of the Faithful Muſſulmen.

HE of whom I wrote ſo many particulars, ſome Moons ago, to obey, as I ought, the expreſs Command thou laidſt upon me; not only is ſtill living, but is more abſolute than ever, in what concerns his Miniſtry. Yet is it falſe that this Cardinal finding nothing more (as thou writeſt to me, 'tis talked of in Conſtantinople) to ſatisfie his Ambition, (which puts him ſtill upon deſiring ſomething farther; being become the abſolute Maſter of what depends on the Kingdom of Lewis XIII.) had deſigns of making himſelf abſolute Maſter of what concerns Religion. But, he was too knowing a Man, to deſign the being the Superiour General of all the French Derviſes; a Thing which neither the King of France, nor the Pope would permit. I rather think, this Miniſter's Deſign has been, to ſubject all the Chriſtian Princes to his Maſter's Intereſts.

The Ottoman Empire would have ſome reaſon to be afraid, were all the Roman Prelates wiſe enough to chuſe this Man for their Pope. We ſhould ſee, in a ſhort time, all Aſia agitated by his Intrigues, againſt the Followers of the Great Mahomet; and thoſe that follow Ali, would not enjoy a much greater ſecurity! Thou knoweſt that the greateſt Marks which the Popes can give of their Piety during their Pontificat, is to ſtir up Wars and make Leagues againſt us to overthrow our Empire. Think then what this great Man would do, were he the Head of the Chriſtians, with thoſe Abilities, and great Intelligences which he every where keeps; ſeeing, that being only a Subject, and Miniſter of one Prince, he ſo governs himſelf, that there's no Nation, how far ſoever diſtant, but holds its Eyes open on his Conduct: And a Pope being always choſen from amongſt the Cardinals, and the Pope now reigning being very old, it may happen that this dangerous Man ſhall be choſen.

Thou then, whoſe pure Life makes us believe thou art a Saint, pray the great God to hinder ſuch an Event, which will without queſtion diſturb the Empire of him whom he has choſen to humble all other Potentates, and ſhew on Earth the Greatneſs of his Power; and, rather than ſuch a Misfortune ſhould befall us, pray him that has created all things, that this Man's Eyes be opened to know and embrace the true Faith: For, it were better, (if I may ſay ſo without diſpleaſing thee) that the Cardinal ſhould be a bad Mufti at Conſtantinople, than a good Pope at Rome, at the Head of all the Nazarenes.

'Tis ſaid, that a Foreign King conſulted this Oracle, (for he is held in as great Veneration as if he was one,) what Conduct he ſhould hold to live ſecurely: And it is ſaid, the Cardinal made this Anſwer: That Kings ſhould live in Fear, and then they would live in Safety; it being certain they would receive no Poyſon from the Hands of thoſe who do not preſent them their Drink, no more than they can receive Wounds from thoſe, whom they keep at a great Diſtance from them. Thoſe who will not flatter them, will not deceive them; and where they shall think themselves in greatest Safety, that will always be the Place of greatest Danger.

I am perswaded, Grave and Wise Prelate, thou wilt approve of the Answer of this Minister. Julius Cæsar lived in the midst of Combats, but dyed in the midst of the Senate.

Next after God, it is before thee, Great Minister of Heaven, that I humble my self, entreating thee to receive graciously the profound Respects of thy Slave Mahmut.

LETTER XIV.

To his Mother Ocoumiche, at Constantinople.

IT may be said, I have escaped from a mortal Sickness, and remain in Life, only to hear the Complaints of my Friends, who recite to me their Misfortunes; and of my Kindred, who entertain me with the losses they have sustain'd. Thou addest, my Dear Mother, a new Torment to the Pains I already suffer, by shedding so many fruitless Tears. O! how cruel is my Country, that gives so many Occasions of Affliction to those to whom she has given their Birth! Thou hast lost the greatest part of thine Estate in the Fire of Constantinople, and Death has deprived thee of thy second Husband. I was but a Child when my Father dyed, so that I could not judge then of thy Grief; neither was I sensible of my own Loss. Now that I am a Man, I enter into thy Sentiments, I share in thy Grief, and shall do all I can to comfort thee.

Thou haſt loſt thy Firſt and Second Husband, and thou haſt reaſon to afflict thy ſelf. If the firſt was an honeſt Man, 'tis certain the other loved thee extreamly: And the Charms of thy Countenance have not a little ſerved thee to acquire the Affection of theſe two Husbands, which thou kneweſt how to keep by thy Complacencies and blind Obedience to their Wills; and by ſuch a prudent Carriage, as one may ſay, thou wouldſt force them to love thee, hadſt thou not done it by the Charms of thy Beauty.

But, what ſhall we do in this thy Extream Affliction, and in the troubleſome Condition I am for the Grief thou endureſt, which mingles my Ink with my Tears? Yet we muſt endeavour to be comforted with a firm Reſolution, not to afflict our ſelves but at the loſs of ſuch things which will never be in our Power to recover. Thou, at the loſs of the Reputation which thou haſt acquired of a Vertuous Woman; and I, at that of an Honeſt Man.

When my Father dyed, 'twas not all the Philoſophy nor Eloquence of the Greeks which could comfort thee, thy Affliction was ſtronger than all their Reaſons; and, when thoſe officious Comforters had forſaken thee, thou ſoughteſt Eaſe to thy Trouble in a new Spouſe. Him now thou haſt loſt, but now thou art ſtill in a Condition of hindring this Loſs from being irreparable. Thy Virtue has never been queſtioned, and thou art not as yet ſo old, but thou mayſt think of another Husband. Seek a Third, which may make thee forget thy Sorrow for the Second. And if thou findeſt him not immediately, or if thou hadſt ſome trouble in ſeeking a like Comfort to thy Affliction; receive in this Letter the Tears of another Mother, which will ſhew thee there is a Woman of a far higher Condition, that is more afflicted than thou art.

Pair

Paris is ſtill full of Cries and Sighs which come from a Princeſs of the Firſt Rank. She has now loſt a great Prince, her Son, who is ſlain in a Battel which he had won by a ſtrong Army, of which he was General. Read in my Letter, the lively and tender Expreſſions of the Grief of this Illuſtrious Mother, which draw Compaſſion from his Enemies, who are forced, by the Rules of Civility to make her Viſits. Thus does ſhe ſpeak every Day and Hour, to Perſons who come to viſit her; and when there's no body, ſhe thus ſpeaks to her ſelf.

This unfortunate Woman is not a Moment without ſighing; and one would think, by her Language, ſhe intended to recall the Soul which has quitted the Body of her Son, the unhappy Count of Soiſſons: Poor Count, a Son ſo tenderly loved, and ſo greatly deſerved it, where is thy Body now to be found, dyed in Blood, and in that of thy Enemies? What Victory? Where are thoſe glorious Marks, that ſhould give me ſo great Joy, and which give me ſuch cauſe of Deſpair? Why did I bring thee forth into the World, unfortunate Son, if I muſt ſo ſoon loſe thee? Miſerable Mother, Unhappy Son! How art thou a Conqueror, when I ſee no other Trophy of thy Victory, than thy Death? I hear from all Parts, that the Count is Victorious, and yet I hear every where that his Enemies Rejoyce. I ſee, dear Son, all thy Domeſticks that followed thee, return without Wounds, and yet I do not ſee their Maſter. None of them can tell me where he is, and in what Place their General lies, who fought with ſo great Valour, and Succeſs to his Party. But, they are all agreed, the Battel was won, that my Son is a Conqueror, and that he has loſt his Life. Unfortunate Fight, which has made equally bewailed, the Death of the Victorious General by his Mother, and the Defeat by the Vanquiſhed! Would to God thou hadſt been vanquiſhed, thou mighteſt have lived, I ſhould not have been in this Condition of following thee. 'Twould have been no Shame to have been defeated, it would have been only a Misfortune, which would have been common to thee with Pompey and Hannibal, to whom Antiquity had nothing to impute, but their ill Fortune. A sincere Reconciliation, a Pardon, or a Peace, might make all that is past forgotten. A voluntary Exile might have appeased the King's Anger, and perhaps disarm'd the Cardinal; my Son might have liv'd, France would not have been troubled, a Mother would not have been at this day comfortless, and the Count's Enemies would not have rejoyced at his Loss. But to my Grief, nothing of this has happen'd. Alas! the Stay of an Illustrious Family is dead: Unhappy Mother, how are all thy Hopes vanished? But, good God, how was this my dear Son taken out of the World? I know but too well, that his Enemies laid continually Snares for him. Methinks I see my Son's Murtherers give him the deadly stroke in the Heat of the Fight, and in the instant he was going to enjoy his Victory. Ah! my dear Son, Ah! unfortunate Mother! why did not I breath out my last on the dead Body of this Son, so worthy the Esteem of all the World, and whom I so dearly loved? Why did'st not thou, too powerful Minister, give me the Mortal Blow, rather than let me see so sad a Tragedy: Do you kill me that hear me; or thou, my Son, give me thy Hand, to descend into the Grave where thou art to be buried.

But my Reason fails me; I must for my Son's Honour, stifle these Motions of Weakness: 'Tis true, he lives no longer; but he died in the Bed of Honour, with his Sword in his Hand; he died full of Glory; he died Victorious; and even in dying, vanquished his Enemies.

Let us cease from shedding Tears: But what do I say? he died assassinated, a Victim sacrificed to the Vengeance of his Enemies, by the blackest Treason, 'tis clear. And yet I would live: No, I must die; let us imitate the Greatness and Courage of those illustrious Women, who threw themselves on the Pile wherein their Husbands were burnt: My Son is more dear to me; let us then die, and weep no more; These Tears are fruitless; but let us live, seeing Heaven ordains it, and let us live to die every day: I shall have ever present before mine Eyes, the Death of my Son; I shall see every day his bloody Body; I shall continually remember his respects, his Tenderness for me; and I shall never forget the tender and violent Passion which I had for this Son, for whom alone I lived: but at least, cruel Cardinal, restore me his dead Body: thou hast thy Revenge, he is no longer alive; give this sad Consolation to a desolate Mother; perhaps this Sight will work the Effect thou desirest, cruel Wretch as thou art; it will unite my Soul to that of my Son.

Dear Mother, if thou canst not comfort thy self by so great an Example of Misfortune to this Princess, it will be hard for thy Son to say any thing which can diminish thy Grief. Imitate this Illustrious Woman, who having suffered whatever Sorrow and Despair can do to a Mother who loves vehemently, and with Reason suffers her self to be persuaded, not to give an entire Victory to her Enemies, who triumph still over her Son, by the Grief which they see his Death has caused. She has been ruled by the Advice of her Friends, and received great Comfort from a Letter sent her by the King, written with his own Hands:

Cousin, The Grief which you shew at your late Loss obliges me to testifie the Share which I have in it, and the Displeasure I conceive at the fault of him which has caused it. And though I ought not to be sorry by reason of the Conjuncture wherein it has happed, yet I must heartily condole with you, and contribute what I am able to your Consolation.

I can say nothing more to thee, my most honoured Mother, unless it be, that thou shalt always have in me a moſt Obedient Son; and if thou takeſt a Third Husband, thou wilt be perhaps leſs unfortunate; but pleaſe thy ſelf.

The great God, who has Created all Things, and provides for their Neceſſities by his Infinite Goodneſs, comfort and fill thee with his Bleſſings.

LETTER XV.

To the Grand Signior's Treaſurer.

THe Prieſt which plaid the Tarpaulin, whom the French call the Archbiſhop of Bordeaux, of whom I believe I have given thee ſome Account the 10th. Moon of the year, 1637. has loſt the Credit which he had with the King, and is at preſent diſgraced. The Opinion of his Valour at Court is much leſſened, by his not hindring, with the Fleet he commanded, the Spaniards from putting Succours into Tarragone, a famous Sea-Port near Barcellona. They loſt the laſt Year, Twelve Gallies in Fight againſt the French Naval Forces; but having fitted a mightier Fleet, they have put into this Place the Succours they intended. The Archbiſhop could not, or would not hinder them, which will be the Cauſe that this Place will not come ſo ſoon under the Power of the French.

'Tis ſaid, that this Prelate was baniſh'd France, and was retired into a City ſituated on the Rhoſne, named Avignon, and belongs to the Roman Prelate.

It being a thing very uſual to run down the Unfortunate, all the World blames this Prelate, having not always met with equal Succeſs on the Sea in the the Employs he ſought, and that it did not at all agree with his Function of Archbiſhop; which he might have performed with Applauſe, in imitating his Predeceſſor who was his Brother, the Cardinal de Sourdis; and who had left him a Dioceſs well regulated, rich, furniſhed with great ſtore of Churches well ſerved, Paſtors of great Piety and Learning, whom this Man had procured and ſetled in his Dioceſs with great Care, which made his Death extremely lamented.

The Catalonians are at length become this King's Subjects; they maintain their Revolt with the French Forces, and ſtrengthen themſelves after the Example of the Portugueſes. They fight with ſuch Courage, that they come off continually Conquerors; but I ſhall make no Relation of their Fights, nor of the Blood which is ſpilt on either Side, which are Matters I do not care to treat of.

God give thee a continual Tranquility of Mind, make thee in love with Peace, and preſerve in thee that vigilant Spirit, ſo neceſſary for the keeping the Treaſure entruſted to thee.

LETTER XVI.

To the Kaimakam.

THE Cardinal Favourite of France, has ſuch long Hands, that he makes Seizures in thoſe Places which are not ſubject to his Juriſdiction; and when he has made them, he keeps them without any thoughts of reſtoring them. There's no Probability at preſent, That this bold Politician will lay Hands on what belongs to the Grand Signior: However, I have ſome Reaſon to write this.

There

There has been carried, ſome Days ſince, an illuſtrious Priſoner into the Caſtle of the Wood of Vincennes; and thou ſhalt hear this new way of apprehending a Great Man in another's Houſe, and in the Court of a Foreign Sovereign, who is Abſolute in his own Eſtates. This Priſoner was apprehended in the midſt of the fineſt Ladies in the Court of Turin, at a magnificent Ball which the Dutcheſs Regent of this Eſtate gave in her Palace. It was this Princeſs whom I mentioned to thee, who was Widow to Victor Amadæus, Duke of Savoy; and Siſter to the King which now ſo happily reigns over the French.

The Dutcheſs, who had a particular Conſideration for this Priſoner, could not behold this Exploit of the Cardinal's without extreme Vexation. His Name is, if I be not miſtaken, Count Philip d' Aglie, a Perſon of great Quality; and, whoſe excellent Parts and Courage do yet render him more illuſtrious than his Birth.

'Tis not yet known, why the Cardinal undertook ſuch a bold Stoke; though 'tis ſaid, the Council of France has had great Reaſons to ſecure the Perſon of this Favourite. The chief Motive, they ſay, was, That he was carrying on ſome Deſigns againſt the Intereſts of this Crown with the Cardinal of Savoy; whom, 'tis thought, he would have married to the Widow of Amadæus his Brother.

Richlieu attempted not to carry off Count Philip, till having made ſeveral Tryals to remove him from the Court of Turin, under the pretence of ſome Embaſſie, to which he would never conſent; ſo that his Obſtinacy coſt him his Liberty.

The Dutcheſs greatly complains, and reproaches the King her Brother, with the Violation of the Right of Nations and Sovereignty; but only her own Court are ſenſible to theſe Complaints, they being not heard in that of France; and her Embaſſador baſſador had been ſeen there, in a ſuppliant Poſture, humbly ſuing for the Count's Liberty; or that he might be ſent on an Embaſſie to Rome; or at leaſtwiſe, That in leaving the Caſtle of Vincennes, he might be impriſon'd ſomewhere in Paris.

The Cardinal anſwered the Supplications of the Ambaſſador of Savoy, That the King, his Maſter, did not apprehend Philip, and bring him into France, but out of regard to the Intereſts of his Siſter of Savoy; and that ſhe might be aſſured, that for her ſake he ſhould be well uſed.

Thou may'ſt ſee by this Anſwer a great Haughtineſs, and frivolous Reaſonings, which ſufficiently denote, that this great Miniſter does not love to be contradicted, or oppoſed in the Reſolutions he takes: And if an Account of what's done in the World, muſt be given to any one Man alone, he would take it very ill, if it were to any body but himſelf.

I ſhall not fail to ſend thee the Books thou requir'ſt, and inform thee the beſt I can of the falſe or true D. Sebaſtian, King of Portugal, whom his Subjects do believe to be ſtill alive, when I have made ſufficient Enquiries into the Truth of the Matter. I kiſs, with a profound Humility, the Hem of thy rich Veſt, on which I faſten the Lips of a Reſpectful and Obedient Slave.

LET-

LETTER XVII.

To the Reis Effendi, Secretary of the Empire.

THere was found last Night, a Man dead in the Streets of Paris, who seems not to be above 30 Years old; he is a Spaniard, and had about him a Letter, or Memoir, which it seems he had written to some Confident at Madrid, in these Terms.

" Cardinal Richlieu told me, he did not know the " Hand nor Signature of Count Olivarez's Secretary; " and that when he should fill up his signed Blank, " which I presented him, and let fall the pretended " Letter of the Secretary into the King of Spain's " Hands, he saw not what Advantage could result " hence to the King of France, his Master. I am ve- " ry willing, added he, that the King of Spain " should suspect the Count, or Secretary, of Infide- " lity, and of having some Commerce with me; " but, it would not be advantageous to us, he should " be plainly convinced of it, seeing the greatest hap- " piness France could have, is, that Count Olivarez " his Ministry should be perpetual: For being the " most unhappy of all the Favourites that have " ever been in the Place he possesses, all good French- " men are obliged to pray to God to give him a long " Life, and to continue him ever in the King his " Master's Favour, to perpetuate, by his Counsels, " the Disgraces of Spain.

He pursued his point of Raillery in this manner:

" Of a Duke of Braganza, Olivarez has made a King " of Portugal; Of a King of France, a Count of Bar- " cellona; Of a Sovereign Duke of Lorrain, a Vassal; " Of a Prince Cardinal, a Knight Errant; Of a Lord " of Monacho, a Duke and Peer of France: and, in " fine, of Philip IV. King of Spain, he has made a " Count: Duke d'Olivarez. This

This is all I could get from ſo great and illuſtrious a Genius.

The juſt God, who has ſent us his Prophet, ever direct thy Actions, that thou mayeſt enjoy an happy Eternity, and give thee Opportunities of doing good.

LETTER XVIII.

To William Voſpel, a Chriſtian of Auſtria.

GOD be praiſed, thy Patriarch Elias, and his Companion; foraſmuch, as I ſee thou art a Saint, and content in the Religion of the Bare footed Friars which thou haſt embraced. Thou ſtirreſt me up to do Good, and encourageſt me to ſuffer, and become ſerious enough to renounce the Pleaſures of the World, ſeeing thou traceſt me a Way ſo neceſſary to walk in, in order to arrive at Heaven. I did not believe, indeed, I confeſs it, thou wert endued with that Conſtancy, and was afraid thou would'ſt change, but, ſeeing thou haſt the Courage of keeping thy Reſolution, and enduring all the Incommodiouſneſs which is to be met with in that kind of Life which thou haſt embraced: I am ſorry for my Suſpicions, and profeſs I have all due Eſteem for thee. I love thee as much as one honeſt Man ought to love another, who, having found out the True Good, has ran impetuouſly after it; and who has paſt immediately from a ſoft and voluptuous Life, to the Severities of an auſtere Religion, in ſearch of an aſſured Port, which is more uſually found in Sufferings and Macerations, than in Delights and Pleaſures. There is one thing amongſt others, which extreamly pleaſes me, me, in the Order thou haſt entred; All things are in Common amongſt you; one Key opens an Hundred Doors; you have no Meum & Tuum; all clad in the ſame Faſhion, and all go bare-footed; you eat at the ſame Table, and no body has better or worſe Fare than another. In fine, your Prayers are the ſame, and ſo are your Vows of Poverty.

But, prithee tell me, what would a Thief have found in thy Cell, whom I ſaw yeſterday hang'd with a Key about his Neck? He had the Dexterity of opening with his Key all ſorts of Locks, and has done a Thouſand Roguiſh Exploits, which have at length brought him to the Gallows. He told the People, he dyed a moſt happy Man, as having practiſed with great Succeſs an Art inferiour to none; That the only Crime he thought he had been guilty of for this 30 Years, was his committing but ſmall Thefts; That had he found the Doors always open, he had never entred into any Houſe; and he exhorted Magiſtrates to chaſtiſe only thoſe, who ſuffered themſelves to be robbed.

Spaniſh Authors have written, There's no Law which allots Penalties to thoſe that rob with Prudence and Ingenuity: thus they call thoſe who ſteal wherewithal to appeaſe the Envious who would accuſe them, the Witneſſes which might ſerve to convict them, and the Magiſtrates by whom they are to be judged: So that the Thief that ſhall have ſtolen for himſelf, and for all others I now mention'd, ſhall be ever ſent away abſolved. Which makes me think, that Theft is of that Nature of Women's, for both one, and the other ſeem at this day to be neceſſary Evils, juſt as Keys ſeem only good now a-days to preſerve what may be ſtoln, and not to hinder it from being ſo.

How many things has the Injuſtice of ſome People authorized for the Safeguard of a Town? 'Tis not enough to have a ſtrong Garriſon of Soldiers;

Three

Three Elements are not ſufficient to defend it againſt a greater Power, that would oppreſs it. The Earth is raiſed, to make thereof Trenches; the deepeſt Ditches are dried up, whatever quantity of Water may be in them; and, Fire is encloſed in Cannons; the Effects of which are terrible. If thou ſurveyeſt Italy, thou wilt find in ſeveral Towns, Palaces which have more Gates than Thebes had heretofore: And, if thou counteſt the Keys which ſerve to open them, thou wilt find the Iron they are made of, to coſt more than the Doors themſelves.

Men are contented to uſe theſe Keys, according to the common Uſe they ſeem to be deſigned for; their Ambition makes them ſerve for Marks of Honour in ſeveral Princes Courts, where they be Recompences for Services, for Vertue and Valour. The Golden Key in Spain, which the great Lords wear, denotes, That they know how to open the Gate of Favour. And 'tis the ſame in Germany, and eſpecially in the Emperor's Court.

Happy was Ancient Rome; whoſe Citizens were ſo wiſe, that being adviſed to turn the Front of their Houſes on that ſide where they could not be obſerved by their Neighbours, they anſwered the Architect, We rather deſire our Houſes may be overlook'd into, becauſe we do nothing wherein we fear a Surprize. Whereas Modern Rome, on the contrary, may be termed Unhappy, wherein there are not enough Gates, and Porters of them, to conceal what is done in the moſt retired places of their Palaces.

It is in this City, where Luxury grew to that height under the firſt Emperors; that all Mens Studies were, to find out new Pleaſures.

But I muſt end this Diſcourſe of Keys, of Doors, and Door-Keepers; I muſt not expect to reform the World, nor would I weary thy Patience. Pardon me my paſſing from the Cell, to the Story of the Thief whom I ſaw executed; and from the Thief, Thief, to a Diſcourſe of Keys, and other things with which I have entertained thee. I was ſo full of it, that I could not forbear the Diſcourſe, no more than I can now to ſpeak of the Subtilty of the Spaniards, who have vaunted of the Worth of their Eſcurial, by the great Number of the Keys which belong to it; like that fooliſh Emperor, who valued the Greatneſs of Rome, by the great weight of Spiders Webs which were there. The Spaniards affirm, there are ſo many Doors to this ſtately Edifice, that the Keys which ſerve to open them, weigh above Ten Thouſand Weight.

But 'tis time to end this tireſome Letter. Let me then counſel thee, to watch over thy Conſcience, as the Pariſians do over their Shops, to prevent Violences. Here are ſo many great and ſmall Thieves, that ſhould they be puniſhed, as they were chaſtiſed in Syria, where the ſame Puniſhment is impoſed on him that is robbed, as he that robs; this great Town would be ſoon unpeopled, or become a Priſon to an infinite Number of People, who would be found faulty.

May it pleaſe the Great God, who ſhould be adored by all Creatures, to incline the Great Prelate (after thou art delivered from the Burthen of the Fleſh,) to place thee among the number of thoſe, for whom the Church has a pious Veneration; and, reſpect thy Aſhes in ſuch a manner, as I hope, thy Holy and Exemplary Life will deſerve.

LETTER XIX.

To the Venerable Mufti.

THou wilt not think me troubleſome, if thou remembreſt the Order thou haſt given me; and ſought rather to hazard the tiring thee by frequent Letters, than be accuſed of neglect for not obeying thee. Obedience moſt needs be agreeable, where the Command is made with Wiſdom. When I write to the Grand Vizir, 'tis in trembling; and if I write to the Kaimakam, I am not without Hope; and I ſend no Letter to the other Baſſa's without Inquietude, and great Trouble. As to what concerns my Friends, I divert my ſelf in writing to them. But, when it is to thee that I write, I may ſay, 'tis, that I may hope, live, and obtain in the other World, that happy ſtate ſpoken of by our Holy Prophet; that Life which is to be the Recompence of all thoſe who ſhall perform good Actions, whilſt they dwell among Men.

Cardinal Richlieu would willingly be abſolute in Matters of Religion as thou art; he would alſo be thought a Saint, but he knows not how to be one: And, indeed, he would be every thing. However he does abundance of things which thou doſt not, and pretends to be above thee, becauſe he does not live as thou doſt. This Man, whoſe Head is full of the Affairs of the World, concerns himſelf in whatever paſſes in Europe; one only Employ cannot ſatisfie him; he is not contented with being the Favourite of a great King, under whoſe Authority he governs all things: Some time ago, 'twas reported he would make himſelf a Patriarch. Cardinal Richlieu would willingly be abſolute in Matters of Religion as thou art; he would alſo be thought a Saint, but he knows not how to be one: And, indeed, he would be every thing. However he does abundance of things which thou doſt not, and pretends to be above thee, becauſe he does not live as thou doſt. This Man, whoſe Head is full of the Affairs of the World, concerns himſelf in whatever paſſes in Europe; one only Employ cannot ſatisfie him; he is not contented with being the Favourite of a great King, under whoſe Authority he governs all things: Some time ago, 'twas reported he would make himſelf a Patriarch. He aſpires extream high, undertakes the moſt difficult Matters, and takes a ſingular Pleaſure in making use of extraordinary Means for the Execution of his Projects, that Posterity, and Historians may write, That being come into the World with a small Fortune, he died Rich; and being born in the Condition of a private Man, he lived in the State of a great Prince: Observe (Venerable Prince of that Religion, which can alone be approved of by him who drew the World out of Nothing) two remarkable Stroaks of this French Tiberius, which I have learn'd but lately.

This Cardinal sent to Madrid incognito, a General of certain Dervises; a Man of a fit Genius to second his own, of a piercing and subtle Wit, and very understanding in Secular Affairs, after having given him express Order, that as soon as ever he should be in Spain, he should do such and such a thing, and, that at his return into France, he should remit into his Hands, alone, the Memoirs of what he had transacted. This Monk succeeded very well in the Employ he undertook; but, in his Return, the Cardinal sent an express Command to him, to deliver, before he entred into France, all his Papers, into the Hands of a Gentleman who brought him his Letter. This Dervis obey'd; but he was disgraced, and the Cardinal maintained, 'Twas a Crime to obey in this Occasion; for, having once received an Order to entrust no body with these Papers, but himself, he could not be excused for delivering them to others; and, for this Reason, he forbad him to set foot within the Kingdom. This poor Religious died some time after, desperate at his Usage; and perhaps, this is the first time a Man has been punished, for too punctual Obedience.

'Tis not many Moons, since there came Post a Person of Quality from Italy, who brought considerable News to the Cardinal. 'Tis impossible for me, to express the Caresses this Favourite made him.

And,

And, to denote his Joy, he immediately presented him with a rich Diamond, and made him hope for still greater Recompences; yet, this same Person that had brought this so good News, was carried to the Bastile, as soon as he came out of the Cardinal's Closet, where he remained for some Moons without seeing any body; so that he imagined himself all that while in a Dream; but, at length, his Prison-Doors were set open, and the Cardinal would see him, and made him be given as many Hundred Crowns as he had past over Days in his Solitude. He accompanied this Present he made him, with all the Civilities imaginable, and said these Words to him: Thou art not to blame, and yet I could not but punish thee for my Fault, when I made thee enter into my Closet assoon as thou cameſt from Italy, to bring me so advantageous News. The great Desire I had to know the Particulars of the Busines, made me forget to take off from my Table a Writing of great Importance, which thou mightest have read entire; which contained the Result of Catalonia, and the Demands of this Province, and the Intrigues of France, which caused this Insurrection: And the Knowledge of so important a Mystery, might make my Prince lose the Acquisition of so Rich a Province; so that I could not imagine a more safe and speedy Remedy, than to shut thee up in a place, where it was impossible for thee to make any use of the Notices thou didst get, by my Imprudence. But, things being at present in such a Condition, wherein 'tis impossible France should receive any prejudice; I restore thee thy Liberty, and entreat thee to forget the Severity which Reasons of State have put me upon. Receive from my Hands, the Present which the King my Master makes thee; and be pleased to reckon me, amongst the Number of thy particular Friends.

I prostrate my self again at thy Feet, Holy Prelate, intreating thy Benediction, and that thou wilt look look on me as one of thy most obedient Children; having such a respect to thy Holiness, as is due to the greatest Minister of Heaven, that ever interpreted the Holy Alcoran in the Empire of the Faithful.

I also intreat thy Prayers, that God having regard to the Supplications which thou shalt offer him, would give me the grace to live honestly, and serve the Sultan faithfully, and that I may die in the Religion of my Fathers.

LETTER. XX.

To the Kaimakam.

THE Books of the Arabian Geber, are not to be found in that Language which thou desirest them in; I have sought for them, I believe, in above two hundred Booksellers Shops, and there's not one of them knows, they were ever translated into the Tongue in which thou wouldst have them.

'Tis now some time since these Books have been common in France; and there are several Persons who apply themselves to Dr. Geber's Science; but there's no Translation of them into any of the Common Languages of Europe. When I enquired for this Book, the Booksellers asked me several different Questions; and especially, Whether I sought for Receipts to prolong Life? Some there were, who asked me grinning, Whether my Design was to fix some Volatile Deity; and others answered the Question I made them on the Book of the learned Geber, only by a Silence, accompanied with some ſome Smiles; and at the ſame time putting into my Hands a Book, and ſaying to me, Here's what you look for; This is what you want, Monſieur Abbot: And this Book treated of Impoſſible Things; Of the Quadrature of the Circle in Geometry; of the Philoſophers Stone in Chymiſtry; of the Perfection of the Orator in Rhetorick; of a Republick, ſuch a one as Plato would have in his Politicks; and, of the Perpetual Motion in the Mathematicks.

I did not ſeem to be much moved at theſe Merchants Dealings with me; but I found a very honeſt Capucin, who put me in hopes of recovering the Geber thou ſeekeſt; for he aſſured me he ſaw it in Chaldee, or in the Egyptian Language, in a Learned Man's Library, without giving me any Encouragement to think it may be purchaſed, becauſe he that poſſeſſes it, is not needy of Money.

Thou wilt not, perhaps, be diſpleaſed, to know what this Religious told me concerning Chymyſtry; and he appeared to me, not only to have Learning, but Experience. He aſſured me there were in Paris alone, ſeveral Thouſands of Men that applied themſelves to this Exerciſe; and, that there are above Four Thouſand Authors who treat of this Science: That King Geber was the moſt knowing and cleareſt in his Expreſſions; and yet there are none but ſuch as are real Philoſophers and wholly bent to the Study of Nature, that can eaſily underſtand him. Whereunto he added, there were ſeveral People who laboured with great Patience, but few with thoſe Qualifications which are neceſſary to find Succeſs: He affirm'd, that ſpeculative Knowledge is fruitleſs; that one muſt have a long Practice, and continual Exerciſe: that moſt People labour to no purpoſe, becauſe they do not take Nature for their guide, no more than the Operations ſhe makes in Minerals; becauſe, according to Geber, the Principles of the Art, ſhould be thoſe of Nature ture it self; and that it is only in Metals we can find Metals; and that it is, in fine, by Metals one can succeed in the making of perfect Metals.

This good Dervis maintained, that the true way to proceed to the Perfection of this great Work, consists in the Union of the Mineral Spirits purified by Art, with the perfect Metallick Bodies, having first volatilized them, and then fixed them, in conserving all the Radical Humidity, and in augmenting the Natural Heat, by a discreet Concoction of the Composition; which comes by this marvellous Ferment, which makes all this Mass boyl, and puts it into a Fermentation: So that this marvellous Composition, insinuating it self by Penetration into the most subtle Parts of the melted Metal, by the external Fire, and radically dissolving it, it ripens it, and purges it from whatever is not of the Essence of Gold, and of Mercury, till the whole be driven out to an entire Perfection: Which made the Master of Masters, the Learned Geber say, That this perfect Elixir being the pure Substance of Metals, it seeks in the melted Metals, that which is of the same Nature with it self, and perfects it.

Now, as it is impossible for the Artist to produce any thing that is new according to his Fancy, but only to join or separate what Nature has produced; Raymund Lully would have us understand, that the Body in this Art is the Metallick Being, in which lies the Mineral Spirit, because the Metals are nothing else but this Spirit, of which consists the Philosophers Stone; and this Spirit is properly the Vertue of Minerals, in which is contained the Spring of Metals. But the famous Geber has plainly shewed that this Stone is wholly created and formed by Nature; to which the Artist neither adds or diminishes any thing, but only makes it change its place by his Preparation, which in every other respect is useless.

This

This Fryar affirms, This Mineral Body, entirely Spirituous as it is, has yet four sorts of Superfluities, of which it must be purged by the Hand of the Artist, viz. a great Humidity, the Earth which is found therein; the ordinary Sulphur which burns, and the Salt which is corrosive; and it must be purified by Calcination, Dissolution, Sublimation, and Fixation, that there may alone remain the Radical Humidity fix'd and permanent; which being afterwards united in an indissoluble manner to the perfect Body, composes this incomparable Body, which is so much sought, and so seldom found, and which is an hot Elixir, powerful to ripen and purifie all Imperfect Metals, and convert them into Gold or Silver.

There is afterwards given an Activity to the Gold, in refining it by new degrees of Fire, added to that which it already had.

Thus far went our Conversation, when an old Woman came unhappily upon us, and bereaved me of the Satisfaction of learning of this Religious, some important Secret which he seemed inclinable to entrust me with. This indiscreet and impertinent Woman, using the Liberty ordinary with the People of this Countrey, cruelly interrupted our Conversation; and I remained struck, as it were, with a Flash of Lightning, when this Knowing Fryar told me, That the Arrival of this Woman forced him to take his leave of me; and he prepared to be gone, like a Man that was expected for some weighty Affair; when casting his Eyes on my Countenance, he perceived the Perplexity and Confusion which this Separation caused in me; and to comfort me, he said thus in my Ear: I know very well, Friend, thou hast an inquisitive Soul, and designest Great Things; meet me at my Cell, and in the mean time, I'll tell thee, for thy Consolation, in plain Terms, That it has always been, and ever shall be my Opinion, that to labour profitably, one muſt follow Raymond Lully's Rules. This great Philoſopher affirms, and I am of his Mind, That to make Gold, one muſt have Gold and Mercury; and Mercury and Silver to make Silver: But, I underſtand by Mercury, that Mineral Spirit ſo refined and purified, that it purifies the very Seed of Gold, and argentifies that of Silver. Theſe are the very Words he ſpake to me.

But, in leaving me, I entreated him to tell me, Whether it was eaſie to attain to the Accompliſhment of this Great Work, and what was neceſſary for that Great End.

He anſwer'd me, 'Twas very hard, which made almoſt all People deſpair of compaſſing it; there being very few People, on whom Heaven beſtowed the neceſſary Qualifications to acquire this precious Art; that theſe Qualifications conſiſted in being a true Philoſopher, and in being perfectly ſkilled in Nature, in having a Patience Proof againſt all Diſappointments; and, that a Man ſhould be in the Flower of his Age, ſtrong and vigorous, to endure Labour, well furniſhed with Wealth, and indefatigable. Whereunto he added, That if any of theſe Qualities were wanting, one might be certain, that the other would be ſo alſo; That a Man who is unacquainted with Nature, works like a blind Man. And, that ſhould one fail of Succeſs, the Firſt, Second, Third, Fourth, nay, Fifth, or Sixth time in the Operation, he is a Fool that then grows weary, and does not again begin to ſet to work, with the ſame Earneſtneſs; and Hopes of Succeſs; and that ſhould a Man want a vigorous Health, Labour would weaken, and make him faint; and that, in fine, if one be without ſufficient Eſtate, 'tis impoſſible the Work ſhould ſucceed; which demands an entire Man, and ſuch a one as minds nothing elſe.

This

This Dervis moreover told me, as a thing certain, That ſeveral Perſons had attained to the Perfection of this Undertaking; which emplys ſo great a Number of Vertuoſo's, in all Parts of the World: For, were it not ſo, there would not be that Quantity of Gold, there is; for, all that of the Indies was not ſufficient to ſatisfie ſo many People, who mind nothing elſe but gaining of it; and that, in fine, ſuch great Treaſures which are heap'd up, and the Gold that runs in Traffick, never came out of the Mines which are in the Mountains, but that a great part has been made by Artiſts. He moreover aſſured me, That the Overſeers of the Mint in France affirmed, as a thing beyond all Queſtion, That there was more Gold brought to them, than ever came from Foreign Parts; which made him conclude, that the Art is true, and that no Man need doubt that there is ſuch a Thing as the Philoſopher's Stone.

This Converſation, although interrupted, made me ceaſe being incredulous; and if I were an Heretick in this Matter yeſterday, I begin now to have Faith and believe, only 'tis a Work extream difficult; and I do no longer wonder, there are ſo many People who deceive others, without any Deſign of doing it; and am not ſurprized, they ſhould apply themſelves to all ſorts of Perſons, not excepting Princes: For they believe ſtill, they ſhall meet with Succeſs; and not being able to furniſh the Charges they muſt be at, they uſe all ſorts of Tricks to move thoſe whom Covetouſneſs renders, in this Occaſion, very eaſie to be perſwaded; and all in general meet in their Operations, with great Hunger, Cold, Labour and Smoak.

It ſeems, as if that which hindred thoſe who have been fortunate enough to attain the Perfection of this Work, from communicating their Knowledge in this Matter, was the dread of their Prince's Power; as having oft experienced, that they are jealous at the Riches of a private Perſon. Soveraigns cannot endure, that a mean Wretch, born amongſt the dregs of the People, ſhould have in his Power wherewithal to make himſelf happy and ſeveral others; which obliges them to deprive theſe Philoſophers of the means of working, and makes them labour in ſecret, and conceal themſelves with more care, when they have finiſhed their Work. Great Men cannot eaſily ſuffer private People to become Maſters, by virtue of this Art, and to do all thoſe Wonders which by this marvellous Metal may be wrought in their Cloſets, without going to Peru, and ranſacking there the Bowels of the Earth: They know very well, that this long'd for Gold, produces every thing; gives Reputation; makes them follow one, who fled from a Man before; corrupts thoſe who appear the moſt incorruptible, opens the ſtrongeſt Doors, overthrows whole Armies, cauſes a Man to change his mind in a moment, makes him that was a poor Man, preſently talk Sentences. Nay, many Chriſtians affirm this Metal to be ſo efficacious, that it draws the Souls out of a doleful Abode, call'd Purgatory, ſo that it ſeems, as if it appeaſed God's Wrath, and brings Men to Heaven.

Theſe fore-mentioned Reaſons, obliged the cruel Diocletian, to put to Death as many Chymiſts as could be found in Egypt; and, at the ſame time to cauſe their Books to be burnt, leſt the People who were naturally ingenious, being become too powerful by the Art of making Gold, ſhould undertake a War againſt the Roman Empire. But we find, in the antient Writings of the Arabians, that Moſes having learn'd of God himſelf the Art of perfectly knowing Nature, and that of the Converſion of Metals, and making Gold, to write in Letters form'd of this Metal, the Law he preſcribed the Iſraelites: He taught taught it to Carun, a poor Man, but his intimate Friend, and near Kinſman; who being become very rich by means of this Science, had heap'd up immenſe Treaſures, and built himſelf Forty Houſes, which were filled with Gold, but were all ſwallowed up, and buried in the Earth, by the vertue of Moſes's Rod, with the Maſter of them, whom ſo great Riches had rendred proud, and made him think of withdrawing himſelf from obeying this Great Servant of God, having falſly accuſed him before the People of divers Crimes, and eſpecially of having abuſed a Virgin.

The laſt thing which was diſcovered in the Venetian Territories was a great Urn, found in an hollow Cave. In this Urn, which was conſiderably large, there was another leſs, and in it Two Pots, one full of Gold reduced into Liquor, and the other of Silver, of the ſame Faſhion, and a Lamp which ſeem'd to have burnt for many Ages. 'Twas known by the Characters on this Urn, that they were conſecrated to the God Pluto; and there were on them Latin Verſes, which ſhewed, That Maximus Olibeus had been the Author of them. Thoſe then who ſay this Art is falſe, that the beginning of it is a Lye, the middle of the Work meer Fatigue, and the End Beggary, have not ſaid true themſelves, and yet one cannot accuſe them, as having not, in ſome ſort, ſpoke the Truth.

I beſeech the Sovereign Creator of all things, from whom alone we hold what we know, as being the Great and Wiſe Architect of Nature, that he would beſtow on thee the Science of the learned Geber; that thou may'ſt be as rich as Solomon: but above all, that he would grant thee the Spirit of Adam, who was ever ſeen to live content.

LETTER XXI.

To Mehemet, an Eunuch Page to the Sultaness.

THE Adventure which thou relatedst happened in the Seraglio, shews, that Women are exposed to great Accidents. Their Condition is unhappy when they are handsome, but more when they are homely and deformed. The Fathers, Brethren, and Husbands guard the former, as Cerberus guarded the Gates of Hell; and the others guard themselves, and look on all things with Eyes of Envy and Discontent, which makes them empoyson every thing. But that which happens amongst us, is very different from what's in France, where Women enjoy almost a Liberty equal to that of Men. Not but that we see notable Adventures happen there; witness the Queen, who is Mother to a great King now Reigning, and yet lives in Exile, and as a Fugitive, amongst Strangers, through the Credit of Cardinal Richlieu, for whom she has not all the Deference she expected. And an ancient Lady, (I may call her so, now she does not hear me,) told me such things some Days past, on this occasion, which I can scarce believe my self, did I not know them to be true from else-where.

I am farther told, that this Cardinal, not having succeeded in the Design he had of marrying his Niece with a Prince of the Blood, intended (if he could) to marry her to the King's Brother: But there's no great likelihood, but so able a Minister must see into the mischievous Consequences into which this Promotion would bring him; for, it would undoubtedly draw on him the Hatred of all the Great People in the Kingdom. And, I would not not be mentioned at Constantinople, for the Author of all the News talk'd of at Paris.

But 'tis certain, this Priest sent the Chancellor, a Venerable Person, and by his Office a Man of great Authority, to seize on this Princess's Papers, in hopes he might meet with some Letter which might favour that Design. The Chancellor executed the Order he had received, but found nothing of what the Cardinal pretended; so that this Persecution served only to manifest this Prince's Virtue, who lives in such a manner, as may not only serve as an Example to all Queens, but all the Women in the World.

Some time after, this same Chancellor being come to compliment the Queen on the Birth of the Dauphin, she told him in a composed manner, but very pleasantly, That this Visit was very different from that she had received from him about a Year past.

If Persons that are seated in the Highest Degrees, be not secure from the bold Attempts of those who are infinitely below them, and who are born to serve them; the beautiful Circassian should comfort her self in the misfortune she had of being accused. If her Innocency be well proved, she will be the more pleasing to Ibrahim, and the false Accusation laid against her, will be a new Charm to him: whereas should she be found Guilty, we must grant she deserves the most dreadful Punishments; for having violated, if I may so express my self, the Sacred Nights of the Seraglio.

However, the young Persian was found disguised in Woman's Apparel in some of the neighbouring Stables: And though he, in the mid'st of the Torments he suffered, died without confessing any Thing; yet it cannot be said, he died Innocent, after such an Attempt.

I hope thou wilt inform me what has happened since thy last Letter, and in what manner the Adventure of this beautiful Slave ſhall be ended. I ſhall be much troubled for her, if ſhe be Innocent; and cannot be wholly free from Compaſſion for her, if ſhe prove Guilty.

Leave not off writing to me; and if it be poſſible, be not weary of loving me. I ſpeak in the preſence of our holy Prophet, I love thee with the ſame Affection as ever, and I dare not utter an Untruth before him.

LETTER XXII.

To the Kaimakam.

'TIS about 60 Years, ſince D. Sebaſtian, King of Portugal, died in Africk, by the Hands of the Moors; and yet his Subjects will believe him ſtill living.

He parted from Lisbon in the Year 1578. in the Deſign of re-eſtabliſhing on his Throne Muley Mehemet, Cheriff of Africk, whom his Unkle Muly Abdelemelech would bereave of his Kingdom; but in effect, to endeavour at the making himſelf Maſter of Barbary.

His Army conſiſted of a Thouſand Sail, well furniſh'd with Proviſions, few Soldiers, but a great many Nobility. This Prince was not above 25 Years of Age, when he formed this Enterprize; he was a ſtrong bodied Man, of a moderate Stature, but well ſet; his Hair was yellow, his Eyes great, and full of Fire; his Courage was not inferiour to his Strength; and he had no violent Inclination to Pleaſures, which generally take Mens Minds off from gallant Actions; he was temperate in all things; yet very forward in Undertakings, and always firm and unmoveable in greatest Dangers. He was a great Husband of his Revenues, employing them in his Subjects Defence, or to the Increase of his own Power. He was agreeable to all those that waited on him; and in the freest Conversations, he took care not to disoblige any one by sharp Raillery or distastful Sayings; and so merciful was he, that he avoided all Occasions of condemning his Subjects to Death. He passionately loved War; but 'tis thought the Expedition into Africk, wherein he perished, came from Spanish Counsels.

D. Sebastian was kill'd in fighting with an Invincible Courage. The Moors say, That his Enemies were so charmed with his Courage, that his Death drew Tears from their Eyes.

He was forsaken by his own; mortally wounded near the right Eye-brow; and pierced with Darts in several Parts of his Body. He had no Wound in his Head, because he was armed; but he had a great one in his Arm, which seemed to come from a Musket-Bullet. 'Tis said, he was buried in the Field, near a Moor, without any Ceremony, Prayers, or Company of his Relations, or Subjects. And this was the end of this Great King, who made all Africk at first to tremble.

Although the Moors rejoyced at the Death of so puissant an Enemy; yet his Friends bewailed his Misfortune: The Kingdom of Portugal celebrated his Funeral in a Magnificent Manner; and, the King of Spain proffered several Thousand Crowns for his Body, to bury him in a manner answerable to the Dignity of his Birth and Merit; and that Four Kings have since supplied his Throne; yet was there found a Man bold enough to maintain in the Face of all Italy, that he was really D. Sebastian King of Portugal. He presented himself at Venice in an As-ſembly of the wiſeſt Magiſtrates in Europe; he recited to them the Accidents of his Life; the Hiſtory of his Predeceſſors; the Misfortunes he met with in Africk, whence he retired into Calabria. He did more; for he ſtripp'd himſelf before this Illuſtrious Aſſembly; he ſhewed them Seventeen Marks on his Body, which were acknowledged with Aſtoniſhment by the Portugueſes themſelves, to be at leaſt very like thoſe which they knew their Sovereign had on his Body; and he alſo ſhewed that he had one Hand greater than the other, and a Lip diſproportionable in the ſame manner, which were the well known Marks in the Perſon of D. Sebaſtian. He talks of Ambaſſadors, which he ſent to the Republick; he cites the Anſwers he had received; and all he ſays is found conformable to the Truth: He anſwers without Heſitation, to all that is objected; which makes ſeveral of the Senate believe him to be really the King, and others take him for a Witch.

But, in fine, this Prince right or wrong, is led away to Priſon at the Solicitation of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador; where having long lain, he is ſet at Liberty under an obligation to leave the Venetian Countries in three days time.

Some Portugueſes, moved with Compaſſion, diſguiſed him in a Dervis's Habit, and conducted him ſecretly to Florence, to tranſport him afterwards to Rome; but the great Duke of Tuſcany cauſed him to be apprehended, and ſent him to the Vice-Roy of Naples. He preſented himſelf before him with his uſual Confidence, and ſurprized all that ſaw him, and heard him ſpeak; and ſeeing the Vice-Roy uncovered, he ſaid unto him with great Aſſurance, and Gravity, Be covered, Count de Lemnos; which obliged this Miniſter to ask him, By what Authority he took on him this Boldneſs? To which he anſwered, That his Authority was born with him; and that he feigned not to know him; and yet he ought to remember that King Philip, his Uncle, had sent him twice to him, and that the Sword which he then wore by his Side, was that which he then gave him.

The Sentence which the Vice-Roy gave of him, was, That he was an Impostor, who deserved to be sent to the Galleys, and should not long be from them; and wherein, 'tis said, he died some time after.

Yet the Portugueses have been perswaded, he was their real King; and do still continue of that Opinion, there being nothing which is able to make them change it. Some Persons in the World will have him to be a Magician; others, an Impostor; and the most Ignorant will have him to be a Devil, or really the King himself.

This is not the first Example of the Boldness of an Impostor; Rome saw heretofore a Man that had the Audaciousness to publish he was the real Pompey, who was kill'd in Egypt, by the Cruelty of the young Ptolomy. The Queen Artemisa found one Artemius, who had so great a Resemblance with Antiochus her Husband, whom she had caused to be murthered, that he was not known, when he put himself into the Bed of the dead King, pretending to be this Prince sick; he recommended Artemisa to his Subjects, and did several things in favour of this Princess. Under the Reign of Tiberius, was there not occasion to be surprized at the bold Answer which a Slave made to this Emperor, who questioning him, How he made himself Agrippa? answered without Hesitation, In the same manner thou hast made thy self Cæsar.

The D. Sebastian I mentioned, has not been the only one in the World; there have been Two others; one of which departing out of the Isle of Terceres, who had great Resemblance with this Prince, went into Portugal, where he said he had miraculously escaped from the Battel he lost in Africk; that he saved himself in Woods, and returned into his Kingdom, to give Peace to his People, and deliver them from the Tyranny of Strangers; but having been convicted of an Imposture, he was put to death.

'Tis said, that another being come disguised in the Habit of a Pilgrim, to Madrid it self, and having had a long and secret Conference with King Philip II. (by whom it is suspected he was known for this unhappy Prince,) was, by this King's Order, said to be poisoned in a Banquet given him by Antonio Peres.

I shall write several things to the Invincible Vizir, of which I deferred to give him Notice, because I would be certain of them, they being of Importance; and it would have been great Lightness in me, to have written them on the first Reports spread amongst the People.

Receive always with the same Goodness, the Marks I give thee of my Obedience; send me thy Orders and Counsels, which I pray him that has created all things, may be good and profitable to the Empire of those precious Ones, which he has enlightned with his Truth; to the end they may arrive at the Eternal Glory and Pleasures promised as from his part, by his Holy Prophet; and I also pray him to preserve thy Life and Authority.

Paris, 24th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1642.

LET-

LETTER XXIII.

To the venerable Muſti, Prince of the Religion of the Turks.

'TIS not known whether it be the Recompence of a good or bad Action, which Cardinal Richlieu has ſent with ſo great Secrecy. Thoſe that give an ill Interpretation of the beſt Things, ſay, it is not to be ſuppoſed, there could be ſent in a dark Night, a Mule laden with Gold, to an unknown Perſon; but this muſt denote ſomething very extraordinary; and thoſe who pretend to know more than others, are ſometimes more ignorant than thoſe who pretend to know nothing. For, who can penetrate into what ſo crafty a Miniſter does, in the moſt retired Places of his Cloſet? His Actions are ſo myſterious, that when he looks towards the Eaſt, his Deſigns lye a direct contrary way. He deceives thoſe who watch him moſt narrowly. I cannot inform thee then of any thing certain: The Matter is variouſly related; But thus I think it was: The Cardinal cauſed, ſome Days paſt, to be loaded on a Mule a great Sum of Money; he ordered him to whom he entruſted the Conduct of him, to go into a Wood, at ſuch an Hour; telling him, he ſhould find a Man of ſuch a Stature, ſuch a coloured Hair, and in ſuch a Habit, who was to ſay certain Words to him; whereupon he was to deliver the Mule with his Lading into his Cuſtody. It is ſaid, this Perſon found the Party deſcribed, who would not receive the Preſent, it being not the full Sum agreed upon; That this being related to the Cardinal, he ſent the ſame Perſon with the Supplement of what was wanting to the Sum promiſed, mised the Night following, where the unknown Person received the full Payment. If this Story be true, as it is affirm'd here to be, this is an odd kind of way of making Presents, or paying Debts.

But thou must be assured, this is not the first time the Cardinal has paid his Creditors in this sort.

I have been told for certain, that there being arriv'd at Paris a Stranger, ill clad, of small Stature, and without any Attendance; he made him be paid down immediately upon his Arrival, Six Hundred Thousand Crowns, without any body's knowing what became of so happy a Creditor, nor from what Merit proceeded so high a Recompence; tho' some People affirm, that so great a Sum is fallen into the Coffers of the Suedish General.

Receive charitably the Marks I give thee of my Obedience and Desire which I have of giving thee Satisfaction; and, entreat our Great Prophet, that I may be worthy in the other World, to kiss thy Feet, and be acknowledged to be of the Number of those for whom he has written his Holy Alcoran.

Paris, 25th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER XXIV.

To Berber Mustapha, Agavat at Constantinople.

I Cannot tell whether thou hast Knowledge of the Use of Defiances, which are made amongst the Christians, when they be dissatisfied or offended with one

one another's, which they term Acts of Honour, or the Marks of a gallant Spirit.

This Custom of Duels, is become so common in Italy, and especially in the Kingdom of Naples, that the greatest Affairs, as well as the smallest, are therein decided by the Sword; and the Gentry affirm this to be the best way of terminating their Disputes and Quarrels; which belonging only to them, cannot be referred, nor so well determined by the grave and cool proceedings of Courts of Justice.

This invention of deciding these Differences by Arms, either with the Sword or Pistol alone, in a close or open Field, naked in their Shirts, so that one has no Treachery to fear, is a Way of drawing Satisfaction for the Injuries received, found out by Men of great Courage, who more esteem their Honour than their Lives. The offended Person sends a Challenge to him from whom he has received the Injury; this note of Defiance, is express'd in choice and elegant Words, which invite and press the Offender to fight, in such a Place, on Horseback or on Foot, cloathed or in their Shirts, single or attended by an equal Number of Friends, which they call Seconds, with Sword and Dagger, or Sword alone, or Pistol. If the Challenge be received, he is civilly treated who brings it, and, it may be, has rich Presents given him. But before they fight, the Enemies embrace, as if they were reconciled; and then in an Instant, following the Inclinations of their Hatred and Revenge, they wound one another, they spill each others Blood, and oftentimes their Souls go out furious, through the Wounds they have made.

Those that have the Honour of dying in these Combats, do oft refuse their Lives, which a generous Enemy would give them, believing they cannot live without Shame, should they receive them from an Enemy.

But

But, the Roman Church, as a note of the Horror she conceives at these Combats, shuts Heaven's Doors against the Souls of those who leave this Life without doing Penance, denying Burial to those who die in the Field of Battle; or, yield them only that, which is granted in some Parts of the East-Indies to certain Women, who prostitute themselves, whose Corps are thrown as a Prey to the Birds of the Field; and other Animals, who live on Carrion.

It is not only in Italy People kill one another in single Combats; 'tis the same in France, amongst the Nobility, who manage these Combats in a different Sort. The best Friends tear one another on the smallest Occasion, and they prepare for a Duel in such a manner, as will appear to thee without doubt ridiculous.

These Enemies Sup together the Night before the Combat, and often lie together in the same Bed. The Friends, which serve as Seconds, do the same; and when they are come to the Place where they be to fight, a Friend is forced by the Maxims of Honour, to cut his own Throat with the Man's he perhaps most loves. Nothing happens more frequently in Paris, than these kind of Combats, and they produce several Adventures, of which I would give thee an Account, had I not a particular Story to tell thee on this Subject. It is of a Challenge of a Spanish Prince, sent to a King, whose Crown could not exempt him from a Letter of Defiance.

Thou hast, without doubt, heard of what has hapned in Lisbon, where D. John de Braganza has been elected and proclaimed King of Portugal, as the true Heir of the Royal Race. Thou knowest also, he drove the Spaniards out of his Kingdom. The Duke of Medina Sidonia, a Grandee of Spain, and this new King's Brother in-law could not hinder, der himself from being suspected, of having underhand assisted this Prince to ascend the Throne; whether it be true, or an Artifice of his Enemies, God only knows. But however, it's certain, that the Count Duke d'Olivarez, the King of Spain's chief Minister, sent an Order to him, to appear at Court, to justifie himself from this Suspicion; he thought to clear himself perfectly from the Jealousies of the Catholick King, by sending a Challenge to D. John of Braganza, to oblige him to fight with him; which Letter of Defiance was conceived in these Terms.

D. Gaspar Alonzo Peres Guſman the Good, Duke of the Town of Medina Sidonia, Marquis, Count, and Lord of the Town of St. Lucar of Barameda, Captain-General of the Ocean, and Gentleman of his Catholick Majesty's Chamber. I say, that John of Braganza, who was never but a Duke, calls himself King of Portugal; that his Treason, known to all the World, is detestable, and in Abomination, for having thrown a Stain on the Faithful House of Guſman, which has never failed in any Duty to her Sovereign; and for this reason I desie and challenge to a single Combat, Body to Body, with Seconds or without Seconds, this Don John, heretofore Duke of Braganza, leaving all this to his Choice, as also the Arms or Weapons, and Place of Combat. Written near Valencia d'Alcantara, where I shall expect Fourscore Days News of him; and the last Twenty Days, I shall transport my self into the Place he shall appoint, accompanied, or alone, with such Arms as he shall prescribe.

Not only the Tyrant of Portugal shall be advertised of my Challenge, but all Europe, and the whole World. I pretend to make known in this Combat, the infamous Action of D. John, and in Case he does not accept of this Defiance, and faults in the Duty of one who is born a Gentleman, I desire this King, who is only a Phantasm, may perish in some sort or other; I promise to give my Town of St. Lucar, the Principal Seat of the Duke of Medina, to him that shall kill him.

In the mean time, I entreat my Lord, the King of Spain, to give me no Command in his Armies; but to grant, I may only serve him as a Volunteer, with a Thousand Horse, which I will maintain at my own Charge, till that serving him in this manner, I may help to recover the Kingdom of Portugal, and may bring along with me, and cast at His Majesty's Feet, the Duke of Braganza, if he will not fight with me in the Manner I proposed.

If thou shewest this Letter of Defiance to the Janizaries, that Militia which is terrible to all Nations, whom nothing can resist, when they execute the Grand Signior's Orders, they will tell thee what such a Challenge requires from Men of Courage, and explain to thee the Laws which People of Valour prescribe to themselves: For my part, who am Ignorant of the Art of War, and the Maxims of such as make Profession of Arms, I shall not make any Judgment hereupon; only take the Liberty to ask of thee, if the King of Portugal accepted the Combat, and killed the Duke of Medina, which of the Two would have been declared Infamous? Whether there be any Certainty in the Decisions made by Arms; I am willing to think, Justice is on the Side of the Conqueror: But if, on the contrary, the Event of the Duel be uncertain, I take it to be a foolish thing for the Duke to expose himself, and thus Affront the King his Brother-in-Law. In theory the Duke's Prudence is not to be admired in this Occasion, and Braganza has had the Advantage on his Side, seeing he has shewed by his Conduct, that he is effectually King of Portugal.

I cannot but call these Christians Fools, who suffer such Customs among them, and yet adore a Messias, who is a God of Peace; and who call us Barbarians, when they are the only People that teach teach us, and all other Nations, the Arts of single Combats, which is the most pernicious Custom that can be introduced amongst Men, who cut one anothers Throats oftentimes on slight Occasions, and become Prodigals of that Treasure with which the Immortal has intrusted them. Neither can I any more approve of Kings and Princes of the same Beliefs, making War with one another, as we see every Day amongst those who profess the Christian Religion; which yet, as far as I can find, scarcely permits any Wars, but such as are Defensive.

Pardon this tedious Letter, excuse my Conjectures in it, and honour me with thy Commands, which will be respected by me as so many Obligations.

Paris, 25th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER XXV.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem at Constantinople.

WE hear of nothing now-a-days but Wars and Conspiracies, Seditions, Treasons, Infidelities, and Revolutions of State, and it is in the Kingdoms of Vice, wherein these Plagues of Heaven make these Disorders, I mean, in the Christian Countries. Infidelity reigns among the People of Catalonia, England, and Portugal; the Revolutions which have happed in Barcellona have no Example; the Defiance or the Challenge of a Subject to a King, as is that of the Duke of Sidonia to the King of Portugal, as his Brother-in-law, and his Enemy, does equally surprize all the World. We have reason to think, that God is angry with the Christians, when we consider Flanders, Germany, Italy, and the Frontiers of Spain pestered with Wars, which they make one against another. The Animosity of most of the Great People of France against the Cardinal Favourite, induces them to lay Plots against his Life; whence we may see, that Great Places are good for nothing, but to expose Men to Great Dangers. The last Conspiracy discovered against the Life of D. John IV. of Portugal, raised to the Throne by the Nobility, and betrayed by the same Nobility; not by the whole Body of them, but by a small Number of those who had taken an Oath of Fidelity to him as well as the rest, does plainly shew us, That there is nothing in this World whereon a Man may rely with any Certainty, and that here are many People who undertake just Actions, by the motions of an unjust and turbulent Spirit, which cannot suffer things to remain long in a quiet State, and aspire continually after Change, and to whom every Thing is good that is new. I shall relate to thee in few Words, this last Event. Thou hast been informed of the others, by the Letters I have written to thee, (Invincible General of the Ottoman Armies, and Seeward of the Emperor's Laws, who is the Sovereign of Sovereigns) and by those which the Kaimakym and the Bassa's have received from me, who are obliged to give thee an Account of what ever comes to their Knowledge.

Christians,

Several of the Great Ones in Portugal, and amongst them, some of the new King's Kindred, hatched a Conspiracy against him, and resolved to put the Kingdom again into the Spaniard's Hands, and entirely ruin the Family of Braganza. The principal Author of this Conspiracy, was D. Sebastian de Matros, Archbishop of Bragne, the Count Duke d'Olivarez's Creature, to whom he owed his Fortune. The chief who conspired with this Seditious ous Priest, where the Marquis de Ville Reale, and the Count d' Armamar, these Two Men of great Birth and Credit, soon drew several others into their Party, some by the Hope of Recompences, and others through Weariness of obeying their new Sovereign, or weary with the new Form of State, which they thought might change to their Advantage. They long held a secret Intelligence with the Catholick King's Council, who promised them all possible Assistance for the Execution of their Design, and after that infinite Recompences.

This Conspiracy was to produce a dreadful Tragedy, wherein all the Blood of the Royal House and Family of Braganza, was to be spilt. The King was to be the first Victim, with his Children and the Queen his Wife. D. Duart also was to be put to Death, who was kept close Prisoner in the Castle of Milain. A Domestick, affectioned to his Master, and who was attentive to what past, delivered the King and Family of Braganza out of this Danger. He was ordinarily employed in secret Intrigues, and made frequent Courses into Spain to discover the Designs of the Court of Madrid. He met by chance in an Inn, a Man who seemed of a mean Condition born in the Kingdom of Bohemia, with whom having entered into a strict Friendship, as it happens usually amongst Travellers, he came to discover he was often dispatched by the Catholick King's Principal Minister, on Affairs of great Weight; and that he expected in a short Time to raise his Fortune to a considerable Pitch, being entrusted with Packets of Letters containing Things of the highest Importance to the State. The crafty Portuguese soon discerning he might get out Secrets of great Concernment from this imprudent Man, for the good of his Master, resolved to kill him in a desart Place, where they were to pass; which he did, having first made him drunk with strong Wine. As soon as he had done done his Work, he ſtript him, and found Letters and Inſtructions to the Conſpirators, which he ſpeedily carried to D. John, who thereby diſcovered the whole Conſpiracy.

Others ſay, that D. Alphonſo of Portugal, Count de Vermiſſa (having been ſolicited by the Archbiſhop of Brague, who though he could eaſily bring him into the Conſpiracy, being diſcontented at the King, for taking away from him a great Office) went to his Sovereign, and freely diſcovered to him the Conſpiracy which had been made, to deprive him both of his Crown and Life: And, 'tis added, That this Count appeared ſince one of the hotteſt of the Accomplices, till the very inſtant wherein they were to execute their Project; at which time they were apprehended, and puniſhed as they deſerved.

Others ſay, the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the King's Brother-in-law, who appeared to the Accomplices to be of the Plot, gave notice of it to the King his Brother. In fine, the Conſpirators were executed in ſeveral Places after different Manners, where the People aſſembled, deteſting their Crime, ſhewing great ſatisfaction in their Deaths, and bleſſ Heaven for preſerving their Sovereign.

They were apprehended one Day, wherein the King declared he would appear in Publick; and all the Nobility being met, he cauſed the Guilty to be call'd one after another, who were all made Priſoners without any Diſturbance. In the mean time, as many Troops as were near Lisbon were in Arms; and the People alſo took Arms to defend their Prince, if need required. The Inquiſitor General was treated as Guilty, for knowing of the Conſpiracy, and not diſcovering it. The Great Treaſurer Lawrence Pides, who kept the Keys of the firſt Court of the Palace, was to enter in the Night with an hundred men well Armed, and begin the Tragedy. The Naval Army which rode at Anchor in the Port of Belem, was to be burnt; and there were Men in each Veſſel, who were to ſet them on fire. The Four Corners of the City were alſo to be fired; to the end, that the People, the Soldiers, and Guards of the Palace being buſied in putting it out, nothing might hinder the Execution of their Deſign; and the good Arch-Biſhop was in the mean time to appear in Publick, bearing about in his Hand what they call the Holy Sacrament; crying with a loud Voice, Let the Law of Jeſus flouriſh, and that of Moſes die, and come to an end.

The Marquis de Ville Reale, and the Duke de Camine his Son, near of Kin to the King, have loſt their Heads on a Scaffold, with the Count d'Armamar, and D. Auguſtin Manuel; and the People beheld their Death without any Compaſſion, only ſhewed ſome Regret at the Loſs of the young Duke of Camine, who paſſing before the Body of his Father all bloody, threw himſelf on the Ground to kiſs his Feet; asking him a Thouſand Times Pardon, tho' he was the Author of this Misfortune. There were Others, who ſuffered a more Ignominious Death; who were not only Hang'd, but Quartered, and thoſe Parts of their Bodies ſet up in ſeveral Places for an Example, and to put the People in Mind, that ſuch Attempts ſeldom eſcape unpuniſhed.

As to the Arch-Biſhop of Brague, and other Eccleſiaſticks his Accomplices, they are kept with great Care in Priſons, in Expectation of Commiſſioners from Rome, without which Prelate's Conſent, they can do nothing farther to them. The King wore Mourning Four Hours for the Marquiſs de Ville Reale, and the Duke de Camine his Son; according to the Cuſtom of the Chriſtians, who are wont to Apparel themſelves in Black for the Death of their Kindred, to denote the Sorrow they conceive at their Loſs; and this Ceremony is term'd Mourning, which which sometimes lasts a whole Year. I will write to thee the Particulars of what may happen in the War which is now carrying on between the Spaniards and Portugueses, who perceive already on the Frontiers Castilian Troops; and I shall not be wanting in any thing which may mark my Zeal and Exactness.

An happy Slave will Mahmut think himself, if he can acceptably serve the Invincible Vizir, by whom the Great Emperor of the Faithful discovers his Will to all the People of the Universe, whom God has created to obey him.

Writ by a

Turkish Spy,

Who lived Five and Forty Years, Undiscover'd, at

PARIS:

Giving an Impartial Account to the Divan at Constantinople, of the most Remarkable Transactions of Europe; And discovering several Intrigues and Secrets of the Christian Courts (especially of that of France) continued from the Year 1642, to the Year 1682.

The Fourth Edition.

Written Originally in Arabick, Translated into Italian, and from thence into English, by the Translator of the First Volume.

LONDON, Printed by E. Holt, for Joseph Hindmarsh at the Sign of the Golden Ball in Cornhill, over against the Royal Exchange, and Richard Sare at Gray's-Inn-Gate in Holbourn, 1694

To the READER.

THree Years are now elaps'd, since the First Volume of Letters, written by a Spy at Paris, was publish'd in English. And, it was expected, that a Second should have come out long before this. The favourable Reception which that found amongst all Sorts of Readers, would have encouraged a speedy Translation of the Rest, had there been extant any French Edition, of more than the First Part. But, after the strictest Enquiry, none could be heard of: And, as for the Italian, our Booksellers have not that Correspondence in those Parts, as they have in the more Neighbouring Countries, of France and Holland. So, that it was a Work despaired of, to recover any more of this Arabian's Memoirs. We little dreamt, that the Florentines had been so busie in Printing, and so successful in Selling the continued Translation of these Arabian Epistles; till it was the Fortune of an English Gentleman to travel in those Parts last Summer, and discover the happy News. I will not foreſtal his Letter, which is annexed to this Preface, for the Satisfaction of the World: but only acquaint you, that upon the Receipt of it, the Perſon to whom it was directed, was ſo well pleaſed with the Propoſal, That he made it his immediate Buſineſs, to find out the Engliſh Tranſlator of the Firſt Volume, as judging him to be the fitteſt Perſon; which being done, he immediately gave an Account of his Proceedings to Mr. Saltmarſh at Amſterdam, who ſent him over Two Tomes of the Turkiſh Spy in Italian, with promiſe of the Reſt when theſe were made Engliſh.

One of theſe I here preſent you with, and the Other will ere long be ready for the Preſs.

I need not ſay any Thing of the Original Arabic, or of the Author, the Place of his Abode, and how his Writings came to Light. Sufficient has been ſpoken on that Subject, in the Preface to the Firſt Part. I ſhall only add, add, That if his Style may ſeem in this Part, to vary ſometimes from the Firſt Volume, it muſt be attributed to the Difference of the Languages from whence they are Tranſlated; it being impoſſible to obſerve an equal Idiom, in following Two ſuch different Languages, as French and Italian: The One dancing in ſoft Meaſures, delicate Cadencies and ſmooth Periods; the Other, advancing in lofty Strains, keeping a Roman Pace, full of Maſculine and Sententious Gravity.

Neither can the Arabian himſelf, be ſuppoſed always in the ſame Temper; or, that his Style ſhould be all of a Piece. In ſome Places, where he treats of Sieges and Battels, he ſeems to foot the Pyrrick Meaſures in Proſe; there breathes a certain Martial Ardor in his Words. In other Places, on the ſame Subject, he goes on like an Impartial Hiſtorian, barely relating Matter of Fact, without any Flowers or Gloſſes. He ſeems not to trifle with Philoſophy, or Religion; but, handles the One in the peculiar Dialect of the East, and treats of the Other, in the caſtigate Language of the Weſtern Schools, to ſhew, he had been converſant in the Academies; as he himſelf profeſſes, Letter XX. Book I. Vol. I. In a Word, throughout all his Letters, there is a Queintneſs of Expreſſion, peculiar to the Arabians: And, however he may vary in his Style, yet his Sence retains the ſame Edge; he is lively to the very laſt. Nay, as far as I can perceive, both his Language, Sence, and Judgment grow more correct, as he advances in Years. And, you'll find ſome Difference between his Letters of 1637. and 1660.

Expect the whole Series of them, as faſt as they can conveniently be publiſhed, the Third Volume being almoſt ready for the Preſs: In which, the Reader will find the ſtrangeſt Revolutions and moſt amazing Accidents, that ever happ'ned in the World ſince the Creation; with many French Intrigues and Court-Policies, which would never have come to Light, had it not been for this ſubtle Arabian. Farewel.

A LETTER

From Mr. Daniel Saltmarſh, to his Friend in London, concerning the Italian Copy of the Turkiſh Spy.

SIR,

TRavelling through Italy this Summer, and coming to Ferrara about the Middle of June, I made ſome ſtay in that City, in Compliance with the Importunity of my Siſter, the Wife of Signior Nicolao Valentini, formerly Merchant in London. During my Abode at her Houſe, I was brought acquainted with that Eminent and Learned Phyſician, Julio de Medicis, of the Houſe of Florence, and late Student at Padua. This accompliſh'd Perſon, receiv'd me with ſingular Humanity and Friendſhip: In all his Deportment, giving Proofs of a Diſpoſition worthy of his Character, and the Blood which runs in his Veins. He is univerſally Learned; and, by his prodigious Reading, (which cannot be hid from thoſe who converſe with him,) he ſeem'd to me a Walking Library. You cannot name an Author of Note, with whom he is not acquainted; being a careful Collector, or rather an Engrosser of all remarkable Books. He gave me familiar Access to his Library, which, according to the best Computation I could make, consisted of no less than Six Thousand choice Treatises. You know my Inclination, and will easily believe, that I took no small Delight, in the Liberty I had not only to survey, but also to make use of this Treasure, so long as I stay'd in Ferrara. I was there daily, and thought that Time misspent, which my other Obligations took from my Study. Among other Books, I chanc'd to open the Italian Translation of the Turkish Spy, which was so celebrated all over Europe, and which I had read both in French and English. I had the Curiosity to peruse it over, and found it exactly to agree with those Translations I had seen: which made me ask this Gentleman, Whether there were no more Volumes of it printed? He presently shewed me Six more, and told me, the Eighth was in the Press Over-joy'd at this News, I asked him, Where I might furnish my self with those Seven Volumes already Printed? He assured me, the First Impressions were all Sold off, but that they would be reprinted again. I expressed some Sorrow and Concern, that I could not procure those Books; when, with an unparallell'd Generosity, he frankly bestowed those Seven Volumes upon me.' Tis true, at our first Acquaintance, I had obliged him with a Present, on which, I believe, he set a greater Price, than on these Books; it being a Watch of most curious Workmanship, made by One of the greatest Artists in Italy. However, I fansy'd my Gift returned Seven-fold in these Books. I brought them along with me through Germany into Holland, where I keep them as a Secret Treasure; being desirous, if possible, that the Six Volumes which are not yet Translated out of Italian, might first speak my Native Tongue, that so we may not always be obliged to the French, for the most acceptable Products of the Press. Knowing therefore, the singular Delight you take in Enterprizes of this Nature, and how much it may lie in your Way to procure a Translation of these Volumes, by reason of your great Acquaintance with Learned and Ingenious Men, I offer you the Refusal of this Undertaking; both for the Friendship that is between us, and because I know none so fit to manage this Design, as your self. I will willingly venture a Share in the Cost, but I would have no more than a Third Person.

Perſon concern'd in it. If you accept of this Propoſal, I will ſend you the Italian Volumes, and leave the Succeſs to your Conduct. I can aſſure you, that none but the Firſt Part is as yet tranſlated into French, or any other Language except the Italian; and, the following Tomes, are not to be had for Money. Therefore, we have a fair Opportunity of obliging the Nation, with a Work ſo long expected, and ſo much deſired by all that have ſeen the Firſt Volume. My Occaſions require me, to ſpend this Winter at Amſterdam; but, I hope in the Spring, to ſee you at London. In the Interim am,

SIR,

Amſterdam Sept. 9. 1690.

Your, &c.

Daniel Saltmarſh.

BOOK I.

LETTER I.

Mahmut the Arabian, faithful Slave of Sultan Ibrahim, to Bechir Baſſa, His Highneſſes Chief Treaſurer at Conſtantinople.

I Know not whether it be a Vice or a Vertue, to be fearful in my Circumſtances. I am no Stoick, nor can I pretend an Exemption from the Common Paſſions of Men. However, 'tis not for my ſelf I am ſolicitous, but I conſult the Good of my Commiſſion. There is is Difference between Caution and Fear; and, Appre-henſion of Danger, is not to be termed Puſillanimity.

I have written Six Letters to Carcon at Vienna, but have received no Anſwer theſe Four Moons. This Neglect puts me upon Thinking; and I am puzzled to find out an Excuſe for him. I would fain continue my good Opinion of his Honeſty, without forfeiting my Senſe. For, although I am not naturally ſuſpicious, yet Experience has taught me, to number Jealouſie among the Cardinal Vertues.

Not to amuſe thee, I am afraid of Treachery. Carcon knows the Secret of my Commiſſion, and it lies in his Power to do much Miſchief. Yet I may wrong the Man; perhaps he is dead: And there are no Poſts that bring News from the Grave. If he be in the Region of Silence, and expired in his Integrity, the Two Black Angels ſhall have no Power to hurt him. But, I wonder I ſhould have no Intelligence of his Death, neither from the Miniſters of the Port, nor from Kiuprili the Jew. I tell thee, I am uneaſie till I know the Truth.

When I ſit in my Chamber, and hear any diſcourſing in the Houſe, I imagine 'tis about me; when I go along the Streets, if any Man faſtens his Eyes on me, he arreſts me with Fear and Apprehenſion. 'Tis true, I am willing to undergo the worſt they can inflict; but, it would extremely enhaunce the Sorrows of Death, to ſee the Secrets of the Sublime Port, become the Scorn and Deriſion of Infidels.

For theſe Reaſons, I have removed my ſelf about a League from Paris, pretending it is for my Health, truſting the Conveyance of my Letters, and other Buſineſs to Eliachim, who for ought I know, may prove a Reed of Ægypt.

I deſire thee, nay I conjure thee, to ſend a ſpeedy Supply of Money, without which 'tis impoſſible for poor Mahmut, the Vileſt Slave of the Great and Invincible Ibrahim, to perform what is expected of him.

The Great God, reward thy Fidelity with unfading Treaſures.

Paris, 10th of the 7th. Moon,

according to the Chriſtian Style.

LETTER II.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

THE God of War ſeems to eſpouſe the Quarrel of the Swedes; and all the Planets contribute to their Proſperity; Even Venus her ſelf, has for a while laid aſide her uſual Softneſs, appearing now in the Field arm'd Cap-a-pe, with a Train of Swediſh Amazons at her Heels.

Thou wilt think I Romance in telling thee this, and only temporize with thy Genius, having often heard thee paſſionately admire the valiant Acts of Semiramis and other Eſ- ſtern Virago's; but, aſſure thy ſelf, that the Suedes after ſome late Battels, when they went to bury their Dead, ſtripping them of their Cloaths, found ſeveral of the Fair Sex under the Diſguiſe of Men, among which there were ſome of Quality.

It is ſaid, that one of theſe, was ſeen to engage Duke Albert himſelf, with a matchleſs Bravery and Courage; the Duke being Twice unhorſed by her, and as often remounted by his vigilant Squires.

Thoſe that pretend to know more than the Common Sort, ſay, that Revenge was the Motive which brought this Lady into the Field, having received a groſs Affront from Duke Albert in the German Court. However, the Duke died of the Wounds he received of this Bellona, and ſhe ſurvived not to triumph over her dead Enemy.

After this, the Suedes, under the Command of General Torſtenſon, marched into Sileſia; took Glotzgow by Storm the 12*th*. of the 5*th*. Moon; and Sucinez, the 7*th*. of the 8*th*. Moon.

And, as if nothing were able to diſcourage or baffle the Indefatigable Mind of this Great General, he inveſted the ſtrong Town of Olmitz in Moravia, and took it after Fourteen Days Siege. The Poſts are arrived this Morning with this News.

Be ſtrong and of good Courage, and God ſhall give thee Victory in Battel, when thou fighteſt againſt the Infidels. Abſtain from Wine, and from Oppreſſion. And receive this Advice, as a Teſtimony of my Eſteem and Friendſhip.

Paris, 20th. of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER III.

To Ibrahim Chanregil, Chief Boſtangi, or Gardiner to the Sultan.

THou that art daily converſant with the Eldeſt Products of the Earth, and canſt call the whole Vegetable Family by their Proper Names, tell me whether there be ſuch a Plant, as by its baneful Influence blaſts all that grows within Ten Cubits of its Root. I would not put ſuch a Queſtion to thee, had I not lately ſeen ſomething in the Garden of a certain Nobleman near Paris, which makes me think 'tis true They call it here [the ill Neighbour] becauſe it preys (they ſay) on all the Herbage that is near it, riſing and flouriſhing by their Fall. Indeed, at that time I ſaw it, there was a wither'd Circle round it; whilſt this devouring Sprout look'd gay and full, augmented by the Spoils of Neighbouring Graſs. A proper Emblem of Oppreſſion; I wiſh 'twere growing in the Gardens of all Cruel Tyrants, that in this Natural Glaſs they might behold their Voracious Spirits.

I will not thus call in Queſtion thy Knowledge of an Herb, which ſhuns all Humane Touch. Here is one in the ſame Garden, which the Nobleman boaſts was by thy Hands cropt from the Sultan's Garden, and being ſet in a Pot of Earth preſented to him. Thou didſt not well conſult thy Safety, in ſuch a grand Preſumption, nor yet the Honour of thy Sovereign Maſter, who (ſhould it ever reach his Ears) would ſoon tranſplant thee from the Garden of the Seraglio, to the Elyſian Fields.

Thou oughteſt to receive this Reprimand with higheſt Gratitude, ſince it will not ſhut thee out of thoſe pleaſant Walks and Groves within the High Imperial Walls. Uſe more Prudence another time; and ſcorn ſuch eaſie Condeſcenſions to Infidels. Say, that I am thy Friend in this Advice; and, in Recompence, I only deſire this good Office of thee, To watch the Motions of my Enemies. There are no leſs than Three Great Officers of the Seraglio, hammering out my Ruine. Thou knoweſt who I mean. Keep thy Integrity. The ſly inſinuating Words of Shaſkim Iſthan, the Black Eunuch, ſpoken not long ago in my Diſgrace to the Principal Secretary of State, quickly echoed to my Chamber in Paris. Be Silent and Wiſe.

of the Year 1642.

LETTER

LETTER IV.

To Muzlu Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State at Conſtantinople.

IF it were lawful for me to take the Oath of our Holy Prophet; I would ſwear by the Hour of the Evening, that thy News is welcome.

I had ſcarce finiſh'd our appointed Devotions after Sun-ſet, when the Poſt brought me thy Diſpatch, which informs me, that Carcoa at Vienna is dead.

I rejoice not in the Death of an honeſt Slave to Ibrahim; let Flowers ſpring from the Duſt of his Grave. Neither can I mourn for a Man, that may be gone to New and Richer Poſſeſſions; Yet I am pleaſed, that he quitted the Old fairly, and has left behind him an Odour of Vertue. A Man in His Poſt, is attack'd with ſtrong Temptations, and he that reſiſts to the End, merits a Wreath gathered from the Tree of Life.

Thou mayeſt think, 'tis with more eaſe I receive the News of Carcoa's Death than of his Infidelity; not, that I value the Rack or any other Tortures, with which the Policy of State uſes to draw Confeſſions of Capital Crimes. But, I would not have the Grand Affairs of the Ottoman Port, come within the Verge of a Scrutiny.

This News is the best Cure for the Illness I pretended, when I exchang'd Paris for the Country Air, Ten Days ago; whereof Bechir Bassa has received an Account.

I am now returned to my old Lodging, and am congratulated for my speedy Recovery, by them that knew not my true Distemper.

Thou informest me, that by the Order of the Divan, one Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew, is appointed Successour of Carcoa. I wish he may acquit himself as well.

The Five Hundred Zechins thou hast ordered me by him, will be very welcome to a Man who his been forced to retrench many Charges, hat he might the better serve the Grand Signior.

The King of Spain may wish, that he could conclude a Peace on as easie Terms with the French King, as the Sophy of Persia has with Sultan Ibrahim.

None but God and his Prophet know the Zeal with which I serve the Sublime Port.

LETTER

LETTER V.

To the Kaimacham.

I Shall now acquaint thee with the Death of the Queen-Mother and Dowager of France, who fell a Sacrifice to the Ambition of the Cardinal of Richlieu, as thoſe of her Party do commonly ſuggeſt. For, being highly diſguſted at his Counſels, and Intrigues, eſpecially his playing the Incendiary, and inflaming thoſe of the Blood-Royal one againſt another, ſhe departed from France, and by a kind of Voluntary Baniſhment, expoſed her ſelf to ſo many Inconveniences, Hardſhips, and Rigors of Fortune, as ſeemed to haſten her End; Her Great Spirit chuſing rather to break, than bow to the turbulent Cardinal.

She Sojourned in Flanders, Holland, England and the Empire. Her Travels being checquer'd all along with a Mixture of Good and Evil. Here meeting with Reſpect, there with Indifference and Coldneſs, if not Contempt. In ſome Places, her Misfortunes were pitied, and the Cardinal blamed for Perſecuting ſo Great and Good a Queen: In others, the Cardinal was Juſtified, and her Conduct cenſured and condemned. And ſhe accuſed her ſelf, for raiſing him to the Power of doing her theſe Injuries. At length, tired out with the Fatigues of State, and grown ſick of the World, ſhe betook her ſelf to a Monaſtery in Cologne, where, after she had spent some time in Religious Preparations for another World, she expired the 3d. of this Instant Moon.

It was placed among the Remarkables by some, that the same Day She died, the Cardinal of Richlieu fell sick; which Sickness yet continues upon him. But, whether to appease the Ghost of his deceased Mistress, whom he had so unjustly persecuted; or, to mollifie the Resentments of the People, is uncertain: Yet, notwithstanding his dangerous Illness, he every Day ventures to the Temple, and performs the Mysteries of their Law for her Soul. The whole Court and City, is in Mourning for this Great Queen; and general Murmurings and Complaints, are raised against the Cardinal on this Occasion; especially among the Common People, who are so far from entertaining a better Opinion of him, for his daily Appearance at the Altar on Behalf of the Queen's Soul, that they esteem it but an Officious Hypocrisie, a Medly of Priest-Craft and State-Artifice.

Here is a Report about the City, that the Queen's Ghost appear'd to the Cardinal, as soon as she was dead, severely reproaching him with his Ambition and Ingratitude, and telling him, That tho he was laying the Foundation of an Immortal Project, yet he should never live to see it thrive; but warned him to prepare for Judgment, for that he should not see another Year in Mortal State; upon which, they say, he immediately sickned. And here are Prophecies privately scattered about, foretelling telling his Death in a ſhort time. This is certain, he labours under an unaccountable Diſtemper, his Body ſtrangely waſting, as if it would evaporate it ſelf into Air; for, he ſeems to be in a manner dried up.

My Duty and Devoir to thee, Sage Miniſter, would not let me be at Reſt till I had prevented the Poſts, by giving thee a more timely Account of theſe Occurrences, by a Merchant for whom his Veſſel waits at Marſeilles. To morrow he takes his Leave of Paris, and once aboard he makes directly for Conſtantinople, whither he will bring the firſt News, of the Death of one of the Greateſt Queens upon Earth; in whoſe Royal Veins ran the Blood of the Emperours, Ferdinand and Charles V. She was married to Henry the Great; and, beſides her Son now Reigning in France, ſhe matched her Daughters to the Two Potent Monarchs of England and Spain.

The moſt High and Omnipotent, ſole Monarch of Heaven and Earth, reward thy Services and Fidelity to our Invincible Sultan, with the ſupreme Joys of Paradiſe.

Paris, 20th. of the 7th. Moon,
of the Year 1642.

LETTER

LETTER VI.

To the Venerable Mufti, Sovereign of the True and Undefiled Faith.

PErmit me to enter into thy Preſence, and withdraw thy Raviſh'd Eyes a while from the Contemplation of Sublimeſt Objects, to caſt them on a Spectacle of Mortality. It is the Great and Renowned Mary de Medicis, Queen-Mother of France, who lies now dead at Cologne.

I will not trouble thee with Impertinencies; but, becauſe I know that various Reports will reach thy Ears concerning the Cardinal of Richlieu his being Inſtrumental to her Death, by driving her to ſuch a height of Indignation, as was the Cauſe of her Voluntary Exile and wandring from France, and from one Country to another; I will here inſert a Letter from the ſaid Cardinal to her Majeſty, wherein he vindicates himſelf, and diſcovers (if not his Integrity, yet) the beſt Counterfeit of that Vertue, that I have ſeen any where penn'd. It was written to her when ſhe was in Holland, and runs thus,

MADAM,

I Cannot but eſteem it the greateſt Infelicity that ever befell me, that my Enemies have Prevailed ſo far, as to draw upon me your Majeſty's

Majeſty's Diſpleaſure. That they have by all the Arts of Malice, faſtned the Publick Odium on me, is a great Unhappineſs; but, this is the Maſter-piece of their Enmity, to render me ſuſpected by you. I could pardon their frequent Attempts upon my Life, by private Conſpiracies and Aſſaſſinations, tho' Humane Nature recoils at thoſe who are our Murderers: But, to deprive me of that, without which Life it ſelf is a Burden to me, I mean, your Royal Favour, tranſports me beyond my ſelf; And, I beg, that it may paſs for an Excuſe of this Preſumption. I could eaſily have paſſed over in Silence all their barbarous Plots againſt me; I could eaſily have parted with my Life, and all thoſe Honours and Dignities with which it has been bleſs'd. But, to rob me of your Eſteem, which firſt rais'd me to this Envied Greatneſs, and which I value more than all the Grandeurs of the Earth, breaks the Barrs which aw'd my Tongue and Pen, and makes me bold to throw my ſelf at your Royal Feet, with All that I have; for, I received all from your Princely Hands. Deal as you pleaſe, Madam, with your own Creature; I cannot murmur at your Proceedings. But, Madam, let your Native Piety prompt you to favour the Purple of the Church, with which your Bounty has Inveſted me. Let it not loſe its proper Luſtre and Eſteem, becauſe the Enemies of the Church and State, have caſt ſuch Dirt upon it. Is it poſſible, that a Man the moſt obliged of all his Race, ſhould become the only Pattern of the baſeſt Ingratitude? Beſides the Ties of

Conſcience,

Conſcience, and the Natural Force of Inclination, my Intereſt chains me to your Service; How can I then withdraw my ſelf from it, and not proclaim my ſelf at once a Traytor to the beſt of Queens, and the moſt unaccountable of Fools to my ſelf?

This Conſideration, Madam, being well weigh'd, is enough to acquit me of all Guiltineſs before your Majeſty.

But if it be my Deſtiny to be condemned unheard, I ſhall not appeal from your Royal Sentence, ſince I owe a perfect Reſignation to your Will. I may complain to Heaven of my Misfortune, but I will not expoſtulate with my Sovereign Patroneſs, nor make the leaſt Oppoſition againſt the Courſe of your Anger, not even by carrying my Fortune to Rome. For, whereſoever I go, all my ſtudy ſhall be to recover your Majeſty's Favour, if it be not a Crime. And if ever I obtain that Happineſs, I ſhall not care whither I go, tho' it be out of the World it ſelf, becauſe I die hourly, while your Majeſty ſuſpects that I am not what I ever was, and ſtill continue to be,

MADAM,

Your Majeſty's

Moſt Humble,

Moſt Faithful,

And moſt Obedient Servant,

Armand, Card. of Rich.

I ſend

I send thee this Transcript of the Cardinal's Apology, that thou comparing it with what befel afterwards, may'st give a Judgment, whether this great Minister deserv'd the Censures that were pass'd upon him. For, he falling sick the same Day the Queen-Mother died, People said it was a Judgment on him, and that her Ghost appeared to him, as thou wilt more at large inform thy self by the Letters I sent to the Kaimachám. But, others are of Opinion, that his present Illness proceeds from Grief of Mind for the Queen's Death, especially in that she died before he was reconciled to her Majesty. And they plead in Defence of his Innocence, his daily Zeal in saying Mass for her departed Soul, and that at a time when he had more need to keep his Bed, than go to Church. This I have heard discoursed, even by some who bore no good Will to the Cardinal, yet now begin to relent towards him, seeing the very Lineaments of Sorrow in his drooping Looks, and tracing the Footsteps of a profound Grief in his macerated Body. Hence they take Measures of his real Innocence and Fidelity toward that Great Queen. I will not interpose my particular Opinion on either side, but stand Neuter among these contesting Infidels, tho' my Inclination and Regard would rather sway me to the Cardinal's side. But, I leave the Determination of this Matter to thee, who art the Oracle of Wisdom, from whose Sentence there can be no Appeal.

In

In the mean while, the Body of the deceased Queen, lies, as I have said, at Cologne, where she spent her last Days in a Religious Convent; a Practice not so common now adays, as it has been formerly among Crowned Heads. And those who thus descended voluntarily, from the Height of Humane Glory, to the Austerities of a Devout Life, have commonly been Canonized for Saints. Nor do the Creatures of this Queen spare to whisper about, that such an Honour were but a condign Reward to her Extraordinary Merits, being already canonized in the Esteem of the Bigotted Vulgar, while her Body is yet above Ground.

The Royal Carkase will be brought and interr'd in the Temple of St. Denys, about Three Leagues from this City. This is esteemed the Richest Church in France, being a Repository of Inestimable Jewels, Gold and Silver, belonging to the Relicks of their Saints. Here also generally is lodged, the Dust of all the Royal Blood of France. The Saint to whom this Church is dedicated, is esteemed the Patron of this Kingdom; for, according to their Doctrine, the Saints have the Patronage of certain Kingdoms, Provinces and Cities committed to them by God, and therefore they address themselves to them, and to the Guardian Angels both in Publick and Private. Every one also, has his peculiar Patron-Saint and Guardian-Angel assigned him at his own Choice.

But, if these Christian Saints, are set over such Places and People as they favour'd particularly cularly in their Life-time, then one would think, when this Great Queen is Canonized and Inſtated in her Saintly Government, the Hugonots here may claim her Patronage, in that ſhe ſhew'd much Kindneſs and Friendſhip to them while ſhe was alive.

Pardon, Great Oracle of Truth, the Length of this Epiſtle; and excuſe my Preſumption, in deſcanting on Matters of Religion, which belong to thee to determine. I kiſs the Hem of thy Sacred Veſt, in profound Humility. Vouchſafe to pray for thy Faithful Slave Mahmut.

LETTER VII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

IT is now paſt Midnight, and being call'd out of my Bed by the People of the Houſe where I lodge, I knew not how to beſtow my Time better, than in giving thee an Account of this Occurrence.

Here is now ſo violent a Tempeſt of Thunder, Lightning and Rain, that the whole Hemiſphere ſeems to be on Fire; and the Superſtitious are overwhelmed with Panick Fears, concluding this Storm will uſher in the Day of Judgment. It has continued these Two Hours; and, they tell me, that no less than Twenty Houses are burnt to Ashes already. I had scarce taken my Pen from the last Word, when a flash of Lightning dyed all the Papers and Books, on the Table whereon I now write, as black as Soot; whereof this scorch'd Paper may be a Testimonial, which I send enclosed. Observe but the Colour and Smell, and thou wilt say, 'Tis stamp'd with the Mark of the Thunderer. 'Tis that whereon I had begun to write to thee; but, this thirsty Fire, at a Moment, lick'd up all the Ink, so that the Impression is wholly effac'd.

The Reason of their calling me out of my Bed was, to go to Prayers with them, according to the Custom of these Infidels, who in Time of Thunder, light certain Consecrated Candles, and fall on their Knees round about them, imagining, that whilst they are within the Room where these Candles are, the Thunder cannot hurt them. I excused my self from keeping them Company, by telling them, I had a Hallowed Candle in my Chamber, which I would light and say my Prayers there. They were satisfied with this Answer, and sprinkling me with Holy Water, to bless me from the Danger impending, I retired.

There is a private Stair-Case in my Chamber, which leads to a Terrass on the top of the House. My Curiosity carried me thither, where methought I beheld Nature in her Frolicks and Rants. The greatest part of the Sky was clear and serene, and innumerable Stars Stars appear'd; but, round the Brims of the Horizon, a growing Bulk of Clouds encompassed the Earth, spouting forth Cataracts of Fire from opposite Parts. One would have thought, they were impregnated with Bombs and Carcasses, and that some Armies were imbattell'd in the Air.

After this, as if these had been the Heralds of the last and fiercest Combat, the Clouds drew up into a Point, and mingling with each other, shot forth such Showers of Fire, as made the World look like a Furnace. For my Part, I had not Courage enough to stand longer in the open Air, but came down to my Chamber, and falling prostrate on the Ground, recommended my self to the Great Creator of all Things, Lord of Nature, and Sovereign Disposer of the Lives of Men.

Neither do I think my self Superstitious in this, any more than I should be, in humbling my self in the Dust, before the Terrible Ibrahim when he is out of Temper.

Methinks, Nature seems to be in a Cholerick Fit, when it Thunders; and, 'tis neither good Manners nor Policy, to draw her Fury on our Heads by daring Carriage.

Our Holy Law, which prescribes Prayer to us at the first Appearance of the Sun and Moon, seems to intimate, that on any Emergency which gives us a peculiar Occasion to contemplate an Omnipotent Power, we ought to fall down and adore the High and Eternal One.

I am

I am almoſt deaf with the Bells, which are rung in every Church of this City on this Account. It being the Opinion of the Nazarenes, that this Noiſe will chaſe away the Tempeſt, with all Evil Spirits that infeſt the Air. And this Opinion is grounded, on the Ceremonies which are uſed at the Conſecration of their Bells. For, the Biſhop, or, in his Abſence, the Prieſt, hallows them with a kind of Baptiſm, and a Form of Prayer; wherein, among other Petitions, they deſire of God, To endue them with a Virtue to reſiſt the Devils.

I am no Friend to Superſtition, neither do I give much Credit to Charms; yet I cannot deny, but the ringing ſuch a vaſt Number of Bells, muſt needs cauſe a violent Concuſſion of the Air, even to the diſperſing of the Clouds, and producing a Calm. And Experience aſſures us, that this is the common Effect of a Battel, which if it happen in Tempeſtuous Weather, yet the Diſcharge of many Thouſand Great and Small Shot, has quieted the Storm, and huſh'd the Elements into a very ſerene Condition.

Though this Noiſe of Bells be very troubleſome, in a Time when People ſhould take their Repoſe, yet here we are uſed to it in a leſs Degree, every Night throughout the Year. For, the Chriſtians Law, requires the Derviſes to riſe at Midnight, to ſay their Prayers in their Chappels; and, ſome are ſo devout and regular, as to make this their conſtant Cuſtom; ſo that aſſoon as the Clocks have ſtruck Twelve, the ſmall Bells in ſome Con- vents begin to jangle. About Two or Three Hours afterwards, other Religious Houſes ring their Bells, and ſo continue at certain Hours Day and Night all the Year round.

The Storm is now quite blown over, the Clouds diſpers'd, and all Things huſh and quiet.

He that brings forth Light out of Darkneſs, and converts the Terrors and Sadneſs of the Night, into the chearful Joys of a fair and propitious Morning, have thee in his keeping, and perpetuate our Friendſhip.

LETTER VIII.

To the ſame.

THere lives a Deriſe in this City, with whom I often converſe with the ſame Freedom as I do with thee; and, it is no ſmall Alleviation of my Melancholy, to vent my Thoughts to one of an agreeable Spirit.

He is a Religious of Mount Carmel, a Man of Singular Piety and Vertue; and, were he not ſo Zealous a Patron of the Chriſtian Superſtitions and Idolatry, I ſhould eſteem him a Saint.

I have often attempted to wean him by Degrees,

Degrees, from the Errors which he imbib'd with his Mother's Milk, and which seem to be rooted in him through the Influences of his Education.

Sometimes I plant a Battery of Arguments against Images and Pictures; but, I can neither beat them down from the Posts they are allotted in his Oratory, nor am I able to demolish the Chappels which he has built for their Ideas in his own Breast.

Yet, after a long and close Siege, I have reduced him to Terms of Composition. In the first place, he has surrendred up a Picture which hung in his Closet, in Form of a very Ancient Man with hoary Hairs, designed by the Painter, to represent the Person of God. He yields, that it is not lawful to make any Resemblance of the Invisible Divinity. Next, he allows, that it is not lawful to bow or shew any other External Respect to the Pictures and Images of Jesus, Mary, and the Rest of the Saints, but only to use them as Historical Remembrancers of those Holy Persons, and as Natural Helps and Spurs to Devotion and Vertue.

I tell thee, my Friend Eglou, on these Capitulations I could not but raise the Siege, and yield him the Use of Pictures thus far a blameless Practice. For, it seems to me unreasonable, to debarr those who believe the Inspiration of the Gospel, the privilege to read it in what Language they please, whether this of Images and Pictures, or that of Letters.

Letters are but the Images of such and such Articulate

Articulate Sounds, by which we expreſs our Inward Conception of things: But, Images and Pictures are the lively Immediate Characters of the Things themſelves; and, it ſeems as eaſie to me, to look on a Picture or Image without the Danger of Idolatry, as 'tis to read a Chapter in the Alcoran without adoring the Letters that compoſe it. Was not the Tabernacle of Moſes adorned with Images of Cherubims? Was not the Temple of Solomon deck'd in the ſame manner? If the preſence of Images in Temples be a Prophanation, why for ſo many Ages have our Venerable Muſti's ſuffered the two Seraphims, to remain under the Cupola of the Moſque of Sancta Sophia in Conſtantinople? Why do they not deface the Picture of Mary the Mother of Jeſus, the Two Images of Angels, with other Pieces of Sculpture and Painting in the ſame place? Are the Devotions of a Muſſulman in this Sacred Temple tainted with Idolatry, becauſe he prays before theſe Images?

Let me unboſom my Thoughts to thee with freedom; Images and Pictures are no Bug-bears to me; I can uſe them as Inſtruments of Devotion, in the ſame manner as I do Books. Yet every one cannot do this without Danger of Idolatry; neither is a Publick Toleration of Images and Pictures in Temples to be approved. For, tho' ſome Men may look on them without Hurt, yet 'tis hard for the Generality to avoid falling into a Culpable Reverence. For, while the Eye is drinking in the fair Idea, the Soul is apt to loſe loſe her Force, and fall into Admiration of the Carver's or the Painter's Art, adoring the elegant Symmetry of a Beautiful Picture or Image, inſtead of the Original and Increated Beauty, the Majeſty which has no Reſemblance.

Therefore wiſely has our Holy Law, provided againſt this Inconvenience, by diſcouraging Imagery throughout the Sacred Empire of the Muſſulmans.

He whoſe Habitation is in the Myſterious and Inacceſſible Heighth of an Eternal Receſs, whoſe Glory is beyond all Figure and Expreſſion, augment thy Vertues, which are the trueſt Images of the Divine Nature.

LETTER

LETTER IX.

To the Kaimacham.

THE preſent War betwixt France and Spain, however begun, ſeems to be carried on by a Principle of Honour, rather than of Enmity. Theſe two Nations are perfect Antipodes to each other in their Humours, yet this Averſion between them, is diſcover'd more in Peace than in War. The Queſt of Glory has invited many brave Men on both Sides into the Field; and, the Hero's ſtrive to conquer each other, by Civilities rather than by Arms.

Catalonia and Rouſſilion, were the Stages of this War, in the Beginning of the Year; where the Mareſchal de Breze, and the Sieur de la Motbe-Houdancourt, combated with all the Hardſhips of the Winter, as well as with Valiant Enemies. The Rigour of the Seaſon did not cool the Courage of theſe Generals, nor divert their Reſolution from taking the Field. All the Country appear'd like a frozen Lake, and there was no Place for them to encamp, but in deep Snows or Ice: yet, for all theſe Diſcouragements, the Mareſchal de Breze block'd up Perpignan, a Town of great Strength in Rouſſilion, whilſt the Sieur de la Motte kept the Arragonians in Play, and baffl'd the Enterpriſes of the Caſtilians, having given them two Signal Defeats.

These ſucceſsful Actions of the French Generals, invited the King their Maſter to give them a Viſit, being very deſirous to take Perpignan, and ſettle the Affairs of Catalonia. He therefore ſends another Army under the Command of the Mareſchal de la Meſleraye, which he ſoon followed in Perſon.

There was now a generous Envy raiſed between ſo many Great Commanders, every one ſtriving to advance himſelf in the King's Eſteem by his Services. And the particular Merits of the Sieur de la Mothe, drew a favourable Eye on him. The King made him Mareſchal of France; the Staff which is the Badge of his Office, being preſented to him by the Mareſchal de Breze at Barcelona, to the general Satisfaction and Joy as well of the Catalonians as the French.

This Honour was conferr'd on him, preſently after the great Victory obtained over the Spaniſh Forces, at Ville-Franche in Catalonia.

In the mean while, the Mareſchal de Meſleraye, inveſted the ſtrong Caſtle of Colioubre, which was ſurrendered to him upon honourable Terms, by the Marqueſs of Mortare, General of the Spaniſh Horſe in Rouſſilion, and Governour of that Caſtle.

The King fluſh'd with Conqueſts and Succeſſes, would not ſuffer his Army to lie idle, but in good earneſt laid cloſe Siege to Perpignan.

Yet ſuch was the Generoſity of this Prince, that before he tried the Force of his Cannon, he

he ordered the Mareſchal de Meſſeraye, to ſend a Herald to the Marqueſs de Flores, Governour of the Town, to put him in Mind of the great Streights the Beſieged were in for want of Proviſions, of which His Majeſty was not ignorant; and, that there was no Hopes of Relief from the Marqueſs de Povar, General of the Spaniſh Forces in Arragon, there being leſt alive but a few Companies of all his Army, after the great Defeat which was given them near Ville Franche.

He offered the Governour all fair and good Uſage, if he would ſurrender before Things came to Extremities; and, to convince him of the entire Loſs of the Spaniſh Army, (to which he truſted) he promiſed ſafe Conduct to any Officer of the Garriſon as far as Terragone, where lay all the little Remnant of the Arragonian Army, that ſo he might inform and aſſure himſelf of the bad Condition the Spaniſh Affairs were in.

This favour was received with much Civility by the Marqueſs de Povar, who returned Humble Thanks to the King for ſo generous a Condeſcention, aſſuring him withal, that the Garriſon was not reduced to thoſe Streights as was pretended, but that he nevertheleſs accepted His Majeſty's ſafe Conduct to a Meſſenger; entreating him, that he would permit him to go to Madrid, that ſo the King of Spain might have Advice of his Circumſtances.

Thou wilt confeſs, Illuſtrious Kaimacham, that it was a great Magnanimity of Spirit in the King, to grant this Requeſt to an Enemy, who might be ſuſpected to deſign no more in it than gain Time. Yet, he ſent the Meſſenger back again, with full Aſſurance of his Royal Leave.

Whilſt this was in Agitation, many other Civilities paſs'd between the French and the Beſieged; Many Priſoners of Note were exchanged, and all Things ſeem'd to ſpeak a fair Underſtanding between both Parties; when, on a ſudden, the Cannon of the Town play'd furiouſly on the King's Quarters, and at the ſame Time the Beſieged made a vigorous Sally, attacking a Redoubt which the Mareſchal de Meſſeraye had raiſed.

This Contempt of the King's Favour raiſed his Choler, and animated the Soldiers with a deſire of Revenge. All ran to their Arms, and quickly beat back the Beſieged. Thus was the Face of Affairs ſuddenly chang'd in the Camp. It was too late now, for the Governour to expect the Courteſie he before abuſed. However, he ſent two Deputies again, to know if the King's Reſolution continued to grant leave to ſend to Madrid, (for they had not as yet ſent.)

The Mareſchal de Meſſeraye ſent back the Deputies with this Anſwer, That if they did not engage to ſurrender by a prefixed Day, and give two Hoſtages for Security of their Performance, the King would not grant their Requeſt.

This put the Beſieged upon deſperate Reſolutions; they made frequent Sallies, and all things tended to Extremity.

Whilſt

Whilſt Matters, were in this Poſture, the King, by the Advice of his Phyſicians, withdrew from the Camp to take the Waters of Maine for his Health. This was in the laſt Moon, and Perpignan holds out ſtill.

I have been the more particular in relating this Siege, in regard it is the Chief Subject of Diſcourſe among ſuch as are deſirous of News. Which is the Reaſon alſo, that I begin this Letter with a Relation of what has been tranſacted in Catalonia ever ſince the Beginning of this Year, that thou may'ſt be able to form a Regular Idea, of this preſent War between France and Spain. I will continually ſend thee an Account of the Progreſs the French make in Catalonia.

God augment thy Honours, and prolong thy Days, to ſee the Sons of thy Grand-children.

Paris, 26th of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER X.

To Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State.

I Should be unfaithful to my Truſt, and merit a Bow-ſtring, ſhould I conceal from thee any Thing which reflects upon the Honour of the Sacred Empire, and the Law brought down from Heaven by the Angel Gabriel.

Thou knoweſt, that it is the Cuſtom of the Chriſtians, to make Pilgrimages from all Parts of the World to Jeruſalem, and other Places in the Holy Land; even as the Faithful Muſſulmen do to Mecca and Medina Talnabi in Arabia, where is the Sepulchre of our Holy Prophet.

Here are Two Noblemen of the firſt Rank and Quality at Court, who out of Devotion to their Meſſias, went to viſit his ſuppoſed Sepulchre; and, in their Travels, paſs'd through Part of Ægypt. But when they arrived at a Place called Salhia, bordering on the Stony Arabia, they were made a Prey to the Subbaſſee of that Place; who, underſtanding from the Captain of the Caravan, that theſe two were all the Franks he had with him, and that they were Men of Money, he exacted from them twenty Dollars apiece for their Heads, contrary to all Law, Juſtice or Precedent; which which they refuſing to pay (as indeed it was unreaſonable) the covetous old Subbaſſee commits them to Priſon, commanding them to receive an Hundred Baſtinadoes apiece on the Feet, thinking by this Means to frighten them to a Compliance with his Extortion. But they would not pay the Money, chuſing rather to ſuffer, than encourage ſuch Oppreſſion in corrupt Officers. In the mean time, the Caravan departs, leaving theſe impriſon'd Lords to the Mercy of the Subbaſſee; who finding them inflexible, cauſed his Commandments to be put in Execution, and not content with this, orders his Slaves to beat them out of the Town.

The poor Lords knew not what to do under this Misfortune; for they were ſo ſore with the Blows they had received on their tender Feet, that they were incapable of travelling afoot But, with Money they prevail on the Slaves, to direct them how they might procure Camels, with a Guide. This done they overtake the Caravan at Gaza, and ſo finiſh'd their Pilgrimage. They are now at the Court here, and have made known the Buſineſs to the King, who, 'tis ſaid, has diſpatched an Expreſs to his Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople, to demand Juſtice on the aforeſaid Subbaſſee; threatning, that if it be deny'd, he will cover the Ocean with Ships, and raze the Palace of the Sultan to the Ground. For, theſe two Noblemen, are nearly allied to the Royal Family.

I know thou wilt deſpiſe the bold Bravado

of this King, and ſo do I, being aſſured, that the Invincible Sultan, can ſet his Foot on the Necks of Forty ſuch Petty Kings as this. Yet, let us be the Advocates of Juſtice, by which the Refulgent Empire of the Muſſulmen was firſt eſtabliſhed. Should ſuch a Villainy as this go unpuniſhed, it would encourage others in like Caſes, and then there would be nothing but Extortion, and cruel Inſolence practiſed by Governours of Towns and Cities on the Road. So barbarous and inhoſpitable Uſage, would provoke all the Princes of the Chriſtian Law, to take up Arms againſt us. Thus would the moſt Glorious Empire in the World, become a Prey to Infidels.

I know this would be miſrepreſented, were it to come to other Hands than thine. They would ſay of me openly, what they have already whiſpered in the Cabals of the Seraglio, That Mahmut is in Penſion with the French King. They ſeek my Life without a Cauſe. But I truſt it to thy generous and right noble Hands, of whoſe Friendſhip I have had ſo late Experience.

May the Firſt Mover of the Heavenly Orbs, lead thee as by a Clew of Thread, through the dark Labyrinth of State-Affairs, and bring thee, after a long and happy Life, to the Fields of endleſs Light. Amen! thou Lord of Paradiſe.

LETTER XI.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

I Know thee not, and, 'tis probable, thou art as little acquainted with me: Yet, I have often obſerved more durable Friendſhips contracted between Strangers, than betwixt thoſe of the ſame Blood. Good Offices equally deſerve and attract Love. There are many Opportunities for Travellers to ſerve one another. And, he that obliges me in a ſtrange Country, makes himſelf my Brother.

I received a Diſpatch from the Reis Effendi at Conſtantinople, informing me of the Death of Carcoa, one of the Happy Slaves of him whom God has ordained to diſpenſe Felicities to the World. I mean, the Grand Signior, Poſſeſſor of the moſt Exalted Throne on Earth. He tells me likewiſe, that I muſt expect from thee the Continuance of Carcoa's Office. I congratulate thy Honour, in that thou art thought worthy to ſerve the Great Viceroy of the Lord of the Univerſe, to whom is committed the Flaming Sword of Juſtice, that he may reward Vertue, puniſh Vice, and reform the Corrupt Manners of all Mankind.

I am a Muſſulman, that is, reſigned to God, or elſe it would have raiſed ſome Thoughtfulneſs in a Man of my Circumſtances, what ſhould be the Reaſon of Carcoa's ſo long Silence, not having received any Anſwer theſe four Moons to the many Letters I ſent him. He was entruſted with the Secrets of my Commiſſion, and, had another been in my Place, he would have ſuſpected Treachery.

Well, he is gone! gone to the Inviſible Regions, to the Receptacles of Juſt and Faithful Men, to the pleaſant Woods and Groves, the Eternal Blooming Shades and Verdant Fields of Paradiſe. Follow his Steps, and be happy.

He was a Man true to his Truſt, ſeduleus and active in Buſineſs; Punctual in his Appointments; Temperate in a Town flowing with Debaucheries; juſt toward all Men, and Devout to God.

It is neceſſary for him that would attain theſe Virtues, to begin Gradually at the loweſt Step; to Guard his Senſes, and ſet a Watch upon the Avenues of his Paſſions. For a Man becomes neither perfectly Virtuous nor Vicious all at once: And a Wiſe Man of thy own Nation, Jeſus Ben Sirach, has ſaid, He that contemns little Things, ſhall fall by little and little.

I deſire thee, to ſend me Carcoa's Journal, with what other Papers he left behind him, except ſuch as concern his particular Eſtate and Affairs.

Let me know alſo, how the late Deſign of the Turks upon Raab, is reſented at the German Court; whether the Emperour talks of ſending an Embaſſador to the Sultan about it;

it; and, whatsoever also of Moment occurs.

The Reis Effendi tells me, that Bechir Bassa, the Treasurer, has ordered me Five Hundred Zechins, by the way of Vienna. I desire thou would'st be speedy and careful in remitting them to Paris.

Thou needest no Instructions concerning my Lodging, or the Name I go by here; those who appointed thee this Station at Vienna, have informed thee, no doubt, of all Things necessary to the Discharge of thy Duty.

Write often to me, and preserve thy Integrity free from Stain.

LETTER XII.

To Dgnet Ogiou.

I Know thy Genius, and have observed with what Complacency thou wert wont to peruse thy Uncle Sheïa Raphim's Travels, a Journal Writ in Arabick, and full of profitable and wise Remarks; especially, that Part of it, which treats of France. I will not pretend to add to his Observations; but only acquaint thee with a Novelty, which France it self ne'er knew in his Days.

The

The Women of Quality here of late, addict themſelves to the Studies of Philoſophy, as the Men; the Ladies eſteeming their Education defective, if they cannot confute Ariſtotle and his Diſciples. The Pen has almoſt ſupplanted the Exerciſe of the Needle; and, Ladies Cloſets, formerly the Shops of Female Baubles; Toys and Vanities, are now turn'd to Libraries and Sanctuaries of Learned Books. There is a new Star riſen in the French Horizon, whoſe Influence excites the Nobler Females to this purſuit of Humane Science. It is the Renowned Monſieur Des Cartes, whoſe Luſtre far out-ſhines the Aged, winking Tapers of Peripatetick Philoſophy, and has eclips'd the Stagyrite, with all the Ancient Lights of Greece and Rome. 'Tis this matchleſs Soul, has drawn ſo many of the Fairer Sex to the Schools. And they are more proud of the Title [Carteſian,] and of the Capacity to defend his Principles, than of their Noble Birth and Blood.

I know our Grave and Politick Muſſulmen, will cenſure the Indulgence of the French to their Women, and accuſe them of Weakneſs, in giving ſuch Advantages to that witty Sex. But, notwithſtanding this Severity of the Eaſtern Parts, I cannot altogether diſapprove the Weſtern Gallantry. If Women are to be eſteemed our Enemies, methinks it is an ignoble Cowardiſe thus to diſarm them, and not allow them the ſame Weapons we uſe our ſelves: But, if they deſerve the Title of our Friends, 'tis an Inhumane Tyranny to debar them them the Privilege of Ingenuous Education, which would alſo render their Friendſhip ſo much more delightful both to themſelves and us. Nature is ſeldom obſerved to be niggardly of her choiceſt Gifts to that Sex, their Senſes generally as quick as ours, their Reaſon as Nervous, their Judgments as mature and ſolid. Add but to theſe Natural Perfections, the Advantage of Acquir'd Learning, what polite and charming Creatures will they prove, whilſt their External Beauty does the Office of a Cryſtal to the Lamp, not ſhrouding but diſcloſing their brighter Intellects? Nor need we fear to loſe our Empire over them, by thus improving their Native Abilities; ſince, where there is moſt Learning, Senſe and Knowledge, there is obſerv'd to be the greateſt Modeſty, and Rectitude of Manners. I ſee no Reaſon therefore, why we ſhould make ſuch Bug Bears of Women, as not truſt them with as Liberal Education as our ſelves.

I believe, thou ſometimes beſtoweſt a Compaſſionate Thought on the Exil'd Mahmut. Wouldſt thou do ſomething to alleviate my Melancholy, the next time thou goeſt to the Atmidan, tranſcribe what is engraven on the Pedeſtals of the Obelisks and Columns ſtanding there, and ſend it encloſed in a Letter.

He that is Lord of the Eaſt and the Weſt, from Whoſe Throne hang Millions of Slaves in Chains of Gold, encreaſe thy Virtues and Bleſſings, and preſerve thee from the Poiſon of ill Eyes and malicious Tongues, and bring thee to the Fields of endless Light.

LETTER XIII.

To Cara Haly, Physician at Constantinople.

THere is a Garden in this City, so near resembling that of the Invincible Vizir Azem, on the East of Pera, that I cannot but phansie my self near Constantinople, when I am walking in it. It is called the King's Garden, being allotted by the Royal Bounty of the Kings of France, to the Service and Improvement of Students in Physick. There is a Yearly Stipend settled on an approved Physician, to take Care, that no kind of Physical Plant or Herb be wanting in this Royal Seminary. Who also during the whole Summer, is obliged to read a Latin Lecture every Morning, on the Simples there growing; whilst a great Auditory of Young Students, with Books, Pen and Ink in their Hands, wait on him up and down the Alleys, and write down his Discourse. He that is now employed in this Office, is a very Learned and Ingenious Man: he takes great Pains to make all his Young Disciples perfect Herbarists; for, all the way as he passes along from one Herb to another,

he ſtoops down, handles the Simple, and explains his Verbal Deſcription with his Fingers Ends; giving a moſt accurate account of the minuteſt Difference between ſuch as ſeem to be alike, and demonſtrating to the Eye, that thoſe are too diſtinct Plants, which many take to be but one; tracing out their different Families, in the Number, Texture, Shape or Colour of their Leaves and Flowers: And, this he does with ſo graceful an Action, ſuch elegant Language, and ſo compoſed a Spirit, that he charms all that happen to be preſent at his Lectures, and makes every Body in Love with the Botanicks. The Garden ſtands open to all Gentlemen, provided they leave their Swords with the Keeper of the Gate, to prevent Quarrels and Miſchief.

I enter daily among the reſt, and when the Phyſick-Lecture is over, I retire my ſelf into one of the moſt pleaſant Shades in the World; it is a Gravel Walk, the whole length of the Garden, on each ſide of which grow lofty Trees, planted ſo thick, and intermixing their Leaves and Branches ſo cloſely at the Top, that they compoſe a perfect natural Umbrella over the Walk, from one End to the other, ſo that not a Beam of the Sun can enter. And, that which creates in me the greateſt Complacency, is, that the farther End of the Walk, is not ſhut up by a high Wall, as is the Cuſtom in ſome Gardens; but, whether you are ſitting, or ſtanding upright, it opens to you a very agreeable and large Proſpect of the Country adjacent to Paris, which affects affects the Eye with incredible Delight; and mine so much the more, because it perfectly resembles the Country lying East of Pera and Constantinople, which you survey out of the Grotto's of the aforesaid most Illustrious Vizir Azem. 'Tis when I am in this Walk, I imagine I breathe the Air of Asia, and am within the Verge of the Imperial Seraglio, the Sanctuary, to which all the distress'd Princes in the World have Recourse.

There are in Paris above an Hundred Magnificent Palaces, and beautiful Gardens belonging to them; but, none wherein I take so particular a Delight, as in this Royal Physick-Garden. Here I spend many a solitary Hour, and sometime I meet with Company.

I tell thee, Dear Haly, that though the French are naturally the most polished and refined People in the World, yet I am many times willing to make Excuses, and leave their Society; being by the Force of a powerful Inclination either drawn to this Garden, or to a famous Library in this City, in the Custody of certain Religious Dervises, who at certain Hours of the Day, are obliged to give Attendance to all Gentlemen, who are pleased to sit there and study.

Toward the Evening I visit the Hospitals, which are the finest that ever I saw in the World, and I believe the best govern'd. There is one named the Hospital of God, where Persons of Quality themselves, and those of the First Rank, come every Evening, and wait on the sick and the wounded, doing all the meaneſt Offices of Inferiour Servants, and this with abundance of Tenderneſs and Humanity. I have ſeen the Niceſt and Gayeſt Ladies of the Court, dreſſing the moſt ſqualid and putrefied Sores of Wounded Men, not ſeeming in the leaſt to be diſguſted at the loathſome Sight and Stench of their Ulcers. When one firſt enters the Place, one would imagine it to be a Chamber of Young Janizaries; it being a very long and wide Gallery, with Rows of Beds on both ſides, wherein the Sick are diſpoſed according to the Order of their coming, or the Nature of their Diſeaſe. The Curtains of the Beds are all of pure white Linen, prettily wrought here and there with Flowers of Needle Work. Their Sheets as white as the Curtains; and by each Bed ſtands a Baſon of clean Water, and a fine Towel lying by it. At the farther End of the Gallery, ſtands an Altar railed in, where the Prieſts perform their Religious Myſteries for the Sick. In fine, all Things in this Place ſpeak an Exquiſite Decorum and Order, with a generous Regard to the Health and Life of Man. Three of theſe Galleries make up the whole Hoſpital, and it is as pleaſant to me ſometimes to walk up and down in them, as in a beautiful Garden.

Certainly, if any Argument could be of Force to recommend Sickneſs as a deſirable Thing, it muſt be taken from the Circumſtances of this Hoſpital, or, an Equivalent Ground. I, for my own part, have often thought, That Death it ſelf would not be formidable

formidable amidst so many Ornaments, Sweets and Comforts. If this Publick and Charitable Regard to the Sick, be an Effect of their Religion; I cannot be so partial to deny it a due Acknowledgment; but must own, That Heroick Vertue and Piety is to be found in an eminent Degree, even among the very Infidels.

Thou wilt pardon me for detaining thee so long in the Theatre of the Sick and Wounded, and presenting thee with the Tragical Scenes of Mortality; since it is thy proper Profession, to converse with the Infirmities, Diseases and Dolors of Humane Bodies, and to be frequently present in the Anti-Chambers of Death.

Suffer me to press thee to an Integrity of continual Love and Friendship between us. Let not Mistakes or Misapprehensions, cool this generous Affection. It is pity, That either the spightful Misrepresentations of insinuating Back-biters, or, our own groundless Jealousies and Suspicions, should dissolve the Union of Faithful and Loving Friends. I had rather suffer a Thousand small Injuries, which I know must proceed from Frailty, and Humane Necessity, than not continue to Love where I have once pitch'd my true Affection. Nothing but apparent wilful Perfidiousness and Treachery, ought to break the sacred and inviolable Band of Friendship. Fidelity and Love cover a multitude of lesser Faults. He that breaks with his Friend for small Errors, discovers the Rashness and Inconstancy of his Mind, and that his Friendship was never well grounded. For, had he been a Wise Man, he would either have been more slow and cautious in the choice of his Friend; or, having once contracted Friendship, he would not break it again for a less Crime than manifest Disloyalty. But thou, who hast ever pursued me with all the Offices of a Generous and Faithful Friend, bearing with my many Infirmities and Failings, dost not deserve this Censure. Yet, considering the Instability of all Humane Affairs, I could not forbear putting thee in Mind of these Things; lest, through the Malice of Fortune, or the Envy of Men, or any other Cause thou should'st withdraw thy Affection from me, which I value above all Temporal Blessings. For, besides the many Favours I have received at thy Hands, whereby I am obliged in Honour and Gratitude to love thee perpetually; a Spark of Natural, or rather of Divine Affection was kindled in my Breast, from the first Time I conversed with thee; whether it proceeds from Agreeableness and Harmony of Spirits, or some other secret Operation, I know not. But, sure I am, and would have thee rest confident, That ther is not a Man in the World, who Loves and eHonours thee with greater Fidelity than I do.

The Great and Eternal Lord of the Universe, encrease and multiply thy Vertues and Blessings, and make thee Illustrious in thy Generation; granting also this Happiness to me,

me, That after a lasting and true Friendship between us on Earth, I may drink with thee of the Rivers of Pleasure, which glide along the Fields of Paradise; and, that I may see thy Face brighter than the Stars of Heaven. Amen! Amen! O thou Lord of the Worlds.

LETTER XIV.

To the Kaimacham.

I Take the best Measures for Intelligence, yet I cannot gain a Sight or a Copy of all the Expresses that come to this Court; nor can I learn their Import, as soon as they Arrive. The Ministers of State here, are the Sepulchres of News, they bury all in Silence.

This is the Reason, that I sometimes have been forced to send thee an Account of many Events, long after they happened. My last Letter was an Abstract of the French Conquests in Catalonia, from the Beginning of the Year, to the Moon last past.

After the King of France had retired from the Camp before Perpignan, the Mareschal de Mesleraye, applied himself vigorously to perfect the Batteries, Redoubts, and other Works. Whilst the King of Spain was hourly ly perplexed with Cares and Anxieties, for this Important Place.

The Extremities to which it was reduc'd, haſtened his Preparations of an Effectual Relief. He ſent Orders to the Marquiſes of Terracuſe, of Leganez and Mortare, to raiſe the Flower of Arragon and Caſtile.

The Viceroy of Naples, furniſhed out a Conſiderable Fleet; it being the Catholick King's Reſolution, either to Succour Perpignan, and raiſe that Siege, or take Barcelona by Way of Reprizal.

In the mean while, the new Mareſchal de la Motbe, fluſh'd with the late Favour he received from his Maſter the French King, and ſpurr'd on with the Thirſt of Glory, entered like a Torrent with his Troops into Valentia, which at that time lay naked and unguarded.

The firſt Thing he did, was to ſurprize a Convoy of the Marquis of Leganez, who were carrying an extraordinary Piece of Canon to Viverou.

The French broke through the Foot, with their accuſtomed Fury, and killed more than Thirty Horſe, taking as many Priſoners. They ſent the Cannon to the Camp at Reuux.

Thou ſeeſt, Sage Miniſter, how neceſſary a Qualification it is in a Sovereign Prince, to diſcern and reward the Merits of his Servants. Men of Vertue are animated with freſh Vigour, when their Actions are acknowledged. Of this the ever Victorious Sultans of the Ottoman Empire are very ſenſible, who valu:

value the Abilities and Services of their Slaves, before any Consideration of Noble Blood or Riches: raising Men from Nothing, to the Highest Dignities of the Empire.

The Mareschal, after this Exploit, took the Towns of Tamarit, and Mouson; but the Castle belonging to the latter, was surrendred upon Articles, the Fourteenth of the last Moon.

Whilst these things were transacted on the Land, the Navies were not Idle by Sea: The Marquis of Breze set upon the Spanish Admiral, as he lay at Anchor near Viveres; and, not being able to disingage the Vessel from the Shallows, he set it on Fire, together with another of equal Burden.

This was only an Exploit by the bye, and as it lay in his Road to Barcelona, where the whole Spanish Fleet were arrived, with Design to Assault the Town by Sea.

The Marquis de Breze, made all the Sail he could toward them; but, the Wind not favouring his Design, he was forced to make use of his Gallies. In a Word, the Spaniards lost Four Ships in this Fight, and Three more on the First of this Moon.

Thus Perpignan is in no likelihood of Relief. I will send thee all the Intelligence I receive of this Important Siege.

LETTER

LETTER XV.

To Iouf his Kinſman.

I Have received thy Letter, and congratulate thy ſafe Return to Conſtantinople. The Bleſſing of Mahomet be upon thee, for the Sacrifice thou madeſt on Abraham's Mountain in my behalf, and for the Alms thou gaveſt to blot out my Sins. Hadſt thou ſent me the Sacred Relique I deſired, I would multiply Benedictions on Iouf my Couſin. It is but a trifling Excuſe to ſay, thou couldſt not procure that which is denied to no Pilgrim. The Emir of Mecca expects that every one who Viſits that Holy of Holies, ſhould purchaſe a Piece of the Old Hanging, when it is Yearly taken down. This is his Fee, and thou haſt at once defrauded him of his Due, fruſtrated my Hopes, and weakned the Merit of thy Pilgrimage.

But, I will not be querelous; perhaps thou wert afraid of wanting Money in the Reſt of thy Journey. Thy Letter is very ſhort and full of Reſerves, hardly vouchſafing to make an Apology for thy long Silence, though it be now the Nine and Thirtieth Moon ſince thou firſt parteſt from Conſtantinople, without giving me any Account what was become of thee.

Sometimes I thought thou wert overwhelm'd in the Sands of Arabia, or, that ſome some wild Beast had devoured thee. At other times, I imagined thou mightst die of Thirst, in those dry and barren Deserts. When the Caravan returned at the accustom'd Time, and no Tidings of Isouf, I could not divine that thou wert gone into Persia, or that thou wouldst travel through all the East, as thy Letter informs me.

I should be proud of my Kinsman, were I satisfied what Improvements he has made in so tedious a Journey. Thy Letter speaks thee not a Traveller, thou art a Churle in not communicating to me thy Adventures and Observations, in so many Countries as thou hast pass'd through.

Tell me, Isouf, what was the Motive which put thee upon such a hazardous Fatigue? Thou wert a Man of great Faith to trust thy self to the Conduct of the Persian, who invited thee along with him. It is a Sign thou hast a Roving Soul, or else thou wouldst not upon such easie Terms have abandoned the Company of thy Fellow-Travellers and Friends, to join thy self to a Stranger, an Enemy to thy Nation, a Heretick. 'Tis true, a Peace was just then concluded between the Grand Signior, and the Sophi of Persia; and so there was no Danger of thy being snapp'd for a Spy, and Sacrificed to the Jealousie of State. But, thou exposedst thy self to the Caprices of Fortune, and the wavering Temper of a Man, who, for ought thou knewest, might have some ill Design upon thee.

Tell me, didst not thou meet with great

Temptations

Temptations at Ispahan? couldst thou withstand the Charms of Persian Luxury? It must needs be a surprizing Novelty, to see the Ladies of the Court frolicking and revelling in the Houses of Pleasure without the City, so contrary to the austere Customs of our Women at Constantinople.

Well! I will believe thee Chast in the midst of Courtezans, sober in Company of Drunkards; and, that the Spark who pick'd thee up at Medina, made no attempts to debauch thy Vertue; yet thou canst not blame this Railery, when thou considerest the dissolute Manners of that Nation. And I will tell thee ingenuously, that I find it very irksome to abstain from Wine, in a Country where every Body drinks it but my self.

But, thou giveſt me no Character of thy Persian Friend, or his Quality. He might, for ought I know, be some Knight Errant, and thou his Squire, and so you rambled together up and down Asia to seek Advenrures. For thou art not so complaisant as to tell me the Effect of thy Travels.

Had I been in thy Place, I should have made it my Business, to enquire into the Laws and Religions of those Countries through which I pass'd. I should have taken Notice of the Strength and Situation of their Cities and Castles; Their Manner of Building and Fortifications; The Discipline of their Souldiers; what Navigable Rivers they have, and which were the most eminent Places of Commerce and Traffick.

When thou wert in the Court of the Great Mogul, it had been worth thy Observation, to see the Grandure of this Monarch, who never goes into the Field with less than two hundred Thousand Men. Thou shouldest have remark'd also the Use the Indians make of Elephants in their Battels. It had not been amiss to have cast an Eye into their Temples in this Country, where thou wouldst have beheld the Execrable Devotions of these Idolaters, who worship the Devil under hideous Forms. But above all, I should have been greedy to see the Indian Women throw themselves into the Funeral Pile after their dead Husbands. And, before I parted from the Country, I should have sought the Conversation of their Gymnosophists or Brachmans. These are in so great Reputation for their Wisdom, Sanctity, and Incorrupt Manners, that the greatest Potentates have Recourse to them in all Difficulties, as to Divine Oracles.

China also would have afforded thee Matter of Observation and Remark.

These People say of themselves, that they see with both Eyes, the Mahometans with one, and all the rest of the World are stark blind. But in my Opinion, the Chineses can be but purblind themselves, since they see no farther than the Mountains which environ their own Country; it not being permitted to the Subjects of that Empire to travel. Yet, to give them their due, they are a very Ingenious People, envied by all the World for their Art in making Porphyry.

I should

I should be glad to know, if whilst thou wert in this Country, thou ever saweſt any of those sailing Wagons, which are said to be used there.

It would be very obliging, to send me a particular Relation of thy Travels these three Years. Thou wilt not be angry, that I am solicitous for thy Good. The End of Travelling is, to gain Experience and Wisdom. If thou hast attained this, I shall rejoice. The desire of Knowledge has caused many Famous Men to rome about the World. This led Pythagoras into Palaestine and Egypt. This made Plato leave Athens, to go and learn of Archytas the Philosopher at Tarentum in Italy. And the same Motive carried Apollonius through the greatest part of Asia and Africa.

But, I would not have thee confine thy Search to their Measures. For they only covered to know the Mysteries of Nature. Whereas, if thou travelleſt again, I would advise thee to acquain: thy self with the Constitutions of Kingdoms and States, whereby thou may'ſt be serviceable to our Great Master, the Grand Signior, Lord of the seven Climates, for whose sake the Elements are restrained within their Bounds, and Nature it self keeps on her Course.

Cousin, I pray the great God to polish thy Soul with Rational Principles, and make thee useful in thy Generation; for, no Man is born for himself. Adieu.

of the Year 1642.

LETTER XVI.

To Mustapha Berber Aga, at Constantinople.

I Sent thee a Letter in the Conclusion of the last Year, concerning the Duke of Lorrain, and the loss of his Estate: Since which he seems to have lost himself; being Excommunicated by the Pope, who is to the Christians, what our Mufti is to true Believers.

If thou knowest not what it is to be Excommunicated by the Pope, I will inform thee in few Words.

Those who lie under this Censure, are forbid to enter into any of their Churches, or in the least to partake of what they esteem Holy. All Christians, are commanded to shun their Company; they are esteemed as bad as Heretick; baniſh'd humane Society, and given over to the Devil.

The Occasion of passing this so severe a Sentence on a Sovereign Prince, thou wilt imagine was great; and yet, it was only for putting away his first Wife, and marrying another. A Thing commonly practised all over the East. Should our Mufti's have the same Power, there would be but few Mussulmen in the Sacred Msques.

But, these Infidels call Marriage a Great Sacrament, and esteem it as violated when a Man Man repudiates his Wife; Divorces being not allowed in any Part of Chriſtendom, unleſs in Caſe of Adultery.

People talk variouſly of the Pope's Cenſure. Thoſe who favour the Counteſs of Cantecroix, murmur at the Excommunication, calling it, A Breach of Privileges, an unheard of Innovation, an Attempt upon the Life of the Prince. They add alſo, that he ought firſt to have been cited, and his Cauſe heard by the Court, according to the Canons and Decrees of Councils.

On the other Hand, there are who juſtifie this Proceeding of the Pope, and accuſe the Duke of barbarous Ingratitude, for leaving his Lawful Wife, by whom he got his Eſtate; and with whom he had lived many Years.

However, the Duke of Loraine has publiſh'd a Proteſtation againſt the Pope's Proceedings, and cauſed his Procurator General to do the like; writing Letters alſo to the Preſidents and Counſellours of the Sovereign Court of Loraine and Barois, commanding them not to take any Notice of the Pope's Cenſure; it being actually null and void, becauſe contrary to the Fundamental Laws of the Church.

It is to be obſerved here, that this Excommunicated Prince in the Concluſion of his Proteſt, appeals nevertheleſs to the Sovereign Biſhop, when he ſhall be better informed, ſtill profeſſing an Eternal Obedience to the Church.

It is a ſtrange unaccountable Power, the Popes of Rome claim over Emperours and Prin- ces. In his publick Letters, Briefs, or Patents, he ſtiles himſelf, the Servant of the Servants of God; yet, in his Actions, he aſſumes a Sovereignty over Kings, calling all the Princes in Chriſtendom, his Sons, and chaſtiſing them as ſuch, when he ſees Occaſion. All this proceeds from the Difference they make between the Temporal and the Spiritual Sword. So, that when their Forces have been Routed, the City of Rome ſack'd, and themſelves taken Priſoners by the Force of the former; yet they have at the ſame Time, by the Dint of the latter, ſubdued their Conquerors, and in the midſt of Captivity celebrated a Triumph.

Spare not to command me, if thou canſt propoſe any Method of doing thee Service.

God the Eſſence of Eſſences, purifie us, and waſh away our Imperfections.

Paris, 25th. of the 8th. Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER

LETTER XVII.

To Bedredin, Superior of the Dervises, of the Convent of Cogni in Natolia.

ART thou alive, Venerable Old Man, or must I expect my Answer in the other World? I have often writ to thee, and more often enquired after thy Health, when I had Opportunity; but have received no Answer, nor heard any News of thee these Seven Moons; which seem so many Years, to a Man who would be ready to die for Joy, could he receive the least Assurance that thou art yet alive.

Without Doubt, thou livest where-ever thou art, and livest in perfect Joy and Peace, the Rewards of thy consummate Sanctity and Vertue. Either thou still enjoyest a Heaven on Earth, thy Incorrupt Soul being a Paradise to it self; or, thou hast translated thy Residence from Earth to Heaven, to augment the Number and Joys of the Blessed.

Well! I will suppose and hope thou art alive, and that this Letter will come to thy Hand: I will therefore make thee an acceptable Present.

Thou hast often spoke with much Affection and Reverence of Jesus, the Messias of the Christians, as all Good Mussulmen ought to do; being taught by the Alcoran in several Chapters, that he was a Holy Prophet, and in the Number of the Divine Favorites.

I have met with an Authentick Deſcription of his Perſon in the King's Library, and have tranſlated it into Arabick for thy Satisfaction. Publius Lentulus being Preſident of Judæa, ſent it to the Senate of Rome, when the Fame of Jeſus began to ſpread abroad in the World. Theſe are his Words:

THERE lives at this time in Judæa, a Man of ſingular Vertue, whoſe Name is Jeſus Chriſt. Whom the Barbarians eſteem a Prophet; but, his own Followers adore him as the Off-ſpring of the Immortal Gods. He calls back the Dead from their Graves, and heals all Sorts of Diſeaſes with a Word or a Touch. He is tall and well-ſhaped; of an Amiable, Reverend Aſpect; his Hair of a Colour that can hardly be match'd, falling into Graceful Curls below his Ears, and very agreeably couching on his Shoulders, parted on the Crown of the Head like the Nazarites. His Fore-head is ſmooth and large, his Cheeks without other Spot, ſave that of a lovely Red. His Noſe and Mouth form'd with exquiſite Symmetry. His Beard thick, and of a Colour ſuitable to the Hair of his Head, reaching an Inch below his Chin, and parting in the middle like a Fork. His Eyes bright, clear and ſerene. He rebukes with Majeſty, counſels with Mildneſs; his whole Addreſs, whether in Word or Deed, being Elegant and Grave. No Man has ſeen

him laugh, but he has wept frequently. He is very Temperate, Modeſt and Wiſe. A Man, for his Excellent Beauty and Divine Perfections, ſurpaſſing the Children of Men.

I ſend thee this Picture of the Chriſtians Meſſias, not drawn by the Pencil of the Painter, but by the Pen of a Roman Governour, and therefore it may paſs for Authentick. I have often heard thee praiſe the Original, and condemn ſome too Superſtitious Muſſulmans, who, in their miſtaken Zeal for the Alcoran, have Blaſphem'd this Holy Prophet; a Man whom the Alcoran it ſelf mentions in ſeveral Chapters, ſtyling him, The Breath and Word of God.

Certainly, Malediction becomes not the Mouth of a True Believer; and he, who Curſes God, or any of the Hundred and twenty four Thouſand Prophets, ſhall be excluded their Society in Paradiſe.

I give thee a final Adieu, O Holy Derviſe; deſiring, that this Character of the Meſſiah, may be tranſcribed in Letters of Gold on Silken Paper, and laid up in the Library of thy Convent. Adieu. Live for ever.

Paris, 25th. of the 8th. Moon,
of the Year 1642.

LETTER XVIII.

To the Kaimacham.

VArious are the Diſcourſes of People in this Place concerning the Reduction of Aſac. For, Paris, like Athens of old, is the Receptacle of all the News in the World.

The French are Naturally a Martial People, delighting much in the Affairs of War; and when the News came laſt Year of the Raiſing the Siege of Aſac, with all the Particulars of the Defendants Bravery, notwithſtanding the Union of ſo great Forces againſt them; they highly applauded the Valour and Conſtancy of the Coſſacks, whom neither Threats nor Promiſes, gentle Means, nor vigorous Aſſaults could prevail upon to ſurrender up their Town, but forced the Beſiegers to return Home with the Loſs of above Twelve Thouſand Turks, beſides Moldavians, Walachians, and Tartars.

But now they begin to change their Notes, and to admire the Invincible Force of the Ottoman Arms, which hew their way through the moſt Formidable Difficulties, to lay Empires, Kingdoms, and States at the Feet of our Victorious Sultan.

I have received a particular Account from Nathan Ben Saddi, of the taking of that City. He tells me, That at the News of thoſe these great Preparations, which were making by Land and Sea against it; the Inhabitants being denied the Protection of the Moscovites, which was their sole Refuge in this Extremity, abandoned the Town, carrying with them their Goods, and demolishing their Houses, so that there was but small Prey left for our Soldiers.

It is the General Discourse of this Court, that there is a Son born to Sultan Ibrahim. I should heartily rejoice, were I assured the News were true; but, there is no Dispatch as yet to confirm it. Besides, I have received Advice from Constantinople, which almost discourages me from ever hoping so fortunate an Event.

God lengthen thy Days, and make thee Happy, both in this World, and in Paradise.

of the Year 1642.

LETTER

LETTER XIX.

To Muſtapha, Baſſa of Siliſtria.

THOU haſt no Reaſon to repine at the Exchange of thy Government, though thy preſent Power be circumſcribed within narrower Limits than it was in Ægypt. That Granary of the World, never afforded thee ſuch a Harveſt of Laurels as thou haſt reaped on the Banks of the Black Sea. The Conqueſt of Aſac has loaded thee with Honours, and the Moderation thou haſt in the midſt of Triumphs, has captivated greater Numbers of the Coſſacks, than could the Dint of thy Cymetar. Though the Foundations of Kingdoms are laid in Blood, yet the Superſtructure is cemented with Clemency; and, the Roman Cæſars, by timely ſheathing their Swords, faſtned to their Empire, the Provinces they had won by drawing them.

I am bound to write often to the Miniſters of the Port, and all my Moments are conſecrated to the Service of the Grand Signior, who has a Right to command all Mankind: Yet the Fame of thy late Victory reaching theſe Parts, and giving occaſion of Diſcourſe, I ſtole this time from my ſelf, not from my Great Maſter (it being the Hour of Sleep) to tell thee what the World ſays of thee.

They do not compare thee to Hannibal, Scipio, or Alexander the Great; thou thy ſelf ſelf wouldſt take him for a Flatterer, that ſhould uſe ſuch an Expreſſion. But they ſay, the Method thou haſt taken, to ſweeten the Calamities of the Coſſacks, and invite them back to their abandoned Habitations, has ſome reſemblance with the Conduct of Selim, a General of Orchanes's Army; who, after he had taken the City of Pruſa, forbid his Soldiers, on pain of Death, to touch the Goods of the Inhabitants, or commit any Inſolent Action. The Moderation of this Conqueror, not only rendred the Citizens eaſie, and willing to ſubmit to their New Lord; but, the Fame of it ſpreading abroad, he with little Bloodſhed reduced all the adjoining Countreys under Subjection.

It is reported of the Great and Victorious Saladine, That he took more Pleaſure in winning the Hearts of his Enemies, than in conquering their Perſons. This Prince had a Saying very common in his Mouth, That he did the Office of a Barber and Gardiner, ſhaving the Superfluities, and pruning the Excreſcencies of Overgrown Kingdoms and States, not deſtroying them Root and Branch. 'Tis certain, he endeavoured in all his Conqueſts to mollifie the Averſion of his Enemies, by Acts of Generoſity.

Thou wilt expect ſome News from a Man in my Poſt, and I cannot entertain thee with more agreeable Intelligence, than what is the common Theme of Diſcourſe at this Time.

Edward, Duke of Parma, has entered into the Pope's Territories with Three Thouſand

ſelect

ſelect Horſe, where he marches Dragooning up and down the Country, bringing Terror and Confuſion where-ever he comes. He Conquers without drawing his Sword, the Pope's Army flying before him.

This Prince is by Nature very fierce and Active, and has a peculiar Gift of obliging his Souldiers, by treating them with a frank, affable Carriage, free from the ſtately Reſervedneſs to which Men in Authority are accuſtomed. By this Deportment, he has inſenſibly ſtole their Affections; they are ready to follow him all over the World.

When the Princes of Italy fall out with one another, they generally engage the French and the Spaniards in the Quarrel. But the Duke of Parma refuſed the Aſſiſtance which the former proffer'd him of Two Thouſand Men, provided they might be diſpoſed in Garriſons; he was Jealous, leſt the French deſign'd to play their old Game; and, that when they were once Houſed in his Cities and ſtrong Holds, it would be difficult to Unkennel them.

He has a new way of winning Towns, carrying with him neither Infantry, Cannon, Ammunition, nor any other Proviſion neceſſary to a Campaign. Yet, when he approached towards Smola in his Road to Bologna, the Governour ſent the Keys of the Town to him in his March; which he made no other Uſe of, than to give his Troops a Paſſage through the Place, reſigning them up again. By theſe Noble Acts, he paved himſelf an eaſie way through the Eccleſiaſtick State;

State; his Army being furnished with Victuals in Abundance, without Plunder or Insolency.

The first Occasion of this Quarrel, proceeded from some Contempts put upon the Prince of Parma at the Court of Rome, by the Nephews of Pope Urban. And, the Disgusts have since been improved to that Height as to Engage the State of Venice, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the Duke of Modena, and other Princes, in the Care of the General Interest of Italy.

They proceed with Mediations and Overtures of Peace in one Hand, while the Sword is brandish'd with the other; amusing one another with Treaties to gain Time. The Loss of Castro, a strong Town on the Borders of the Ecclesiastick State, spurs on the Duke of Parma to Revenge himself on the Barberins's; while the Republick of Venice strives to mitigate his Fierceness, and accommodate Affairs, espousing his Cause, but fearful of his Rashness, lest his Impetuous Humour should carry him to the Walls of Rome, and bring things to Extremities. For, all the Princes in Italy profess an Inviolate Obedience to the Pope, who seems to inherit the Authority of the Ancient Roman Emperors.

Thou may'st comprehend by what I have said, how easie it were at such a Juncture (when all the Principalities in Italy are (as it were) disjointed) to bring them under the Yoke of a Foreign Power. This is what the Spaniards and French have for a long time been been nibling at: and, whereof the Republick of Venice are so Jealous, that they never side with one Party to the Ruine of another, but endeavour to keep all the Interests of Italy in an Æquilibrium, till they are Reconciled and United, lest the Party which finds it self most weakned, should seek the Protection of one of those Potent Crowns; who would not fail to strike two strokes for themselves, if they are desired to strike one for the Oppressed Italian.

The Christians call Italy, the Garden of Europe; and, if the Allusion may hold, the King of Spain has possessed himself of two stately Grotto's in it, Naples and Milan; yet, 'tis a Question, whether the Cost in maintaining these two Cities, will countervail the Honour of being their Sovereign at such a Distance. The same may be said of his Dominions, in Mexico and Peru. This is the Peculiar Happiness of the Ottoman Empire, that all the Members of so vast a Body, lie contiguous to each other.

The Monarch of the World above and this below, encrease the Territories of our Invincible Sultan, and by continually supplying our Armies with such Fortunate Leaders as Mustapha, subdue all Nations to the True Faith.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State.

I Have heard with Sorrow, of the Disappointment the Sultans Forces met in the taking of Rab. The Christians accuse him of Breach of the Capitulations, on which a Peace was concluded for Twenty Years, between the Happy Port, and the Emperor of Germany.

If the Stratagem by which they design'd to take this Town be truly related to me, it seems to be a Copy of the Grecian Artifice in taking Troy, bating the Difference of many Carts, and one Wooden Horse.

That Officer who discovered the Intrigue, tho' he had hunted in vain all the former part of the Day, yet returned with good Game at last, when he had ensnared our carted Soldiers within the Toils, got them within the Walls of the City, and drawn up the Draw-Bridge upon the Ambush which lay behind. The Emperor, it seems takes it mightily to heart; and, as I hear, has sent an Ambassador to the Port, to complain of this Transaction.

The Court here, is not very solicitous for his Interest, nor will they be much troubled to find that his Ambassador has but a cold Reception at Constantinople. For, the Differences rences between the Kings of France and the House of Austria, are too deeply grounded, to suffer any good Understanding or Affection, to take Place between them.

And, the Cardinal of Richlieu, was heard to say not many Days ago, That, since the German Eagle was so greedy, he would give her a Bone to pick would break her Bill. This was spoken in Relation to the Emperor's Encroachments on the Palatinate, and his Seizure of Juliers and Treves.

I am glad to hear, that the League is renewed between the Shining Port and the King of Persia, that so the Nerves of the Sacred Empire may be wholly employed in Hungary.

To Enguruli Emir Cheik, a Man of the Law.

THIS Western World lies drown'd in Wickedneſs; or rather, it is ſet on Fire with Sin. I ſweat while I am within the Confines of the Air of Chriſtendom. An univerſal Peſtilence infects the Souls of Men, from whence their Words breath nothing but Contagion. Even ſuch as one would take for Holy Saints, are meer Cheats; and like thoſe Fruits that grow on the Banks of the Lake Aſphaltites, they are fair and beauteiful without, but bring them to the Touchſtone, and you will find them meer Corruption and Rottenneſs within. The Laity openly wallow in all Debauchery and Licentious Practices. Nor are the Clergy leſs exempt from ſecret Enormities; while the Eccleſiaſtick Veſtments ſerve but as Cloaks to Pride, Ambition, Covetouſneſs, and other concomitant Vices. The Sword of Juſtice it ſelf, or at leaſt, that which ought to be ſo, ſerves to divide the Spoils of the Poor, the Widow and the Orphan. In Court and Camp all Offices are bought and ſold, without regard to Merit or the Publick Good. He that bids higheſt, is firſt preferr'd; and, the beſt-money'd Chapman, is the moſt meritorious Candidate.

Theſe

These are the Escapes of Princes, and the Designs of Favourites; whilst the Easiness of the one, abused by the Craft and Subtilty of the other, exposes Places of highest Trust, as in an Exchange to become the Merchandize of every Pedling Huckster; And brave and generous Souls are many Times put by, tho' the Royal Promise it self has pass'd in their Behalf. This is eminently the Unhappiness of the French Court. And, 'tis thought, the late Duke of Luynes and the present Cardinal of Richlieu, both of them Favourites to the present King, could not have swell'd their Coffers with such Heaps of Gold, but by these sinister Methods.

I am credibly informed by an old French Courtier, That Monsieur Belville, a Gentleman of the Province of Languedoc, spared not to pass this Reflection on the Duke of Luynes, even in the King's Presence. Being at Bourdeaux, while the King celebrated his Nuptials with the Infanta of Spain, in a most Magnificent Manner; one Day coming to the Court in his Mourning-Coach, (his Father being newly dead) he was reprehended by Monsieur Cadinet, Younger Brother to the Duke of Luynes, for appearing at Court in such an extraordinary Time of Joy, with a Mourning-Coach. O, Sir, says Belville, the Bravery of your Brother's Coach, may excuse the Meanness of mine, since he borrowed all the Gold I had, to Equip himself for this Triumphant Season. This I was told, by one that was present and heard the Words; and, the Occasion of them also he was not ignorant of, which was this:

Monsieur

Monſieur Belville being a Gentleman of a Noble Family, and one whoſe eminent Vertues and Services might have intituled him to ſome ſuitable Dignity, but being low in his Fortune, was not regarded or taken Notice of, till he addreſſed himſelf to the Duke of Luynes; who, upon the Receipt of Fifteen Hundred Crowns, promiſed him to make him Cavalier of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt, a Dignity next to that of the Peers of the Realm, and which is a fair Step to it. But, inſtead of performing his Promiſe, after he had got his Money, he by under-hand Practices, procured him to be baniſhed the Court, neither did he ever come near it till this Marriage aforeſaid was taken in Hand; at which time his Father dying at Bourdeaux, and being there alſo buried, he by the Mediation of ſome Friend, procured a Repeal of his Baniſhment, that he might have an Opportunity of making the King ſenſible of the Duke's Injuſtice. But, it took not the deſired Effect; for, he was upon thoſe Words, immediately impriſoned, where he ſoon after died of Grief. Thus is Oppreſſion, Murder, and Violence countenanc'd by Authority among theſe Infidels.

But thou, Sage Interpreter of our Law, and Patron of Vertue, vouchſafe me thy Counſel, that I may learn not to be corrupted by converſing with theſe Uncircumciſed.

LETTER XXII.

To the Most Illustrious Vizir Azem, at the Port.

THE Enemies of the Ottoman Interest, ever since the Time that our late Invincible Sultan Amurat had caused his Uncle Mustapha to be strangled, flatter'd themselves with the vain Hopes, of seeing that Royal Line extinct; it being blaz'd abroad in all the Courts of Christendom, that Sultan Amurat, by excessive Use of Wine, had quite enervated his Natural Vigor, and rendred himself incapable of getting any more Children. And the private Charge which he gave to the Bassa's and Grandees of the Empire, That in Case he died Issueless, they should translate the Imperial Diadem to the Tartar, was no Secret here. Every Man look'd upon our present Happy Sovereign, Sultan Ibrahim, as a Man design'd for a Sacrifice to his Brother's Hatred, and that he would not long survive the Fate of his Uncle Mustapha.

I have heard a grave and experienc'd Statesman say, that he hoped to see the Ottoman Empire (after the Death of Amurat) rent into as many and fatal Divisions, by the Ambitious Beglerbegs, Bassa's and other Governors of Provinces, as the Empire of Alexander the Great was, by the Commanders of his Army,

Army, after his Death, who ſhared it among themſelves, and Catonized it into as many Principalities, as there were Captains to make Pretenſions, either by Merit or the Sword.

But, Praiſe be to God, Lord of the Univerſe, the Sovereign Protector of the Empire eſtabliſhed by his own Hands, the Hopes of the Infidels are defeated. Ottoman is not left without an Heir to ſit upon the Throne, an Heir of his Blood, as well as of his Empire.

The Birth of Sultan Mahomet is no ſmall News to Europe, after it had been generally reported, that his Father, Sultan Ibrahim, was Impotent. The Ladies of the Court here begin to entertain a better Opinion of him. And the Grandees frame more Maſculine Idea's of our Glorious Monarch.

God augment the Imperial Off-ſpring, and perpetuate the Ottoman Sway, till the Day of the Balance.

I bow my Forehead to the Carpets whereon thou treadeſt, and kiſs the Hem of thy rich Veſt. God encreaſe thy Graces and Felicities.

To the same.

IT is not lawful for a Slave to pry into the Actions of his Sovereign Lord, much less to censure his Conduct with Boldness. But, miserable is that Prince who amongst all his pretended Friends and Servants, has none so Faithful and Discreet, as to warn him of Dangers which are ready to devour him.

I cannot but highly applaud the Severity of thy Justice, in taking away the Life of that Persian Traytor last Year, who by his accursed Insinuations and Example, hastened the Death of our late Victorious Sovereign, Sultan Amurat, upon whom be the Mercies of God.

That Heretick, though an Emir, of the Race of our Holy Prophet, and adorned with the Immarcessible Colour, which is appropriated to Sanctity and Vertue; yet, refrained not from Idolatry, being a daily Votary to Bacchus. He it was, who first taught the Unfortunate Sultan to drink Wine, which he afterwards practised to that Excess, as betray'd him to many Inconveniencies, and at last to Death it self.

But, suffer me to ask thee, why thou dost not also take an equal Revenge on Mustapha Bassa, who was as guilty as the Persian; being not only a Companion, but a zealous Promoter of the Royal Debauches? It was he, who who first propos'd that Fatal Match of drinking, which cast the Sultan into a Mortal Fever, of which he died in less than a Week.

I should not presume to say these Things to thee, nor to call past Miscarriages to Remembrance, were I not certainly inform'd that the same Mustapha is practising his old Trade with the present Sultan Ibrahim, endeavouring to enervate the Royal Blood, and withdraw the Sultan from the just Observance of our Holy Laws, to the Impious Profanations of the Infidels. I am commanded to give Intelligence of all Important Affairs to thee, and the other Great Ministers of State: I thought none more weighty, than that which regards the Life of my Sovereign.

I have done my Duty, I leave the Process to thee, who are the Oracle of Government.

God direct thy Feet in the Path of Justice, which will assuredly lead thee to the Gardens of Eden, where thou shalt enjoy Eternal Repose, and Supreme Felicity.

LETTER XXIII.

To the Venerable Mufti, Prince of the Religion of the Turks.

I Received the Dispatch of thy Sanctity, wherein thou hast renovated my Soul, and restored me to a sound Consistence of Spirit. My Doubts are vanished, I am no longer racked with torturing Scruples about my Conduct. Thy Absolution has obliterated the Sentence my Fears had pronounced on me.

As to the Penance thou hast enjoined me, it is Rational, and adapted to the Quality of my Crime. I have counterfeited a Christian, that I might the better perform the Duty of a Mussulman. I have seemed devoutly Attentive to the Roman Missal, that I might be Instrumental to propagate the Alcoran. And, for this Religious Fault, thou requirest, that I should inform thee, how the Christians behave themselves in their Temples, where I have been so often a Spectator of their Ceremonies. I submit with an absolute Resignation, and a willing Compliance to thy Venerable Injunction; and, will briefly relate what I have observed.

These Infidels seem to be Ambitious of imitating the Undefiled Religion, and yet they prove but bad Mimicks; for, as we are taught to wash our Bodies before we enter the Sacred cred Mosque; so they, at the Entrance of their Churches, dip their Fingers in certain Vessels filled with Water and Salt, and sprinkle their Foreheads therewith; as though their Purity lay in a Swound, and was thus to be recovered to life again: or, that the Uncleanness of their whole Bodies, were contracted into the Face. They esteem the Water Holy, and yet they trifle with it as an Indifferent Thing. One would think, they should be desirous to bath themselves all over, and let every Pore in their Skin imbibe the Sanctified Liquor: But, they seem rather to use it as a Charm; for, after they have sprinkled a few Drops on their Faces, and muttered to themselves Two or Three Words, they think they have chased all Impurity from them in a Fright, and boldly present themselves before the Altars. Herein also they deviate from the Practice of Former Christians, who (if their own Church-Histories be true) were accustomed to wash their Arms and Feet in certain Cisterns, before they entred the Temples; whereof the Fountains and Lavatories remaining yet on the South Side of the Holy and Magnificent Mosque of Santa Sophia at Constantinople, are a standing Testimony. For, the Greek Inscripeions shew That some of them, at least, were contrived by the Builders of this Glorious Temple, in the Time of Justinian the Emperor, for the Purification of such as came thither to Worship. By which 'tis manifest, That these Modern Infidels degenerate from those more Ancient ones.

Another Thing offends me also, which is this; They believe the Divinity is present in their Temples, after a peculiar and extraordinary Manner, and yet they suffer Dogs to Profane them with their vilest Excrements. They spare for no Cost to adorn their Churches, and their Altars are enriched with invaluable Treasures of Silver, Gold, and Precious Stones; and yet, after all, they must become the Receptacles of the Dung of Sordid Animals.

These wicked Wretches also, walk up and down in these Sacred Places, talking of their Common Affairs, as though they were on the Exchange, or in the Market-Place.

But, that which is to be had in greatest Abomination, is, that it is common for Men to make Love to the Women in Churches: They present themselves before the Altars, but, the Saint whom they Invocate, is some beautiful Female. She engrosses all their Devotions; to her they make their Vows. The amorous Youth adores his Mistress that kneels by him, laden perhaps with more Sins than himself. His Eyes may be fixed on the Altar, or, on the Pictures and Images, but his Tongue Addresses to the more Charming Idol near him. Or, if his Eyes are attentive on his Prayer-Book, he teaches it to speak nothing but the soft and effeminate Things of Love. Thus, Assignations of Lust, are made in the House of Prayer; and the Affairs of Cupid, managed under the Masque of Religion. They Fight the Battels of Venus, under the Banner of their God.

I tell

I tell thee, Venerable Interpreter of the Divine Law, that the Sight of these Things has sometimes inflamed my Zeal to that Height, as had it not been for an earnest Desire to do some extraordinary Service to the Grand Signior (which obliged me to take Care of my self) I should certainly have transfixt these profane Mockers of God on the Spot, and Sacrificed them to a Zeal, which thou, who art Piety it self, wouldst not, I believe, reprehend.

I fold my Arms, most Venerable Sovereign of Religion, and wrapping my self in profound Humility, I fall prostrate to the Earth; begging thy effectual Blessing and Intercession, that I may be admitted into the Number of the Happy in Paradise.

Paris, 26th of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER XXIV.

To the Vizir Azem, Prime Director of the Affairs of the Ottoman Empire.

THE Notices I have of the Present State of England, (in Compliance with thy Commands) are not gained without some Difficulty. It is not easie for a Man that sits in his Chamber in Paris, to pry into the Cabinets of Foreign Courts: Yet, I will communicate to thee some Intelligences, which thou couldst not learn from the English Embassador at the Port, nor from all the Travellours of that Nation, residing at Constantinople, Smyrna and Aleppo.

There is a Jew whom they call De Lopez, a Confident and Emissary of Cardinal Richlieu, whom he employs both at Home and Abroad in several private Negotiations and Intrigues. I have insinuated into this Man's Familiarity, and (if I may so express it) I have Riveted my self into his Heart. He treats me with an Assurance void of Jealousie; and, there is no Folding or Angle in his Breast, which I do not easily penetrate. I make use of him, as an Optick, through which I peep into the Cardinal's Secrets, and, as a Mirrour, in which I behold the true Face of many disguised Affairs, transacted in the remotest Corners of Europe;

Europe; there being hardly any thing of moment done in the Courts of Christian Princes, wherein the Cardinal has not a Finger. He seems to be the Genius or Soul of Christendom, communicating Motion, Activity, and Heat, to all the Grand Intrigues now on Foot in these Western Parts of the World.

The Commotions of England, seem to be a complicated Distemper of the State, arising from several Causes, drawn to a Head by the dextrous Artifice of this Busie Spirit. The Present King of that Island, came to the Crown with no small Disadvantages; his Father having Exhausted the Treasury, and left him deeply in Debt. He had no small Number of the Blood-Royal to maintain; which kind of Charges, thou knowest, our Glorious Sultans, though they be Masters of infinite Riches, endeavour to avoid, by Marrying their Daughters and Nieces, whilst yet Infants, to some of the most Potent and Wealthy Bassa's, that so their Port may be kept up, without burdening the Royal Coffers. But, the Infidel Princes are wanting in this frugal Providence. In the Reign of King James (this King's Father) England lay at Ease, slumbring in the Downy Bed of Peace; she wallowed in Pleasures, and had no other Unhappiness, but in being too Happy. Her Affluence and Idleness, affected the State with a Plethory. The Publick Health cannot be long conserved, without the moderate Exercise of War. Charles, after the Death of the Old King, being Established in the Throne, committed the Affairs of State, to the Management of his Miniſters; never examining his Treaſury, nor calling to an Account his Officers, but Indulged himſelf in the Pleaſures moſt agreeable to his Youthful Genius. He hunted in the Foreſts, whilſt the Grandees, whom he entruſted with his Revenues and the Publick Conduct, had another Game to purſue, poſt-poning their Maſter's Intereſt, and that of the Nation, to their own private Avarice. The Favourite Miniſter, held a ſecret Correſpondence with Cardinal Richlieu, and, by this means, the Court was filled with French Penſioners; countenanced alſo by the Authority of the Queen, who was the Daughter of France.

It had been before agreed in the Articles of the Marriage, that the Queen of England ſhould have a prefixed Number of French Servants. But they, not content with their Domeſtick Employments, and Attendance on her Perſon, ſought the Management of that Eſtate, which King Charles had ſetled on her as a Dowry. This would by no means agree with the Conſtitutions of the Engliſh. That Iſland is a Little World by it ſelf; and, the Inhabitants boaſt of an Original Freedom of Birth, which is not ſo much as dreamt of in all the Dominions of our Invincible Sultans. Though the Engliſh have ſeveral Times been Invaded and Subdued, by the Saxons, Danes, and French; yet, it has been rather by Compoſition than Extremity of War: Or, if it may be called a Conqueſt, the Victors have been forced to yield to the Vanquiſhed, in aſ-ſuring them their Ancient Laws, Privileges and Cuſtoms. There is no Nation in the World, more jealous of this their pretended Birthright. And therefore to avoid all Occaſions of giving Offence to the Nobles and Gentry, the King perceiving the inſolent Demands and Carriage of the French Courtiers, commanded them all, ſave a few Creatures of the Favourite Duke, to depart the Kingdom. This much diſguſted the Queen; and Cardinal Richlieu was glad of the Opportunity to incenſe the King of France. Lewis was netled at the Affront offered to his Siſter. Yet, by the Dexterity of the Mareſchal Baſſompierre, his Embaſſador at the Engliſh Court, Things were in a way of Accommodation; when all was quaſh'd by the Seizure which the French made of ſeveral Engliſh Ships; and ſo a War commenced, far more fatal in its Conſequences to England than to France.

The King of England rouzed from his Pleaſures and Divertiſements, by the Preparations of his Potent Neighbour, began to look about him, and conſult the Publick Safety. But, when he examined his Treaſury, he found it empty, or, at leaſt, at a very low Ebb.

Behold here, Supreme Baſſa, a ſtroke of Deſtiny, a Concurrence of Cauſes, ſeeming remote and ſmall in their firſt Appearance; but, in their Proceſs, uniting and involving that Kingdom in Ruine.

Charles could not carry on a War with France, without asking Aid of the Sovereign Divan (which they call the Parliament) of that Nation. It is a Senate composed of above Seven hundred of the Nobility and Gentry of the Land. These have the Power to make Laws, raise Taxes, and redress the Grievances of the Kingdom. It was an ill Season to ask the Assistance of his Subjects, who had already conceived an Aversion for the Royal Dignity. However, a Mighty Fleet was order'd to be Rigg'd and Mann'd out. Cardinal Richlieu, from afar, beheld the approaching Storm, and knew not how to divert it from falling on France, but by Corrupting the English Favourite. De Lopez, from whom I received this Intelligence, was employed in the Affair; he was sent to London, which is the Metropolis of England, and the Place where the King usually keeps his Court. It was an Expensive Negotiation, and cost the Cardinal Forty Thousand Dollars, which is equivalent to Three Millions and Two Hundred Thousand of our Aspers. With this vast Bribe, he Proselyted the Favourite Duke to the Interest of France. The English Navy consisted of an Hundred and Fifty Sail, having also Twelve Thousand Land-Men on Board. It was agreed between them, that the English Minister should procure himself to be made Admiral of these Marine Forces. His Indulgent Master, could deny nothing to the Man whom he had entrusted with the Sway of the Government. Now the King of France might sleep at quiet, since the English Ships sailed with a French Wind. They landed upon the Island of Re, but their Actions were altogether Theatrical; a mere a mere ſhew of War, without any real Execution. The Engliſh General, manifeſtly omitting the proper Methods, and favourable Opportunities of winning that Iſland: His Conduct ſpeaking, as if he came there rather to Compliment than to Fight.

Theſe Things made a harſh ſound in England, and the Nobles reſented ill the double-dealing of the Duke of Buckingham (ſo was the Engliſh General call'd.) In fine, the bad Succeſs of their Forces, the Expences they had been at, and the Diſgrace they ſuffered in this War, (Four and Forty of their Colours being carried to Paris, and hung up in the Chief Temple of this City, as Trophies of the French Victory) incenſed the Generality of the Engliſh Nation againſt the King and the Government; they began to accuſe him in their Cabals, of Male-Adminiſtration; and, the Favourite Duke was a while after ſtabbed by a Ruffian, whom the Malecontents had hired to execute their Revenge.

The Affections of the Engliſh, appeared every day more and more alienated from the King. And Cardinal Richlieu had there his Agents, who were not wanting to foment the Publick Diſcontents, and by divers Artifices to draw the Credulous People into Factions. The French Penſioners were inſtructed to deport themſelves in a Manner every way offenſive to the Nation. Black and threatning Clouds ſeemed to hang over the Court of England, exhaled from the ill Blood of the Subjects. The Royal Dignity went Retrograde; grade; and, all Things tended to obscure the Lustre of the Crown. Yet, there passed some Years, before Things came to Extremities; and, Matters though ripened, yet were not brought to an open Rupture, till Scotland lanced the Sore.

This Nation is subject to the Crown of England, and makes one Half of the Island of Great Britain. They are a Warlike People; patient of Labour, accustomed to the Rigour of an extreme Cold Climate, great Travellers, Subtle, Proud and Inconstant.

After that which some call Heresie, others a Reformation, had begun to alienate many Kingdoms and Provinces from the Roman Church; the Scots, greedy of Novelties, and spurred on by the Ambitious Pretexts of one of their Grandees (who under the Mask of Religion sought the Crown) introduced Innovations into their Church. They shook off at once all their Obedience to the Pope, and set up such a Form of Religious Discipline, as was altogether Antimonarchical; and, their Preachers ceased not to instil into the Hearts of the People, Democratick Principles. Thus continued Affairs, till King Charles, not insensible of these Things, and willing to new Model that Church, they took up Arms against him, knowing that he would not be able to raise Forces to chastise them, without calling a Parliament. The Parliament of England, was at that time full of Scotish Proselytes, Men of Seditious and Turbulent Principles; so, that the King was like to find

but little Favour among them. However, by the Assistance of some Loyal Nobles and Gentlemen, he marches into Scotland at the Head of an Army. Not a Blow was struck on either side; but all Differences were composed, and hush'd up by a Treaty. Yet, soon after, the Scots entred into England with an Army, being underhand invited in by their Partizans in England. The King is a Second Time forced to throw himself upon his Parliament for Money; but they, instead of granting him any, fell to examining his past Conduct, complaining and desiring a Redress of several Irregularities in his Administration. There were those who failed not to put in Execution, the Designs and Instructions of Cardinal Richlieu; he had his Agents up and down the Kingdom, who insinuated Jealousies and Heart-burnings into the Gentry and People of the Land. The King was represented every where as a Tyrant, and all his Actions were misconstrued.

Signior Rossetti, the Pope's Nuncio at the English Court, beside his Instructions from the Roman Pontiff, held a strict Intelligence with the Cardinal. His Business at this Court, was publickly to the Queen (who professed an Obedience to the See of Rome) but privately he was order'd to Negotiate an Accommodation between the Roman and English Churches. Cardinal Richlieu thought to strike two Marks with one Blow, that is, to embroil the State of England, and procure himself the greater Esteem with the Roman Court.

Court. He appears very Zealous for the Conversion of England; and in order to it, allows a Considerable Pension to Signior Rossetti: Instructing him withal, to shew his utmost Dexterity, in gaining the Courtiers and Grandees of that Nation to his Side.

He knew the Genius of the English; and, that there was nothing so offensive to that Nation, as the Papal Power and Religion. Wherefore, De Lopez was order'd to pay Signior Rossetti vast Sums of Money, that so there might be nothing wanting to Proselyte the Courtiers; knowing that they would act insolently, and disgust the Protestants, and so encrease the Publick Aversion for the Regal Authority. There was also another Agent at the English Court, who was Secretary to Cardinal Barberini, a Man no less Industrious than the other, in advancing the Roman Interest. He held a strict Correspondence with some of the Chief Ministers, especially with the Principal Secretary of State. Whilst these were doing their Master's Business at the Court, there were others no less Active in the City, where they endeavoured to create a Party and raise Factions, insinuating themselves into the Acquaintance of the most eminent Merchants and other Citizens; representing to them, the Dangerous Consequences of Signior Rossetti's Residence at the Court; glancing at every Thing which look'd like a false Step in the King's Conduct; alarming them with Fears and Apprehensions of being subjected to a Foreign Power; and, using all their Arts to nourish Popular Dissatisfaction.

The Scots, about this Time, made another Incursion into England. A Parliament was called, but no Good done. The King's Necessities, made them grow High in their Demands and Carriage, and all things tended to a General Defection.

A while after, the Irish revolted, and massacred above a Hundred Thousand English. The King is accused for being privy to it; Tumules are raised, who, in threatning manner, seem'd to besiege the Royal Palaces, calling out for Justice; not much unlike the Sedition of our Janizaries, when they are displeased with the Conduct of our Glorious Sultans, or his Prime Ministers of State.

In fine, the Misunderstandings between the King and the Parliament grew to that Height, as induced the King to withdraw from the Capital City, about the Beginning of this Year. And, in the following Moon, he sent the Queen with her Daughter into Holland, that they might pass away the time in the Court of the Prince of Orange, till this Storm was blown over.

In the Interim, the King sends Letters to the Parliament, perswading them to consult the Publick Peace; but all was to no purpose; they seize upon all the Strong Holds and Castles they could; so that, when the King came to one of his Garrison'd Towns, the Gates were shut against him, and he was denied Entrance by the Governour. The Parliament list-lists an Army, and the King ſet up his Royal Standard in the laſt Moon. Since which, there has been nothing of Action between them, but the Armies are drawing near each other.

I will inform thee of all Particulars, as they come to my Knowledge. But the Packet-Boats from the Iſland, come not ſo frequently during the Diſturbance, as they have done ormerly.

I beſeech the Creator of all things, to defend our Invincible Sultan, from the Seditious Practices of his Subjects; and make thee Inſtrumental, to eſtabliſh and aggrandize the Ottoman Empire.

LETTER

LETTER XXV.

To Abdel Melec Muly Omar, Superintendent of the College of Sciences at Fez.

WHEN I write to thee, 'tis with a Reſpect equal to that which I pay to the Emirs, the Deſcendents of our Holy Prophet, ſince thou art ſprung from the Noble Stem of the Ancient Saracens, the Blood of the Celebrated Omar, Succeſſor to the Divine Lawgiver, ſtreaming in thy Veins.

I revere the Banner carried into Ægypt by thy Renowned Progenitor, before which the Græcians fled aſtoniſhed, as at a Sign ſent from Heaven of their approaching Ruine. This Sacred Piece of Antiquity I have ſeen at Medina, where 'tis repoſited in the Chancel of the Babylonian Caliphs. I have honour'd it with a Pious Veneration; but, much greater is my Regard to thee, who art a Living Relique of that Illuſtrious Houſe.

Permit me, Venerable Sage, to converſe with thee a little, after the Manner of a Pupil; with thee, I ſay, who art a Fountain of Sapience; For, beſides thy perfect Knowledge of the Divine Law, thou art accompliſhed with all Humane Literature.

There is a Man in theſe Parts, of a large Soul and elevated Speculations, who ſtiffly maintains maintains, That the Earth moves, and the Sun ſtands ſtill. He is not the firſt that broach'd this Doctrine, it has had ſeveral Learned Patrons, but he has highly Improved the Theory. His Reſons for it, have almoſt the Force of Mathematical Demonſtrations; and, nothing ſeems to oppoſe him, but the Authority of Moſes, and the Hebrew Scriptures. The Chriſtians will not approve of any Philoſophy, which interferes with that which they call the Bible; and yet their Practice gives a perpetual Lye to the Contents of that Book. Surely, there is no Envy in the Deity; and, He that is Omniſcient, will not puniſh Men for improving their Knowledge. The Study of Nature, is full of Innocent Delights, and, he that gave to Man an Appetite of Science, has not forbid him to gratifie it with its proper Objects. Nor can I ſee how this New Philoſophy contradicts any more than the bare Letter of their Bible, (for, I have read it in ſeveral Languages;) And, the Jews, who are the Guardians of the Original Hebrew, allow a Cabbaliſtical Interpretation far different from the Literal: So does the Arabian Prince and Philoſopher, Avicen, Interpret thoſe Verſicles in our Holy Alcoran, (which treat of Paradiſe) in a Sence far more refined than the Letter ſeems to import. In reading ſuch Myſterious Books, it is neceſſary to practiſe a Learned Chymiſtry, to ſublimate the groſs external Sence of the Words, and to extract the Spirit and Soul of the Diſcourſe.

That the Sun is the Center of this our Planetary netary World, and that the Earth with the Rest of the Planets move round about it, is a Thesis which keeps exact Touch with Humane Reason, and seems naturally to square with our Intellectual Faculties. It sets all the Wheels of this Great and Wonderful Machine, in a regular and proportionate Circulation. It gives the truest Account of the Retrograde Motions of the Planets. Ptolomey's System of the World, seems to Romance upon the Sun, Moon, and Stars, in assigning them hourly such prodigious Journeys through the Heavens, as are inconsistent with the Laws of Motion. And Tycho Brahe was but a Botcher, in patching up the Orbs with his Eccentricks, Epicycles, &c. The former, keeps the Fixed Stars in an endless and unconceivable Hurry; the latter involves the Planets in a Heavenly Perplexity. Both come far short of Copernicus, that Excellent Astronomer, who by placing the Sun in the Centre of the World, has solv'd all the Appearances of Nature with the most exact Analogy to Truth. Nor is the Argument, taken from our Sense, of any force, since it invalidates the Motion of the Sun as well as that of the Earth: nay it is more incongruous, that the Sun should move so many Hundred Thousand Miles every Hour, and we not perceive him to stir a Hairs-breadth at a time. But I will not intrench farther on thy Patience, nor run the Risque of a Vertigo, by pursuing the swift Orbicular Motions of Nature. It matters not much, whether the Sun stands still, or the Earth, provided

we run the Race that is appointed us, so as to gain the Prize. Yet I will ask thy Judgment on another Point, which Men of high Reaches have started.

There are some Learned Men who say, the Moon and rest of the Planets are habitable as our Globe is. For my part, to speak freely, I could wish it were true, it is a sociable Doctrine. It has made me melancholy sometimes, when I have cast my Eyes upwards, to think all those Ample Tracts in the Firmament should be void of Inhabitants, and yet scarce a Turf of our Dunghil Earth to be found without its Domesticks. It is demonstrable to the Eye, that the Moon is an Opake Body like this Globe whereon we tread, having no other Light, but what it borrows from the Sun. Where is the Heresie then, in supposing that it is created for a like use? I hope, the Sacred Empire of the Mussulmans, will not stain it self with such a Barbarous Murder, as was committed on Vigilius a certain Christian Bishop, who was burnt by the Decree of the Roman Church, for Asserting the Antipodes; a Truth which all Nations are now sensible of, since the Improvement of Navigation and Traffick. And yet Galileus had like to have undergone the same Sentence at Rome, within these Ten Years, for maintaining the Earth's Motion, and that the Sun is the fixed Centre of the World; Nothing but his Recantation being sufficient to have sav'd him. Such Severities choak the Growth of Learning, and stop the Progress, which would otherwise otherwise be made in Arts and Sciences.

Happy are the Students that live under thy Auspicious Patronage, in that fruitful Seminary of Philosophers, where the Mysteries of God and Nature are taught free from the Prophane Licentiousness of the Ancient Pagans, or the Superstitious Rigours of Modern Infidels.

I pray the Sovereign Intelligence, not to withdraw from thee his Divine Influence, nor restrain the Floud of Light that has been let loose on thy Soul; but that thou may'st overflow like Nilus, and enlighten not only Africk, but the whole World with some New Discovery.

LETTER XXVI.

To Cara Haly, the Physician at Constantinople.

THE Western Philosophers, especially those who follow the Sentiments of Monsieur des Cartes, maintain, That the Souls of all living Creatures (except Men) are Material and Mortal; that a Beast is but a Machine, like a Watch or Clock, not actuated or informed by any Spirit distinct from the Body, but moved to the Performance of all Natural Actions Actions, by a meer Corporeal Mechanism, set on Work by various Impulses from External Objects.

In this they oppose Aristotle, and all the Sages of the East. And thou knowest, that our Arabian Doctors are of a contrary Opinion, who ascribe Reason, Discourse, and Immortality, to the Souls of Beasts, as well as to those of Men; having assigned particular Apartments for Elboraeh, the Beast which carried our Holy Prophet from Mecca to Jerusalem; for the Ram which Abraham sacrificed instead of his Son Isaac; for the Cow of Moses, the Pismire of Solomon, the Whale which saved Jonas, the Raven which fed Elijah, the Ass which rebuked Balaam; and, in General, for all the Camels which have the Honour to carry the Sacred Alcoran to Mecca.

I will suspend my Belief of their being entertained in Paradise, till I shall have the Happiness to see them there; but, I cannot however acquiesce to the Opinions of these Modern Philosophers, who assert their Souls to be meer Matter. The Bodies both of Men and Beasts, I own, perform all Motions by Mechanick Rules; but, that Mechanism is guided by a higher Principle than the fortuitous Impulse of External Agents, in Beasts as well as Men.

All Animals seem to me to be endued with a Faculty, which if it may not be called Reason; yet is something Analogous to it, for which we want a proper Name. And, of this Mind were Empedocles, Pythagoras, Plotinus tinus and Porphyry, with many other Ancient Sages. Though this Faculty is more eminently conspicuous in some Kinds of Beasts than in others.

I cannot but admire the Regular Architecture of Bees, their Industry and Politick Oeconomy, vying with the most Excellent Form and Administration of Government among Men. 'Tis with no less Pleasure I behold the Spider, when with exquisite Art she builds her little silken Palace, and lays her fine-wrought Trains to catch the unwary Fly. 'Tis equally Pleasant and Diverting to observe the Conduct of the Fourmires, their prudent Forecast; how they trudge up and down all the Summer, to lay up a sufficient Stock of Provinder for the barren Winter. There is no kind of Bird, four-footed Beast or Fish, which does not confute this Cartesian Hypothesis.

It is credibly reported by Porphyry, that in the East-Indies, there is a Beast, which they call a Hyæna, which approaching near the Villages will imitate a Man's Voice, and calling the Inhabitants by their Names, if they come out of their Houses, 'twill seize on the first that comes to hand, and devour him. The Dog, the Ape, the Elephant, with many other four-footed Beasts, afford us manifest Specimens of Reason, or something very like it.

Who has not heard of the Love which Dolphins bear to Men? Pliny relates a pretty Story of a Dolphin that frequented the Lake Lucrinus in Italy, and being often fed from the Shore by a certain School-Boy, grew at length

ſo familiar as to come at a call. We alſo read of another, who took the Muſician Arion on his Back (when caſt into the Sea by cruel Sailers) and carried him ſafe to Shore.

Can all theſe Actions proceed from meer Matter? In my Opinion, 'tis as eaſie to defend, That Humane Nature it ſelf is but Matter ſo and ſo Modified; and, that all the Buſtle Men keep in the World, is but the Effect of a better Compoſition of Body, the Reſult of a more perfect and refined Machine.

I eaſily agree, that we far excel the other Living Creatures in all the Operations of our Souls, and Exerciſes of our Reaſon: Yet, we have our defects as well as they; and, this I eſteem as one of the greateſt, to deny them any ſhare in Reaſon, who ſo far excel us in Sence.

It is a culpable Pride and Envy in Men, thus to blaſt the Reputation of their Animal Kindred; from which Vices I know thou art free.

God, that has made uſe of the Tongue of a ſilly Aſs, to reprove the Folly of a Wiſe Man in his own Conceit, Illuminate our Underſtandings in the Myſteries of his Law.

LETTER

LETTER XXVII.

To Haſſein Baſſa.

THY Commands I receive as Marks of thy Eſteem and good Will, which I deſire may be perpetual. Thou haſt an Eminent Share in the Favour of our Auguſt Emperor; and, I ſhall ſtudy to Merit thy Protection, by all the dutiful Offices that can be expected from a Slave in my Station.

There is nothing ſo much conduces to eſtabliſh a permanent Friendſhip, as a right Underſtanding. The Souls of Friends are firſt warp'd by Miſapprehenſions. I would not have thee think of me, as I do of my ſelf; that would prompt thee to Contempt: nor, as the French do, who take me for Titus of Moldavia; but, look upon me (whatever my Failings are) as a Man that values and practiſes the Incorrupt Fidelity of the Firſt Ages. I abhor Treachery, and, for that Reaſon, am often forced to make an Officious Lye: Yet, I do not proſtitute my Conſcience, having the *Muft*i's Diſpenſation. Whenever it ſhall be told thee, that Mahmut degenerates, ſuſpect the Slanderer; perhaps he would ſupplant me: I am not fond of my Commiſſion, but I dread to loſe the Sultan's Favour: Whoſoever deprives me of that, robs me of my Honour, which is dearer to me than my Life.

By what I have ſaid, thou wilt perceive, that I am not ignorant of the ill Offices which Ikingi Cap'-Oglani has done me. The Man aſpires, and is envious: Were I in his Poſt, I would not exchange the Honour and Felicity of Educating the Royal Pages of the Seraglio, for an Employment attended with infinite Hazards, and no leſs Trouble, as is that of Mahmut. If he be expert in the French Tongue, there are thoſe that excel him; and Language is but the Shell of more ſubſtantial Accompliſhments. Every Linguiſt is not fit to be Employed in the Secrets of State; neither are all Padagogues Politicians. I am ſtartled at the Ambition of a Man, who, becauſe he has ſtudied at Athens, thinks himſelf worthy of the Confidences of the Myſterious Port, which arbitrates the Fate of all the Kingdoms in the World. If this be not his Aim, why does he daily traduce me? Why does he paint me to the Miniſters of the Divan, in black and odious Colours, perſwading them, it is my Natural Complexion? He is not content with the Calumnies he himſelf throws on me, but has corrupted Solyman my Couſin, and hired him to miſrepreſent me to the Kaimacham: And, that he might be ſure to ſtrike home, he has drawn to his Party Shaſbin Iſbam, the Black Eunuch.

I ſent Solyman a Letter laſt Year, full of Reproofs, not knowing who had ſet him at Work: I hope it had ſome good Effect on him, though late. 'Tis from him I received this Intelligence. He ſeems to repent of his Malice, telling me,

That

That this Ikingi Cap'-Oglani, had ſo Artificially poſſeſſed him with a Belief of my Perfidiouſneſs, that he thought he did good Service to God and the Grand Signior, to rail at me; but, that the Kaimacham had afterwards convinced him of my Innocence. This was the Subſtance of his Letter, and he concludes it with begging my Pardon.

I tell thee, Illuſtrious Beſſa, that though the Wounds which are given by the Tongue of a Slanderer, be deeper than thoſe which are given by the Sword; and, I could ſooner pardon him who ſought manfully to take away my Life, than he which baſely Murders my good Name; yet, I attribute my Kinſman's Fault, to Youthful Error, and a Loyal Miſtake; and I love him the better, for hating any one that he could imagine would prove Unfaithful, and a Traytor to God and the Grand Signior.

May the benign Heavens bleſs thee with their good Influences, and proſper thee in all Things.

of the Year 1641.

LETTER XXVIII.

To Solyman his Couſin at Conſtantinople.

THY Apology is rational and modeſt, and I am glad to be thus happily deceiv'd. Thou ſeeſt, the Kaimacham, with the other Miniſters of the Port, have too good an Opinion of me to liſten to the Inſinuations of deſigning Men; and, Ikingi Cap'-Oglani was out of his Byaſs, when he defam'd the Loyal Mahmut; and, the Black Eunuch had better been watching the Ladies than wounding my Reputation with his envenom'd Tongue. I wiſh thee hereafter to avoid all Company, that profeſs a Kindneſs to thee, which thou may'ſt but ſo much as ſuſpect to be forc'd.

Thou askeſt my Counſel how to conduct thy ſelf toward thy Firſt Wife, of whom thou ſpeakeſt both well and ill. Thou believeſt her faithful and chaſt; thou knoweſt her to be induſtrious and careful of the Family; good-natur'd, flexible and obliging; but, thou accuſeſt her of a violent and haughty Spirit, fiercely paſſionate, and of a provoking Tongue. She daily and hourly reflects upon thy Miſcarriages; will play the School-Miſtriſs with thee, pretending to correct, reprove, inſtruct, and guide thee in all thy Actions. In fine, thou comcomplaineſt, that thou canſt not enjoy Tranquility with her.

I tell thee, Kinſman, thou ſhouldſt have applied thy ſelf to the Imaum's and Derziſes in this Caſe; or, at leaſt, to ſuch as have had Experience of a Married Life. Their Sentence would be more Authentick, than what thou canſt expect from me. But ſince thou haſt made choice of my Counſel, I will give thee the beſt I can.

Thou wilt, in my Opinion, find it difficult to be happy with or without this Woman. She is given thee by Fate, to poiſe the Balance of thy Life; that neither too much Eaſe nor Pain, exceſs of Joy or Grief, ſhould turn the doubtful Scales of Sence, and make thee either ſwim in Flouds of Pleaſure uncontrouled, or ſink in Mire of baneful Grief and Melancholy.

The chaſt Fidelity, which thou believeſt her endued with, cannot be valued at too high a Rate. It is a Vertue which renders Woman adorable. Likewiſe, her Diligence and Care, her Reſpect and Devoir, her eaſie Temper and good Nature, are Qualities which cannot but charm thee. Should'ſt thou deal unkindly by her, thy generous Soul would regret it the next Moment. Nay, ſhould'ſt thou take the Common Courſe, and diſmiſs her with a Bill of Divorce, according to the Law, thou would'ſt repent the Deed within twice Four and Twenty Hours.

And yet, I muſt confeſs, 'tis hard to be confined to a fierce Woman's Tongue, to bear Reproaches and Contumelies, Contempts and Defiances, Lectures and other Female Diſcipline. Who, that's a Man, can brook ſuch Slavery? Who, that has but a Spark of Fire within this Hulk of Clay, can ſtoop to ſuch ignoble and unmanly Softneſs? I cannot counſel thee to ſuch an abject Tameneſs of Spirit. Man is Lord of all his Fellow-Creatures. The fierceſt Beaſts ſubmit to his Imperial Sway; Woman alone, ambitious Woman, diſputes the Government with him. But, 'tis his Right, and he diſowns both God and Nature, who reſigns it to that aſpiring Sex. Yet, uſe thy Power moderately; keep the Golden Mean. Be not ſurly and rough as a Bear, nor yet effeminate and without Gall as a Dove. But, if thou findeſt it impoſſible to keep her within the Bounds of due Subjection, put her away, and ſo preſerve thy Peace. The Company of thy other Wives, will ſoon efface her lov'd Idea, and ſweeten thy Loſs with a Thouſand new Pleaſures. But, if they ſhould follow her Steps, inheriting her Spirit, and tormenting thee with killing Words, divorce them all. I would counſel thee to take ſucceſſively Five Hundred Wives, rather than make thy Life miſerable, by too much Love and Indulgence, to one that knows not how to uſe thy favours.

But, before thou beginneſt to put in Execution this Advice, try all the fair and gentle Methods thy Wit can ſuggeſt, to win her to a Senſe of her Fault, and a Change of her Temper. For, be aſſured, that it will be of leſs less Pain to thee, to have an Eye pluck'd out of thy Head, than to tear from thy Heart, the first Object of thy Love.

In this, and all things else, have an especial Regard to thy Conscience, and to the Observing Angel, who writes down all thy Actions in a Book. Do nothing which may merit the Chastisement of the Two Black Angels, who shall visit thee in thy Grave. He who deals unjustly and cruelly by Women on Earth, shall be deprived of the Felicities which our Holy Prophet has promis'd us, in the Company of that beautiful Sex in Paradise.

Keep the Law, and thou wilt have thy fill of Love, both here and in the Blissful Bowers of Eden.

Paris, 1st. of the 11th. Moon,
of the Year 1642.

LETTER XXIX.

To the Kaimacham.

THE Surrender of Perpignan to the French, startles the World; A Place inexpugnable by Arms, and not to be reduced but by Famine. Some that pretend to penetrate into Foreign Secrets, lay the blame on the Duke d' Olivarez. They say, that when the King of Spain first heard that Lewis laid Siege to this Important Place, he would have gone in Perſon to its Relief, but that the Duke hindred his Deſign, fearing leſt his own Miſcarriages ſhould take Wind, when the King was got on the Frontiers: This, they ſay, put a ſtop to the Levies that were making in Arragon and Caſtile, and damp'd the Courage of thoſe who were actually in Arms.

Whether this was the Effect or no, 'tis certain, the Duke d' Olivarez had ſufficient Reaſon to be Conſcious, knowing, that the Grandees of Spain watched for an Opportunity to diſlodge him from the King's Breaſt. But, it is ſtrange, that he ſhould at ſuch a Time, neglect any thing that might confirm him in his Maſter's Favour, as the ſaving of Perpignan muſt needs adone; all the Succeſſes and Miſcarriages of the State, in Peace or War, being attributed to the Favourite Miniſter.

Where-ever the Fault lies, I have heard no Man yet condemn the Governour of the Town. 'Tis ſaid, he has given all the Marks of a Valiant Souldier, a Prudent Commander, and a Faithful Subject. Theſe Vertues are to be honoured, even in an Enemy.

They report, That the Spaniſh King put a kind of Superſtitious Confidence in the Marquſs d' Avilla, becauſe one of the ſame Family and Title, had formerly Defended the Place to Extremity, till the Siege was raiſed. Aſſuredly, Vertue is not inherent in Names, nor Victory entailed to all of the ſame Blood. Both the one and the other, are owing, in a great Meaſure, to Providence and Chance.

The

The Romans did not gain more in the Carthaginian War, under the Conduct of Scipio the African, than they lost afterwards, when another of that Name, was General of their Army.

'Tis said, the Duke d' Olivarez is seized with a Phrenzy upon the Loss of this Town, or, at least, counterfeits one. I do not assert this as a Truth, Illustrious Kaimacham, but to shew thee, how People are addicted to censure, not only the Miscarriages of Great Men, but the very Regrets which attend their Misfortunes; as if it were a Crime in them, to mourn for the Calamities which they could not prevent.

In the mean time, Cardinal Richlieu has weathered a Tempest raised against him, by the Duke of Orleans and his Party. As if the Fate of these Two Ministers, ran Counter, and, One must Rise by the Other's Fall.

Olivarez had laid a Train for Cardinal Richlieu's Destruction, but fell into it himself. He had corrupted one of the Cardinal's Creatures, who associated himself with the Duke of Bouillon, and the Duke of Orleans. Besides private Grudges, they all suspected the Cardinal, as designing, upon the King's Death, to take the Regency into his own Hands. They acquaint Olivarez with their Grievances, and enter into a private League with him. He, in hopes to rend the Kingdom of France into fatal Divisions, as well as to ruine the Cardinal, agrees to furnish the Conspirators with Twelve Thousand Foot, and Three Thousand Horse; Sedan was to be the Rendezvous of this Army.

But, Cardinal Richlieu, whom no Secret could escape, soon discovered the Plot, and acquaints the King with it; who, forthwith caused the Conspirators to be seized, imprisoned, and Two of their Heads to be cut off; the rest were pardoned on Conditions of Surrender, and perpetual Banishment from the King's Presence.

This happened much about the Time that Perpignan surrendred, which was, on the Ninth of the Moon Tibiul.

A little before, the Conspirators had so obscur'd the Cardinal's Credit at the Court, that the King denied him a Visit, when requested, in his Sickness; upon which, the Cardinal withdrew himself. But, the King was quickly glad to follow him; having no other Refuge in the midst of his Pressures, but him who was Master of all the Hearts, both of his Subjects and Allies. At that time, the Count de Guische, was defeated in Flanders, and, the Parisians were apprehensive, that Dom Francisco de Mela would bring his Forces into the Bowels of France. None was able to extricate the King out of so many Troubles, but the Chief Minister. Thus, by a Fortunate Concurrence of Events, the Cardinal is restored to his Master's Favour, sees his Foreign Enemies humbled, Perpignan taken, and his Domestick Foes cut off and baffled.

I pray God, whose Eye is over the Mussulman Empire, to preserve thee from all the Machinations of thine Enemies, and make thee to shine bright in the Favour of the Grand Signior.

LETTER XXX.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

THY Letter, with Carcon's Journal, is come safe to my Hands, and the Ring which he bequeath'd me. That Legacy, demonstrates his Affection, and that I have not ill deserved of him. For, the Actions of Dying Men, are void of Disguise.

His Memoirs will be of great Service to me, containing a more accurate History of the German Court, from the Year 1600, to the Time of his Death, than I have yet seen extant. I am not unacquainted with Relations of this Kind. The Europeans make their Histories speak, what their Affection or Fear suggests, rather than the Truth. The Liberty of Printing, has debauched the Integrity of most Writers; they study rather to please, than inform the Age. For this Reason, I reject the greatest Part of Modern History; coveting only, the Manuscripts of such as Carcon. He speaks Impartially, having no other Byass, than the Service which he owed to the Grand Signior.

I speak this for thy Encouragement and Direction, who succeedest that honest Old Man in his Post. When thou committest any of thy Observations to Paper, let them be of Things Remarkable and True.

The Banker to whom thou didst address the Bill for my Payment, made a demurr at first, but Elinchim clear'd up his Doubts. I desire thee to order Matters so hereafter, that I may not be taken for a Cheat: That may prove of ill Consequence to us all. I would not have any sinister Accident started, which might make the French suspect me. One Misfortune seldom goes without Attendance. The least blemish upon a Man's Credit, streight infects the Air. He whose Reputation is blasted, is suspected and shunn'd like a walking Pestilence.

Thou wilt do well to prevent these Mischiefs, by thy Care and Foresight. Take in good Part this Advice from Mahmut, who studies his Master's Interest, not his own. Adieu.

Paris, 1*c*th of the 11th. Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER

LETTER XXXI.

To the Venerable Mufti, Prince of the True and Undefiled Faith.

THOU that art a Light to the Blind, the Pole-Star to them that are bewilder'd in an Ocean of Uncertainties; the Sanctuary of the Mind, hatter'd with a Tempeſt of vain Opinions; tell me why it is Blaſphemy to ſay, That God has already taken Fleſh, (as the Chriſtians Believe) ſince our Holy Prophet himſelf avouches, That God ſhall aſſume a Body at the Reſurrection? I approach thy Sacred Palace, with burning Coals on my Head, with fervent and enflamed Zeal in my Heart; caſt a gracious Eye on thy Suppliant. Reſolve my Doubts; diſſipate the Miſts which cloud my anxious Soul, and reſtore me to a right Mind.

If a Body be compatible with the Divine Eſſence, it ſeems not to me a Blaſphemy in the Chriſtians, to aſſert the Incarnation of the Word, whom Our Holy Prophet calls alſo, the Breath of God. If this Breath or Word of God, be not of the Eſſence of the Divinity, why is that Part of the Chriſtian Goſpel had in ſuch Reverence, by the Faithful Muſſulmans, where it is ſaid, In the Beginning was the WORD, and the WORD was with God, and God was the WORD? If the WORD be of the

The Essence of God, then it will necessarily follow, that God has taken a Humane Body, since our Holy Prophet calls him the Word of God, whom the Christians adore for God Incarnate. Bear with my Weakness and Importunity, and, if I err, correct me in thy Wisdom. And yet, let not these seem so much my Scruples, as the Arguments of Christians, whom I would gladly convince of their Heresie; but, it must be with solid Reason.

Let not my Lord be angry, if I ask one Question more: Our Holy Doctors teach, That the dark Spots in the Moon were made, when the Angel Gabriel flew by, and brush'd the Moon with one of his Wings: I ask how great that Wing was, that could make an Impression so great, as to be conspicuous to us at this prodigious Distance? Or, is Gabriel to be numbred among those Lofty Angels, who can stride from one Star to another? If he be, Was there not Room enough in the vast endless Skies, or, did he lose his Way through untrack'd Orbs, or, did he chance to wink in his Career, that he should thus unfortunately dash the paler Lamp of Heaven? If he be one of those forementionn'd mighty, tall, and wide-stretch'd Angels; How came he so to be contracted, when he visited Mary the Mother of Jesus in her Closet, and presented her with a Rose that grew in Paradise.

Answer me this, O Sovereign Oracle of Truth, since my Ears are frequently invaded with such Objections and Blasphemous Jests, by these Infidels. How can I hear our Holy Law

Law abuſed, and not burn in Spirit? Tell me, I pray, how I ſhall ſilence theſe bold Diſputers, theſe Mockers of the Book of Glory? Think not this a frivolous Queſtion, and Impertinent to Religion; for, theſe Weſtern People are Sagacious and Subtle; if they can find one Flaw in the Holy Alcoran, they'll cry down all the reſt as falſe and an Impoſture; at the very thought of which Blaſphemy, my Heart trembles.

Not long ago, a famous Aſtronomer ſhew'd me in a Teleſcope the Globe of the Moon, through which it ſeem'd to me an Opake Body, like the Earth we tread on; and, he affirmed it to be ſo, giving me Mathematical Demonſtrations for it; telling me alſo, it was Habitable as our Globe; and, that the Difference of the Brighter and more Obſcure Parts of the Moon, conſiſted only in this, That the one was Firm Land, the other Fluid Water; and, if I may believe my Eyes, when aided by that Optick Inſtrument, it is no otherwiſe than as he ſaid.

This Aſtronomer, is renowned throughout the Weſtern World, being eſteemed the Beſt Philoſopher that ever wrote of Natural Things. His Name is Renatus des Carter. I have been often converſant with him, and took unſpeakable Delight in his refined Notions of the World. He is as dextrous at unravelling the Contexture of the very Elements, as tho' he had ſtood by the Eternal Artiſt when he extracted them from the Rude Chaos. The minuteſt Particle of Matter, which is to the Eye, Eye of other Men invisible, appears to him in its proper Figure; he talks as familiarly of globous, square, and triangular Atoms, as though he had a Pair of Compasses to take their true Dimensions by. Were not this admirable Genius stain'd with great Impiety, in that he mocks the Book of Glory, the Holy Alcoran, true Guide to Paradise, I should believe he was inspired from above.

One Day discoursing about the Body of the Moon, he broke out into this Blasphemous Jest, The Arabian Impostor, said he, might as well have made his Followers believe what we prate to Children, That there is a Man in the Moon with a Bundle of Faggots on his Back, as to tell them that Fable, of the Angel Gabriel's brushing this Planet with his Wing. I was not able to hear any more; but took my Leave.

Furnish me therefore, O Sacred Repository of all true Science, with such convincing Arguments, as may put to Silence these audacious Infidels.

God grant I may be one of those, who shall hear the Angel Ithuriel read Lectures of Divine Knowledge in Paradise.

LETTER XXXII.

To the Vizir Azem, at the Port.

I Am acquainted with a Greek Merchant in Paris, who formerly lived in one of those pleasant Islands, which lie about Four Leagues from Constantinople, being situated in the Propontis.

Asking him one Day, whether Trading was the Motive which induc'd him to quit those Paradises upon Earth, and exchange them for the Stench and Noise of this Populous City; he replied, That he had sufficient to make his Life happy in the Place of his Nativity, being Master of a good Estate, and of many fruitful Vineyards, having also Houses there which might vye with the most delightful Chioses of the Mussulman Grandees: but, that the Janizaries and other loose Mahometans frequenting those Islands, and especially that wherein he dwelt, committed so many Outrages, when heated with Wine, as render'd his Life insupportable; for, they would in these drunken Frolicks, domineer as though they were Lords of the Island, seizing upon whatsoever pleased them, spoil his Goods, and beat him like a Slave; and, if he mildly remonstrated to them the Injuries they had done him, they would give him no other Satisfaction but Oaths and Curses.

These

These Calamities made him sell his Estate, and travel into these Countries, where he might enjoy himself with more Liberty, Profit and Ease.

It is a Dishonour to the Ottoman Port, the Seat of Justice, the Sanctuary of the World, to suffer such Disorders to be committed without due Chastisement, within Sight of the Seraglio, and by those who have the Honour to guard the Person of the Sultan.

I represent these Things to thee, knowing thy Justice will administer a speedy Remedy to these Distempers of the Souldiery. Otherwise should they be suffered to go unpunished, we may expect that not only these Islands, but all Græcia will in time be dispeopled.

LETTER XXXIII.

To Cara Haly, the Physician at Constantinople.

SUffer me to converse with thee after the Manner of Friends, with Freedom and Familiarity. I have often discovered to thee the Distempers of my Body, now I will reveal those more dangerous ones of my Mind. And

I know

I know not, whether they are Diſtempers, or Cures of ſuch. I have writ to the Muſti on the ſame Subject, in Part, but with Caution and Reſerve. With thee I will deal frankly, and pour into thy Boſom the Secrets of my Heart.

I am diſſatisfied in many Things pertaining to Religion. 'Tis true, I cannot think or ſpeak of our Holy Prophet, but with infinite Attach and Veneration; yet, I owe ſomething to my Reaſon. I will believe, the Meſſenger of God was true and perfect; but is it a Crime to think, his Succeſſors were but Men, ſubject to Frailty and Errour? Their Diviſions, immediately after the Death of our Great Law-giver, juſtifie this Reflection, ſince the fatal Schiſm continues to this Day. Either the Perſians, or We, muſt be in the wrong. Grant which thou wilt, it follows, that the Truth was no ſooner ſown in the World, but it ſprung up in Mortal Hereſies; and, I find no other Aſſurance that we are in the Right, but the Aſſertion of our Doctors, the Followers of Oſman and Ebubecher; who, for ought I know, are no more exempted from Errour, than the Diſciples of Haly. Both Sides believe the Holy Prophet, yet both at Infinite Diſtance in their Interpretations of his Law. Each Party boaſts they have the True Sence of the Divine Oracles, and curſes the oppoſite for Hereticks. Truth cannot be repugnant to it ſelf.

From this Original Schiſm, well near a Hundred ſeveral Sects have ſprung, each maintaining different Interpretations of the Law.

While

While Truth can be but One, where shall a Man be sure to find it amongst so many Pretenders to it?

Think not, that I am going to turn Christian, because of this Liberty I take to search for Truth. For, the Case is the same, or worse among them.

Jesus (whom our Holy Prophet calls the Breath and Word of God, The Reformer of the Law of Moses, knowing the Secrets of Hearts, and working Miracles) preach'd to the Jews Repentance, good Works, the Resurrection of the Dead, the Day of Judgment, the Joys of Paradise, and the Torments of Hell. He chose Twelve Disciples, to disperse his Doctrine over the World. But, they likewise had Dissentions among themselves, after that God had taken the Messias up to Paradise; Each Apostle, leaving different Traditions behind him in the Countries where he taught. Hence sprung the Difference between the Churches of the East and West, and those in Æthiopia. One following Peter and Paul, Another believing John, the Third defending the Traditions of Matthew. And, from these greater Schisms, have sprung innumerable smaller Sects and Heresies: Each Church and Party, Excommunicating, Damning and Cursing all the Rest; yet all believe they shall be saved.

Thus is the World at Odds about Religion, persecuting, biting and devouring one another, because they cannot all think alike. A singular Argument of Religion, and a special Encouragement to gain Proselytes.

These

These Considerations have made me a Sceptick, in Controverted Points of Faith and Matters of Opinion. Only in this I am fixed, That I believe in One Eternal God, and reverence his Holy Messengers and Prophets. But, if an Angel from Heaven should tell me monstrous and incredible Stories, of Things repugnant to the common Sense and Reason of all Mankind, I would desire him to excuse me if I suspended my Belief.

I admire the Golden Age, when the Infant World had not yet learn'd Bigottry; when Humane Reason was not corrupted with Divine Fables; and, Natural Conscience, was the Oracle to which all resorted for Solution of their Doubts; before Superstition had begun to dress the Deity in frightful, uncouth Shapes: Then harmless Innocence could shew her naked Face, which now is fain to go disguised. No Man was put to Death for Words or Thoughts of Things above his Reach. No crafty Numa then had fobb'd upon the Credulous People his feign'd Ægeria; Nor Golden-toogu'd Pythagoras, could impose the forged Whispers of his Eagle on the silly Crotonians for Sacred Oracles. No Wonder-working Magician, had led the Rabble by the Nose with his Infernal Juggles; but, pure and undebauched Reason taught Men to lead Immortal Lives on Earth.

Tell me, O Learned Holy, can'st thou believe, That the Divine Architect had no other Way to make Man, than by laying him a Thousand Years broiling in the Sun? Or, that there there is an Apple-Tree growing very near the Throne of God? Or, that the Angels can ſtride ſome Hundred Thouſands of Miles at once? Can we not go to Paradiſe, unleſs we ſwallow theſe ſtrange Notions? Is it not enough to believe in God and Mahomet his Prophet, except we will receive all for Truth, which the Doctors tell us? I Faſt and Pray at the appointed Times, and ſometimes oftner; I give Alms; I love all the Creatures of God, that remain in his Love; I am not guilty of Theft, Murder nor Adultery; I never forſwore my ſelf, nor bore Falſe Witneſs. Yet, when I am recollected, I think my ſelf the worſt of all Men; I think of every Peccadillo I commit, with inexpreſſible Regret. If all this is not ſufficient to acquit me a true and good Muſſulman, no Man, I hope, will blame me, if I join with an eminent Man in theſe Weſtern Parts, and wiſh my Soul among the Philoſophers.

The End of the Firſt Book.

Writ by

A SPY at PARIS.

VOL. II.

BOOK II.

LETTER I.

To the Kaimacham.

THOU may'ſt remember a Letter I ſent thee concerning the Death of Mary de Medicis, Queen-Mother and Dowager of France; wherein I alſo ſpoke, of the ſudden Sickneſs of the Cardinal of Richlieu, with the Reports, Opinions, and Prophecies divulged on that Account. What Spirit ſoever inſpired thoſe Prophets, 'tis certain, the Event juſtifies their Predictions Predictions. For, the Cardinal died this very Day, being the Fourth of the last Moon in the Year, at his Palace in this City, being not full Fifty-eight Years of Age.

I am not very Credulous of Apparitions, Ghosts, and such like Themes of vulgar Superstition: yet, 'tis evident, the Cardinal neither lived to see the Common New Years Day, nor the Fifty-eight Year of his Life, as, they say, the Queen's Ghost foretold him.

Some that have been Curious in examining his Pedigree, tell me, that his Progenitors were allied to one of the Kings of France. However, 'tis certain, that he was descended of an Ancient and Honourable Family, of above Five Hundred Years Standing and Eminence in that Kingdom.

He had his Education in the University of Paris, where he attained the Degree of a Doctor of the Sorbon; a Dignity much esteemed in France, and most Parts of Christendom, except in Rome; which Court is Jealous of the Sorbonists, because they have sometimes Decreed in Prejudice of the Pope's Authority, and the Grandeur of the Roman Court.

After this he was made a Bishop, then Almoner of France, next Secretary of State; in which Station he acquitted himself so happily, that he procured him the Dignity of a Cardinal. There are none of the Ministers of the Divan, but know, that a Cardinal is one of the Princes of the Roman Church.

During these several Stairs of Preferment, he had signalized his great Abilities, in Negotiating tiating Affairs of greateſt Moment. Yet, in nothing did the Dexterity of his Wit appear more, than in reconciling the Miſunderſtandings between the King and the Queen-Mother. Whereby, he gained much upon both their Affections; ſo that in a little Time, he was made the Principal Miniſter of State, and Chief Director of the Government; having a Guard of Souldiers appointed to attend his Perſon.

Then he was made Superintendent of the Marine Affairs; after this, Generaliſſimo of the Armies. So that, he ſeemed to have monopoliz'd all Command both in Church and State, by Sea and Land.

It was Impoſſible for him to eſcape the envious Eyes of the Grandees; nay, the Queen-Mother her ſelf, who firſt raiſed him, began now to grow Jealous of his great Power: But eſpecially, the Princes of the Blood were highly offended at him. The Count of Soiſſons ſtomach'd the Indignity the Cardinal had offer'd him, in propoſing the Marriage of his Daughter. The Duke of Orleans ſuſpected his Deſigns upon the Regency. Yet, all their Conſpiracies againſt him proved ineffectual. For neither by Publick Arms, nor Private Machinations, could they ever prevail againſt the fixed Deſtiny of this Great Miniſter; who, though he had been often attempted to be Poiſon'd, Piſtol'd and Stabb'd, yet died quietly in his Bed, having a little before received a Viſit from the King.

I will not presume to make Corollaries or Glosses on these Things, as though I were able to Instruct thee whose Wisdom and Experience renders thee a fit Oracle, for the greatest Princes to resort to in Time of Need. I only send thee bare Matter of Fact; and together with an Account of the Cardinal's Death, a brief Abstract of his Life, as I received it from one of the most observing and knowing Men in the French Court.

I wish thee Health, long Life, and Happiness.

Paris, 4th. of the last Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER II.

To the Venerable Mufti.

I Have sent to the Kaimacham, an Account of the Death of Cardinal Richlieu, with some Passages relating thereto, wherewith I thought it not proper to Interrupt thy Divine Thoughts.

This Great Minister died the Fourth of this Instant Moon, being the last of the Year, in his Palace at Paris. His Body is Interred in the Chapel of the College of Sorbon, where he finish'd his Studies, and attained the Degree of Doctor in Theology. He has has left behind him a prodigious Estate, amounting to a Million of Crowns Yearly; which he has bequeathed in Legacies to his Kindred, Friends and Creatures. And, as a particular Demonstration of his Gratitude to the King, he has made him Heir of his Cardinal-Palace, in this City, with all the Plate and Furniture in it. And, at the last Visit the King made him (which was a little before his Death) he presented him with a Stone worth a Hundred Thousand Crowns of Gold. Upon which, 'tis discourſed, that the King will settle a Yearly Revenue on a certain Number of the Sorboniſts, to celebrate Maſs daily for the Cardinal's Soul, during the Space of One Year, and once a Year afterwards on the Day that he died. For, these Infidels approach thus near the True and Undefiled Faith; in that they have Hopes of Immortality, believing the Reſurrection of the Dead, and, that the Prayers, Alms, and Good Works of the Living, do atone for the Sins of the Departed; as our Holy Doctors teach; and, as is the Practice of the Muſſulmans throughout the World.

This Cardinal, was richly endowed by Nature, having a firm Intellect, vigorous Spirit, quick Apprehenſion, ſolid Judgment, faithful Memory, and a moſt prevailing Way of Diſcourſe. A Man highly ſerviceable to his King and Country; and therefore deſerving better of the French, than thoſe Scandalous Reports and Libels which were every where induſtriouſly ſpread abroad, to leſſen his Fame. Yet, there wanted not thoſe who ſtrewed Flowers on his Grave, and Perfumed his Aſhes with Encomiums and Panegyricks. In this he ſhared the common Fate of the Great, that he was Mal gn'd and Envied Living, but honoured with the Tears of his very Enemies when Dead.

There is one Fault to be found in his Conduct, without appearing too Cenſorious; That he being a Man conſecrated to the Service of the Altar, ſhould ſo often take the Field, and diveſting himſelf of the Peaceful Robes of Religion, ſhould clothe himſelf in Steel, delighting more in the Smell of Gunpowder, than that of Incenſe; and preferring the Noiſe of War, to the Hymns and Antiphons of the Church: Not, that Religion is incompatible with Valour; and, to fight for ones Country, is not as Lawful and as Pious, as to pray for its Proſperity. Our Holy Law, the Celeſtial Pattern of Truth to the World, exhorts us to Courage. And all True Believers are aſſured of the Joys of Paradiſe, of unfading Crowns, and eternal Felicities, if they loſe their Lives in Defence of the Sacred Empire, and the Book of Glory: Our Immortal Law giver, giving us his own Example, when he laid the Foundation of the Greateſt and moſt Illuſtrious Empire in the World, in the Wounds of his Enemies, cementing the Work with the Blood of Millions of Infidels. Nor has the Superſtructure been carried on by any other Methods, than thoſe of perpetual War, with the Nations who will not ſubmit to our Victorious Sultan, the Invincible Lord of the Earth.

But, the Messenger of God never required the Imaum's or Dervises to take the Field; leaving Arms only to Secular Men, and the Alcoran to the Religious.

I forget that I am speaking to him, whose Repose and Tranquility is the special Care of Heaven, who is not to be disturbed by Emperors. Therefore, in profound Reverence, I salute thy Holiness with a dutiful Obeisance, and so withdraw my Pen.

Paris, 4th of the last Moon, of the Year, 1642.

LETTER III.

To Jasmir Sgire Rugial, an Astrologer at Aleppo.

THOU needest not be ashamed of thy Name, though it denotes the Dwarfishness of thy Body. That little Epitome of Humane Stature, is exquisitely Regular. Nature in framing it, has shew'd her Skill in Proportions, though she seems to have made it too Narrow for thy Soul. In this, thou art obliged to her for thy Knowledge; thy Mind being uneasie in its diminutive Habitation, is for that Reason seldom at Home. Thy Soul is a perfect Night-Walker; when other Men are abed and asleep, thou art taking thy Rounds among the Stars. Thou art become a Spy upon the Planets; If any of them make but a false Step, thou tellest the World of it. Thou art a Pimp to all their Amorous Assignations and Conjunctions; and Vulcan himself never so often exposed the Intrigues of Mars and Venus, as thou hast done. But, I would have thee beware, lest they revenge themselves on thee some time or other, as they did upon one of thy Profession, by stirring up a certain King to take away his Life. He was a bold Fellow, and pretended great Familiarity with the Stars: One Day he came to the King, and told him, he had exactly Calculated his Nativity; and, by his Observations from thence, according to the Rules of Art, had discovered, That he should not live out that Year. The King replied, I will prove, that my Skill is greater than thine; for, I know the very Hour of thy Death, which is now precisely, and which all thy Knowledge in Astrology could never foresee, nor be able to prevent. So, he commanded his Head to be immediately cut off. I would not have thy Star-gazing, so suddenly spoil'd; though, they say, thou hast ventured to talk somewhat too largely.

Judicial Astrology seems, in a great Measure, obliged to Superstition, for the Credit it has gained among Men; and, the Latin Proverb says, A Wise Man shall over rule the Stars. For my part, I would rather counsel thee to follow thy old Recreation, of teaching

Pigeons

Pigeons to be Letter-Carriers. Yet, I would not have thee from thence, think of building Caſtles in the Air, like Æſop; nor, of flying to the Moon by the Help of a Team of Geeſe, in Imitation of Domingo Gonſales.

But, ſince I am got among the Birds, which thou art ſo much delighted in; before I take my leave, I wiſh thee as good Fortune with thy winged Diſciples, as the Roman Cobler had, who taught a Parrot, to ſalute the Emperour as he went along the Street, with theſe Words, Hail Cæſar; which the Emperour hearing, gave him a Royal Price for his Parrot. The poor Man overjoy'd at his good Luck, got another Parrot, and attempted to teach her in the ſame Manner; but, having taken much ineffectual Pains, he uſed to fret, and ſay, I have loſt my Labour. Yet at length, by daily repeating theſe Words, the Parrot had learned both Sentences, and, the next time the Emperour came by, it ſaid, Hail Cæſar; to which the Emperour replied, I have enough ſuch Flatterers at Home; the Parrot having her Leſſon perfect, rejoyn'd, I have loſt my Labour; which the Emperour hearing, and pleas'd with the Novelty, bought this alſo, and ſetled a generous Penſion on the Man during his Life.

If thou couldſt by ſome lucky Contingency, ſell thy Pigeons at ſuch a rate to Sultan Ibrahim, thy Time would be better ſpent, than in playing the Mercury, and bringing News from the Stars. But then thy Pigeons muſt be better bred, than was that which was ſent to the Sophi of Persia with a Message from Babylon, when the late Invincible Sultan Amurath besieged it; for, the Feather'd Courier, instead of flying to the Persian Camp, took up short by the Way, and perching on the Pavillion of the Vizir Azem, was forthwith shot, and the secret Necessities of the City, were exposed to the Ottoman Army.

May such Fate always attend Infidels and Hereticks, when they take up Arms against the Mussulman Empire. Adieu.

Paris, 10th. of the last Moon,
of the Year 1642.

LETTER IV.

To the Grand Signior's Chief Treasurer.

THOU tellest me the Ministers of the Supreme Divan, accuse me of Negligence, in not Writing often, and Things of Importance. In my Opinion, thou thy self hast more Reason to complain on this Score, since, I have not sent a Letter to thee these Four Moons; in which Time, not one of the Rest but has received several from me. Would they have me coin News? Would they have me amuze them with Relations of Things which never had any

Exi-

Existence? I have not failed hitherto to communicate to the Port, all the Intelligences I have received: But they ought to consider, that the Winter affords little of Action. Time, the Devourer of all Things, has almost swallowed up the Year; only, this last Moon seems to be pickled in Ice for a Dessert. We are here up to the Knees in Snow: And the Greatest Warriours, find it best Encamping by the Fire Side.

Here is a Rumour, That the King of Persia is Dead: They say also, that the Great Mogul will not put on Mourning for him, being by his Death freed from a Storm which threatned to subvert all his Dominions on this Side of Ganges. 'Tis added, That he has sought the Alliance of the Grand Signior, with purpose to continue the War against the Young King of Persia (who has not yet seen Thirteen Summers) and to carry his Forces to the Walls of Ispahan. It is not lawful for me to dictate to my Sovereign, who is the Sole Judge of the Universe; but, permit me to guess what will be his Conduct in this Affair (if what I have heard be true.) I have no Reason to think, that Sultan Ibrahim will violate the Peace, which he has so lately concluded with the King of Persia, the Articles whereof he carries in his Bosom.

Thou seest, Most Serene Bassa, the Tide of News is so low, that Mahomet is forced to stoop and receive it, puddled as it is, by the Mouths of the Vulgar. If I acquaint thee with what thou knewest before, let not the Blame rest on me, who ought to have received this Intelligence from some of the Ministers of the Sublime Port, which is the Tabernacle where Fame keeps her Residence. My whole Life, and the best of my Spirits, are consecrated to the Service of the Grand Signior; I spare no Pains or Cost, whereby I may render my self effectually useful to the Great Master of the Universe; I write often to the Ministers of the Divan, who are his Slaves as well as I; yet none vouchsafes me an Answer, except the Reis Effendi: I received also one Letter full of Consolation and Advice, from the Venerable Mufti. Likewise Hassein Bassa laid his Commands on me. These I esteem my Friends. I would think so of all Men, who serve Sultan Ibrahim, if they would cease to load me with Obloquies.

I was about to conclude my Letter, when an Old Courtier interrupts me with the News of the Surrender of Tortona, a Strong Town in Piedmont, possessed by the Spaniards, till now obliged to quit it by the French Forces, under the Command of the Duke of Longueville. This Place, was surrendred on the Twenty sixth of the Eleventh Moon.

There has been a long Difference, between the Princes of the House of Savoy; which is at length composed, by the Marriage of Prince Maurice, Cardinal of Savoy, with his Niece, the Daughter of the Dutchess Regent. This is that which has warm'd the Courage of the French Army, at this Frozen Time of the Year. For, upon this Match, the Cardinal of Savoy's Savoy's Brother, Prince Thomas, joined his Forces to the French, and took several Strong Castles and Towns from the Spaniards, whom before this Prince had assisted: And now last of all, to wind up the Year, they have made themselves Masters of this Tortona, a Place environed with Rocks and Mountains.

By which thou may'st perceive, that there is no Difficulty so great, which may not be overcome with Courage and Perseverance.

I recommend my self to thy Protection and Favour, Illustrious Bassa, and desire the Heavens to remunerate thee with an Encrease of Joy and Felicity, both here and in Paradise.

Paris, 10th. of the 12th. Moon, of the Year 1642.

LETTER V.

To Darnish Mehemet, Bassa.

SInce the Death of the Cardinal of Richlieu, here is great caballing, and changing of Places at Court. His Successor in the Pilotship of the State, is Cardinal Julio Mazarini, an Italian of a Generous Extraction. Neither comes he short of Richlieu, in all those rare Qualities and Endowments, which form a accom-a Compleat Statesman; having accomplish'd several Negotiations with great Success and Applause.

Now the Old Officers begin to be cashier'd, to make room for the Creatures of this New Minister; the King absolutely resigning the Conduct of the Publick to him. And, it is no wonder to see the King thus flexible, if what is privately whisper'd be true, That the Queen has yielded to the Cardinal in Points of greater Reserve. And, curious Eyes pretend to discern the Features of Mazarini in the Dauphin's Face, who is not much above Four Years Old, being born the Fifth Day of the Ninth Moon, in the Year 1638. according to the Christiani Hegira. The Cardinal is of a Grave and Majestick Aspect, full-fac'd, having a piercing Eye; he is something inclined to fat, being a great Eater, as they say.

T'other Day he had like to have been choak'd by a Piece of Beef, one Part of which hung fast in his Teeth, and the other just reach'd the Passage to the Lungs; and, as it were barring up the door of that Passage, hindred his Respiration so long, that his Nose suddenly started out a-bleeding; his Face grew black, and he was ready to drop down dead, had not one of his Attendants forcibly thrust his Fingers into his Mouth, and fastning on the Morsel, pull'd it out of his Throat.

He that is Lord of Life and Death, preserve thee from all Perils, and make thee happy in the Service of our Great Master; who will

in

in Time, I hope, curb the Insolence, and punish the Vices of these glutonous Infidels.

Paris, 14th. of the 1st. Moon, of the Year 1643.

LETTER VI.

To Mouf his Kinsman.

I Believe, thou and thy Cousin Solyman, take me for a Marriage-Broker or a Gossip: Is there no Body in Constantinople, can instruct you how to manage your Wives, that you send for Counsel to Paris? or, do you lay Snares for me, by extorting such Advice, as will draw the Revenge of Women upon me? Believe me, I have no Mind to run the Fate of Orpheus, or, that the Tragedy of the Ciconian Wives should be acted upon me.

I rather expected a Compleat Journal of thy Travels in the East: but, I perceive thou hast not yet received my Letter. Thou talkest, of going to Aleppo in the Spring: If thy Resolution hold, I desire thee, when thou art there, to make an Offering for me to Seid Boubac, the Saint, whose Sepulchre is about a League from that City, a Place of great Devotion, and resorted to from all the Quarters in those Parts. Without doubt, Seid Boubac is with God, and, his Prayers are heard for such as honour his Vertues and approach his Sepulchre, to pay their Devotions there with Humility and Faith.

Likewise, I desire thee to distribute Three Hundred Aspers to the Poor of Aleppo, who beg in the Streets for the Sake of Syntana Fissa. If thou hast not heard of this Female Saint, I will relate to thee how she came to be Canonized. This City, was the Place of her Nativity and Residence. When she came to the Age of Sixteen Years, she was married to a Spahee, called Grivli Eben Sagran; But, the first Night, as her Husband was going to Bed with her, he fell into a Trance, wherein, he saw Paradise opened, and the Holy Prophet leading Syntana Fissa, his Wife, in one of the Allies of Eden. Whereby, when he came to himself, and missing his Wife (who was never after to be found) he was satisfied that she was one of the Daughters of Paradise. Since which time, the People have esteem'd her as a Saint, or rather an Incarnate Female Angel. The Moors relate this Story otherwise, and make a Second Mary Magdalen of her: of whom the Greeians say, that she was a Common Prostitute at first, but on a time being asked her accustomed Favours gratis, and for the Love of God, she by granting it, merited the Grace of Conversion, and so became a Saint. But, I would not have thee regard this Fable, though in the common in the Mouths of the Ignorant at Aleppo.

If thou beareſt any Respect for thy Uncle Nadabut, let me have a Proof of it, in giving me me an Account of thy Travels. I do not require a Chart of the Regions through which thou haſt paſs'd; being no Stranger to the Geography of Aſia. Neither would I have thee tell me, how many Leagues, Courſes, or Furlongs there are between ſuch and ſuch Cities. Theſe are the Remarks of every Carrier or Muccerman. But that which I aim at, is to know, what Natural, Moral, and Political Obſervations thou haſt made, in ſo vaſt a Tract of Ground as thou haſt meaſured, comprehending the Greateſt and moſt Celebrated Part of Aſia.

This is the Second Letter I have ſent thee, ſince thy Return to Conſtantinople: Let thy Anſwer be adequate to my Expectation. In the Interim, I counſel thee firſt to get an Abſolute Conqueſt of thy ſelf, and then thou wilt eaſily govern thy Wife.

May the Moſt High God, adjuſt your Differences happily, and make your Lives to be as innocent and contented, as thoſe of Philemon and Baucis. Thou knoweſt the Story. Adieu.

LETTER

LETTER VII.

To Mahomet, Baſſa of Damaſcus.

HERE is a Genoueſe Merchant in this City, with whom I often converſe, as I do with all Strangers that are Men of Intelligence, learning ſometimes from them Advices which are not common. He tells me, that Monſour, the Youngeſt Son of Old Facardine the brave Emir of Sidon, whom his Father had given in Hoſtage to Sultan Amurath, is now living in the Court of the Duke of Florence; that he eſcaped by the Aſſiſtance of a Grecian Prieſt, from the Caſtle of the Seven Towers, and, that the Duke of Florence has promiſed to aſſiſt him with Ships, Men and Money, towards the Recovery of his Patrimony.

The French ſpeak of his Father, with much Reſpect, and Compaſſion of his Misfortunes; they ſay, he was deſcended from a Noble Captain, which the Renowned Godfrey of Bulloign left in thoſe Parts, when he was engaged in the Wars of the Holy Land, and, that though Facardine wore a Turkiſh Turbant, yet he had French Bloud in his Veins. They tax Amurath with the Violation of his Oath, in cauſing him to be ſtrangled, when he had ſolemnly ſworn to the contrary. And ſome of them are ſo bold as to ſay, That if his Son Ali had not been kill'd, he would have ſhook the Throne, whoſe Foundation is deep as as the Centre of the Earth, and therefore cannot be moved without the Diſſolution of the Globe.

This Genoueſe brags much after the ſame Nature of Manſour, who, he ſays, is preſerved by Providence to abaſe the Pride of the Ottoman Family, to revenge his Father's Bloud, and re-eſtabliſh the Druſes in their Ancient Poſſeſſions.

Suppoſing this News to be true, I judged it my Duty to give thee timely Notice of it who poſſeſſeſt Part of his Eſtate; leſt he ſhould ſurprize thee unawares, and ſerve thee as one of his Anceſtors did the Damaſcenes who got from them ſeveral of their Towns and Caſtles, when they leaſt dreamt of any Invaſion. He will lay claim to Gazir, D' Acre, and Saphet, thoſe being torn from his Father in that laſt Rebellion. In a Word, thou wouldſt find him an ill Neighbour, ſhould he catch thee unprovided.

Should it come to a Tryal, I wiſh thy Soldiers may prove more Faithful to thee, than did the Germans lately under the Command of Leopold, Arch-Duke of Auſtria, and General Picolomini; who going to relieve Leipſick, beſieged at that time by the Swedes, and entring Battle with them, above Six Thouſand of their Souldiers never diſcharged a Musket, or drew a Sword; but gave their Enemies an intire Victory, without ſtriking a Stroke. Should thy Forces ſerve thee ſo, when Manſour enters thy Territories, thou wilt be in Danger of loſing not only the forementioned ed Towns, but Damascus it self; a Place so deliciously situated, that our Holy Prophet himself durst not venture into it, lest this Earthly Paradise should tempt him to take up his Abode there, and cause him to neglect the Heavenly.

May the Great Protector of Kingdoms and Empires, preserve both Damascus and the whole Empire, from the Fury of Rebels and Infidels.

LETTER VIII.

To the Venerable Musti, Arbitrator of the Problems and Mysteries of Faith.

I Address to the Dust of thy Feet, O thou Spring of all true Science. I wrote to thee formerly, to desire thy Instruction, and Aid, in answering some Cavils and Blasphemies of the Infidels. Now I think a great Light hath shined in my Breast. Now I think I can answer them with Arguments clear and Intelligible. Nevertheless, I will not walk without a Guide.

Our Life in this transitory World, is checquer'd quer'd with various Intervals of Light and Darkneſs, of Knowledge and Ignorance. Sometimes the Soul of Man is bright and ſerene, as the Orient; at other times wrapp'd up in Clouds and Miſts. Then we are as in a Dream, and full of Anxiety; we grope about for Truth, and yet ſtumble upon Errors, as in the Depth of Night. So fared it with me, when theſe Infidels aſſaulted me with Queſtions and Cavils concerning our Holy Law. I heard them with Horrour and Pain, but knew not how to put them to Silence. I fled to thee for Succour, who art inſtructed in all Knowledge, true Heir of the Prophetick Light. But, a Ray from Heaven has prevented thy Anſwer; and, I will communicate to thee my Thoughts.

God is moſt High, and Incomprehenſible; we cannot overtake him in his Ways. The Works of his Hands are perfect and full of Wiſdom. Why do the Infidels blaſpheme the Eternal? Gabriel, the Meſſenger of God, bright and glorious, flew through the Heavens; and to avoid a burning Comet which then flamed in the Sky, he took his Courſe too near the Orb of the Moon; and, with the end of one of his Wings, he bruſh'd the Planet, leaving a Mark of the Stroak as a Memorial to the Angels for the Future; even as a Sea-mark is plac'd, to give warning of Rocks and Sands.

The Infidels deride, and ask, How big was Gabriel's Wing? Who can meaſure the Works of the Omnipotent? Let theſe Infidels number but the Atomes that cleave to the Soles of their Feet, when they walk in ſandy Places! Or, let them weigh the Air, that is ſhut up in a Bottle! If they cannot perform theſe Things which are near them, and within their reach, why do they mock at the Greatneſs of Angels, which dwell in the Immenſe Heavens?

They take their Meaſures of Celeſtial Things from the narrow ſearch of their Senſes, which yet fail them in common Terreſtrial Objects. If we believe our Senſes, they would perſwade us, that the Moon is no bigger than a Royal Charger, and the Stars have no larger Dimenſions, than a Lamp or Torch: Whereas, we are aſſured by Reaſon and Aſtronomical Obſervations, that the Moon is little leſs than the Globe of the Earth; and, that ſome of the Stars are near a Hundred Times bigger. If theſe Ornaments of the Sky, which look at this Diſtance like glittering ſparks of Fire, are really of ſo prodigious a Bulk; why may we not believe, that Angels who dwell higher than the higheſt Stars, are much greater, and more Magnificent Creatures than they? Nay, what Incongruity is it to believe, what our Holy Doctors teach, That the Angels can ſtride from one Star to another?

And now I am plunged thus far in the Depths of Nature, ſuffer me to wade yet deeper, nay, to ſwim in the Abyſs of ſpeculation. I will tell thee my Thoughts; The Works of God are Unmeaſurable, and there is no Bound or Limit to the Extent of the World; 'tis high as Thought can ſoar, endleſs as Imagination can can travel. Who can tell, where the Walls of Paradise are? Or has any one gone the Circuit of the Seventh Heaven? Magnificent is the Fabrick of God, and the Apartments thereof are full of Majesty. The Potentates above, are Glorious and Mighty; and, the Mansions of Angels, surpass in Grandeur this Visible World. How great then is the Stature of those Angels? Let not Infidels deride nor think it a Fable; for, the Distance between the Feet of an Angel, is many hundred Thousand Miles. They turn the Celestial Orbs about (if what the Learned Christians teach, out of Aristotle and other Old Philosophers, be true, when they assign to each Sphere its particular Angel or Moving Intelligence.) How can this be done, unless the Angels were Greater and Mightier than the Orbs they move? Without all Doubt, the lesser is moved of the Greater, and the Weaker by the Stronger. These are Arguments clear and intelligible, and such as the Infidels cannot answer. Thus shall I be able to assert the Truth, against the impious; and to vindicate the glorious Works of God (the Strong and Potent Angels, excelling in Majesty and Grandeur,) from the Blasphemies of the Uncircumcised.

If they ask, How the Angel Gabriel (since he is of so prodigious a Stature) could be circumscribed in the Closet of Mary the Mother of Jesus? I ask them, How the Body of Jesus, which, they say, is in the Sacrament of the Mass (of which thou art not Ignorant) can be circumscribed within the narrow narrow Compass of a Wafer? Or, how it can be there, and in Heaven at the same time, which they believe; nay, and in Ten Thousand Wafers, in so many different Places of the World at once?

To this so pressing an Argument they have no other Answer, but, That the Power of God is Infinite and his Works Incomprehensible. Very well! if he be Omnipotent in one Thing, is his Power restrained in another? If the Presence of the Body of Jesus, in several Places at the same time, be Incomprehensible; so is the Appearance of the Mighty Angel Gabriel, in the Oratory of the Virgin Mary, Incomprehensible also.

The Nature of Angels, is unknown to us Mortals, and the Manner of their Appearance. Sufficient it is, to believe the Divine Oracles, and not to pry into the Secrets of God.

Thus shall I confute the Infidels, when they cavil against the Alcoran; thus shall I seal up the polluted Lips, and put to silence the Blasphemous Tongues of the Enemies of God and his Prophet.

Moreover, they say, the Messenger of God has promised a Sensual Paradise to the True Believers, because the Book of Glory mentions the Gardens of Eden, Gardens wherein flow many Rivers, Rivers of Wine, Milk and Honey, with Trees of all delectable Fruits; and, that the Righteous shall be cloathed in Vests of Purple and Crimson, reposing on stately Beds, and shall enjoy the Company of Beautiful tiful Women, and shall be replenished with Eternal Felicity.

Doubtless, they are blinded with Malice and hood wink'd by the Spirit of Contradiction: Else, why do they thus cavil at the manifest Light of Truth, the Doctrine of Faith, the undefiled Article of Glory? They profess to believe, the Resurrection of the Body, as well as we; Will they not then believe, that God hath provided Pleasures suitable to the Body after its Resurrection, I mean, the Bodies of the Just? They tell their Disciples and Proselytes doleful Stories of the Pains of the Damned in Hell, as Burning in Fire and Brimstone. Nay, the Book of the Gospel it self speaks of a Lake of Sulphur and Fire. Are not these Torments to be inflicted on the Body, which they own are prepared for the Wicked? And will they deny proportionate Pleasures to the Bodies of the Just in Paradise? What use will there be of our Bodies after the Resurrection, if not to enjoy Bodily Pleasures, for feel the Rigour of Infinite Pains? Doubtless, the Just shall be replenished with all the Joys; and the Unjust, with all the Dolours of which their Senses are capable. And, this they themselves believe; yet these captious Infidels, pick Quarrels with our Holy Law-giver, and say, That the Paradise which he promises, is fit for none but Fools or Beasts.

I have read in Books of Devotion, which the Christian use, That the Blessed in Heaven, shall be satiated with all manner of Delights. The Eye shall always behold most Beautiful Objects; The Taste shall be gratified with incredible Sweets; the Smell shall be pleased with all manner of rich Odours and Perfumes, far surpassing the Aromaticks of Arabia; the Ear shall hear such wonderful Musick, as one only Strain thereof, were sufficient to lull all the Hearts of this Sublunary World asleep: In fine, there shall be none of their Senses and Faculties, which shall not be transported and ravished with infinite Delights. What is all this, but Sensual Pleasure? Can there be any plainer Description of Bodily Enjoyments than this? Why do they then maliciously traduce the Messenger of God, and resist the Truth?

Beautiful

But they will say, that the Pleasures which they shall enjoy after the Resurrection, will be refined and spiritual as their Bodies shall be: Whereas, they say, our Prophet intimates gross, carnal Enjoyments; as, the Company of Beautiful Women, and such amorous Delights.

Certainly, they are wilfully blind, and shut their Eyes against the Light; or else, they would easily see through the Veil of Allegories and Metaphors, which our Divine Prophet uses in the Alcoran, to adapt the Doctrine of Heavenly Things, to the dull Capacities of Men; even, as all the Prophets and Apostles have done before him. In the Book of the Gospel, Paradise is described under the Figure of a most Magnificent City, built all of Gold and Precious Stones, with a River flowing by it, and Trees whose Fruit never withers withers, nor their Leaves fade. Will the Christians take this in the Literal Sence, or do they own it to be an Allegory? If the latter, then why do they Blaſpheme the Sacred Oracles of our Holy Law-giver, becauſe he deſcribes the Felicities of Paradiſe under Senſible Figures and Types, ſuch as are moſt apt to work on the Affections of Men?

It is not to be thought, that our Enjoyment of Beautiful Women in Paradiſe, ſhall be attended with the Leaſt of thoſe Impurities which ſtain it in this Life. Our Pleaſures ſhall be agreeable to the Place whither we go, pure and immaculate. As we ſhall there enjoy the Perfection of Beauty, without the ſmalleſt Allay of Deformity; ſo, in our Enjoyment, we ſhall be tranſported with the Heighth of Extaſie, without the leaſt Mixture of Pollution.

Nor ſhall theſe Bodily Delights ſuperſede or hinder our more Spiritual Enjoyments; but, both Body and Soul ſhall be raviſhed with Eternal Felicities

Tell me, thou who art the Key of the Treaſures of Truth, whether I am now ſufficiently arm'd with Reaſons, to withſtand the Cavils and Objections which the Infidels make againſt our Holy Law! I have laid at thy Feet my Sentiments, ſubmitting all to thy unerring Wiſdom; vouchſafe to confirm what I have well ſaid, and to correct my Errors. And, in the midſt of thy Divine Ejaculations, glance a Thought on the humbleſt of thy Slaves, praying for the Exil'd Mahmut, that he may perſevere in the true Faith; and, at the End of his Life, may taſte the Joys of Paradiſe, which he zealouſly aſſerts againſt the Infidels.

LETTER IX.

To the Kaimacham.

WHEN I informed thee of the Siege of Perpignan, I had not heard of the Extraordinary Honours which were done to the Prince of Morgues during that Siege. This Prince, was a Subject of the King of Spain, and had in Poſſeſſion the Town of Monaco. Yet, for ſome diſguſts which he had received from the Spaniards, he ſome Years ago had thoughts of throwing himſelf upon the Protection of the King of France; but, Difficulties ariſing, it took not effect at that Time. However, in the Year 1641. by the Dexterity of the Governour of Provence, he was ſo far wrought upon, that a French Garriſon was by his Connivence put into Monaco, and he totally threw off his Obedience to the King of Spain; and though great Offers were made him by the Cardinal of Savoy and others, yet he rejected all; and, to demonſtrate to King Philip,

Philip, That his Soul was altogether French, he ſent him back the Collar which was the Badge of his Knighthood, beſtowed on him in the Spaniſh Court.

After which, Four Galleys of Naples cruiſing on the Sea before Ville-Franche, one of them by the Order of the Captain ſailed to Monaco, not having heard of the Revolt of this Place. The Prince invited the Captain to come aſhore, and, as ſoon as he was landed, Threeſcore Frenchmen who lay hid in the Boat which carried the Meſſage, boarded the Galley with admirable Reſolution, killing near Thirty Spaniards who made Reſiſtance, and the reſt yielding, the French took Poſſeſſion of the Veſſel.

The Prince ſailed in this Galley to Marſeilles, with his Son, who is dignified with the Title of a Marqueſs; and, taking their Way through Provence and Languedoc, came to the King of France, while he lay with his Army before Perpignan.

King Lewis, to whom nothing is more delightful than to reward the Merits of Brave Men, careſſed him with extraordinary Demonſtrations of Affection, and Acknowledgments of his Service; ſending his Coaches to meet him on the Way, cauſing his Army to appear in Battel-Array, entertaining him at his own Table, and doing all Things which might honour the Arrival of this Prince at his Camp. And, to make him amends for the Loſs of his Order of Knighthood, he inveſted him with that of the Holy Ghoſt; which, as I have in my former Letters told thee, is a fair Step to make one a Peer of France.

I thought good to inform thee of this Paſſage, Illuſtrious Miniſter, in whoſe Power it lies, to lift up to Dignities and the Great Charges of the Empire, Men in whom thou perceiveſt a Genius capable of Great Undertakings.

God direct thee in making Choice of ſuch as may be effectually ſerviceable to the Grand Signior.

LETTER X.

To Achmet Beig.

IT ſeems as if the late Revolution in Portugal, had imbitter'd the Spaniards to Deſpair, and ſwell'd the Spleen of that Nation with inſupportable Rancour. The Loſs, which they cannot hope fairly to recover by Arms, they ſeek to Revenge by diſhonourable Aſſaſſine and Treachery.

The Marqueſs de Los-Velez, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at the Court of Rome, could not brook to ſee there an Ambaſſador from the King of Portugal, whom he eſteemed at beſt but a Subject or a Traytor to Philip his Maſter. He tryed all means to prevent and hinder his Audience with the Pope, and openly demanded, that he might be ſent back into Portugal with Diſgrace. But, the Sieur de Fontenay, Ambaſſador from France, ſupported and countenanc'd the Portugueze Miniſter, which precipitated the Marqueſs de Los Velez, to one of the blackeſt Attempts that has ever ſtain'd the Records of Time.

Thou art not to learn, that the Perſons of Ambaſſadors are by the Law of Nations eſteemed Sacred; their Houſes, Sanctuaries; and, whatſoever Injury is offered them, is at leaſt accounted a Civil Sacrilege. Yet, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador finding the Biſhop of Lamego (ſo was the Portugueze called) protected and favoured by the French Intereſt, reſolves to leap over the Fences which ſecure the Immunities and Safety of his own Function, and to violate the Law without which he himſelf could not ſleep free from Danger in his Bed. For, being informed that the Portugueze Ambaſſador was gone to viſit the Sieur de Fontenay, he goes out of his Houſe with a Train of about Twenty Men, and covering his Deſign with a pretence of going to the Houſe of an Eminent Cardinal, he takes the ſame Way, as the Portugueze Biſhop was to return to his Houſe. But, the French Ambaſſador having Notice, that one of the Marqueſs's Retinue was obſerv'd to dog the Biſhop to his Palace, and return immediately to his Maſter, ſet ſome Spies upon the Marqueſs de Loz-Velez, who brought him Word, that the Marqueſs had ordred all his Retique to arm themſelves and follow him. This gave a ſufficient Alarm and Suſpicion to De Fontenay, ſo that he commanded Thirty of his Servants to arm likewiſe, and follow him in ſeparate Parties, at a Diſtance from one another; being reſolved to protect the Portugueze, who was an Allie of France, and to prevent the Deſign of his Enemies. No ſooner had the Biſhop of Lamego taken his Coach, but Notice was given to the Spaniſh Miniſter, who immediately advances toward him, big with the Murder he intended to commit. But, the French appearing, and falling briskly on the Spaniards, kill'd ſeven of them in a Moment, and broke through the Reſt, even to the very Coach of the Marqueſs, with a Reſolution to make him taſte the Death he deſigned for the poor Biſhop. But, he had the Fortune to eſcape into the Palace of a Spaniſh Cardinal, and ſo ſaved himſelf.

The Spaniſh Ambaſſador after this, being nettled at his ill Succeſs, and the Favour which the Biſhop of Lamego found in that Court, deſigned to remove to Naples; but, the Pope ſet a Guard on him to prevent it, till ſuch time as he had given Hoſtages for the Indemnity of his Nuntio's in Spain and Naples.

The Neapolitan Viceroy being informed of theſe Proceedings, made great Preparations; and, the Spaniards threatned to plunder and burn the City of Rome. But, upon more deliberate Thoughts, the Viceroy made ſhew of Friendſhip to the Pope, offering him Five Thouſand Soldiers to aſſiſt againſt the Duke of Parma, thinking by this Fraud, to gain Admiſſion into the Eccleſiaſtick Territories, which would facilitate the Way to the Satisfactions they aim'd at. But, the Pope knew how to return the Viceroy's Compliment, without hazarding his own Eſtate; telling him, That the Roman Forces were more than ſufficient to conquer the Duke, had he any other Deſigns than thoſe of Peace.

By this Paſſage of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, thou may'ſt comprehend the Licentiouſneſs of the Infidels, who dare trample upon Human and Sacred Laws; and, that in Rome it ſelf, where the Supreme Mufti of the Chriſtians keeps his Seat. It was never known, that ſuch a Thing was attempted in the Sublime Port, where the Majeſty and ſevere Juſtice of the Ottoman Empire, ſtrikes an Awe and Terror into all People, reſtraining the very Thoughts of ſo heinous a Crime.

May the Conſervator of the Ages, haſten the prefixed Time, wherein the Chriſtian Nations ſhall be ſubdued to the Muſſulman Faith; That ſo, Juſtice and Vertue, with perpetual Peace, may bleſs the Earth.

Paris, 17th. of the 2d. Moon, of the Year 1643.

LETTER XI.

To the Vizir Azem, at the Port.

I Could not let this Poſt go without a Letter, though I have nothing material to write. However, 'tis a Teſtimony of my Duty, to let thee know, that Mahmut is not Idle, that he ſuffers not an Hour, a Moment, to eſcape, wherein he ſtudies not to do ſome acceptable Service to the Grand Signior.

All the Diſpatches which I receive from the Port, ſeem like black Clouds, gathering on the Margin of the Horizon, the ſure Harbingers of an approaching Storm. One accuſes me of neglecting the Service of the Maſter of the World; Another tells me, I am too Expenſive; a Third ſays, the Miniſteri of the Divan will take other Methods. They mince their Expreſſions; no Man will deal plainly with me. They mix Threatnings with Complements, as if I were a Child, and needed the Diſcipline of a Rattle and a Rod. Would they have me reverſe the Decrees of Deſtiny? Turn Winter into Summer, and change the whole Order of Nature? Or, is it expected, that I ſhould renew the Exploit of Cadmus, and cauſe Earth-born Armies to ariſe, on purpoſe to furniſh Matter of News to the Port? I appeal to thee, Supreme Vizir, at whoſe Nod the Divan is Aſſembled or Diſſolv'd, whether I deſerve the Cenſures that are are pass'd upon me? No Man can accuse me of betraying my Trust, or of holding any Correspondence with the Enemies of the Mussulman Empire. What is then my Crime? Am I to be condemned, for employing the Money which is allotted me for Subsistence, to render my Ministry more Successful? Will they call it, an embezilling the Sultan's Money; when, rather than hoard it up for my own private Profit and Conveniences, (as I might do considerable Sums, were I so basely Frugal) I frankly part with it, to consummate the Affair for which I am placed here? Or, is the Ottoman Treasury grown low, that heretofore has supported the Indigent World, and by an Excess of Royal Munificence, has been thrown to the Fishes of the Sea? Is Mahmut alone to be esteemed a Prodigal in his present Expences, because 'tis known that he was a Slave in Sicily, and tyed down to the penurious Stint of a rigorous Patron? Suffer me this once, Sage Minister, to vindicate my self, and to tell thee, That the Hardships and squalid Circumstances of Captivity, would not be very subservient to the Ends for which I am sent hither; neither can a niggardly Pension, qualifie me for the Genius of the Court in which I must be daily conversant, where all Things appear Gay and Polite. It has not been my Custom to complain without a Cause, neither do I love to grate my Superiors, with whining Remonstrances. But, it is my humble Request, That the Ministers of the Divan would consider me, not as a Drudge to a Private Man in Palermo, but as the Indefatigable Slave of the Moſt Opulent and Liberal Monarch in the World.

In all theſe Things, I contract my ſelf into a moſt ſubmiſs Reſignation to thy Will, who art the Vicegerent of the Empire, founded on the Rock of Deſtiny; beſeeching thee, to protect me from the Malice of Whiſperers, who envy me, becauſe I ſerve the Sovereign of Sovereigns, Lord of the Eaſt and of the Weſt, and all that is between them.

May the Eternal Poſſeſſor of all Felicity, call out of his Immenſe Treaſures, ſuch Bleſſings as thou moſt ardently deſireſt in this Life; and, when he has led thee through all the Apartments of Human Bliſs on Earth, may he tranſlate thee to the Palaces of Eden, the Seats of an Immarceſcible Life, where new Sources of Joy are open'd without End.

LETTER

LETTER XII.

To Murat Baſſa.

THE Floods have been ſo great, and thoſe alſo congealed into Ice, that there has been no travelling by ſome Roads for theſe Two Moons; which is the Reaſon, we have been wanting in our uſual Advices from Germany, Piedmont, the Valtoline, and other Parts.

Yet now, the Poſts bring a Glut of News to this City. Fribergh, a Town in the Parts of Saxony, is at this Time beſieged by Torſtenſon, General of the Swediſh Army. He inveſted it the 11th. of the 1ſt. Moon. And, People are amazed to hear, that it has held out thus long, being a Place of no great Strength. Eſpecially, conſidering how ſoon Leipſick ſurrender'd to the ſame Forces; a Town well fortified, and ſtored with all Things neceſſary to ſuſtain a long Siege. By this thou may'ſt obſerve, how much the Fortune of War many Times depends on one ſucceſsful Battel.

When Torſtenſon firſt lay down before Leipſick, it was generally believed, he would find a ſtout Reſiſtance from the Inhabitants, and an Inflexible Reſolution in the Garriſon, not to yield that Important Place: And perhaps they would not have been miſtaken, had not the Imperialiſts (out of a Generous Deſign ſign to relieve it, and raiſe the Siege) hazarded a Battel. The Arch-Duke of Auſtria (whoſe Name is Leopold) and Picolomini, as ſoon as they received Advice that the Swediſh Army had paſſed the Elbe, and enter'd into Miſnia, took their directeſt Way to ſtop their Advance into thoſe Parts. But, it had been better they had kept their Quarters; for, in one Battel, they loſt all the Glory which they had before acquired by their Arms. Torſtenſon was already intrenched before Leipſick, when his Scouts brought him Intelligence, that the Imperial Army was near at Hand. He immediately diſpoſes of his Baggage in a ſecure Place, draws out his Cannon, and having left a ſufficient Number of Soldiers to guard the Poſts of his Camp which were neareſt the City, he marches directly toward the Enemy, and poſſeſſes himſelf of a Spot of Ground very agreeable to his Occaſions; it was called, the Plain of Brittenfield. This Place he deſigned for the Stage, whereon to perform the Part of a Prudent, and Valiant General. For, as ſoon as he came in Sight of the German Vanguard, he cauſed his Army to retreat faintly, as though he had no Intention to fight. The Germans purſue the Retreating Swedes, till they were got into very narrow Streights between Two ſteep Mountains; not much unlike the Capi Dervent in Bulgaria (where the Heyducks, taking the Advantage of the Heights, commit great Robberies on the Caravans that travel through thoſe Streights, rolling huge Stones, or rather Rocks, down upon the Paſſengers.) Here the Suedes turned about, and falling behind their Cannon, which Torſtenſon had cauſed to be planted in theſe Streights, play'd furiouſly on the Germans, while the Muſquetiers which he had order'd on the Sides of the Mountains, gall'd them from above, yet lay themſelves Inviſible, under the Covert of Thickets which grew on each Side of the Streight. It was the Left Wing of the Imperialiſts which was thus engaged, and Picolomini who commanded them, gave admirable Proofs of an undaunted Courage, appearing at the Head of his Surprized Soldiers, and heartning them with Words and Actions full of Bravery; but, his Labour was loſt, for Six Thouſand fled without drawing a Sword. The Suedes purſued them through the Streights, and re-entring the Plain, engaged with the Right Wing of the Germans. The Battel was fierce and bloody. General Picolomini did Wonders, and many brave Germans ſignalized their Valour; but, it ſeems as if the Fate of Torſtenſon, is to ruine the Empire: For, while the Battel was yet equal on both Sides, and the Victory doubtful; while the Ground was dyed with a Mixture of German and Swediſh Blood, he falls into the Main Body of the Imperial Army with a freſh Reſerve, which ſo animated the Suedes and diſorder'd their Enemies, that at length the Germans not able longer to ſuſtain the Shock, left their Cannon and retreated into a Foreſt. Now followed a Dreadful Slaughter; for, the Swediſh

Swedish Cavalry environ'd the chas'd Germans, whom Coningſmark had hunted out of the Foreſt, and charged them with ſuch Fury, that they were moſt of them cut in Pieces. The Germans loſt Four Thouſand Men on the Spot, and as many more in the Purſuit.

I have ſent thee in the incloſed Paper, a Liſt of all the Officers of Note which were ſlain in this Battel, which is eſteemed one of the moſt Bloody, that has been fought in Europe between Chriſtians on both Sides theſe Two Hundred Years. Thou wilt there find above Three Hundred Commanders, from whom a Death not Inglorious has taken their Commiſſions.

The Germans alſo loſt Six and Forty Pieces of Cannon, Sixty Five Standards, all their Ammunition, a Hundred and Sixty Carts, and Six Hundred Wagons; with all the Treaſury of the Arch-Duke Leopold, and General Piccolomini.

This Battel was fought, on the Firſt of the Eleventh Moon, as we reckon; but, according to the Chriſtians Account, on the Twenty Firſt of the Tenth Moon.

After this Signal Victory, General Torſtenſon ſhewed himſelf again before Leipſick, approached the Walls, planted his Batteries; and, though the Beſieged at firſt made ſhew of a firm Reſolution to defend the Place, yet the Terror which the late Defeat of the German Forces had ſtruck them with, ſoon altered their Counſels, and they ſurrender'd upon Honourable Conditions.

In

In the mean Time, General Picolomini and the Arch-duke of Austria, are retired into Bohemia. The German Court is full of Apprehensions; and, new Levies are every where making, to join the shatter'd Remnants of the Army. The Affairs of the King of Hungary are at an ill Pass, and all things look with a Cloudy Aspect on the Empire.

From the Side of Italy, we hear nothing of Moment, but the Spaniards are taking such Measures, as may best repair the Loss of Tortona: and, to that End, the Duke of Milan is making all the Preparations which are customary in such Cases. 'Tis said here, they intend to recover that Place again.

May these Quarrels of the Infidels continue, till the determinate Time shall come, that our Victorious Armies shall subdue them to the Mussulman Empire.

LETTER

LETTER XIII.

To the Kaimacham.

WHEN I ſent thee Word of the Death of Cardinal Richlieu, I thought it the ſame thing, as if I had preſented thee with the Head of one of the moſt Dangerous Enemies of the Ottoman Empire. That Head which while the Owner lived, was always plotting of Miſchief, had it not been diverted by nearer Intrigues, would not have fail'd to put ſome horrid Deſign in Execution againſt the Sublime Port, which of all the Thrones in the World, ſeems alone to o'er-top the Grandeur of France.

But, this Court ſeems to play the Hydra; for, no ſooner is the Head of one of her Prime Miniſters laid, but up ſprings another in the Room of it, equal in Vigour and Subtilty. And we have ſtill as much Reaſon to apprehend the Counſels of Cardinal Mazarini, as before we had to ſuſpect thoſe of Richlieu.

The Generality of the People at firſt, look-ed for another Conduct in the King towards the Creatures of the Late Miniſter; ſince he himſelf, toward the latter End of his Life, ſeem'd to ſubſiſt in the Court, rather through the Neceſſity the King had of his Counſels, than any Motive of Affection.

However the King has exactly complied with the Cardinal's dying Requeſts, in ho-nouring nouring several of his Relations and Friends, with Places of considerable Trust. And, 'tis to his last Recommendation, Cardinal Mazarini is obliged for the Authority he now possesses. In using of which, he discovers a refined Policy, and a Modesty which hath but few Examples.

The many Combinations and Attempts against Cardinal Richlieu, and the King's Coldness to him during the Siege of Perpignan, sufficiently instructed Mazarini, that it was impossible to possess so Eminent a Charge, without drawing on him the Envy and Hatred of the Grandees. He considered also, That he was a Stranger, whereas Richlieu was a Native of France. Therefore, he unites his Interest with that of Two Great Officers, who also courted the King's Favour; the one, is Superintendent of the Finances; the other, Secretary of State. These being longer acquainted with the nice Transactions of the Court, and the Intrigues of the Grandees, do him no small Service with their Instructions; and likewise abate the Popular Spight, or at least, share it with the Cardinal; since no Body will be so partial, as to lay the Blame of any Miscarriage on Him alone, who seems to do nothing without the Direction of his Two Partners (for so he calls them, as if these Three shared among them the Authority of the Defunct Cardinal.) This is a pure Trick of Mazarini; and he serves himself of them as we use a Ladder, designing by their Means to mount by safer Steps, and on their Shoulders, to lift himself unenvied to the Helm of the State. Not, but that he is actually Invested with the Primacy by the King; but, he is willing to divert the Storm which that will draw upon him from the Nobles, therefore he cunningly seems to decline it, pretending an earnest Desire to with-draw into Italy, and in the Interim has chosen these Two for his Colleagues. Thus he grasps with one Hand, what with the other he seems to reject; and by his Magnificent Living, his Obsequious Court, and obliging Carriage to all, he demonstrates, that if he should pass the Alps, his Heart would be left behind him in France, and that he only aims to be establish'd in the Ministery, with Universal Applause.

Shoulders,

It makes me smile sometimes, to see what pains he takes to entangle himself in Infinite Hazards and Trouble, as if he were of a Constitution like that of a Salamander, which cannot live out of a Fire.

The Great God encrease the Vertues and Graces of the Illustrious Kaimacham, and of all the Ministers that stand by the Bright Throne of Justice, the Seat of the Ottoman Emperors.

LETTER

LETTER XIV.

To the Venerable Mufti, Prince of the Interpreters of the Law and Judges of Equity.

A Cloud of Sorrow o'erſpeads the Kingdom of France; their Sun is ſet; the Mighty Lewis, for whom all Europe had been too narrow, had he liv'd, is now confined within the Limits of a Grave. He died at St. Germains yeſterday, being the Fourteenth of the Fifth Moon; having left his Queen poſſeſs'd of the Regency, and Cardinal Mazarini, of the Prime Conduct of the State.

He was a Prince of great Virtue, which with his ſucceſsful Conqueſts and Victories, procur'd him the Envy of his Neighbours. And, ſome Criticks among his own Subjects, pretend to find many Faults in his Proceedings; as, Breach of Royal Promiſe to the Governor of Saumur, when he delivered him the Keys of the Town; to the Rochellers in not razing Lewis's Fort. Among Foreigners, the Duke of Savoy, the Duke of Lorrain, and the German Emperor, charge him with Breach of Articles in his Treaties. So does the King of Spain. And all of them complain, That he alone has involv'd all Chriſtendom in War and Blood.

Every Thing has two Handles, and Men are apt to take all things by the Worſt, eſpecially ally in Cases of this Nature. It is difficult for a Sovereign Monarch, to carry himself so evenly in Peace or War, as to escape Obloquy; especially, if he be Victorious. Losers must have leave to be peevish.

But I forget that I speak to him, who can repeal the Sentences of Greatest Monarchs; before whose unerring Tribunal, all Earthly Dignities stand mute. Therefore, avoiding all impertinent Glosses, I will only present thee with what is proper to be said without partiality in Lewis his Vindication, being Matter of Fact, and leave the Decision to thy Sacred Judgment.

Herein it will not be amiss to call to Mind, how the Kings of Spain, and the whole House of Austria, have invaded and disturbed the Peace of Europe, from time to time, these many Years.

The Usurpation of Navarre by Ferdinand King of Arragon, began the fatal Jarr, when he deposed John of Albret and Catharine his Queen, though he himself had no other Title to this Kingdom, than what the Swords of the Arragonians and Castilians gave him; being of Pyrrhus and Lysander's Mind, who knew no other Limits to their Dominions, than what their Enemies stout Resistance set them. Thus Navarre being adjacent to Old Castile, Biscay and Galicia, it became a Prey to Spain. Add to this, his Breach of Royal Word to Catharine de Medicis, (Queen-Mother of France;) to Don Antonio, the next Heir of Portugal; the Dukes of Savoy and Parma and

Catha-

Catharine, Dutchess of Braganza; that he would acquiesce to the Chamber of Lisbon, in the Case of Succession to the Crown of Portugal; when, contrary to all Law and Justice, he Invaded that Kingdom unawares, making it a Tributary Province to the Spanish Crown!

It has been the usual Methods of Politick and wise Princes, to check the Torrent of their Neighbours growing Greatness, to lopp the Luxuriant Branches of ill-gotten Empire; and, had Henry IV. of France prolong'd his Life, 'tis thought he would have re-conquer'd Navarre, and planted the Flower-de-Luces in Fontarabia and Pampelone. Who can then with Justice, tax Lewis XIII. for managing a War, which all the World expected of his Father?

Moreover, the Spanish Methods in conquering Mexico and Peru, Two mighty Empires in America; their barbarous Cruelty, their inhumane Butchery of above Twenty Millions of the Natives, when neither Dignity, nor Age, nor Sex, was spar'd, but all became a Sacrifice to their Insatiable Avarice of Gold, was a sufficient Argument to incense all the Princes in the World against them.

I have no Interest in France, any more than I should have in Spain, if I were there: I only plead for Justice.

'Twas time for France to be alarm'd and stand upon her Guard, when she saw her Potent Neighbour planting fresh Alliances and Interests, like Batteries, round about her; had the Danger only threatned from beyond the Pyrenean rencan Mountains, she might have waited their Designs. But, when she saw so many Powers and States united in close Leagues, and wholly subject to Spain, 'twas time to beat the Drum and carry the War from Home, 'twas time to climb the Alps and take a survey of Spanish Italy; for the Kingdom of Naples, the Dutchy of Millain, the Island of Sicily, the Dukes of Mantua, Parma, and Urbin, the Princes of Massa and Piombino, with the Free States of Genoua and Luca, did then all march under the Banner of Spain. So that none but the Great Duke of Tuscany, with the Republick of Venice, were left to withstand his threatning Arms. Who will now blame King Lewis, for drawing into his Confederacy the Hollanders, Hessians, Grisons, and the Swedes? How could he otherwise dissolve that formidable Union aforesaid?

Besides the Murders of Henry III. and Henry IV. the one Kill'd at St. Clou by James Clement, the other at Paris by Ravillac, were so apparently hatch'd, and committed by Spanish Counsel and Influence, that, had Lewis, the late King, no other Reasons to stand upon his Guard, and observe the Motions of Spain, yet that were enough to Justifie his war-like Preparations against that Crown. For, besides the Motives of a Just Revenge, the common Jealousies of State, must needs prompt him to do his utmost, in Prevention of Spanish Intrigues.

Nor ought his matching with the Infanta, to have given him any greater security; since, under under the fairest Grass, many times lurks the most Venomous Snake. What Spain could not do by open Force nor secret Conspiracy, she hoped might be accomplish'd by this specious Marriage. And, it was no small step toward it, that the numerous Train of Spaniards, which came into France with the Infanta, presently skrewed themselves into all Offices and Places of trust, both in Church and State; daily making Parties and Pensioners for Spain, till at length all France grew weary of them? So that the King was constrained to send them Home again: Else it is more than probable, that in a little Time he might have seen this flourishing Kingdom, in a worse Condition than ever had been known before. He has already seen the Bowels of France ript up by Intestine Broils, and weltring in its own Blood; he has seen the Princes and Nobles armed against him debauching and alienating the Allegiance of the French Gentry, Clergy and Commons, and covering their pernicious Rebellion under the Mask of the Holy League. He has seen the Duke of Roban leading up and down an Army of Twelve Thousand Foot, and Twelve Hundred Horse, at the King of Spain's Cost; he himself with his Brother Soubize, being both Pensioners to the King of Spain, the one receiving Fourteen, the other Eight Thousand Crowns a Year. In fine, he has seen the strongest Cities and Forts of Picardy, Normandy, and other Provinces of France plundered, and pillaged by flying Armies of Spaniards and Imperialists, even when he least dream'd of any such Misfortune, being at the same time involv'd in Civil Wars with his own Subjects. After all this, had he not Reason to prevent the like Mischiefs and Incursions for the future, by transporting the War into his Enemies Countries, who had committed so many Hostilities and Ravages in his? It was certainly high Time for France to rouze up her Martial Genius, and leave off her dreaming Theory, when Spain was so busie with the Practick.

Impe-

These are the Arguments that may be alledged, in Vindication of the King of France's Conduct toward Spain. And not much less is to be recriminated upon the Emperor of Germany, his seizing the Dutchy of Cleves and Juliers, with many Towns and Bishopricks in the Counties of Luxemburgh and La Marck; as also in the Frontiers of Suisserland and Lorrain. His Conquest of the Palatinate, with the chiefest Cities, Forts, and Passes of the Grisons; his reducing the Lives and Liberties of that People to their last Gasp and Period, was a sufficient Motive to the French King, to put a speedy Check to this encreasing Grandeur of the House of Austria.

I leave the Determination of these Matters to thy Sage Wisdom, Great Arbiter of Justice, and bowing my Head to the Dust, awfully retire.

LETTER

LETTER XIII.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State.

THREE Days ago, Lewis XIII. King of France and Navarre, was arrested by the King of Terrors, and forc'd to pay the Grand Debt, to God and Nature; I will not say, before it was due, but sooner than the accustomed Time of Payment, being not full Forty Three Years old.

Yet Heaven was so Indulgent, as not to suffer the Grim Messenger of Fate, to snatch him hence without a previous Summons: His Distemper being a lingring Consumption, which gave him frequent Intimations of his fading Strength.

There are not wanting such as whisper, That he was hurried out of the World before his Time, by some unnatural Artifice. And, the Common Sort say, that Mazarini's Scarlet, looks of a more Sanguine Hue, than it did Four Days ago.

The Reason of this Jealousie, I suppose, is grounded on the Familiarity that has been observed between the now Queen-Regent and the Cardinal; both also being Strangers to the French Blood, she a Spaniard, and he an Italian. I will not determine how far these Reflections are justifiable, because I know it is impossible for Persons in their Circumstances, to avoid the Censure of busie prying Minds, in such a Juncture as this: Yet some, who move in a Sphere above the Vulgar, cannot forget by whose Instigations his Royal Father, Henry the Great, was sent out of the World.

The known familiar Access which the Marquess Spinola gave to Ravillac at Brussels, the private Entertainments between them a little before that Murderer gave the fatal Blow, together with other Circumstances, amounted to more than a strong Presumption with the French, that Spain was the Principal Author of that Tragedy.

And, the sudden Exclamation of Francesco Corvini, an Italian Astrologer, the Night before the King was kill'd, made some Men cast an Eye of Suspicion beyond the Alps. For, he standing on the Leads of his House in Florence; as though he were observing the Stars, on a sudden stamp'd with his Foot, and said, To Morrow the Most Potent Monarch of Europe will be kill'd. But some curious Heads imagine, he had his Intelligence nearer Hand, than from the Heavens, and, that rather, some of the Great Italian Stars had made him thus Prophetick.

Hence, by comparing these Times with those, the present Regency of a Spaniard, and Superintendency of an Italian, creates a like Suspicion in the French, concerning the Death of Lewis XIII. who though he died in his Bed, yet might as well be murder'd by a Drug, as his Father was by a Knife. These are the ſecret Surmiſes of Cabals, not a little heightned by reflecting on the Time of both their Deaths; both dying in the ſame Month, the ſame Day of the Month, and much about the ſame Hour of the Day.

are

Yet, notwithſtanding theſe Murmurs, when his Body was open'd, and his Intrails taken out and ſearch'd, the Phyſicians gave their Sentence, That he died a Natural Death. His Bowels are carried to St. Denys, a Town above Three Leagues from Paris, there to be buried; and his Body is Embalmed in order to its Sepulture in the ſame Place; there being a Magnificent Church, where all the Royal Blood of France is commonly Interr'd.

Yeſterday I was in Company with one of his Phyſicians, and entring into Diſcourſe of the King's Death, (the common Theme of all Companies at preſent) he told us that the King's Waſting and Death proceeded from the Diſproportion of his Moiſture to his Heat, the latter being predominant in his Conſtitution; ſo that not meeting with a ſufficient check from Natural Humidity, it kindled conſtant Fevers in his Body, which never left him till he left the World.

He was a very devout Man in his Religion, and free from Vice, at leaſt, to outward Obſervation. A remarkable Inſtance of his Piety he gave in his Youth; when entring a certain Country Village, the better Sort of Inhabitants offered to attend him with a Canopy; he anſwer'd, I hear you have no Church here, neither will I ſuffer a Canopy of State to be born over my Head in that Place, where God hath not a Conſecrated Roof to dwell under, (For, theſe Nazarenes believe, that God dwells in their Temples.)

He was temperate to a Miracle, in the Midſt of Royal Dainties; not ſuffering his Palate to betray his Vertue. He ſcorn'd thoſe Pleaſures which debaſe the Mind. And, took more delight in the noiſe of Drums and Trumpets, and the Roaring of Cannon, than in the ſoft Blandiſhments of Love. He was adorned with many other Vertues, which gained him the Love of all, and more eſpecially, the Favour of Heaven. Yet, after all his Victories, Succeſſes and Triumphs, all that can be now ſaid of him is, He is Dead. Thus paſſes away the Glory of the Greateſt Potentates.

God preſerve our Invincible Sultan, ever Glorious, Proſperous, Renowned and Immortal.

LETTER

LETTER XIV.

To the Kaimacham.

I Am plac'd as an Echo in Paris, to remit to the Ottoman Port, the Sanctuary of the World, whatſoever makes a Noiſe in Chriſtendom. I have ſent a Diſpatch to the Venerable Muſti, as alſo to the Principal Secretary of State, containing the News of the Death of Lewis XIII. King of France and Navarre.

I need not repeat here, what I have ſaid to them; Becauſe I know, they will communicate to thee my Letters.

Yet ſuffer me to ſay ſomething of this Great Monarch, who, had his Nature been more durable, would in all probability have exceeded all his Royal Progenitors, both in his Conqueſts abroad, and his Abſolute Sway at Home. Of which he gave an early Preſage, appearing at the Head of Armies, at thoſe Years when other Princes are but learning the Rudiments of War in the Academy.

When he was little more than Twelve Years of Age, he began to diſcover his Valour and Conduct, in ſubduing the Rebels of Poictou and Bretaigne, leading an Army againſt them in his own Perſon.

Yet, that Succeſs, did not diſcourage others of his Subjects, from attempting freſh Inſurrections againſt him. Fate decreed, that he ſhould gather the Laurels which compoſed his Crown, from amongſt Briars and Thorns; His whole Life being one continued Series of War, either at Home or Abroad, and ſometimes both.

But, that which moſt exercis'd his Patience, was, the frequent Inteſtine Broils and Inſurrections of his own Subjects, of which he ſaw no leſs than Ten during his Reign, ſome of them headed and abetted by the Princes of the Blood; Nay, as if Heaven had cut him out for the Toils of War, when all Things elſe were in a Poſture of Peace, his own Mother and Monſieur his Brother, ſeveral Times call'd him into the Field, by taking up Arms againſt him.

When Victory had erected Obeliſks and other Monuments of Honour to him in Italy and Spain, and had cut Triumphal Arches through the Alps and Pyrenean Mountains, for the Conquerours Return; when he had made the Rhine to flow with German Blood, and had every where both by Sea and Land left Tokens of his matchleſs Fortune; coming to his own Country, inſtead of Trophies and Honours to welcome home their Sovereign, his Ears were always grated with the unwelcome News of Civil Wars in his own Kingdom.

Yet, he that conſiders, need not wonder at theſe Convulſions of the State in France, or any other Kingdom ſo populous as that is. In the Oeconomy of the Univerſe, though it be governed by an Eternal Providence which cannot cannot err, yet we see the Elements at war with each other, and that perpetually; and out of this restless Strife and Quarrel, arises the Health and good Constitution of the Natural World. So is it in the Politick World; No Kingdom or Commonwealth can subsist without Purgations of her peccant and superfluous Humours; which War effects, as the most Appropriate and Natural Remedy in such Cases.

Neither had Lewis any great Reason to be angry at these Disorders, since through his Prudent Management, they furnish'd him both with the Opportunity and Means to reduce this Kingdom to an entire Obedience, which his Predecessors could never accomplish. Thus, they say, the Palm, the more it is oppressed with Weights, shoots up the higher.

Kingdoms and Empires, like Natural Bodies, have their proper Time of Growth; and the Genius of each Nation, stimulates it with a strong Desire and Appetite of enlarging its Dominions, which it never ceases to pursue, till it be arrived to the Meridian and Height of Grandeur; though it be often interrupted and retarded in its Course to Maturity, by State Fevers and other Maladies.

Thus France, during the Nonage of her growing State, felt various Shocks and Fits; often threatned with a Dissolution by the high-wrought Blood of potent Factions. Yet, in her Constitution, she had Antidotes as well as Poysons: And, her wise Kings, had skill to check and curb a Popular Diſeaſe. But, none e'er rooted out the Cauſe, till this great Lewis took the Cure in Hand. He has awakned all the Vital Powers of State, and rowz'd the very Soul of Government. 'Tis he alone, has cruſh'd the laſt Head of that Factious Hydra, which for ſo many Reigns, had exercis'd the Arms of his Royal Anceſtors.

Wouldſt thou know, by what Methods he has accompliſh'd this Great Work? I'll tell thee in a Word; by Rigour and Severity. He fleec'd the Rich Plebeians of their Gold, and kept the Poor in that Condition, by continual Taxes and Impoſitions.

Yet, he was a Prince of that admirable Temper in his Government, that he acquired the Epithet of Juſt.

His Queen is now Regent, according to the Law of France, the Dauphin being but Four Years of Age.

The Sovereign Arbiter of Fate, grant to the Glorious Sultan, Victory over all his Enemies, that ſo, theſe Weſtern Nations, when their Courſe is run, may be ſubdued to the Sacred Empire of the True Believers.

LETTER

LETTER XV.

To the Venerable Mufti, Succeſſor of the Prophets, and Meſſengers of God.

THY laſt Letter, has confirmed the Effects of the former; and given me a freſh Teſtimony, of thy Paternal Affection and Friendſhip: It is an evident Sign, that thou takeſt Care of poor Mahmut, when with an Authority full of Tenderneſs, thou reproveſt his Faults, without leaving him Occaſion to deſpair. Such Reprehenſions, are a Sovereign Balm to a wounded Spirit; and, I hope, after an Application ſweetned with ſo much Clemency, I ſhall never do any Thing which may merit or need the Diſcipline requiſite to a Gangrene.

If I was negligent in performing the Penance thou before enjoynedſt me, I will now endeavour to make reparation. If the Account I gave thee, of the Religion of theſe Weſtern Part, was too Superficial and Brief; I will now enlarge, and preſent thee with the Chief Obſervations and Remarks I have made during my Reſidence here, and my Captivity in Palermo.

I need not acquaint thee, with that which cauſes the Greateſt Rupture between the Roman and Greek Churches; Cyril the Patriarch, has said enough to thee on that Subject. Thou knowest, that the Grand Quarrel between them is about the Supremacy, which the Roman Prelate claims over all the Churches in the World, by a Divine Right. But, neither Cyril, nor the Friars of Jerusalem with whom he contested, would inform thee, that this Supremacy where ever it resides, is only founded in Right of the Empire. They would make thee believe, That the Christian Bishops were, from the Beginning, Sovereigns, Established by God, Princes Independent of the Imperial Sceptre; concealing, that the First Founders of their pretended Monarchy, were poor Fishermen, who never dream'd of such a Grandure, as their Successors were afterwards invested with, by the Liberality of the Roman and Grecian Emperours. It would be a Reproach to themselves, if they should let thee know, how Holy and Harmless were the First Patriarchs of Byzantium and Rome, who refused the Honours and Dignities of the World, and were only Ambitious of Excelling one another in Vertue and a Pious Life. Their very Addresses to thee, are a Contradiction to the Examples of their Predecessors, each Party offering Treasures of Gold, thinking to bribe the Incorruptible Judge with the glittering Dirt. Assuredly, the Seeds of an Irreconcilable Discord are sown in these Infidels; they are setled upon the Lees of Error, till the Day of Judgment.

As to the State of Controversie between them, it is certain, that while Rome was the Capital Capital Seat of the Empire, the Roman Bishops had the Superiority granted them; but, when the Imperial Residence was translated from thence to Byzantium, by Constantine the Great (from whom it derives the Name it now bears of Constantinople) then the Ecclesiastical Supremacy was also transferr'd to the Patriarch of that City; who enjoys it to this Day, through the Favour of our Munificent Sultans, who succeed the Ancient Emperours of Greece. This Superlative Power, the Popes of Rome would not recognize in any other but themselves, being loath to part with the Authority they once possess'd; whence proceeded the Schism between the Two Churches of the East and West. And, while the Patriarchs of the Graecians, shelter'd their new acquir'd Honour, under the Protection of the Emperours; the Popes, partly by Artifice and partly by Force, made themselves Lords of Rome and the Adjacent Territories, taking Advantage of the Absence of the Emperours, the Pusillanimity of the Senators, and Discord of the Citizens. Supported with this Princely Estate, they Excommunicate all the Churches which did not submit to them, as the Sovereign Prelates of the Christian World; publishing severe Edicts against the Greek Church, and doing every Thing that might confirm the World, in the Belief of their Authority and Grandure. The Potentates of Europe, frightned with the Thunder which the Roman Pontifs used, and induced by other Reasons, did Homage to them, acknowledging their their Sovereign Juriſdiction in the Weſt. In this State they have continued ever ſince, without yielding in any Thing to the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople.

There have been great Endeavours uſed on both Sides, to gain their reſpective Ends; and, ſeveral General Councils were called, that is, an Aſſembly of the Chief Biſhops and Doctors of both Churches, to examine and decide the Difference. And, ſometimes the Fathers of the Greek Church, have ſubſcribed a Submiſſion to the Pope; but, as ſoon as they return'd home, they have Recanted, and the Breach render'd as wide as ever. They accuſe the Romans of Partiality, and ſay, That the Councils were pack'd; yet, both Parties ſeem to give an extraordinary Deference to theſe General Councils, believing, That the Holy Ghoſt is there preſent, and guides them into all Truth. The Councils which they eſteem Infallible, have contradicted each other: This Repealing what That had Decreed, and a Third Diſannulling that Repeal. The Councils believe themſelves above the Pope, and the Pope exalts himſelf above the Councils. Sometimes they have Two or Three Popes together, all claiming that, which can be the Right but of One. In fine, they have involved themſelves in ſuch a Labyrinth of Diſputes and Cavils, and are entangl'd in ſuch a Circle of Abſurdities, that the ſoberer part of Chriſtians, begin to queſtion the Authority both of Popes and Councils: Inſomuch, as it being generally known, that the laſt Aſſembly of this this Kind, was manifestly over-ruled by the Agents of the Court of Rome, people spar'd not to pass this Jest on it, and say, That the Holy Ghost was sent from Rome to the Council of Trent in a Cloak-bag; intimating thereby, the many Instructions and Advices which were continually transmitted from Rome by the Post, to the Fathers sitting in that Council, whereby all things were determined according to the Pope's Pleasure, and to the Advantage of the Roman Court.

'Tis certain, the Christians now a-days, have abated much of that Blind Obedience, which they formerly paid to the Roman Pontiffs: they begin to see with their own Eyes, and not with those of their Priests. There was a Time, when many Kings were made to hold their Crowns in Fee of the Roman Prelate, who pretended a Right to dispose of all the Kingdoms and Empires of the Earth, as Vicar of God. But, the Kings of England, Sweden-land, and Denmark, with some Princes of the German Empire and the States of Holland, have taught others the Way to stand upon their Guard; so that, though the Emperour of Germany, Kings of France, Spain and Poland, with the Princes of Italy, profess an Obedience to the Holy Father, yet 'tis rather out of a Maxim of Policy, than any real Perswasion of Religion.

The Spaniards seem the most superstitiously Devoted to the See of Rome; yet, they will not endure the Excommunication, which the Pope pronounces against their King, above the

The Space of one Day: It seems, upon some old Difference between them, it is usual for the Holy Father to Excommunicate this Sovereign once a Year, that is, on the Thursday before Easter, which is the same as our Feast of Beiram. Now, as I am told, the Spanish Ambassador next Day, presents the Pope with a Gennet or Horse, upon which the Censure is taken off. This is an Ecclesiastick Juggle; and the Court of Rome, use a great deal of such Holy Legerdemain, to keep the Sons of the Church in their Obedience.

The French Church, though in all Things agreeing and professing an entire Obedience to the Roman, yet claims to her self some Immunities and Privileges, which the Court of Rome is very loath to grant. Hence it comes to pass, that there arise frequent Contests between the Popes and the Kings of France, which are generally accommodated to the Advantage of the Latter; the Pope not being willing to try the Force, of THE LAST REASON OF KINGS: This is a Motto, engraven on the French King's Cannon, which he has threatned to carry to the Walls of Rome, if the Pope should entrench on the Gallican Rights.

But, though they thus disagree in some Niceties of State, yet they and all the Rest of the Nations, within the Roman Communion, have but one Form of Divine Service, which they call the Mass, and it is the same with the Grecian Liturgy. On Festival Days, it is solemnized with Variety of Choice Musick and Singing; with Innumerable Wax-Tapers, burning at Noon-day. I have seen at such a Time, Sixteen Priests before the Altar, all Vested in most costly Silks, embroidered with Gold and Pearls.

They have also many Chapels and Altars in the same Church, and sometimes they Celebrate Mass on all the Altars together: differing herein from those of the Greek Communion, who have but one Altar in a Temple: For which they plead Antiquity, it never having been known, that the Primitive Christians had any more. On the other side, the Romans plead Conveniency, for the Multitude of their Altars; that the Pope has a power to dispense with the Ancient Rites and Traditions in such Cases; and, that nothing was more reasonable, than that their Altars should be multiplied, as the Number of their Proselytes and Priests encreas'd.

I will not pretend to decide this Controversie; permit me only to say, that the Faithful Mussulmans, have more reason to require several Preachers at the same time in our Magnificent Mosques, where it is impossible for all the Auditors in so vast an Assembly, to hear and understand the Law Expounded by one Man, though it be performed in the Vulgar Tongue: Whereas, their Service is celebrated in a Language, whereof the Multitude are utterly ignorant. It matters not much, whether they are near the Priest at the Altar, or afar off, since they understand not a Word

he says; and, the Græcians judge it sufficient to be present at this their Daily Sacrifice, tho' it be at the very Porch of the Temple.

Another Difference there is also between these Two Churches; the Roman allows not a Married Priest, unless in some extraordinary Cases, and then the Pope's Dispensation must be procured. But, Concubinage is connived at, though forbidden by the Canons of the Church: Whereas thou knowest, that all the Græcian Papa's, marry and get Children.

The Spaniards, among all the Nations within the Roman Pale, are reckon'd the Best Catholicks, but the Worst Christians; the French are said to be, the Best Christians, but the Worst Catholicks; and, the Italians, are accounted neither Catholicks nor Christians.

I know not what reason they have to state the Difference so between the Two Former; but, the Character of the Latter, suits in one Respect with the usual Proverb of that Country; it being common in the Mouths of Italian Gallants, to say, He that is a Christian is a Fool.

The Devouter sort of Catholicks, pay a great Reverence and Devotion to the Reliques of their Saints. I could not reprehend them for this, if I were sure of Two Things, That all those whom they esteem as Saints were really such; and, That all the Reliques they keep with so much Veneration in their Churches, did really appertain to the Persons under whose Names they go. For, then it would would be no more, than what the True Believers practise throughout the World; and it is well known, That when a piece of the Garment of our Holy Prophet, was dipt in the Water which they cast on the Flames of Constantinople, the Fire immediately ceased, to which before no Stop could be given by all the Industry and Endeavours of Men. Assuredly, the Bodies of the Prophets and Messengers of God, are Holy, and have a Power of Sanctifying whatever they touch, producing often Miraculous Effects; but, the Avarice of Men may abuse this Truth to their own private Ends; and, the Christians themselves will not believe all to be true Reliques of Saints, which their Crafty Priests shew for such.

There be innumerable other Sects of Christians, which are neither in Communion with the Roman nor the Grecian Churches; but, accusing them of Idolatry, separate themselves from their Society, and form Distinct Congregations. These are not known in France, saving only the Hugonots, otherwise called Protestants: Which last, is a Term comprehending all that have Revolted from the Roman Church, and was first assumed by the Lutherans at Ausburgh in Germany.

In England and Holland, there are abundance of these Sects, some of them newly sprung up, others of longer Date. And, all thus far agree with the Mussulmans, that they use not Pictures or Images in their Temples; so, that were they rightly instructed in the Holy Alcoran, it would not be a Thing altogether impracticable, to perswade them to Circumcision. There is a Sect which they call Socinians, who seem to preach out of the very Book of Glory, denying the Divinity of Jesus, the Son of Mary, the Christians Messias; even as our Divine now given does in several Chapters and Versicles of the Alcoran.

Holy

The Christian Church, seems to be a stately Building, whereof Prelacy is the Corner-Stone; if this were removed, all would fall to the Ground. That which they call the Hierarchy, if it could once be dissolv'd or pull'd down, we should soon see all Christendom laid in Ruines. This Hierarchy is a Gradual Subordination of Arch-Bishops, Bishops and Priests; the Inferiour depending on the Superiour, and all deriving their Orders and Dignities from their Chief Patriarchs. These are the Links which compose that Chain, that fastens Christendom together; were this but once broke, the United Interest of Europe would soon fall into pieces. The Way must be, by beginning at the lowermost Link: Could but the Priests be render'd Independent on the Bishops, and on each other, it would be a fair step toward the dismantling of the Out-works, these Priests drawing infinite Numbers of People after them; as it is apparent in Geneva, Holland, Switzerland and other Places, where they have quite abolish'd the Order and Authority of Bishops: And it is observable that none of these forementioned Countries since that Time, have ever been been Instrumental in opposing the Victorious Arms of the Ottoman Empire: As, if, with the Downfal of Episcopacy, the Charm were dissipated, which had for some Ages precipitated these Nations (among others) to a rash and Obstinate Resistance of that Force, which is destin'd by Fate, to Conquer and Reform the World.

Weigh this Thought well, and thou wilt find, that the Order of Bishops, is Essential and Necessary to the Good Estate of Christendom; and, that the only Way for the Mussulmans to undermine all Europe, will be, to supplant this Order, and Introduce an Ecclesiastick Independency among the Priests; by which means, every one shall assume to himself, not only his proper Fragment of the torn Dignity, but the whole Fundamental Power of a Bishop; taking upon him to do those Offices, which before it was not accounted Lawful for any but a Mitred Head to perform. Hence, in Time, will follow innumerable Inconveniences, Distastes, and Broils; and, perhaps, as many Schisms, as there are particular Priests to head them: Since, every one will be apt to think himself capable of dictating to all the Rest, and judge it below him to receive the Law from any. Thus, will there be a clear Stage, for Ambition, Avarice and Lust, to act their Parts on; and when, by the Craft of designing Men, the Superstition of Bigots, and the Easiness of the Credulous, the greatest Part shall be so divided, that it will be difficult to find Two Men of the

ſame Mind in Articles of Faith; It will then be eaſie, either by the Intelligible Reaſons in the Alcoran, or the more Cogent Arguments of the Sword, to plant the True and Undefiled Faith in theſe Countries. The Creator of all Things haſten his Holy Prophet's Return, that all Nations may embrace his Law, aſſert his Unity, and be incorporated into the Glorious Empire of the Ozmans.

To the Kaimacham.

SInce the Death of King Lewis, all Men's Eyes and Hearts are fix'd upon the Dauphin; who, though he is very Young, yet is he a Prince of a forward Genius, and promiſing Aſpect, giving ſignal Proofs of a Martial Spirit.

One Day, ſeeing the Guards, as they were exerciſing their Arms, he diſcovered an extraordinary Complacency, and ſaid to thoſe that ſtood by; I had rather be a Souldier, than a King: Imagining, from the Softneſſes he is accuſtomed to in theſe Infant Years, that the Life of a Soldier, is incompatible with that of a King.

Since that Time, he haraſſes his Tutor and Attendants

Attendants, with perpetual Tattle about Guns and Swords. And, Cardinal Mazarini, not to baffle or check such Generous Inclinations, has cull'd out a Companion for him, agreeable in Temper, only a Year or Two elder.

These Young Sons of Mars; bestow their Time partly in shooting with little harmless Engines, made on purpose for the Dauphin's Recreation, in Imitation of Guns; sometimes with Bows and Arrows; at other Times, they fence with Files adapted to their tender Arms, and childish Skill. In these Kind of Exercises, the Dauphin grows a great Proficient; and it is look'd upon, as an Omen of his future Warlike Deeds.

A Spanish Astrologer, has calculated his Nativity. He Prophesies strange Things of this Young Prince; As, that he shall excel all his Royal Ancestors in Feats of Arms; That he shall make the Crown of France Imperial, having subdued Spain, Italy and Germany; That he shall shake the Ottoman Empire, but, in the End, shall be deposed by his own Subjects.

I know not what Credit may be given to the Professors of this Science, in regard the Ancient Rules of Astrology, on which the Chaldeans, and other Eastern Sages, grounded their Predictions, are now either wholly lost, or so corrupted and obscured by the Comments and Glosses of later Authors, that there are hardly any Footsteps of the Original Maxims to be trac'd. Yet, without troubling bling Astrologers, Prophets, or Wizards, one may presage from the Natural Genius of the Dauphin, that when he comes to feel his Strength, he will not be idle, but follow his Father's Steps, who, before he was Thirteen Years of Age, appear'd at the Head of Armies.

The Omnipotent guard our Glorious Sultan, and the Empire Established by his own Hands, and, may his Blessing descend on the Royal Offspring; that the Young Sultan Mahomet, may perform greater Things, than are propheſied of the French Dauphin.

LETTER XVII.

To the Vizir Azem, at the Port.

I Remember, I promiſed to send thee farther Advices of the War between Spain and Portugal, since the late Revolution in those Parts.

The Island of Tercera, was the only Place that held out against the New King, when all others, with Expressions of extraordinary Joy for their Deliverance from the Castilian Yoke, submitted to and acknowledg'd D. Juan de Braganza, as the Lawful Heir of that Crown.

The

The Resistance which the Governor of this Island made, obliged the King to send thither a certain Number of Ships of War, to block up the Place, and hinder the Importance of any Provisions. And, this course prov'd successful; for, though the Spaniards attempted several Times to relieve it, yet their Vessels were either taken by the Portuguese Fleet, or sent back again without doing their Errand. So that at length, Don Alvaro de Viveiros, the Governor, finding himself reduced to great Streights for want of Necessaries, without any Hopes of being relieved, was forced to Capitulate and Surrender.

The New King has made an Alliance with the Suedes, which is of no small Advantage to him; having thereby established a Commerce with that Country, and furnishing himself from thence with Powder, Horses, Arms and all other Provisions of War.

He has also made a Treaty with the Hollanders, but not with so good Success as the former. Thou hast heard what Possessions the Kings of Spain and Portugal have acquired in America, they being the first Discoverers of that New World. It happened, that about the Time of the late Revolution in Portugal, the Hollanders of Brasil took from the Portuguese the Towns of Angola, St. Thomas, Maragnon and other Places belonging to D. Juan de Braganza in those Parts. The Knowledge of this coming to the Portuguese Court, caused the King to send his Ambassador to demand of the States the Reason of this Breach.

They

They answer. It was done before the News of the Revolution had reached the West-Indies. This, with some Acts of Hostility in the Oriental Parts, has lessen'd the good Understanding which was between them.

In the mean Time, the Spight and Hatred of the Castilians, encreased daily; much Blood was spilt on the Frontiers of Portugal, which obliged D. Juan to establish Six Places of Strength, quartering in them an Army of Thirty Thousand Men. The Spaniards to oppose these Forces, had likewise Four or Five Armies in Castile. There were many Skirmishes and Encounters, Stratagems and Ambuscades on both Sides; and, it was hard to determine who had got the Advantage, till Fortune seem'd to favour the Cause of the Portugueze.

They had a Valiant and Expert Commander, who was Governour of one of their Frontier Provinces; His Name is, Fernand Telles de Menezez. This Hero animated by the Justice of his Cause, and spurr'd on by the Natural Ardour of his Spirit, pierc'd into the Bowels of Old Castile, took the Towns of St. Martin and Elge, demolishing the Castle belonging to the latter, which also commanded all the Country thereabouts; and, being encounter'd by Two Thousand Five Hundred Spaniards, he fell upon them and cut them all in Pieces. He also render'd himself Master of a strong Place call'd Valverde, which he stor'd with all sorts of Ammunition, and left a Portugueze Garrison in it.

They

They were no leſs Victorious in another Province, from whence the Portugueze Armies ruſh'd into the Adjacent Territories of Spain, taking the Towns of Arocbes, Villar de Rey, Codicere, Anzinaſola, and other Places of Note, without any Reſiſtance, ſave that of a few Caſtilian Troops, moſt of which they took Priſoners, with a Booty of three Hundred Spaniſh Gennets. After this, they took Chelles by Storm, one of the moſt conſiderable Towns in that Part of Spain. Nor was the King of Portugal only thus ſucceeſsful near Home, but his Affairs proſper'd alſo abroad. The Kings of Goa and Maroc ſought his Alliance, with other Princes in the Eaſt-Indies; and, in General, all the Potentates in Chriſtendom, excepting only Spain, made Friendſhip with D. Juan de Braganza, and eſpouſed his Intereſts.

There has been a General Aſſembly of all the Eſtates of Portugal; wherein, the People have teſtified their Joy and Satisfaction in their New King, by offering him, together with their Lives, the Diſpoſal of their Fortunes, to be imployed for the Service of the Crown, and the Releaſe of his Royal Brother Dom Duartus, of whom I formerly made Mention in one of my Letters.

Thou wilt not perhaps think me troubleſome, if I relate to thee how the Spaniards uſed this unfortunate Prince after they had Impriſon'd him: Neither is it altogether impertinent, to let thee ſee, how ſpighteful this Nation is in their Revenges, and now Cruel in the Execution of their Reſentments.

After Dom Duartus was delivered into the Hands of the Marquiss Castel Rodrigo, the Spaniards gave him not the Entertainment and Respect due to a Prince, but used him like a Slave or Malefactor, causing him to be lodged in a mean dark Chamber, his Hands to be chained every Night, his Robes to be taken from him, none of his Domesticks suffered to come near him, and doing all the Indignities to him that their Malice could suggest, as proper means to render his Imprisonment intolerable, and his Life a Burden. If thou askest me, for what Crime it was they thus punished him, I can tell thee of none, unless it were one, to be so nearly related to the King of Portugal.

But, this is not the only Example of the Spanish Cruelty; they executed their Revenge on poor unarm'd Peasants in the Field; the Duke d' Alva causing Three Hundred Portuguize Husbandmen, as they were labouring in the Vineyards, to be murdered in cold Blood, sacrificing them, as he said, to the Ghosts of the slaughter'd Castilians. And, it was attributed to their under-hand Insinuations, that four Portuguize Ambassadors, with Three and Fifty of their Train, were barbarously put to Death by the Japoneses, against the Law of Nature, and the Sanction of all Nations. Such Violences have never been practis'd in the Ottoman Empire; the Sanctuary of the Earth, has not been profan'd by an Injustice of so deep a Die.

There has been lately discover'd, a Second Conspiracy against Dom Juan de Braganza, wherein were concerned Dom Joseph de Mene- zez,

zez, Governour of St. Julien, the moſt Important Fortreſs of all the Kingdom, and Dom Franciſco de Lucena, Secretary of State. Theſe held a private Correſpondence with the Duke d' Olivarez; and, it was agreed between them, that the Governour of Badaioz, a Subject of the King of Spain, ſhould be put in Poſſeſſion of St. Julien's Fort, which is the very Key of Lisbon, and that other Places of Strength ſhould be delivered up to ſuch Spaniſh Officers as Olivarez appointed. But, a Letter which was ſent from Dom Juan de Garay, Governour of Badaioz, to the Governour of St. Lucies-Fort in Portugal, being by Miſtake carried to the Hands of the Count d' Obidos, a Portugueze General, and a faithful Friend to the King, diſcovered the Intrigue, and the Traytors were ſeized and brought to Condign Puniſhment.

I cannot at preſent ſend thee any more News of the Portugueze Affairs. God grant thee a long and happy Life in the Favour of the Grand Signior.

LETTER XVIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

THOU wilt wonder when I tell thee, I am melancholy for want of Solitude. That which adminiſters Occaſion of Sadneſs to others, is the only Cure of my Grief. Yet, this will not ſeem a Paradox, when thou conſidereſt, that Converſation is the Air of the Soul, and that he who values the Health and Eaſe of his Mind, ought to chuſe ſuch an Element for it to breathe in, as is pure and ſerene, which is very Difficult to find in any Society. This is the Reaſon, that I never think my ſelf more alone, than when I am confin'd to ſome Kind of Company.

Thou haſt obſerved, that moſt Men will engroſs all the Talk to themſelves; this is very Irkſom. Yet, I ſhould not grudge them the Monopoly, were their Diſcourſe pertinent and agreeable; but, to be forc'd to hearken to all their empty Tattle of Hawks and Hounds, Garbs and Faſhions, with an endleſs Jargon of Things leſs to the Purpoſe than the former, which will keep their Tongues employ'd ſometimes two or three Hours together; renders their Converſe more troubleſome, than that of the Spark, who pick'd up Horace in the Streets of Rome.

Others are of a quite contrary Humour; and, thou mayſt as ſoon get a Word from the the Mufti, as from them. They ſit like Statues, as if they emulated the Character of Griuli Eben Sagran, one of the Vizirs of the Bench, who in ten Years that he had ſat in the Divan, was never obſerved to ſpeak a Syllable.

Yet, this ſort is more tolerable than the other, who with their Everlaſting Chat, rock the Company aſleep, and take from them the very Power of Thinking.

However, I prefer the Retirement of my Chamber, to both theſe Inconveniences. There I can enter into my ſelf, and by retreating from all Commerce with my Senſes, I find a private Back Way to converſe with the whole Univerſe. Think not this a Chimæra, or that Mahmut pretends to extraordinary Illuminations; 'tis nothing but what every Man may experience, who will but take the Pains to be throughly acquainted with Himſelf. If he can but gain a familiar Acceſs to the inward Apartments of his own Breaſt, he will ſoon find a Poſtern there, which will readily open and let him into the moſt retired Cloſets of Nature. From thence he may ſally forth, and take a better Survey of the World, than he can by his Eyes. Here he will behold all Things undiſguiſed, and in their true Quantities and Qualities. And, which is more admirable, he will be able, without the Help of Opticks, to ſee himſelf enjoying this Felicity, and to know that he ſees it, which is a ſufficient Conviction, that he is not in a Dream.

Wouldſt thou improve thy Knowledge, affect not a Multitude of Books; there are but few worth the Reading. What is the whole Creation, but one Great Library, every Volume in which, and every Page in those Volumes, are impress'd with Radiant Characters of infinite Wisdom? And, all the Perfections of the Universe, are contracted with such unimitable Art in Man, that he needs no other Book but himself, to make him a complete Philosopher. Thou wilt say, that this requires too great an Abstractedness of Mind, and is very painful. I tell thee, my dear Friend, I am extremely subject to Melancholy; whose Effect, thou knowest, is to render one very thoughtful, and those Thoughts rack the Soul with intolerable Anguish. Yet I do not fly from them, as generally Men are accustomed, neither do I seek to drown them in Wine, or chase them away with any Sociable Divertisements. My usual Way is, to bid them Battel, oppose Thoughts against Thoughts; and, with the Dint of Reason, to subdue this peevish Humour. To this End, I hunt up and down for my Enemy, and rummage every Corner of my Soul, pursuing the Cause of my Sadness, with such Arguments as these: Why should I be melancholy, who possess Nothing that I fear to lose, and yet enjoy all that I could wish for, were I without what I now Possess? I am a Mussulman, and therefore under the Protection of God: I serve his Vicegerent, the Grand Signior, faithfully, and find Acceptance with the Bassa's of the Port: I am in France, yet cannot call it a Foreign Country, ſince Innocence and Vertue naturalize a Man in all Parts of the World. I cannot ſay I am unfortunate, ſo long as I have no Vice, for which I need either to Blush, or grow Pale. If I am ſlander'd, this ought to be an Occaſion of Joy, ſince it ranks me with Men of the Greateſt Merit, who could never eſcape the Calumnies of the Envious. And, I have reaſon to Triumph, in that I find no Inclination to revenge my ſelf, but rather to pity my Traducers. If any Man ſhould play the Satyriſt with my Deformity, and rudely deſcant on my Ugly Countenance, or the Diſproportion of my Limbs; there is no more Reaſon to be grieved at this, than to be affronted at the Wind for blowing off my Hat, or the Rain for wetting my Cloaths, or a Dog for barking at me as I go along the Streets, the one being as Natural as the other.

Thus I argue with my-ſelf, Dear Oglou, when aſſaulted with Melancholy; theſe are the Remedies which I apply to that black Diſtemper of the Mind: And ſometimes I go farther, if theſe will do no good: I then ask my ſelf, whether it be the fear of Death that thus perplexes me? And here begins my Cure. This kindles the Brighteſt Spark of Reaſon, which in a Moment diſperſes all the Miſts. The diſmal Pageantry of Chimera's vaniſhes, and all the Tragick Pomp of Grief ſtreight diſappears. Not, that I would have thee think I am fond of dying, but I conſider Death as the unavoidable Fate of all Men; and, that therefore it is reasonable to be chearful, since that which no Man can escape, will one Time or other, release me and every Man from the Miseries of this Life. This Thought recovers me from the worst Effects of Melancholy; and, I believe, the Damned themselves would sometimes be in a good Humour, if they had but the least Glimpse of Hope, that they should one Day be deliver'd from their Torments. For, whatsoever sorts of Men there are in this Life, I cannot think, there be any Stoicks in Hell.

And now I have entertained thee with Company and Solitude, with Books and Men, with Life and Death, with Earth and Hell; let us take one Step farther, and refresh our selves with the Remembrance of Heaven, the Joys of the Bless'd in Paradise; which, certainly is the best Relief of Anxious Thoughts, the most perfect Cure of Melancholy, the Guide of Life, and the Comfort of Death.

God grant, that thou and I may see each other, and drink together in the Arbours of Eden, and kiss the Daughters of Paradise.

LETTER XIX.

To the Testerdar, or Lord Treasurer.

Kingdoms and Empires (like Men) have their Lucky and Unlucky Seasons. Spain seems for a considerable Time to have been under a Cloud, as if her Guardian Fate began to droop, and were not strong enough to check the rising Grandure of France.

It has been an old Observation, That those whom God consigns over to Ruine, he first infatuates. It was a Grand Oversight in Don Francisco de Melo, to constitute the Duke of Alburquerque, General of his Horse. For, he thereby so disgusted the Spanish Officers in his Army, that emulating the Honour of this young Portuguese, the greatest Part of them deserted, in the very Nick of Time, when their Presence was most necessary to confirm the Battalions, already shrinking from the furious Onset of the French.

This gave the young Duke of Anguien, an intire Victory, and has crowned him with glorious Laurels; while Don Francisco de Melo, by this ill Conduct, has quite lost his Reputation, and is forced to resign up his Commission to another.

This Battel was fought before Rocroy, and may be reckoned as a Parallel with that Bloody Battel of Leipsick, between the Imperialists and Swedes, on the 7th. of the 9th.

Moon, of the Year 1631. A Day which was remarkable at Constantinople, on the Account of that terrible Lightning, which surprized the late Sultan Amurath in his Bed. Many other extraordinary Events signalized this Day in England, France, Germany, and other places, which occasioned the great Astrologer Herlicius, to call it, a Day of Blood.

Such another was this Unfortunate Day to the Spaniards, at the forementioned Battel of Rocroy; where they lost an infinite Number of Men, with all their Field-pieces and a Hundred and Fifty Colours.

He that created the Moon and the Constellations in Heaven, to distinguish the Times and Seasons, guard thee from the Influence of Malignant Stars, and from the Destroyer, who ranges the World on certain Critical Days.

Paris, 12th. of the 9th. Moon, of the Year 1643.

LETTER XX.

To the Vizir Azem, at the Port.

IT is Time, it is high time, most Sage Minister, for the Ottoman Sword, the Sword of Justice to be unsheathed, not against an open Enemy, but against its professed Friends and Subjects. The Head of the Bassa of Cyprus, is become a Burden to him; as likewise, those of Mitylene, Scio and Lemnos. They plot Mischief against the Throne that is established in Equity; they are ungrateful to their Sovereign, who hath exalted them; they are become unworthy of the Honours, with which they are dignified.

I could hardly believe the first Reports of this Treason, till I were at length fully convinced by undeniable Testimonies, that it was too true.

Yet, it is a Secret even in the French Court. I alone have discover'd this Mystery, by the Means of a Jew and a Grecian, both my Agents in those Parts, and Men whom I can confide in.

The Business is this. The Bassa's and Governours of the Isles before-mentioned, have conspired together to divide themselves from the Body of the Ottoman Empire, and to make the Islands of the Ægean Sea, a Commonwealth Independent on the Throne which governs the World. The Bassa of Cyprus, is the Ringleader of this Conspiracy, and that Island is to be the Capital Seat of their New Republick.

leader

The Governours of the Five Greater Isles, are to be called, the Sovereign Counsellors of State. By these, all the Affairs of the Archipelago are to be managed. Only the Bassa of Cyprus shall be supreme, and have the casting Voice in all Cases of Dispute.

The enclosed Papers, contain the perfect Model of their New Government, the Articles and Propositions on which this Rebellious designed Commonwealth is to be built, with the Names of the Chief Conspirators subscribed.

Permit me, Sage Minister, to set before thy Eyes, the Occasions of these Treacherous Designs.

It has been the Custom of the Port, to connive for a considerable time at the Oppressions, Rapines, and Exactions of the Bassa's and Governours of Provinces; to suffer them to haras the People under their Jurisdiction; to pillage and spoil them of their Moneys, Goods and Estates, till they have amass'd together vast Sums of Money. And then, it has been as usual for the Sultans, upon the least Complaint, to send the Bow-String to the Criminal Bassa.

Whatever may be pleaded in Defence of this Method in former Times, my Opinion is, that it may prove dangerous now. And, if I may be permitted to speak freely, I have Reason to think, that this was one Ground of the designed Treason in the Isles of the Ægean Sea.

Formerly,

Formerly, those who were removed to these Commands, were not so well versed in the Maxims of Policy, nor so apprehensive of the Cabinet Secrets of State. But now the Aga is refined, Men are more subtle, jealous and selfish than they were. Nature teaches all Men to preserve their Lives with utmost Diligence.

The Bassa of Cyprus, who is the Ring-leader of this Conspiracy, has been let alone in a long Course of Tyranny and Oppression over his Subjects; by which means, he has heap'd to himself prodigious Treasures. His guilty Mind told him, that Complaints would be made against him, and that one time or other he must be strangled. He knew, that his Gold would be thought better to become the Sultan's Seraglio than his own; and, that he had been long enough in his Office, to serve the Politick Ends of State.

Revolving these things in his Mind, he quickly concluded, that the Crimes he had been guilty of in his Government, would draw upon him inevitable Ruine, unless he prevented it by committing greater. And that, as Oppression of his Subjects had made him Rich, so Treason against his Sovereign must make him Safe. He communicates his thoughts to some of his trusty Friends and Confidents. They encourage him to proceed, representing to him the Natural Strength of the Island, seconded by Abundance of strong Forts and Castles. That the Soldiers might easily be won to his Party by Money, and the Inhabitants might might be pacified by some Publick Restitutions, and other Acts of Indulgence.

Thus was the Foundation laid of this formidable Treason, which soon gathered Strength by the Accession of more Conspirators, till at length all the Isles aforesaid were engaged in the Disloyal League.

I will not presume to dictate what is to be done in this Case. I leave that to thy Oraculous Sentence. But, permit me to suggest my Thoughts, of a proper means to prevent the like Miscarriages for the future. And that is by executing timely and Impartial Justice. It seems to me, not only a Reflection on the Justice of the Imperial Sword, but also on the Politicks of the Royal Cabinet, to suffer a Bussa to grow Rich by Oppression of the People under his Command. For, when he has thus plunder'd his Subjects to fill his own Coffers, he has armed himself with the very Sinews and Nerves of Rebellion; Money being that, which gives Life and Motion to all great and bold Undertakings.

Therefore, it will be better, not to countenance the least Oppression in these Great Men, whereby they may at once be tempted, through the Conscientiousness of their Crimes, and strengthen'd by their ill gotten Wealth, to Rebel against their Lawful Sovereign. Let Aleppo, Sidon, Algiers, Tunis and Tripoly, be Precedents of this Kind. By Justice the Throne is best and most securely established: nothing unjust and violent is permanent.

God overthrow the Devices of these Trayttors,

tors, and crown our Glorious Sultan with Success.

Paris, 26th. of the 9th. Moon, of the Year 1643.

LETTER XXI.

To Chiurgi Muhammet Bassa.

I Have been in this City very near Six Years, and it will be expected, that in all this Time I have made some profitable Remarks, on the Nature of the French, the Intrigues of the Court, the Policy of the State, the Discipline of their Armies, and the Strength of the Kingdom.

Some Observations I have already communicated to the Ministers of the Divan, and to others of my Friends at the Sublime Port. All my Letters are made common to the Happy Slaves of him who rules the World. Thou hast heard of the Death of a Potent King, a Great Queen, and a Mighty Favourite: Now let us change the Scene, and pass from the Melancholy Themes of Death, the Unavoidable Fate of Mortals, to the sprightly Joys of Life, the blooming Years of an Infant King, who takes an early Leap from his Cradle to a Throne. Thou wilt not expect I should speak much of him, who as yet can say but little of himself.

himself. However, in passing by this Little Great one, it would be ill Manners not to pay him a Salute or Congè; who, though Young, seems no Novice in Punctilio's of Courtship, as appears by his Address to the Bishop who Baptized him; (if thou knowest not what that means, it is the first Ceremony whereby they are made Christians, and, it answers to our Circumcision.) As soon as the Mystery was performed, this Young Prince, with an assured Countenance, and becoming Gravity, spoke thus to the Prelate: My Father, I humbly thank you, and shall be eternally obliged to you: My Parents gave me only an Earthly Crown, but you have made me Heir of the Kingdom of Heaven.

There were present, the Queen, the Princess of Conde, Cardinal Mazarini, with Divers other Persons of Quality. The whole Assembly were astonish'd at the Child's Expression (being but about Four Years of Age;) taking it for an Omen of his Future Piety and extraordinary Actions. He discovers a prompt Wit in all his Discourse, using but few Words, and those very apposite. His whole Deportment is graceful, and surprizingly regular; attended with a Discretion, which is not look'd for, but from those of Riper Years. In fine, Nature seems to have fitted him for the Empire to which he is born.

In the mean Time, as if Infant Governours were now become fashionable, there are several made Bishops and Abbots, while they are yet in the Cradle. This the Inferior Cler- gy ſtomach, and the Laity grumble, ſaying, That there are like to be good Times in France, when thoſe who are ſtyled the Fathers of the Church are Babies. This is Cardinal Mazarini's Policy, to faſten the Nobility to the Intereſts of the Crown, by thus honouring their Children with the Principal Dignities of the Church. And, thou wilt ſay, he is a Wiſe Man in ſo doing, when thou conſidereſt, how great a ſhare the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticks have, in the Wealth of the Land. And that he could not do the King a better Service, than by diſpoſing of theſe Preferments, to ſuch as would not only thereby be obliged to Loyalty themſelves, but would alſo link the Families to which they belong, to the Royal Cauſe.

Thou wilt better comprehend the Policy of this Miniſter, in thus endeavouring to ſecure the Dignified Clergy, when thou weigheſt their Strength, and conſidereſt their Numbers.

There are in France 12 Archbiſhopricks, 104 Biſhopricks, Convents of the Greater Order 540, Convents of the Leſſer Order 12320, Abbies 1450, Nunneries 67; 700 Friaries, 259 Seminaries of the Order of the Knights of Malta, 27400 Pariſh-Churches, Hoſpitals 540, Private Chapels or Oratories 9000. To fill all theſe, they reckon 226000 Religious, or Derviſes, beſides 130000 Pariſh-Prieſts.

It has been uſual, to take an Eſtimate of the Glory and Riches of a Prince, from the Number of his People, but, I would not have thee think the French King the Wealthier, for this Prodigious Number of Devotees; The greateſt part of which, he has more reaſon to look upon, as an Army of Enemies, than Subjects. Indeed, the Intereſt of the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops and Pariſh Prieſts, is twiſted with that of the Crown; but, the Monks and Friars are the Creatures of the Pope, and all of them together are not maintained with leſs Coſt, than the Fourth Part of the Revenues of France, out of which in former Times, there went Yearly a Million of Crowns to the Court of Rome.

for

I cannot perceive, wherein conſiſts the Policy of cheriſhing ſo many Neſts of Spiritual Leeches, who ſuck the very Blood and Vitals of the Nation: One would think, it were ſufficiently dreined by the Royal Cuſtoms, Taxes and Impoſts.

Theſe Kings have Monopoliz'd all the Salt of the Kingdom into their own Hands, which they compel their Subjects to buy of them at their own Rates. To this End, they have Officers in all Parts, who vend it for them. It looks, as if they took care to preſerve their Subjects from Corruption, and were afraid, leſt they ſhould putrefie alive; there being not a Man in all their Dominions, who is not obliged to take the Quantity which the Officers Impoſe on him, except in ſome particular Provinces, which for reaſons of State, or by Treaty, are exempted. The Revenue which ariſes to the King from this Commodity, amounts to near Three Millions of Crowns Yearly. He hath Eight Millions more coming coming in by Subsidies, from the Peasants; besides many particular Imposts on Flesh, Wine and other Commodities. Yet, he loses a considerable Part of his Revenues, by Farming them out to his Subjects, or Mortgaging them in Time of War for ready Money. He has no less than Thirty Thousand Officers, that are wholly employed in collecting his Revenues, whose Pensions and Salaries lessen the King's Income by above half; so that, out of Fourscore Millions of Crowns, which are Yearly squeez'd from the People, scarce Thirty Millions come entire into the King's Coffers.

Thou wilt wonder at the Improvidence of these Infidel Kings, and at the same time condemn their Tyranny and Injustice, who oppress, plunder and ruine those that furnish them with all Necessaries for Humane Sustenance, to enrich (not themselves, but) a Company of greedy Caterpillars; for, such, and no better, are those who gather their Revenues. It is not so in the Sacred Empire of the Ozmans, where Justice has erected her Throne, and Oppression dares not shew her Face.

But, the French seem born for Slavery, they bear it so patiently, without ever aspiring after a Redemption. The Christians exclaim against our Janizaries, accusing them of Insolence, Oppression, Rapine, and all the Vices to which a Licentious Souldiery are usually addicted; but, these are Trifles, to what the French Dragoons commit, when quarter'd upon the poor Country-people: they Rob them of all they have, practising a Thousand villainies, to which the Janizaries are wholly Strangers; Adulteries pass for Gallantry with them, and Rapes are counted but the Excesses of an Immoderate Passion; the Husband must stand quietly, whilst his Wife is in the Arms of a Domineering Hector; the Father must behold his Daughter deflowr'd, without discovering the least Regret. These are the Methods by which this People are mortified, and they seem to be stupid under their Calamities, not having Courage enough left to meditate a Redress, unless it be by becoming Soldiers themselves; for, of such as these, is the Infantry of France composed. Hence, it is not to be admired, that they are esteemed the feebleſt, baſeſt and moſt deſpicable Soldiers of any in Europe; ſince, not the purſuit of Honour, nor Love to their Country, induces them to take up Arms, but deſpair of living otherwiſe, being reduced to the moſt rigorous Extremities on this ſide Famine.

Live thou in the Honour with which God and our Emperour have inveſted thee, and conſerve thy Vertue; which will raiſe thee yet Higher. Forget not to have Mahmut ſometimes in thy Thoughts, who loves thee with a true Heart, and ſerves thee with Alacrity.

LETTER XXII.

To Egry Boinou, a White Eunuch.

THE French Kings ſteer their Courſe by other Maxims of Policy, than thoſe which are practis'd at the Sublime Port. It ſeems, they are not apprehenſive of any Ambitious Deſigns in the Princes of the Blood; ſince, they not only allow them Liberty, but alſo load them with Honours.

Thou haſt formerly heard me ſpeak of Henry the IV. this King's Grandfather, and of the paſſionate Love he bore to Ladies. Among the Reſt of his Miſtreſſes, none poſſeſs'd a larger ſhare of his Affections, than the Dutcheſs of Beaufort; by her he had two Sons, the Eldeſt is called Alexander, the other, Ceſar. They are both now Living, and enjoy Great Preferments; the Firſt, being made Grand Prior of the French Knights of Malta, which is a Dignity next to that of Maſter of the Order, who commands the whole Iſland. It is obſervable, that this Alexander, during his Father's Life-Time, had attained no higher than to be made a Knight; but, as ſoon as his Brother Lewis XIII, came to the Crown, he procured him the Honour he now has. The Second Brother alſo, is made Governour of Bretaigne, and married to the Duke of Mercœur's Daughter. By which means, he is become one of the Richeſt Peers in France.

King

King Henry had also two other Sons, one of his own Name, whom he got on the Marchioness of Verneville; He is now a Bishop and Abbot, which are considerable Dignities in the Church. The other Son they call Antoine, whose Mother was the Countess of Morret. He also is invested with the like Ecclesiastical Honours as his Brother Henry. These Four Brothers, though by the French esteem'd as Bastards (because born of the Kings Concubines) are nevertheless intrusted with the Offices and Preferments already mention'd, without any Jealousie that they will be guilty of sinister Practices to embroil the State, or gain the Crown. And, if I may speak freely, there seems to be more of Humanity and Justice in this Course, than in that cruel Custom of our Sultans, who no sooner ascend the Throne, but all their Brethren are immediately Sacrific'd to their Suspicion and the Ends of State; or, if they chance to escape the Bow-String, are detain'd their whole Lifetime in a close Imprisonment, which is worse than Death.

Lewis XIII. has also left another Brother behind him, born of the same Mother as himself. They call him, the Duke of Orleans; a Man of a daring Spirit, and great Resolution. He is but newly come to the Court, having been banished for some Enterprises against his Brother.

It was the Opinion of the French, that this Prince would have a share in the Regency; but, Lewis would by no Means consent to it, to the Prejudice of his Queen, whom he left entirely poſſeſs'd of the Sovereign Power, till the Young King comes of Age. However, as yet, ſhe holds a ſeeming Correſpondence with the Duke of Orleans, and the Prince of Conde; by whoſe Mediations, ſeveral Grandees, who were Priſoners of State, are now releaſed, and make their Appearance at the Court.

to

From hence thou may'ſt gather, that Things are not managed here with ſuch Rigour and Severity, as at Conſtantinople, where the Commands of our Invincible Emperours are impetuous, and Execution ſwift.

There is a Biſhop to whom the Queen-Regent ſeems to be inclined. He has the Character of a very good Man, but they ſay, he is too ſimply Honeſt for a Courtier, and that Cardinal Mazarini will over-reach him. However, that Prelate has the Queen's Ear at Preſent, and his Creatures extol him for a Man of great Abilities. 'Tis ſaid, the Queen has writ to the Pope, deſiring a Cardinal's Hat for him: And ſome whiſper, that he will be made the Prime Miniſter, in the Room of Mazarini. To ſpeak my Sentiment, I wiſh he were; for there ſeems not ſo much Reaſon to apprehend from his Counſels any notable Deſign againſt the Ottoman Port, as from thoſe of the Cardinal, whom I look upon as a Second Richlieu. Here are ſeveral Intereſts on Foot; the whole Court is divided into Factions, ſtriving to undermine and ſupplant each other.

Bassa's are but the Sultan's Slaves. The Princes of France, are equal to some Sovereign Kings; and upon the least Grudge, will raise Armies, and give the King Battel, if he does not come to their Terms, and make a satisfactory Composition. Neither dares the King put any of them to Death, for fear of the People, who generally take their Part, being greedy of Novelties and prone to rebel.

Wouldst thou know, by what Means the Nobility of France arrive to such a dangerous Power? I tell thee, in a Word, the Kings themselves have put a Sword into their Hands, which they spare not to draw, when their Ambition or Discontent prompts them to it. They are freed from all Tribute and Homage; have the Command of whole Provinces committed to them, in which are great Numbers of Walled Towns, Forts and Castles. These great Charges, procure them the Esteem and Veneration of the People living under their Government; who honour them as Kings, and readily take up Arms in their Vindication.

The Queen-Regent is fearful, lest they should take Advantage of her Son's Minority; and, under Pretence of Reforming the State, or serving the King's Interest, they should involve the Kingdom in Civil Wars. She keeps a strict Watch over the Duke of Orleans, and observes the Prince of Conde's Motions: Her Guards are doubled, and she neglects nothing that may assure the Interests of the Crown.

Thou, who standest by the Silent Fountain, and art near the Person of the Grand Signior, think think of doing Mahmut some good Office, who loves cordially, serves faithfully, and prays fervently for the Health and Long Life of our Glorious Sultan, and wishes thee thy Fill of Happiness.

Paris, 27th. of the 10th. Moon,
of the Year 1643.

LETTER XXIII.

To the Captain Bassa.

HERE are arrived several Hundreds of Slaves, who have Manumitted themselves by a Bold Adventure; an Exploit, which, to give them their due, has something in it of Bravery. The Place of their Captivity, was Alexandria; thou knowest the Circumstances of that Haven: What Hazards will not the desire of Liberty put Men upon? There were several Thousands of Franks in the City, whom the Restraint and Rigors of Servitude, had made weary of their Lives. Among the rest, a Native of Boulac, who having been bred up in the Art of distilling Strong Water, his Patron hired him a Shop, furnishing him with all Materials and Necessaries to prosecute his Calling, in hopes of very profitable Returns. To this Man's Shop, there was a great Resort of all the Franks in the City, by for this Prodigious Number of Devotees; The greatest part of which, he has more reason to look upon, as an Army of Enemies, than Subjects. Indeed, the Interest of the Arch-Bishops, Bishops and Parish Priests, is twisted with that of the Crown; but, the Monks and Friars are the Creatures of the Pope, and all of them together are not maintained with less Cost, than the Fourth Part of the Revenues of France, out of which in former Times, there went Yearly a Million of Crowns to the Court of Rome.

The Second Brother alſo, is made Governour of Bretaigne, and married to the Duke of Mercœur's Daughter. By which means, he is become one of the Richeſt Peers in France.

King

King Henry had also two other Sons, one of his own Name, whom he got on the Marchioness of Verneville; He is now a Bishop and Abbot, which are considerable Dignities in the Church. The other Son they call Antoine, whose Mother was the Countess of Morret. He also is invested with the like Ecclesiastical Honours as his Brother Henry. These Four Brothers, though by the French esteem'd as Bastards (because born of the Kings Concubines) are nevertheless intrusted with the Offices and Preferments already mention'd, without any Jealousie that they will be guilty of sinister Practices to embroil the State, or gain the Crown. And, if I may speak freely, there seems to be more of Humanity and Justice in this Course, than in that cruel Custom of our Sultans, who no sooner ascend the Throne, but all their Brethren are immediately Sacrific'd to their Suspicion and the Ends of State; or, if they chance to escape the Bow-String, are detain'd their whole Lifetime in a close Imprisonment, which is worse than Death.

Lewis XIII. has also left another Brother behind him, born of the same Mother as himself. They call him, the Duke of Orleans; a Man of a daring Spirit, and great Resolution. He is but newly come to the Court, having been banished for some Enterprises against his Brother.

It was the Opinion of the French, that this Prince would have a share in the Regency; but, Lewis would by no Means consent to it, to the Prejudice of his Queen, whom he left entirely poſſeſs'd of the Soveraign Power, till the Young King comes of Age. However, as yet, ſhe holds a ſeeming Correſpondence with the Duke of Orleans, and the Prince of Conde; by whoſe Mediations, ſeveral Grandees, who were Priſoners of State, are now releaſed, and make their Appearance at the Court.

to

From hence thou may'ſt gather, that Things are not managed here with ſuch Rigour and Severity, as at Conſtantinople, where the Commands of our Invincible Emperours are impetuous, and Execution ſwift.

There is a Biſhop to whom the Queen-Regent ſeems to be inclined. He has the Character of a very good Man, but they ſay, he is too ſimply Honeſt for a Courtier, and that Cardinal Mazarini will over-reach him. However, that Prelate has the Queen's Ear at Preſent, and his Creatures extol him for a Man of great Abilities. 'Tis ſaid, the Queen has writ to the Pope, deſiring a Cardinal's Hat for him: And ſome whiſper, that he will be made the Prime Miniſter, in the Room of Mazarini. To ſpeak my Sentiment, I wiſh he were; for there ſeems not ſo much Reaſon to apprehend from his Counſels any notable Deſign againſt the Ottoman Port, as from thoſe of the Cardinal, whom I look upon as a Second Richlieu. Here are ſeveral Intereſts on Foot; the whole Court is divided into Factions, ſtriving to undermine and ſupplant each other.

Bassa's are but the Sultan's Slaves. The Princes of France, are equal to some Soveraign Kings; and upon the least Grudge, will raise Armies, and give the King Battel, if he does not come to their Terms, and make a satisfactory Composition. Neither dares the King put any of them to Death, for fear of the People, who generally take their Part, being greedy of Novelties and prone to rebel.

Wouldst thou know, by what Means the Nobility of France arrive to such a dangerous Power? I tell thee, in a Word, the Kings themselves have put a Sword into their Hands, which they spare not to draw, when their Ambition or Discontent prompts them to it. They are freed from all Tribute and Homage; have the Command of whole Provinces committed to them, in which are great Numbers of Walled Towns, Forts and Castles. These great Charges, procure them the Esteem and Veneration of the People living under their Government; who honour them as Kings, and readily take up Arms in their Vindication.

The Queen-Regent is fearful, lest they should take Advantage of her Son's Minority; and, under Pretence of Reforming the State, or serving the King's Interest, they should involve the Kingdom in Civil Wars. She keeps a strict Watch over the Duke of Orleans, and observes the Prince of Conde's Motions: Her Guards are doubled, and she neglects nothing that may assure the Interests of the Crown.

Thou, who standest by the Silent Fountain, and art near the Person of the Grand Signior,

think of doing Mahmut some good Office, who loves cordially, serves faithfully, and prays fervently for the Health and Long Life of our Glorious Sultan, and wishes thee thy Fill of Happiness.

LETTER XXIII.

To the Captain Bassa.

HERE are arrived several Hundreds of Slaves, who have Manumitted themselves by a Bold Adventure; an Exploit, which, to give them their due, has something in it of Bravery. The Place of their Captivity, was Alexandria; thou knowest the Circumstances of that Haven: What Hazards will not the desire of Liberty put Men upon? There were several Thousands of Franks in the City, whom the Restraint and Rigors of Servitude, had made weary of their Lives. Among the rest, a Native of Brabant, who having been bred up in the Art of distilling Strong Waters, his Patron hired him a Shop, furnishing him with all Materials and Necessaries to prosecute his Calling, in hopes of very profitable Returns and To this Man's Shop, there was a great Resort of all the Franks in the City, by which Means he improv'd his Trade, and thriv'd mightily. He was a Bold Fellow, and took a particular Pride in great Attempts; and though he might have lived very happily, and enrich'd himself by his own Occupation, yet he had another sort of Chymistry to practise; being resolved, to draw his Fellow-Slaves, (who were now become his Customers) off from the Lees of Despair, and elevate them to a Resolution of seeking their Freedom. He often harangu'd them on this Subject, and a strict Intelligence was held between all the European Slaves in that City. At length, it was agreed amongst them, to seize a certain Vessel, that lay in the Harbour, and commit themselves to the Winds and Waves. This was carried on with so much secrecy, and so dextrous a Conduct, that unsuspected, above two Thousand of them got aboard, and put to Sea. The Wind favouring them, they first arrived at Candia, where they Landed some Hundreds of their Crew; after this, they touch'd at Malta, where they disposed of others; then at Livorno in Italy; and lastly, came safe to Monsenisa, where the Remainder came ashore. These are Natives of France, England, Scotland, and Holland, with Two Spanish Priests.

The Inhabitants of Paris, are very Charitable to them, especially the Merchants, who traffick in the Levant, of which there are great Numbers in this City. The Clergy also, have made a Collection for them; and, 'tis said, the Queen Regent has ordered her Minister to distribute three Thousand Crowns among them. The Jesuits rail bitterly against the Mussulman, curſing our Holy Prophet, and thanking their good Stars, for thus fortunately redeeming them from an Inſupportable Slavery. I cannot ſee, wherein they merit Blame in all this; it being Natural for all Men, to covet Liberty, and to rejoice when they have eſcaped any Misfortune. I proteſt, I cannot be angry with them in my Heart for any Thing, but the Blaſphemies they vomit againſt the Meſſenger of God. The reſt, are Actions as Natural, as to Eat and Drink. Self-Preſervation being common to all Animals, there ſeems as much Reaſon to condemn a Bird that chirps and triumphs, when ſhe feels her ſelf upon the Wing, ranging the Balmy Air, being newly releaſed from the Cage; as, to find fault with theſe Fellows, for rejoicing that they have eſcaped the Confinement and Hardſhips of Captivity.

However, it was an unpardonable Neglect of the Guards who belong to that City, to ſuffer theſe Infidels thus to give them the ſlip. So culpable a Remiſneſs, may coſt ſome of them their Heads.

The Great God, whoſe Power is manifeſted in the Ocean as well as on the dry Land, furniſh thee with as favourable Winds as theſe Fugitives had, when thou ſaileſt to execute the Orders of the Grand Signior.

LETTER XXIV.

To Mustapha Guir, an Eunuch Page.

THIS Court has within these Three Days put on another Face, than it had ever since the Royal Obsequies were perform'd. One would hardly think it the same, were it not for the Mourning they still wear, on the account of the late King's Death. This is a Formality used all over Christendom in such Cases, and serves for a Disguise to Hypocrites. The French Grandees, make use of it to mask their several Political Designs. They wear Black, the Emblem of Sadness, to denote their Grief for the Dead Monarch, and yet they feast and revel, to the end they may send more of the Royal Blood after him. The Matter I am going to inform thee of, is Tragical in it self; and had been worse, but for the Prevention of Providence.

Three Days ago, the Princes of the Blood with divers of the Prime Nobility, were invited to a Feast by the Queen's Order. The Place where 'twas kept, is called the New Castle. It is needless for me to describe the Magnificent Entertainment; thou mayst conclude all Things were performed with Great State and Majesty. They Banqueted with Wine to Excess; insomuch, as the Duke of Orleans about Midnight, walking through a Gallery was so Inebriated with the Juice of the Grape that he fell asleep on a Couch, which stood about the middle of the Walk; he was wrapt in his Cloak, a Garment well known in the Court, by the large Diamond that button'd it before: but no Body came by that way, till two Hours afterwards, a certain French Lord passing to his Lodging, took Notice of a Man asleep on the Couch, and drawing nearer, knew it to be the Duke. Wondering what should be the meaning of it, he inquired of the Duke's Page, that stood not far off, who told him, His Master was overcome with Wine. The Lord, not thinking it convenient to leave a Prince of the Blood, in such a Place at that Time of the Night, caused his Servants to take him up and carry him to his own Lodgings; who for the greater Conveniency, left his Cloak behind upon the Couch. As soon as they were gone, the Duke's Page puts on the Cloak, and being also tyred with watching, laid himself down to sleep. The Duke, not long after awakes, and call'd for his Page, not knowing where he was. The Servants of the French Lord, immediately ran to the Page, but found him dead upon the Couch, being stabb'd through the Heart. Thou may'st imagine what a Surprize the whole Court was in, when this Accident was known. Next Morning strict Inquisition was made into this Affair, but nothing brought to light; only 'twas observ'd, that about Three a-Clock in the Morning, an unknown Person was seen by the Centinels, to be let into Cardinal Mazarin's Apartment. The Business is hush'd up up; yet People spare not to whisper, that the Cardinal was privy to the Murder; adding, that the Blow was given by Mistake, the Page being supposed to be the Duke, as he lay wrapt up in that Remarkable Cloak. It is common in these Infidel Countries, for great Men to hire Ruffians to execute their Revenge. And these Fellows are as prompt and dextrous at a private Murder, as our Mutes are to execute the Pleasure of the Grand Signior, when he commands them to strangle any Offending Bassa. But they will have half the Price of their Villainy before-hand, and the Residue when 'tis accomplish'd. Thus is innocent Blood become a Merchandice: They Traffick for Assassinations, and, a Man cannot call his Life his own, since at that very Instant, it may be bought by another. I have not heard that such a detestable Wickedness has ever been practis'd in the Empire of the Musselmen, much less in the Seraglio's of our Sultans, which are the Mansions of Justice and Vertue.

One of the Grandees of France, (whom they call the Duke of Beaufort) takes incessant Paine to find out the Author of this Murder. He is a mortal Enemy of Cardinal Mazarini, and would give half the Revenue of his Dukedom, could he remove him out of the Kingdom. He insinuates very plausible suspicions into the Minds of the Courtiers, to render him odious. He dares not openly accuse him of being Accessary to the Page's Death, having no Evident Proofs against him, but but he endeavours to create in all Men a Belief, that he had a hand in it. He has consulted a Magician, who has shew'd him the Figure of the Murderer in a Glass, and by another Effect of his Enchantments, has presented him with a Picture drawn from the Magical Portraiture in the Glass, which the Duke has caused to be imitated by the Skilfullest Masters in France, sending the Copies in great Numbers to all Parts of the Kingdom, with Orders to the Governours of Towns and Cities, especially such as are on the Frontiers and Sea-Coasts, to cause all Travellers to be brought before them, and confronted with the Picture; that so (if possible) the Murderer may be discover'd, who will not fail to be put to all the Tortures they can invent, to draw a Confession from him. That Cardinal Mazarini had contrived the Murder of the Duke of Orleans, though by Mistake it was executed on the Page. But the Cardinal is even with him, having accused him to the Queen, of designing to Murder him; whereupon, the Duke is sent Prisoner to the Castle of the Wood of Vincennes. This makes the Creatures of Beaufort, to murmur and say, There is a higher Hand than the Cardinal's alone, in the Contrivance of this Murder. Libels are scatter'd up and down the Streets, and 'tis said, that the Ghost of the Page has been often seen to walk in the Royal Apartments.

In the mean Time, I wait all Opportunities to do the Grand Signior some effectual Service, snatching every Contingency which I may may advance the Ottoman Interest. Neither am I forgetful to oblige my Friends.

The Great God, preserve thee from untimely Death, and give thee Favour with the Sultan.

LETTER XXV.

To Pestelibali, his Brother.

WHEN I wrote last to thee, I thought I should have taken a further Journey than thou: Asia was the designed Stage of thy Travels: but I look'd on my self at that time, as bound for another World: And therefore, having no hopes of ever seeing thee again in this, I gave thee a solemn Adieu. It is now Four Years since that Letter was writ, during which, thou hast seen many strange Things in the East, while I have observ'd some Remarkables in the West. Thou art return'd safe to Constantinople, and I am still alive in Paris. I am overjoy'd to hear I have a Brother living; I hope thou wilt not be sorry, that I have hitherto escaped the Stroke of Death. We two are the only surviving of all our Race; let us love one another, as though there were Nothing else in the World for us to love. As for our Mother, I know not whether she be on Earth or in Paradise. The last Letter she sent me, expres'd her Grief for the Death of her second Husband, since which, Eighteen Moons are elapsed, and I have heard Nothing of her. I desire thee, if thou hast any Tenderness for Mamma, to certifie me whether she be living or dead. Perhaps she is married again, and may be removed into some unknown Country. I am perplex'd with a Thousand Anxieties about her.

Remember, That the Tribe to which we belong, was none of the most Obscure in Arabia. Let us imitate the Virtues of our Forefathers, without medling with their Vices. In such a Family, it will not be difficult to find some good Examples, and such as are worthy to be follow'd. Let us learn Temperance from One, Prudence from Another, Magnanimity from a Third, and the Rules of Piety and Justice from them all. This I take to be a proper Method to acquire an Excellency in Virtue, and to root good Habits in us; it being certain, that Practical Examples have more Influence on Men, than the most pithy and sage Instructions. Who can reflect on the Incomparable Modesty of Joseph, my Father's Brother, and not be charm'd? Thou may'st remember, with how sweet a Grace of Mildness and Condescention all his Actions were adorn'd. He was esteem'd the most Polite Man in those Parts. From him we may learn, to bear Injuries patiently, and not to grow peevish at the Impertinences of the Vulgar; not to be of a rugged Temper, Fierce or Revengeful, but to be always of an even Deportment, pursuing all Men with Civilities and good Offices:

the very Nature of which, brings its own Reward along with it (if there were no other) the Mind being fed with an Incomprehensible Complacency, after such Generous Performances.

Mr. Locke, our Countryman, was a Man of singular Government and Moderation. He was neither vainly fond of his Friend, nor Humorous or Cold. He rejected Flatterers, and was not concern'd at Slanderers. He was neither Superstitious, nor Prophane; Liberal without Pride, Frugal without Avarice, and in all Things he carried himself with exquisite Sobriety and Reason.

Such Men as these, we ought to set before us as Patterns of a good Life; and, in following their Steps, we shall honour the Family from which we descend.

In perusing thy Letter, I find thou hast made some profitable Remarks in thy Travels. Thou hast been at the Court of several Great and Illustrious Princes, and returnest Home enrich'd with a Treasury of Jewels, of a far higher Price than Rubies and Diamonds. The Knowledge which thou hast purchased, is a Merchandize for Kings, and will render thee acceptable to the Sovereigns of the Earth. Thou hast improv'd much in a little Time, and made near the Improvement of thy Experience all the Day of thy Life.

It will be a kind Office, if thou wilt gratify thy Brother with some of those choice Observations thou hast made. I have a particular Desire, to be inform'd of many Things in the Levant. Our Cousin Hoof, is covetous of his

Memoirs,

Monsieur, he will not impart any thing to me, though he has likewise travers'd all the East. I would fain know the Age and Character of the present Mogol. Here is a Portuguese in the City, with whom I sometimes converse. He has been at Indostan, and says, That the present Emperor of that Country, is a Man of no great Abilities, suffering his Affairs to be managed by the Conduct of Women. That he has more than ordinary Familiarity with one of his Daughters; That he has Four Sons, whom he has made Sovereigns of Provinces: They are Princes of Active Spirits; and, he says, 'tis fear'd, they will one Day depose their Father.

He tells a Remarkable Story of the Great Mogul's being once in Danger of his Life; which, because it has something in it very extraordinary, I will in Brief relate it to thee.

It happened, that this Prince was riding on one of his Elephants in the Province of Cashemire, when suddenly the Beast grew raging mad; (it seems it is the Nature of these Animals, when they are stung with Lust, at certain times of the Year, to fall into a kind of Phrenzy, which, if not timely obviated, will last Forty Days:) He, whose Office it was to manage the Elephant, perceiving that the King's Life was in apparent Danger, through the Furious Humour of the Beast, had not time to say any more to the King, but only these Words; There is but this only way to save your Life, that I sacrifice mine to the Elephant, which I freely do, as an unfeigned Testimony of my Loyalty. With that,

that he cast himself at the Elephant's Feet, which immediately took him up with his Trunk and kill'd him, and so became pacified. The King astonished at so surprizing an Accident, and to testifie his Gratitude for so unparallel'd a Fidelity, sent for this Man's Sons, and having ask'd them, whether they could have Resolution enough to follow their Fathers Example in such a Case, to which they all answering, That his Majesty might see it immediately, if he pleas'd to give but the Word; the King caus'd Rich Vests to be bestowed on every one of them, with other Presents, and made them the Chief Masters of his Elephants, throughout the Empire. The Portugueze added, That in token of Thankfulness to Heaven for so signal a Preservation, the Emperor gave Royal and Munificent Alms to all the Poor in that Province, vowing, never to ride again on an Elephant, since it had cost him the Life of one of his most Faithful Servants.

If thou hast met with any Instances of so Remarkable a Vertue, Insert them in thy Letter; for, whatever may be in the East, a Man may live whole Ages, in these Western Parts, before he shall find such unshaken Fidelity in a Servant. The King Eternal cast an Eye of favour on thee, and reward thee for the Love thou bearest to our Glorious Sultan.

BOOK III.

LETTER I.

To Ibrahim Haly Cheik, a Man of the Law.

HERE is a Man come to this City, if he may be called a Man, who pretends to have lived above these Sixteen Hundred Years. They call him the Wandring Jew. But some say, he is an Impostor. He says of himself, that he was Usher of the Divan in Jerusalem, (the Jews call it the Court of Judgment) where all Criminal Causes were tryed, tryed, at the Time when Jesus, the Son of Mary, the Christians Messias, was Condemned by Pontius Pilate, the Roman President. That his Name was Michob Ader; and that, for thrusting Jesus out of the Hall with these words, Go, why tarriest thou? The Messias answered him again; I go, but tarry thou till I come; thereby condemning him, to live till the Day of Judgment. He pretends to remember the Apostles that lived in those Days, and that he himself was Baptized by one of them; that he has travelled through all the Regions of the World, and so must continue to be a Vagabond till the Messias shall return again. They say, that he heals Diseases, by touching the Party affected. Divers other Miracles, are ascribed to him by the Ignorant and Superstitious. But the Learned, the Noble, and the Great, censure him as a Counterfeit or a Madman. Yet there are, who affirm, that 'tis one convincing Argument of the Reality of his Pretence, that he has hitherto escaped a Prison, especially in these Countries, where the Authors of all Innovations are severely punished. He has escaped the Inquisitions at Rome, in Spain, and in Portugal, which the Vulgar will have to be an evident Miracle.

One Day I had the Curiosity to Discourse with him in several Languages; and, I found him Master of all those that I could speak. I conversed with him Five or Six Hours together in Arabick. He told me, that there was scarce a true History to be found. I asked him him, what he thought of Mahomet, the Prophet and Lawgiver of the Muſſulmans? He answered, That he knew his Father very well, and had been often in his Company at Ormus in Perſia; That Mahomet, was a Man full of Light and a Divine Spirit, but had his Errors as well as other Mortals, and that his chiefeſt was, in denying the Crucifixion of the Meſſiah; for, ſaid he, I was then preſent, and ſaw him hang on the Croſs with theſe Eyes of mine. He accuſed the Muſſulmans of Impoſture, in making the World believe, That the Tomb of their Prophet, hangs miraculouſly between Heaven and Earth, ſaying, That he himſelf had ſeen it, and that it was built after the manner of other Sepulchres. Thou who haſt been at the Holy Places, knoweſt whether this be true or falſe. He upbraids the Perſians Mahometans with Luxury, the Ottomans with Tyranny, the Arabians with Robbery, the Moors with Cruelty, and the Muſſulmans of the Indies with Atheiſm: Nor does he ſpare to reproach the Chriſtian Churches: He takes the Roman and Greciſh with the Pompous Idolatry of the Heathens. He accuſes the Ethiopians of Judaiſm, the Armenians of Hereſie, and ſays, that the Proteſtants, if they would live according to their Profeſſion, would be the beſt Chriſtians.

He told me, he was in Rome, when Nero ſet Fire to the City, and ſtood triumphing on the Top of a Hill to behold its Flames. That he ſaw Saladine's Return from his Conquests in the Eaſt, when he cauſed his Shirt to be carried on the Top of a Spear, with this Proclamation, Saladine, Lord of many rich Countries, Conqueror of the East, ever Victorious and happy, when he dies shall have no other Memorial left of all his Glories, but only this poor Shirt.

He relates many remarkable Passages of Solyman the Magnificent, whereof our Histories are silent, and says, he was in Constantinople, when Solyman built that Royal Mosque, which goes by his Name. He knew Tamerlain the Scythian, and told me, that he was so call'd, because he halted with one Leg. He pretends also to have been acquainted with Scanderbeg, the Valiant and Fortunate Prince of Epirus. He seem'd to pity the insupportable Calamity of Bajazet, whom he had seen carried about in a Cage by Tamerlain's Order. He accuses the Scythian, of too Barbarous an Insult on the Unfortunate Sultan. He remembers the Ancient Caliphs of Babylon and Aegypt, the Empire of the Sarazens, and the Wars in the Holy Land. He highly extols the Valour and Conduct of the Renowned Godfrey of Bullogne. He gives an accurate Account of the Rise, Progress, Establishment, and Subversion of the Mamalukes in Aegypt. He says, he has washed himself in the Two Head-springs of the River Nile, which arise in the most Southern Part of Aethiopia. That its Encrease is occasion'd by the great Rains in Aethiopia, which swell all the Rivers that fall into the Nile, and cause that vast Inundation, which has so much puzzled Philosophy, to find out the Origin. He says, that the River Ganges in India, is broader and deeper than the Nile; that the River Niger in Africa is longer by some Hundreds of Miles. And, that he can remember a time, when the River Nile overflowed not till Three Months after the usual Season.

Having professed himself an Universal Traveller, and that there was no Corner of the Earth, where he had not been present, I began to comfort my self with the hopes of some News from the Ten Tribes of Israel, that were carried into Captivity by Salmanasser King of Assyria, and could never be heard of since. I asked him several Questions concerning them, but found no satisfactory Answer. Only he told me, that both in Asia, Africk, and Europe, he had taken Notice of a Sort of People, who (though not Jews in Profession) yet retained some Characteristicks, whereby one might discover them to be descended of that Nation.

In Livonia, Russia, and Finland, he had met with People of distinct Languages from that of the Country, having a great mixture of Hebrew Words; that these abstained from Swines Flesh, Blood, and Things strangled. That in their Lamentations for the Dead, they always used these Words [Feru-Jeru Masco Salem.] By which he thought, they called to Remembrance Jerusalem and Damascus, those two Famous Cities of Palestine and Syria. In the Circassians also, he had traced some Foosteps of Judaism; their Customs, Manner of Life, Feasts, Marriages, and Sacrifices, being not far removed from the Institutions of the Mosaick Law. But what is most remarkable, he said, that he had conversed with professed Jews in the North Parts of Asia, who never so much as heard of Jesus, the Son of Mary, or of the Revolutions in Judea after his Death, the Siege and Destruction of Jerusalem, or any other Matters wherewith all Histories abound concerning that Nation. He said moreover, that these Jews had only the Pentateuch, not having heard of the rest of those Books which compose the greatest Part of the Old Testament; and, that this Pentateuch, was written in a sort of Hebrew, far different from that which is now commonly spoken, by the rest of the dispersed Jews throughout the World. That the number of these Jews was infinite. And finally, he thought, that these (if any) were the true Posterity of those Ten Captive Tribes.

Having mentioned the Destruction of Jerusalem, I ask'd him where he was at that time? He told me, in the Court of Vespasian at Rome, and that he had heard the Emperor say, when he understood the Temple of Solomon was burnt to Ashes, He had rather all Rome had been set on Fire. Here the Old Man fell a weeping himself, lamenting the Ruines of that Noble Structure, which he described to me as familiarly, as if he had seen it but Yesterday. He says, that Josephus wrote partially of the Seditious in the City, being related to one of the Chief Ring-leaders, whom therefore he spar'd, being loath to stain the Reputation of his own Family to all Posterity.

I tell thee, Sage Cheik, if this Man's Pretences be true, he is so full of Choice Memoirs, and has been Witness to so many Grand Transactions for the space of Sixteen Centuries of Years; that he may not unfitly be called, A Living Chronology, the Prator Notary of the Christians Hegira, or Principal Recorder of that which they esteem the Last Epocha of the World's Duration.

By his Looks, one would take him for a Relick of the Old World, or one of the Long-liv'd Fathers before the Flood. To speak modestly, he may pass for the Youngest Brother of Time.

It would be endless to tell thee how many other Discourses we had of his Travels and Memoirs; till tired with his Company, and judging all to be a Cheat, I took my Leave.

I tell thee, he seems to be a Man well vers'd in all Histories, a Great Traveller, and one that affects to be counted an Extraordinary Person. The Common People are ready to adore him; and, the very Fear of the Multitude, restrains the Magistrates from offering any Violence to this Impostor.

Live thou in the Exercise of thy Reason, which will not permit thee to be seduced into Errors, by the subtle Insinuations of Men.

Continue to love Mahmut, who Honours thee without a Fiction.

LETTER II.

To the Selictar Aga, or Sword-Bearer.

JEalousie, the Bane of Publick Alliances, as well as of Private Friendships, has carried the Arms of Suedeland into Denmark, at a Time when least expected.

All Europe was alarmed at the News of this Surprizing Invasion; it being thought, that the Suedes had Work enough cut out for them in Germany.

However, few could penetrate into the Reasons which induced them to respite the Imperialists, and at the same Time carry the War into the Dominions of King Christian; who, by his Mediation, and other good Offices between the German Emperour and that Crown, merited another kind of Return, than an Hostile Invasion.

But the Peace-maker has most Times a thankless Office. I have seen a Gentleman, endeavouring to part or pacify Two of his Friends, encountring in the Streets of Paris, and and has received the Point of one of the Rapiers in his Heart for his Kindness. So fared it with the King of Denmark, who was accepted of by both Parties, as Umpire of the Quarrel; and had sent his Ambassador to Munster, where he treated so successfully with the Imperialists, that he brought them to Terms very advantageous to the Swede; yet, the first Overtures of his Mediation, gave so great a suspicion to that Nation, that while the Danish Ambassador was actually concluding a Peace for them, they commence a War, or rather translate it from the Provinces of the Empire to Scania, entring that Country with Twelve Thousand Men: And, to shew the World they were in Earnest, they privitely treat with the Hollanders, to assist them with a Fleet and Men, which was granted them under the Command of Admiral Martin Tyet.

At the same Time, General Torstenson entred Holstein, where he advanced with admirable Success, took Kiel by surprize, and, passing forward, possessed himself of Jutland, driving King Christian into a Corner of his Dominions; for, now he had only Zealand and Fionia left, which are Two Islands; the former whereof, commands the Passage into the Baltick Sea.

Here, the King of Denmark finds himself beset with Difficulties and Dangers, by Sea and Land; yet, in regard his greatest Strength lay in his Shipping, he wholly applies himself to rig and man out a good Fleet. At the same Time, he informs his Allies of this Unjust War, and made passionate Complaints to the Emperour, for whose Sake all this befell him, imploring his Friendship and Aid in so great a Calamity. The Emperour sends Gallasso with Forces, who entring the Territories of Hambugh and Lubeck, a League was Negotiated between the Emperour and the Danish King. But by the Artifices of the French and Holland Ambassadors at Copenhagen, the King was dissuaded from making an Alliance with the House of Austria.

However, the Dunkirkers offered King Christian, to maintain a Considerable Fleet in the Sound, at their own Charge, which he seemed to accept of.

All the Ministers endeavour to play their own Game, and abuse the Goodness of the Unfortunate King. Whilst in the mean Time, he loses Ground in Holstein; General Torstenson having taken Christianopyx, a very strong Place.

What will be the Issue of these Transactions, Time will manifest; but, were not this King Master of an Extraordinary Vertue, he would sink under so many pressures, being a Man of a Great Age. But, God supports whom He pleases.

LETTER

LETTER III.

To Cara Haly, the Physician at Constantinople.

THOU hast seen many in the Arms of Death, wrastling with the Grim Monarch of Shadows, who by the Privilege of an excellent Constitution, have disengaged themselves from his Clutches, and stood an open Defiance with him for some Years afterwards. But I question, whether thou hast ever known any, whom that Conqueror has once laid in the Dust, that recover'd again.

In a Village about half a League from this City, there died a Man (or at least he seem'd to die) about a Week ago. He was stretch'd forth into the Posture fittest for his Coffin, by the Hands of two old Women. His Relations and Friends, flock'd about the Body, to pray for his Soul, as is the Custom of the Christians. The House was fill'd with Tears and Sighs, and a mournful Cloud sat on every Brow. He lay thus for the space of Thirty five Hours, Dead in the Supposition of all his Family. When the Watchers who sate by, were suddenly astonished to hear him sneeze, they ran away at first, as People affrighted at some Ghastly Vision, and alarm'd the whole Neighbourhood with the News. Physicians were sent for, who causing him to be laid in a Warm a Warm Bed, and using proper Applications, he recover'd his Senses, and by Degrees his Speech: they are in Hopes to restore him to perfect Health again. He relates to his Visitants, many strange Things, that he has seen and heard during the Five and Thirty Hours that he was thought to be Dead. He says, he has been before the Throne of God, and has seen all the Orders of Angels; that he was commanded to return back again to his Body, to warn Men of the approaching Day of Judgment. He preaches Repentance and good Works, to all that come near him. Hence it is, that the devouter sort of People resort to his House in Pilgrimage, esteeming him a Saint. They say, he has anticipated the General Resurrection, to give a fresh proof of it to this unbelieving Age, and to evince, that it will come to pass before he shall quit his Body. He Propheſies, the Converſion of the Jews to be near at Hand, and, that the Muſſulmans ſhall embrace the Chriſtian Faith.

Such as are fond of Novelties, and ſuperſtitiouſly inclined, believe what he ſays, to be as true as the Alcoran; but, the Learned impute it all to the Fumes of Melancholy, to which he was always naturally prone. For my Part, who believe that Mahomet, the Meſſenger of God, was the laſt, and Seal of all the Prophets, look for none after him; nor am I credulous of every one, who pretends to a Divine Commiſſion. Yet, when I am in Company with ſuch as are this Man's Admirers, I talk as they do, and ſeem what I am not, that

I may the better acquit my ſelf what I really am. Beſides, it is not Prudence, to provoke the Fury of Bigots, by oppoſing their Sentiments.

They relate a Story, of a Man who died in this City, ſome Hundreds of Years ago; and, 'tis upon Record, That this Perſon during his Life Time, was eſteemed a very Holy Man, but after his Death, while they were performing his Funeral Obſequies, and carrying the Body round the Church in Proceſſion, he ſuddenly ſtarted up from the Bier on which he was carried, pronouncing theſe Words with an Audible Voice, I am arraigned before the Judgment Seat of God. All that heard him ſpeak, were aſtoniſhed at ſo ſurprizing an Event, and the Prieſts who ſang the Hymn of Reſt to his Soul, for a while deſiſted. But again going on with their Proceſſion and Hymns, he aroſe the Second Time, and ſaid aloud, I am tryed at God's Tribunal. This put another ſtop to the Solemnity, till after ſome Deliberations, they reſolved to proceed a Third Time, when he ſtarted up again, and ſaid, I am condemned by the juſt Sentence of God. This put a final Stop to the Funeral Ceremonies. They would no longer chant a Reſt, to the Soul of him, whoſe dead Body aroſe, and pronounced him Damned. Neither would they bury his Body in Conſecrated Ground, whoſe Soul they knew was lodg'd in Hell, by a Voice from the Dead. There is an Order of Derviſes, called Carthuſians, who, they ſay, are a ſtanding Monument of the Truth of this Relation. For, one Bruno, being touch'd with Compunction, at ſo tremendous an Accident, immediately forſook the Society of Men, and led a Contemplative Life in exquiſite Silence, Abſtinence, Faſting and Prayer, enjoyning all his Followers to do the like. Who are now ſpread into moſt Parts of Chriſtendom, having Magnificent Monaſteries, Great Immunities, and are eſteem'd the ſtricteſt Order of the Roman Church. They are ſerved in the Markets before the King himſelf. If any Derviſe of another Order deſires to come into this, he may; but from this there is no Return. They dig a part of their own Graves every Day, having every one a Cell and a Garden to himſelf. They converſe with one another but once a Week. And if when they are walking in the Cloyſters of their Monaſtery, they happen to ſpy a Stranger, they ſcud away into their Cells, as Conies into their Holes, at the ſight of a Dog. They never taſte of Fleſh, and are obliged to pray Eight Hours in Four and Twenty.

This Order has afforded Eminent Scholars and Stateſmen; but now 'tis like to have Men of another Character for its Proſelytes; for, ſince the Reſurrection of this new Prophet, I mentioned in the beginning of my Letter, the Rabble are all turning Carthuſians.

Thou who art acquainted with the Nature of Eſtaſies and Trances, wilt know what to judge of this Man's Raptures. The great Cardan, could fall into them when he pleaſed; and, I have heard of a Learned Mahometan Derviſe in the Indies, that had the Art of with-drawing his Soul from the Body, at which times he beheld Divine and Celestial Things, not by way of Contemplation, but real Intuition. We must acknowledge these to be the Favourites of Heaven, Friends of Nature, and privy to the Secrets of both Worlds.

I desire thee, to write me some News of my Friends; for, I can hear nothing from them. Which makes me think my self among the Dead, and quite forgotten. If thou still retainest thy wonted Chearfulness, thou art happy. Sadness is the Bane of the Soul, from which, I pray Heavens, preserve both thee and me.

LETTER IV.

To William Voſpel, a Chriſtian Recluſe of Auſtria.

I Am a Chriſtian as well as thou, and yet I cannot find a Reaſon to live after thy Manner. Not, that I reprehend thy Choice, but I conſult my own Happineſs. I could willingly embrace a Monaſtick Life, were it not for the Vow of Obedience. Thoſe of Chaſtity and Poverty, are not ſo frightful. But, to be abſolutely reſigned to the Will of a Superiour (who may be a Thouſand Times more Vicious than my ſelf) is far more irkſome, than to be a Slave in Turky. There, a Man may pave himſelf a Way to many Enjoyments in the midſt of Captivity, and ſweeten his worſt Condition, with the Hopes of Freedom one Time or other. But here I muſt be condemn'd to an everlaſting Servitude, and ſuch an one, as renders it a Crime, ſo much as to think of Pleaſure, or dream of a Releaſe. I muſt be for ever confin'd, to obey one that perhaps is not Maſter of himſelf; to humour all his Caprices; to give the Lye to that Senſe and Reaſon, with which God and Nature have endued me: to make Black and White, Good and Evil, Reciprocal Terms; though every one knows, they are perfect Contradictions. In fine, I muſt reſolve in all Things, (not excepting my very Thoughts) to be conducted by him, who for ought I know, follows no other Guide but his own Irregular Passions. What will then become of me, after such an unreasonable Forfeiture of my Native Liberty? I will tell thee in one Word; from a Rational Creature, I shall be changed to a Brute; from a Man to a Sot; and, having now some Sparks of Vertue, I shall then be made the Rendezvous of all Vice.

(not

Think not, that I go about to make thee hate the Manner of Life thou hast chosen: Though I esteem thee miserable, do not judge so of thy self. Thou may'st find a great deal of Pleasure in that Restraint, which to me would be the most Insupportable Calamity in the World: And, it may be as easie for thee, to submit to the Will of another, as 'tis hard for me to comply with my Own. I am of so wavering a Constitution, that I cannot without great Difficulty please my self, much less could I be able to humour the Extravagancies of a Soul different from Mine. I have observed, that should I follow the Motions of my own proper Inclination at all Times, I should do many Things whereof I might afterwards repent: why may not the Case be the same, or worse, if I blindly obey the Will of a Stranger? Am I sure, that he is a Good Man? Or, if he be so to Day, how do I know but that he may be otherwise to Morrow? Nay, what Security can be given me, that if he be a Saint this Hour, he will not be a Devil the next, since, the Temper of Man varies as often, and ſuffers as many Alterations, as the Elements do, out of which he is compounded? Where then can be the Reaſon, of giving my ſelf wholly up to any Man's Diſpoſal all my Life Time? Is it not ſufficient to obey the Sovereign Prelate, who commands the whole Church, yet impoſes not the Dictates of his own Will as a Law, but governs all Chriſtians according to the Ancient Traditions, Stated Canons, and Decrees of the Apoſtles, Fathers and Councils? Whereas, thoſe who Preſide over the Convents of the Religious, many Times rule arbitrarily, commanding their Subjects to do thoſe Things, which are diametrically oppoſite to the very Fundamental Rules of Chriſtianity, and contrary to the Law of Nature. The more I think on't, the greater is my Averſion for this private, blind Obedience.

Thou wilt ſay, that a Regular Life is the Way of Perfection. I grant it; but cannot a Man lead a Regular Life, unleſs he be immur'd in a Convent? Or be Perfect, if his Mind be not ſquar'd to the Retirements of a Cloyſter? I will tell thee my Sentiments freely, and without a Maſque. The Nature of every Thing, is its Perfection: There are Perfect Sinners, as well as Perfect Saints. Thus we ſay, ſuch an one is a Perfect Drunkard, Fornicator, Cheat, Tyrant or the like. I ask thee, Whether this ſort of Perfection may not be (I wiſh I could ſay, is not too often acturally) found, within the Walls of a Religious Houſe? On the other hand, doſt thou think it impoſſible, to find the Perfection of Vertue, in the mix'd Life of the World? Be not a Cynick, nor condemn Things whereof thou hast made no Experiment. Remember, how many Kings and Queens, Princes and Nobles have been Canonized for Saints, who in the midst of so many Splendors, kept their Eyes undazled. Whose Ears, never let in the Blandishments of Flatterers, nor the malicious Whispers of the Envious. Whose Hands were never polluted with innocent Blood, nor their Thirst quench'd with the Tears of Widows and Orphans. But, in all Things, they conserv'd an inviolate Purity, Modesty and Integrity of Manners. These Persons were perfect in the midst of Imperfections, and Regular in the Height of Humane Disorders; Saints upon Earth, and Angels among Men.

Assuredly, 'tis not impossible for a Man (let his Condition be what it will, Publick or Private, Servile or Free) to conduct himself evenly and by a Rule, through all the Meanders and Mazes of Humane Life. I must confess, This is very difficult, and all Men have not that Divine Art. Few can walk on Pinnacles, and not make false Steps; such is our Life, and happy is he that makes the fewest. Yet, there is a Dexterity, with which whosoever is acquainted, need not go to a Monastery, to enquire the way to Bliss.

Thou wilt perhaps accuse me, of too much Bluntness and ill Manners, in thus Declaiming against that Kind of Life, which thou hast enter'd into. But, pardon the Freedom I take with my Friend; and rest satisfied, That tho I affect not a Recluse Life my self, yet honour I those, who having once engaged themselves therein, persevere with Constancy; from which I shall never perswade thee, or any Man to depart.

LETTER V.

To Mustapha Berber Aga.

A French Merchant, lately come from Ispahan, brings Intelligence, that the Chan of the Vibeck Tartars, is arrived at that City, to crave aid of the present Sophi of Persia, against his Rebellious Children who have deposed him, and bereaved him of one of his Eyes. The Sophi has given him a Royal Reception, going himself in Person, above a League out of the City to meet him, accompanied with all his Nobles. This Gentleman came away, before the Tartarian Prince had succeeded in his Design. But, it was generally supposed, that Cha Abbas would assist him, with a considerable Army of Horse and Foot, as also with Money to carry on the War.

This King is not Thirteen Years of Age, yet takes upon himself the Management of Publick lick Affairs. He is addicted to drinking of Wine a great Lover of Muſick and Women. Of a Noble Inclination, yet ſomething too Paſſionate. He commanded the Belly of one of his Pages to be ript up, for breaking a Cryſtal Baſon which he much admired. Yet afterwards, repenting of what he had done, he cauſed him to be honourably buried, and a ſtately Tomb to be erected over him. He alſo enquired out ſuch of his Kindred as were living, to whom he gave large Penſions.

There has been little of Action in theſe Parts, ſince the Signal Defeat that was given to the French, by the Forces of John de Wert, and General Mercy. Four French Mareſchals were taken Priſoners, with all the Chief Officers, Six Thouſand Soldiers, beſides their Ammunition and Baggage.

In this Action, 'tis ſaid, the Spaniſh Horſe behaved themſelves very bravely, ſpurr'd on with an Ambition, to recover the Glory they ſeem'd to have loſt in ſo many Battels. They ruſh'd into the French Quarters, with a Fury which ſoon put them into Diſorder, and afterwards diſpoſed them to quit the Field.

Before this Battel began, 'tis ſaid, there were ſeen Two Armies of Birds fighting in the Air; which engaged ſo furiouſly, that the Ground was cover'd with their Dead Bodies. And, that Morning, when one of the French Mareſchals was going out of his Tent, with a Piſtol in his Hand, in order to try it, the Barrel Split and tore his Hand in Pieces. Theſe are now looked upon as Prodigies, and Ominous Signs of the Loss they afterwards sustained: but, had the Victory been on their Side, no Body would have taken Notice of them.

The God that gives Victory when, and to whom he pleases, grant, that the Ottoman Arms may be ever successful against the Infidels.

LETTER VI.

To the Vizir Azem, at the Port.

THOU that art the Principal Support of the Ottoman Empire under the Grand Signior, oughtest to be informed of all Things which may either threaten Damage, or promise Assistance, to the Throne which rests on thy Shoulders.

I pass away some of my Time among Seamen; especially such as sail in the Levant; their very Breath, is a Relief when I am Chamber-sick, or stifled with the close Vapours of Paris. I fansie, their Lungs transport hither the Breezes of the Mediterranean, or the more wholesome Airs of Asia. I talk so familiarly with them in their Marine Dialect, that they scruple not to take me for a Tarpaulin, Tarpaulin, and therefore entertain me without Reserve, as one of their Crew.

This very Evening, I was with some of these Retainers to Neptune. Among the Rest of the Discourse I had with them, we touched upon the Dardanells which guard the Hellespont. They taxed the Christian Princes with Cowardise, or, unpardonable Negligence, that they have never attempted to force their Passage through that Channel into the Propontis, and block up the Imperial City by Sea, and set it on Fire; especially the Royal Seraglio, from whence are issued out the Decrees of Life and Death to the whole Earth.

I told them, they were mistaken in the Strength of those Castles, which command that Important Avenue. And, that no Ships ever durst venture within their Reach, without Leave. When one of them started up, and made me this Answer: Sir, we have Vessels impenetrable as Rocks, which dare come to an Anchor, under the very Walls of those Superannuated Forts, and defie all the Turkish Artillery, to remove us thence. We only want a Commission from our King, to try the Experiment.

I tell thee, Supreme Minister, I found too much Reason in his Answer, to make room for a Reply. Wherefore, dissembling for a while, the Agony I was in for the Welfare of the Sublime Port, I took my Leave of the Company, and immediately set Pen to Paper, to let thee know what is in the Hearts of these Infidels.

Ham-

I am not vers'd in the Art and Method of Fortification; yet, pardon an Errour of Loyalty and Zeal, if I commit it, in proposing to thee the Necessity of erecting Platforms all along the opposite Shores of the Hellespont, to strike Terrour, and prevent the Enemy from attempting that, which in all probability would not fail of Success.

Thou that art all Wisdom, wilt know how to make a right Use of this Hint, from the faithful Mahmut, who never thinks himself Happy, but when he does some acceptable Service to the Invincible Sovereign of the Sea and Land.

LETTER VII.

To Oucoumiche his Mother, at Grand Cairo.

THOU may'st better imagine than I can express, the mighty Joy I felt, when I first opened thy Letter, and read the Name of her that conceiv'd me, written by her own Hand; whereby I am assur'd, that thou art yet alive and in Health. Believe me, it came in a seasonable Time, to rescue me out of a dismal Melancholy, which had seized my Spirits. Surely, Fate directed thy Pen, and Providence timed the Arrival of the Veſſel which brought me this happy News from Africk, in the ſaddeſt Hour of all my Life. Juſt as the Meſſenger knock'd at my Chamber-Door (where I ſate overwhelm'd with doleful Thoughts) the whole World ſeem'd to me a vaſt Wilderneſs or Deſart, inhabited only by Beaſts of Prey, where the Great and Strong, devour thoſe whoſe Weakneſs cannot arm them in their own Defence. A mere Stage of Tragedies, the Shambles of cruel Butcheries and Murders. In this Figure, did my troubled Imagination repreſent the Earth, with all the Race of Adam dwelling upon it. If I could propoſe to my ſelf ſuch a Thing as a Friend in the World, I know not how long 'twould be, before that very Perſon whom I had greateſt Reaſon to eſteem as ſuch, might prove my Mortal Enemy; of ſo brittle a Compoſition is the Fidelity of Man. I looked upon my Life, not as my own, but altogether lent me; I eſteemed not only Men, but Beaſts, and the very inanimate Things, my Creditors, for the Permiſſion I had to breathe. I thought my ſelf highly indebted to the Fire, that it did not burn me to Death in my Sleep; and no leſs to the Winds, that they did not blow the Houſe down where I lodge, and bury me in its Ruins. For, where would be the Injuſtice, if any of thoſe Elements which are the Ingredients of my Life, ſhould become the Inſtruments of my Death? I conſidered, that as I neither made my ſelf, nor knew how I came to be what I am, so I was ignorant when and by what means I should cease to be. Perhaps, I might be struck with a Thunderbolt from Heaven, or swallowed up by some greedy Chasm in the Earth. A Tile from a House, might put a stop to the Motions of this Machine of Flesh; or, a Fall from a Horse, might break its Master-Springs. My present Station I looked upon as Precarious, since those very Persons who appointed me this Employment to serve one Turn, would not Scruple to take off my Head to serve another.

In these melancholy Thoughts was I almost drown'd, when thy Letter came and struck a Light out of the midst of Darkness. I was now ready to die with Excess of Joy, who before was half killed with extreme Sadness.

But tell me, my Dear Mother, in the Name of our Holy Prophet, what Motive induced thee to quit the wholesome Air of Greece, for the noisome and pestilential Vapours of Ægypt? Is Cairo a more eligible Seat than Constantinople? Or, because thou hast lost thy Second Husband, wilt thou be wedded to an Incurable Grief, and think no Mourning sufficient, unless thou go in Pilgrimage to his very Grave, there to dissolve in Tears, and mingle thy self with his Ashes. He died in Cairo, and is there interr'd; and thou mightest have liv'd in Scio, or any part of Greece, without blemishing thy Widowhood. People will say, thou aimest at the Fortune of the Ephesian Widow, who found a living Husband, in the Sepulchre of her dead one; but I, who know thy Vertue, have other Thoughts of thee, yet, I cannot approve thy thus becoming Tenant to a Charnel-House. Therefore, the best Advice I can give thee, is, to return to the Imperial City again, to the Company of thy Friends and Acquaintance; or, at least, return to thy self, and be not transported with an extravagant Sorrow, for one whom thou shalt never see again. Tears cannot recover the Dead, nor can thy warmest Sighs inspire him with Breath. He is divorc'd from thee by an Irrevocable Law; and whilst thou art in vain lamenting for him on Earth, he may be celebrating new and joyful Nuptials in Heaven, being espoused to some of the Beautiful Daughters of Paradise. Be perswaded then, that he has quite forgot thee, having engaged himself in fresh Amours above; that he is in the Arms of some Surpassing Beauty of Eden, and that thou hast no more Interest in him. Let this Consideration, asswage thy Grief, cure thy Fondness, and make thee begin to think of another Husband. Those who make their first Visits to the French Widows, after the usual Formalities of Condoleance are over, take the Liberty to tell them, That they must live by the Living, and not by the Dead. This comfortable Proverb, is often used, even before the Funeral Solemnities are finish'd; and, thou hast now passed away above Two Years since thy Husband's Death, in fruitless Mourning. 'Tis Time to consult thy future Happiness pineſs, and abandoning thy Commerce with the Dead, to become ſociable with the Living.

The Great Creator, who is God of the Living, and not of the Dead, inſpire thee to take ſuch Meaſures, as may beſt comply with the Ends for which he made thee; and, repleniſh thy Latter Days, with double the Bleſſings of the Former.

Paris, 22d. of the 4th. Moon, of the Year 1644.

LETTER VIII.

To Muzlu Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

IT is no ſmall Satisfaction to me, that ſince the Death of Cardinal Richlieu, I have ſtarted no Reaſons to apprehend any Deſigns in this Court, againſt the Empire of the True Believers. The French Grandees, have paſs'd away a whole Year, without giving much Trouble or Alarm to the reſt of the World. Every one minds his own Affairs, and all puſh forward to get neareſt the Queen Regent. The Miſunderſtandings between her, and the Duke of Orleans, encreaſe daily. And, this divides the Court and City, into Two Factions, Cardinal Mazarini, ſeems to be the Man.

Man destin'd to balance the Authority of both Parties. He Spins his Fortune, with as fine a Thread as his Predecessor; being sensible, that though the Court love him not, yet they cannot subsist without him. He Inherits the Memoirs and Instructions of Cardinal Richlieu, and his Spirit too, as well as his Ministry; being a Man, of an Invincible Courage, and exquisite Forecast. The Greatest Enemy he has, is a Lady of the Court (for, I will not compare the Malice of the Duke of Beaufort to that of Woman) they call her, Madam de Chevereux; a Person of a keen Wit, and good Judgment; a professed Enemy to all that had any Dependance on Cardinal Richlieu. And, I could never learn any other Ground of her Hatred to Mazarini, but his being the Creature of that Minister.

The late King had conceived an Irreconcilable Aversion for this Lady, suspecting her to be Instrumental in carrying on a Private Correspondence between his Wife (the now Queen-Regent) and the Spaniards. To avoid the Consequences of his Anger, she fled into Spain, but is lately returned to this Court. 'Tis said, the Queen received her with all the outward Marks of Affection at first, but suddenly grew cold and estranged, when she began to attempt against Cardinal Mazarini. This made the Lady unite her Interest with that of the Duke of Beaufort, who very well matches her in the Imperiousness of his Temper, and his Hatred of the Cardinal. They both agree in their Endeavours to ruine him; but, but, I believe the Female Perſecution to be the moſt dangerous. The Duke has made too great a Noiſe, to do any conſiderable Execution on a Man, who has the Wit to conceal his Reſentments, and ſtrike before he is perceiv'd. In a word, the Duke finds himſelf in a Priſon, while the Cardinal is every Day more and more eſtabliſhed in the Queen's Favour.

In the mean while, I inſinuate my ſelf into all Men's Company, from whom I can hope for any Intelligence. Among the Reſt, I have obſerved a Courtier, who often goes between the Grandees, and ſeems to be entruſted with great Secrets; he is very ſparing of Words, and makes his Shoulders do the Office of his Tongue. I have ſometimes enter'd into a Diſcourſe with him about the Queen, the Cardinal, and others; but all his Anſwers are compriz'd in Italian Rhetorick, a Shrug and a Grimace. This ſilent Language, ſpeaks very efficaciouſly to me, and I eſteem him worthy to be courted, who knows ſo well how to bridle his Tongue. I ply this Politician every Day with Addreſſes, and tell him a great deal of Feigned News, that I may tempt him to utter ſome that is True. He is a great Friend of Madam de Chevereux, often waits on the Queen; ſometimes viſits the Cardinal; and is every Day converſant, with one or other of the Nobles. If I can win this Man, I hope to penetrate farther into the Myſteries of the Court.

The

The God, from whom nothing is hid, ſo diſpoſe of all Humane Events, that the Empire of the Muſſulmans may be eſtabliſhed, notwithſtanding the Cabals and Plots of the Infidels.

Paris, 16th. of the 5th. Moon, of the Year 1644.

LETTER IX.

To Signior Lorenzo del' Caſa Bianca, a Genouſe at Marſeilles.

THOU ſendeſt me ſtrange and ſurprizing News, that the Malta Gallies have taken the Eldeſt Son of the Grand Signior, and Heir of the Ottoman Empire, Captive at Sea, as he was ſailing to Egypt.

I tell thee, if ſuch a thing were true, the Grand Signior would not fail to ſend ſuch a Force, as ſhould dig up the very Foundations of that Iſland, and caſt it into the Sea.

But I can reſolve thee, that there is nothing more of Truth in this Story, ſaving, that about Ten Veſſels of the Grand Signior's, bound for Alexandria (on Board of one of which was Sultan Mahomet's Nurſe, with her Son, much about the Age of Sultan Mahomet) were taken by Six Gallies of Malta, whereby whereby the Malteſes were enriched with a great Treaſure of Silver, Gold and Jewels, beſides Slaves.

This Intelligence I have received from my Correſpondents at Conſtantinople. Men that are no Strangers to the Seraglio, but ſuch as have the Ear of the Prime Vizir.

They ſay indeed, the Grand Signior took a particular Phancy to this Nurſes Child, often play'd with it, and ſeemed to careſs it with more Complacency, than his own Son Sultan Mahomet; which gave ſo great a diſguſt to the Sultaneſs, the Mother of Mahomet, that ſhe procured the Baniſhment of the Nurſe and her Child, who in their Voyage to Alexandria, were taken Captives by the Malteſe Galleys, as has been ſaid; and this is the Ground of the Report.

However, Sultan Ibrahim is ſo exaſperated againſt the Malteſes for this Depredation, that he has ſworn by God and Mahomet, never to ſheath his Sword, till he has revenged the Injury, by laying waſte the Iſland, putting the Knights to Death, and leading the Inhabitants into Captivity.

He has vented his Rage already on the Captain Baſſa, cauſing him to be ſtrangled, for not guarding the Seas better; and, 'tis ſaid, he threatens a War with Venice on the ſame Account, becauſe the Malteſe Galleys, after this Pyracy, put a Shore in Candia, where they recruited their Veſſels, with all neceſſary Proviſions.

In

I expected the Silks last Week, which I wrote for, and the Oil of Calabria. Send them by the first Opportunity.

LETTER X.

To Dgnet Oglou.

ALL Europe rings with the Report of the Sultan's Son being taken Captive by the Malteſe Galleys. No doubt, but thou haſt heard ſuch a Diſcourſe among the Franks at Conſtantinople; and, thou knoweſt the Intrigues of the Seraglio. It is pleaſant, that the Kuzlir Aga's Slavé, ſhould have no Father for her Child; that he himſelf ſhould adopt it for his own; that the Mother of it ſhould be preferred to be Nurſe to Sultan Mahomet; that Sultan Ibrahim, ſhould ſingle out this Fatherleſs Son of an Eunuch, to ſport with him, take him in his Arms, and treat him with all the Endearments that are Naturally ſhew'd by Parents to their own Children.

The French Ladies laugh at this Story, and ſay, That the Seraglio begins to grow more Civiliz'd, and to exchange the Severity of Conſtantinople, for the Gallantries of Paris.

But,

But, let them laugh that win; the Maltese have most reason to caress themselves for their good Fortune in such a Prize.

They say, the Grand Prior treats his Young Captive with a most profound Attach and Veneration; imagining, he has in Custody the Heir of the Ottoman Empire: for, they know not the true Secret, but are possessed with a real Belief, that Young Sultan Mahomet, is in their Hands.

Let what I have said, be as the words of thy Nurse, when she prated a thousand Impertinencies to thee, within a Month of thy Nativity. In fine, be trusty to thy Friend.

LETTER

LETTER XI.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

IT is not unknown at the Divan, how the Princes of Italy have worried one another these Two Years. I dispatch'd long ago some Memoirs of the Feuds between the Barbarini's and the Duke of Parma. The Pope upholds the Former, making the Quarrel his own, in Defence of the Ecclesiastick State: The Venetians, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the Duke of Modena, with the French King, interest themselves in the Cause of the Latter. He is a Prince of an Active Spirit, and darts up and down like Lightning through the Pope's Territories. If he has lost Castro, Montalto, and other Places of Strength in this War, it is but by Way of Exchange; having possessed himself of as considerable Holds belonging to his Enemies. Yet, the Barbarini's sheltring themselves under the Protection of Pope Urban, seem to triumph and promise themselves an entire Victory; using the Artifices of Superstition, to weaken the Duke's Credit. And because some of his Vessels (which carried above a Thousand Souldiers) were cast away, they would perswade the credulous World, that Heaven fights against him. They likewise had designed, to build a Fort and a Bridge over the River Po, to open a Way to themthemſelves into the Confederates Country, and to ſhut it up to all Invaders of their own; but were prevented by the Venetians, who ſent Ten Thouſand Men to ſtop the Building of the Bridge, or to demoliſh it, if built.

In the mean while, the Confederates though they ſeemed to eſpouſe the Duke's Quarrel, yet triffled with him, protracting their Aſſiſtance, and diſputing about Punctilio's; every one reſtraining the Conditions of their Friendſhip, within the Limits that would beſt ſquare with the Intereſt of their own State. They had all Armies on foot, but could not agree how to diſpoſe of them. The Venetians demanded ſuch a Poſt, as might be moſt advantageous to that Republick. The Duke of Toſcany, would have the main Body of their Forces ſo quartered, as to cover his Dominions. Thus, each Party purſued their own Claim, while their Enemies gained Time, and put themſelves in a Poſture, either to march into the Territories of the confederates, or, defend the Eccleſiaſtick State.

Certainly, it is Fatal to the Chriſtians, to be thus divided among themſelves, even when they have greateſt Cauſe of Union. Yet, the Duke of Parma, the very Soul of this Confederacy, breaks through all their Demurrs and Heſitations, impatient of fruitleſs Delays; ruſhes into Ferrara; takes Bondeno, abandoned by the Garriſon; after that, La Stellata, a Place of greater Strength; but, proceeding forward, the Barbarini's encamped not far from Ferrara, the better to obſerve the Progreſs greſs of the Confederates, and ſo put a ſtop to the Motions of the Duke. He and his Friends had Twenty Thouſand Men in the Field, to which the Venetians not long after, added Six Thouſand more. They were in different Bodies; and as they quarter'd themſelves, ſo the Papal Forces remov'd their Camp. Several Skirmiſhes paſſed between them, but no great Execution done.

In the mean while, the Venetians were not idle by Sea, having ſeveral Barks and Galleys full of arm'd Men, Coaſting along the Pope's Territories. They took Five Forts on the Shore; and, piercing farther into the Country, made themſelves Maſters of Arriano, a great Town, and ſacked Codegoro, putting all to the Sword, and laying the Place in Aſhes.

On the other ſide, the Barberini's ſeized on Spilimberto, Vignivola, and ſome other weakly guarded Towns on the Frontiers of Modena, and killed Two Hundred of the Confederates, who had inveſted Crevalcuore. Cardinal Antonio, on the Pope's Side, has the Management of the War; a Man of an aſpiring Genius, and very ſubtle. He, perceiving the Duke of Toſcany incenſed at the late Loſs, had taken the Field, with a conſiderable Army; ſends Six Thouſand Men to oppoſe him, but they were raw and undiſciplin'd Souldiers, and could not hinder the Duke's Forces, from ſeizing an Important Paſs, and reducing the City of Pieve, Monteleone, Caſtiliano del Lago and Paſſiniano.

While the Sons of War were thus buſied in the Field, the Agents of Peace were not wanting on all Sides, to accommodate the Differences that threatned all Italy with fatal Consequences. But, they did no more than amuse one another with Ambiguities, Subterfuges, and Evasions; while the Barberini's sought to gain Time, and draw the King of Spain to countenance their Interest. The Venetians, sensible of this underhand Dealing, protested by their Ambassador at Madrid, that they would unite with the French Crown, if his Catholick Majesty, should by indirect Ways strengthen the Barberini's. The King, apprehensive of such a League, forbears to meddle in an Affair which might be so Injurious to Spain, and gives Instructions to his Ambassadors at Rome and other Courts of Italy, to mediate a Peace, which might be advantageous to the Confederates.

The Treaties however came to nothing, and the Mediators finding themselves eluded, suspended their Negotiations, and gave fresh Opportunity to the Men of Arms to play their Parts. Cardinal Antonio assaulted Nonantola with Four Thousand Men, but was defeated by the Venetians, who slew several Hundreds of his Souldiers, and took Two Hundred Prisoners. After this, the Confederates plunder'd all the Country of Ferrara, and took Vergato, defended by Eight Hundred Men. In the Surprizal of Bazano, they kill'd above Two Hundred of the Enemy; and, marching forward, took Monteria, Serravalle, and other Places; while Cardinal Barberini's Forces, were cut off at Borgo St. Sepolchro, where he lost Eight Cannon, non, Four Petards, with Abundance of Provisions.

It would be an endless Task, to recount all the Skirmishes and Battels, that have passed between them. I only inform thee of the most Remarkable, that thou may'st insert them in the Register of the Ottoman Empire.

To conclude this Letter, it will be worth thy Observation, that the Pope falling Sick, and his Death feared, did much conduce to put an End to these Differences. For, the Barberini's, now being apprehensive of the Advantage his Death would give the Confederate Princes, were very forward to embrace any Overtures of Peace: So that by the Dexterity of the French Ministers, it was at last concluded, and all Differences adjusted; the Duke of Parma's Territories being restored to him, the Censures of the Church taken off, and the Ecclesiastick State put in the same Condition it was in at the Beginning of the War.

I shall continue to send thee such Intelligence, as may be serviceable to thee in that Eminent Station thou enjoyest in the Empire of the True Believers. And, shall think my self a very happy Man, if I can by any Means acquire thy Favour.

LETTER XII.

To Lubano Abufei Saad, an Ægyptian Knight.

ONE would think that there were yet ſome of the Ancient Race of Gyants on Earth. Here is a Man come to this Court, full Eight Foot high, a Finlander by Nation; he looks like ſome Poſthumous Birth of the Sons of Titan. He is Maſter of prodigious Strength, and challenges any Two the ſtouteſt Men in France, to throw him a Fall. I have ſeen him take Two Boys of Ten Years of Age on the Palm of each Hand, and lift them up from the Ground together, with his Arms ſtretched out to the full Length, and walk Sixty Paces with them in this Poſture; at the End of which Stage, he ſet them down again on their Feet, without the leaſt Violence or Straining. There are none ſo hardy, as to accept of his Challenge; for, they know he will not ſuffer them to come nearer than the Extremity of his Arm. And, ſuch is the monſtrous Strength of his Hand, that he will either infallibly throw them down, or ſtifle them with his Graſp. He talks of Travelling into Turkey; if he does, I hope he will have more Diſcretion, than to venture within the Seraglio, leſt he incurr the Fate of the renowned Muſcovite Wreſtler, in Sultan Amurath's Time. Thou remembreſt that Tragedy,

gedy, which made all the Brave and the Generous, condemn Amurath's Cruelty. He was a Stout Prince himſelf; and, it look'd like Envy in him, to puniſh the Efforts of Courage in his Slaves, with ſo unrelenting a Rigour. But, he was himſelf a Slave to his Paſſions; and, Jealouſie had the Predominance in his Temper. That Vice betrayed him to horrid Violences, of which thou art not ignorant, having been privy to ſeveral of his Amours.

This puts me in mind of a Spaniſh Cavalier, who had a very Vertuous and Beautiful Wife, which, thou wilt ſay, are Two rare Companions. He kept a Moor in his Houſe, whom the Lady had one Time caus'd to be ſeverely beaten. The Moor ſecretly vow'd Revenge. He had an Intrigue with one of the Lady's Women, to whom he imparted his Mind. They conſpired together, to accuſe the Lady of Lightneſs, and Infidelity to her Husband's Bed. The Cavalier, their Maſter was naturally Jealous, as generally are all the Spaniards; theſe Two poſſeſſed him with a Belief, that the Gardiner had frequent Acceſs to his Lady's Chamber, and undertook to make him an Eye-Witneſs of it. Whereupon, one of them goes privately to the Gardiner, and tells him, that the Lady would ſpeak with him. Whilſt the other runs to the Lord, and bids him make haſt; for, that the Gardiner was at that Inſtant with his Lady. The Impatient Cavalier haſtens up Stairs, and meeting the Gardiner coming out of the Door of his Chamber, ſtabs him to the Heart, without any farther Expoſtulation; and, ruſhing furiouſly into the Chamber, ſerves his Wife in the ſame Manner. But, coming down again, the Maid ſtruck with Remorſe at ſo black an event, fell down at his Feet, confeſſing her Crime, and declaring, that her Lady was Innocent. The Spaniard, raging Mad, at a Conjunction of ſo many Misfortunes, ſtabs the Maid and the Negro; and laſt of all, to complete the Tragedy, kills himſelf.

I have often wonder'd, that ſome ſuch fatal Conſequences did not attend the Jealouſie of Sultan Amurath. He ſpared not to rip up the Bellies of his Pages, for the Sake of Two or Three Melons; and, 'tis a Miracle, that he did not ſacrifice half the Slaves of the Seraglio, on the Account of his Miſtreſſes.

Thou art now in a better Station, and free from Reſtraint. Act according to Reaſon, and let not Paſſion byaſs thee one way nor other.

of the Year 1644.

LETTER

LETTER XIII.

To the Kaimacham.

THOU haſt often required an Account of the Parliament of France, which is the Supreme Court of the Kingdom. Though the Name be known at the Sublime Port, yet the Miniſters are unacquainted with the Power and Authority of this Senate.

When it was firſt inſtituted it conſiſted of Twelve Peers, an Hundred Biſhops, and all the Prime Nobility of the Land; who had power to give Audience to Foreign Ambaſſadors; to adjuſt all Differences of the Subjects. In fine, it might then be called the Sovereign Tribunal, from whence there could be no Appeal. Three Foreign Kings have ſat as Members of this Court. It was in thoſe Days Ambulatory, following the King whitherſoever he went; but now it is always aſſembled in Paris, in the Palace which Philip the Fair built for his own Dwelling Houſe. This Parliament, is divided into Seven Chambers, whereof, that which they call the GREAT CHAMBER, is the Chief. There belong to this Chamber, Seven Preſidents, Twelve Counſellours, the King's Cadi, or Attorney, with a great Number of Advocates, and Men of the Law. The Preſidents and Counſellours are cloath'd in Scarlet, which ſtrikes an awful Reverence into all that approach their Pre-ſence. Some call this, the Golden Chamber; and well they may, ſince that glittering Metal, is thought to be the Umpire of moſt Cauſes that are tryed in this Court. He that brings moſt Gold, is ſure to have his Buſineſs firſt diſpatched, and to come off Conqueror. For, as their preſent Power is little elſe but a mere Formality, ſo is alſo their Juſtice. The Kings of France, have gradually ſo clipt their Original Authority, that now they ſeem to be but the Shadow of their Ancient ſelves. They never pretended to meddle with Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; that was always out of their Juriſdiction. The Muſti of Rome, claims this Prerogative as his Right. From whence thou mayeſt obſerve, how maim'd and imperfect is the Royalty of Chriſtian Kings, who cannot puniſh their own Subjects, if Clergy-men, without the Pope's Permiſſion. Yet, though this Chamber cannot meddle with the Eccleſiaſticks, they have a Privilege to diſpoſe of the Regency, during the King's Minority; as is evident in the late Queen-Mother, Mary de Medicis, and the preſent Anne of Auſtria, who were both by the Parliament declared Regents. They alſo confirm all the Kings Edicts; neither does he proclaim War without their Conſent, or eſtabliſh any Alliance.

There are alſo beſides this, Six other Chambers of Parliament; Five whereof, are called Chambers of Inqueſts, and they conſiſt of Two Preſidents, Twenty Counſellours, and a convenient Number of Lawyers. The Sixth Chamber is a Collection out of all the Reſt, and and contains no leſs than Two Hundred Officers. Here, all Criminal Cauſes are tryed; which are either immediately, or by Appeal brought before them. As in the Chambers of Inqueſts, Controverſies of the Civil Law are decided.

It is a pleaſant Sight, to ſee the Men of the Law all in their Habits, which are very Glorious and Rich. Indeed, all the Citizens of Paris, are extremely Gallant in their Apparel. But, I cannot be reconciled to their laviſh Cuſtom, of changing the Faſhion of their Clothes almoſt with every Moon. This Vanity has been forbid in all well-ordered Commonwealths. And, thou knoweſt, our Eaſtern People would as ſoon be ſtript of their Skins, as change the Faſhion, which has been in uſe for immemorable Ages. Here they have no Diſtinction of Dreſs, the Noble and Vulgar, Rich and Poor go all alike. You cannot diſcern a Slave from a Prince by his Garb.

Paris is divided into Four Parts, the City, the Univerſity, the Town, and the Suburbs. It is about Three Leagues in Circuit; ſeated advantageouſly enough, but wanting Fortifications. Henry IV. had added ſome Strength to it, had he not been apprehenſive of the Seditious Humour of the Inhabitants, who in time might make an ill Uſe of his Kindneſs, and ſhut thoſe Gates againſt him, which he ſhould build for their Defence againſt a Foreign Enemy.

The Court is generally at St. Germain en Lay one of the King's Royal Manſions, ſeated on the Top of a Mountain, which commands a Proſpect of a large and beautiful Valley. I have been there often, that I might be the better able to penetrate into the Conduct of Cardinal Mazarini, who is never from the Queen-Regent. I have already tranſmitted to the Sublime Port, ſuch Intelligence as I could gain of this Great Miniſter's Intrigues. I will now entertain thee with a Glimpſe of this Palace, that thereby thou may'ſt conjecture at the Magnificence of the Kings of France.

It is divided into Two Parts, the Old and the New. The Former was built by Charles I. the Latter by Henry IV. That may boaſt of its Antiquity, but this is ſo Majeſtick and Coſtly a Structure, as ſufficiently demonſtrates, that Modern Architects come not far ſhort of the Ancient Romans. The Rooms are all lofty and large, the Roofs and Ceilings admirably contriv'd and adorn'd; the whole conſiſts of ſo many Courts, that it rather looks like a Town than the Seat of one Family.

But pardon me, Illuſtrious Kaimacham, if I tell thee, that none of the Kings of the Eaſt, can match this Monarch in the Gardens belonging to this Palace. I ſaw there ſuch a Charming Variety of Delightful Objects, as made Art ſeem to ſurpaſs Nature, and even to out-do it ſelf. In a Word, the Chriſtian Princes, are very ingenious in the Contrivance of their Pleaſures, and make all the Elements contribute to their Recreations. Thou haſt often ſeen the Artificial Fireworks which are exhibiexhibited at Conſtantinople at our Feſtivals, and on all Occaſions of Publick Joy. But, thou haſt never beheld ſuch Water-works, as are expoſed in the Gardens of this Palace every Day. There, by the mere Force of this Liquid Element, Inſtruments of Muſick are ſet at Work, which afford a Harmony little Inferiour to the beſt Conſorts in the World; and, which extremely adds to the Pleaſure, one may at the ſame Time behold ſeeming Muſicians playing on them, and keeping as exact Time with their Fingers on the Keys of Organs, Strings of Viols and Lutes, as if they were living Perſons. There you may ſee, all Manner of Mechanick Trades exerciſed by Statues, who do every Thing with a proper Action, and are very eager at their Employments, ſo long as the Water gives them Motion; when that ceaſes, they all return to their Primitive Inactivity. From hence you paſs to a ſeeming Sea, with Tritons moving on Dolphins, and ſounding their Shell-Trumpets before Neptune, who is drawn in a Chariot by Four Tortoiſes. The Story of Perſeus and Andromeda, is alſo acted to the Life by mere Statues. But the moſt Ingenious Piece of Workmanſhip, is, Orpheus playing on a Viol, while the Trees move, and Wild Beaſts dance round about him. This is ſo coſtly an Invention, that, as one of the Overſeers of the Water-works told me, a String of Orpheus's Viol being broken, coſt the late King Lewis Thirteen Hundred Crowns to repair it again.

We Mahometans, are apt to value our ſelves too high, on the Score of our Princes Grandure. We boaſt, we flouriſh, and are guilty of a Thouſand Inſults, deſpiſing and putting the reſt of Mankind under our Sandals; as if none of the Race of Adam underſtood the World but we, or had the Wit and Power to carve out to themſelves the ſame Felicities we enjoy. The Monarchs of the Eaſt, ſtyle themſelves, The only Happy ones, Poſſeſſors of infinite Treaſures; Kings of the World, Shadows of God, and what not! The Great Mogol, with his Omrah's and Raja's, pride themſelves in their Elephants. So do the Kings and Mandarins of China and Tunquin. The Sophi of Perſia, ſwells at the Sight of his immenſe Treaſures of Gold and precious Stones; glorying, that the very Shooes of his Horſes, are of the moſt exalted Metal; alſo the Mangers wherein they feed, and the Nails whereby they are faſten'd to the Ground. The Cham of Tartary, rejoices in the Multitude and Strength of his Horſes, his Winged Chariots and Waggons, and, that when his Armies riſe and ſit down, the Earth trembles with their Weight and Motion. 'Tis true indeed, the Grand Signior, who is the Wiſeſt of the Wiſe, and the Greateſt of theſe Great Ones, is not guilty of this Vanity. He is deſtin'd by the Lord of the Univerſe, to chaſtiſe the Follies both of the Eaſt and the Weſt. Yet, his Slaves cannot forbear Rhodomontado's. I have heard ſome of our huffing Janizaries, tell the Greeks of Conſtantinople and Pera, that the Royal Seraglio is the moſt Magnificent Fabrick in the World, and that the the Garden belonging to it, is a perfect Transcript of Paradise. Thou wilt not approve such Brags as these, when thou considerest, how expert the Infidels are in Building; and, that they spare no Cost to erect such Edifices, whose very Ruins may proclaim to future Ages, the Magnificence of their Founders. And, as to their Gardens, they are so regular and beautiful, adorn'd with so many Delicacies of Nature and Art, that one would think, they were made by some Traditional Disciples of Adam; and, that they had their Rules, from the Primitive Planter of the World.

The French King, has other Houses and Gardens of Pleasure round about Paris, where the Court interchangeably divert themselves during the Summer.

I humbly kiss the Hem of thy Vest, craving thy Protection against the Malice of my Enemies.

Paris, 16th. of the 7th. Moon,

LETTER XIV.

To the most Illustrious Vizir Azem, at the Port.

SInce the Losses which the German Emperor has received from the Arms of Ragotski, I am inform'd by Nathan Ben Saddi, that the Emperor designs to send a splendid Embassy with extraordinary Presents to the Sultan, in Hopes to prevail on him, not to protect that Prince.

'Tis true, Ragotski is of a violent and changeable Nature, and therefore no great Confidence is to be reposed in him. Yet, I take it to be the Interest of the Sultan, rather to win him by Offices of Kindness and Friendship, than to make him his Enemy, by deserting him in this Juncture.

He is at the Head of a Potent and Formidable Army, has taken Solnock, Breden, Mernatz, together with the strong Castle of Sendar near Cassovia; and many other Places of less Importance, whereby a Way is laid open for his Army to over-run all Hungary, if assisted with the Ottoman Forces. Thus will he do the Office, which, they say, the Jackall performs to the Lion, that is, to hunt out the Prey, and secure it for his Master and Sovereign.

Besides, the Fortune of this Prince, seems to invite our farther Assistance; for, he has had had great Succeſs all along this War; whereas the Ottoman Forces no ſooner appear'd on the Frontiers of Moravia, but Six Thouſand of them were encountred by the Germans, and routed.

Should the Sultan deſert him now, he may be compelled to reſign himſelf, with all Tranſylvania, to the Protection of the German Emperor. It is not ſafe to run the Riſque of ſuch an Event; Tranſylvania cannot ſupport it ſelf. Either the Sultan muſt continue his Protection, or the Germans will ſoon find the Way, to plant their Garriſons in the four Capital Cities, and reduce the whole Country under their Obedience.

Paris, 27th. of the 7th. Moon, of the Year 1644.

LETTER XV.

To Aſis Baſſa, at the Port.

THE Pagans, in painting Fortune Blind, diſcovered but the Dimneſs of their own Sight. And 'twas a double Errour, to offer Sacrifice to her, that could not diſcern her Votaries. Yet, in my Sentence, the Chriſtians are more to blame, who term her Inconſtant, Partial, Bawd, Whore, and what not? Theſe

These are Prophanations of Providence, and impious Scandals cast on Eternal Destiny, Fortune and Chance, are but Nick-names of Fate, since there is nothing absolutely Casual in the World. They see the Vertuous persecuted, while the Vicious insult and flourish; and they tax Heaven with unequal Dispensation of Rewards and Punishments; as if with Epicurus, they thought the Adorable Numen, took no Care of Things on this Side the Empyræum, and rested in an Eternal Ignorance of Humane Affairs.

Doubtless, the Infidels are in an incurable Error. They pore on the Outside of Common Events, and look no farther; they behold not the hidden Chain of Causes, nor the Invisible Hand, which disposes all Contingencies with admirable Order and Decorum. Hence it is, that what comes not to pass but by the certain Decree of Fate, appears to these Buzzards, only as an Accidental Occurrence, and the mere Effect of Chance.

But thou, who art instructed in the Doctrines of Truth, wilt have other Thoughts of that, which befell a Poor Man not long since in these Parts. This Person was Charitable to Excess; for, he gave away all that he had, to relieve the Necessities of others, chusing rather to throw himself naked upon Providence, than to deny an Alms to any One that ask'd him; so long as he had any Thing to bestow. Being at length, by his constant Liberalities, reduced to a very indigent Condition, he was forced to betake himself himſelf to Digging for his Livelihood. Yet, notwithſtanding he gained his own Bread with hard Labour, he ceaſed not to ſhew his wonted Kindneſſes to the Poor, giving them whatſoever he could poſſibly ſpare from his own Neceſſities. One Day, as he was digging in a Field belonging to the Duke of Montmorency, he found ſeveral Earthen Pots full of Gold, ſuppoſed to be buried there in the Time of the Civil Wars. The good Man carries this huge Treaſure by Degrees home to his Houſe, with all imaginable Privacy. And, having diſtributed the greateſt Part of it in Works of Charity, he was going with his laſt Reſerve to the Houſe of a decayed Gentleman, to whom he gave a ſufficient Sum to repair his ſhatter'd Fortunes, being all that he had left: When, as he returned homeward, he found a Jewel in the High-way, which being ſold, yielded him Ten Thouſand Crowns. A Noble Bank for new Liberalities, and a convincing Argument, that there was ſomething more than Chance, which thus ſtrangely recruited his Purſe, that it might never ceaſe to be opened in Largeſſes to the Poor.

Who will not ſay, That Fate had a Hand in the Death of that Souldier, in the Duke of Anguien's Army, who maliciouſly and wrongfully accuſed his Comrade, of raiſing a Mutiny? For, the incens'd General, took a Fuſee, and diſcharged it at the innocent Perſon, thinking to have killed him on the Spot; but, it prov'd otherwiſe, the Bullet paſſing through ſome

Part

Part of his Body, and through half a dozen Tents, ſmote the Slanderer in the Pan of the Knee, which put him into ſo violent a Fever, that he died in Two days; while the other (whom before his Death he confeſſed to be Innocent) lives yet a Witneſs of this Remarkable Stroke of Divine Nemeſis.

The faithful Watchman of the Sublime Port, Mahmut, ſalutes thee with humbleſt Obeiſance, and wiſhes thee in all Things, a favourable and benign Deſtiny.

LETTER XVI.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

SINCE I came to this City, I have learned the Art of making Watch[illegible]; which I exerciſe not for Lucre, but to comply with a Precept of the Alcoran; wherein alſo I find no ſmall Diverſion, it being a Relief to Melancholy to be in Action.

Should the Eccleſiaſticks of the Latin Church, be made ſenſible that I practice a Mechanick Trade, they would think me a Scandal to their Profeſſion, ſince I wear the Habit of a Clerk, Clerk. They esteem it next door to Sacrilege, for a Gown-Man to condescend to the Labours of the Laity. They would pull my Cassock over my Shoulders, should they catch me in this Honest Crime; forgetting, that the Primitive Professors of their Religious Orders, got their Bread by making of Baskets.

The Box I send thee, contains some of my Merchandice; being designed as Presents for some of the Ministers of the Port, and my other Friends at Constantinople. I desire thee to take Care in sending it safe, that the Watches may receive no Damage by Water.

It is reported here, That the Emperour is Sick; thou wilt do well to inform me of the Truth. I hear also, That Prodigies have been lately seen at Vienna, which the French interpret, as Fore-runners of his Death, and Signs of approaching Desolations in Germany. I am not credulous of all Things, which the Vulgar say on such Occasions. Yet I cannot deny, but that the Angels who preside over Kingdoms and Empires, may be the Monitors of Mankind, and by raising unusual Spectacles in the Elements, may warn Mortals of future Alterations. This was the Opinion also of thy Country-man Josephus, who says, That immediately before the Destruction of Jerusalem, there was a Voice heard in the Temple of Solomon, supposed to be uttered by Angels, saying, Arise, let us go hence; as if the Guardian Spirits of that City, were then forsaking their Charge.

In

In this Place not long ago, were ſeen Three Suns together, or at leaſt the Appearance of ſo many. This the Superſtitious conſtrued as an Omen of ill Luck. While the Court-Flatterers ſaid, they repreſented the Duke of Orleans, the Prince of Conde, and Cardinal Mazarini, who now have united their Intereſts, after a long Time of Animoſities and Miſunderſtandings. I look upon this Apparition, to be only a Natural Production, reſulting from the Reflexion of the Sun-beams on a bright Cloud. It is eaſie to ſolve ſuch Phænomena, without a Miracle. Yet ſome, I confeſs, have the Stamp of a Supernatural Power in their very Front. I my ſelf once ſaw Two mighty Armies marſhall'd in the Air, who acted all the Bloody Tragedies of War, and made Arabia deaf with the Noiſe of their Artillery; yet, not a Cloud at that time to be ſeen. But I remark'd no extraordinary Event to follow it. 'Tis hard to trace the Omnipotent in ſuch Myſterious Works, or learn the Drift of Providence.

I deſire thee to uſe thy utmoſt Diligence, to penetrate into the Deſigns of the Court where thou reſideſt. 'Tis an Honourable Poſt, to ſerve the Greateſt Monarch in the World. Be Faithful and Vigilant, ſo may God and the Grand Signior heap greater Favours on thee. Adieu.

LETTER XVII.

To Solyman Aga, Chief Eunuch of the Women.

I Perceive by thy Letters, that our Heroick Sultan is very Industrious to take off the Scandal of Impotence, which the Ladies at his first Accession to the Throne fastned on him, having now seen a Fourth Son, born to him in the Seraglio. The Multitude of Subjects, is the Glory of a Monarch, and a strong Defence in Time of War; and, the Multitude of the Prince's Children, is the Security of his People both in War and Peace.

The Sultan's Adventure, as he was going to Scutary, puts me in mind of an Accident, which befell one of the Ancient Kings of Ægypt; who, as he was walking in the Royal Garden at Memphis, spyed an Eagle flying toward the Place, where he was; at which Sight he stood still, gazing on the King of Birds; till at length the Eagle arriving to that Part of the Air which was over his Head, lets fall a Woman's Shooe at his Feet. The King surprized at this Accident, takes up the Shooe; and, surveying its exquisite Symmetry and Form, thence took his Measures of the Lady that had worn it, and suddenly grew enamoured of the unknown Fair; proclaiming through all Ægypt, great Rewards Rewards to any that could discover the Owner of that Shooe. At length, a certain Beautiful Courtezan of Naucretis, named Rhodope, was proved to be the Mistress of it; who being brought to the King's Presence, he took her to his Bed, making her the Partner of his Empire.

This Lady had a much better Fate, than the tall Armenian Woman, with whom Sultan Ibrahim fell in Love on the like Occasion: For, Rhodope, after she had enjoyed her Honour many Years, at last died peaceably in her Bed, and was Entombed in one of the Pyramids of Ægypt: Whereas, thou tellest me, that this Armenian, soon after her Exaltation to the Sultan's Embraces, was strangled by the Queen-Mother's Command. I tell thee, it was a Bold and Cruel Act; and, were the Sultan sensible how she was Murdered, he would not spare to vent his Indignation against her that bare him.

LETTER XVIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

ONE would think it an eaſie Matter, for a Stranger to conceal himſelf, in ſo vaſt and Populous a City as is Paris. Eſpecially, one who makes ſo mean and contemptible a Figure, as does the ſuppoſed Titus of Moldavia. I little thought, that the Lowneſs of my Stature, and the Deformity of my Body, would have attracted any Curious Eyes; but, that my very Habit, would have protected me from all Suſpicion, and, that I might have paſs'd an Age undiſcovered, amongſt the Infinite Crowds of People, who throng both the Houſes and Streets of Paris. Yet, there are ſome Critical Moments of our Lives wherein Fate delights to ſports with us, to throw Stumbling-Blocks in our Way, to entangle us in Difficulties and Perils. This is a neceſſary Diſcipline of Heaven, to rowze Men from the Lees of Security, and Confidence in their own Strength and Abilities, and to inſtruct us, That Providence alone can extricate us out of the Labyrinths we often fall into.

I was walking Yeſterday before the Great Temple of this City, which is dedicated to Mary the Mother of Jeſus; when, on a ſudden, I was accoſted (by one whom I little imagin'd to have ſeen in Paris) with theſe Words; Mahmut?

Mahmut! How came you by this Habit? What makes you in this Place? Are you a Christian, or do you thus disguise your self for other Ends? Thou may'st easily imagine, what a Terror seized me, when I knew that he who spoke to me, was my old Master at Palermo. It brought to my Remembrance all the cruel Blows and Stripes I had received, during that irksome Captivity; and I could almost have phansy'd my self ready for the Bastinado. However, dissembling my Confusion, I answered briskly, Sir, you are mistaken in the Person; my Name is not Mahmut, but Titus. I am a Christian and a Catholick; if you are such your self, you have no Reason to upbraid my Habit, since I wear it as a Badge of my Profession, being a Student, and Candidate of the Priesthood.

This Answer, instead of satisfying him, did but augment his Jealousie; and, being of a Passionate Temper, he broke out into fierce Language, calling me, Turk, Infidel, Slave, Dog, and all the ill Names his Fury could suggest. He spoke so loud, that it was taken Notice of by the People as they walked by, who began to gather about us, to learn the Occasion of so much Noise. I then condemn'd my self, for not rather owning my self to him, and inviting him to some more retired Place, where I might give him an Account of my Circumstances. I look'd upon my self as a dead Man, and would gladly have sustained Seven Years of Servitude again in Sicily, to have been rid of the Fear I was now under, of a more terrible Punishment.

While

While I was in this Confusion of Spirit thinking of Nothing but Racks and Tortures, the Noise of the Rabble, who flock'd about us, had alarm'd the People that were at their Devotions in the Church, who came running out, to enquire the Cause of such a Tumult: Among the Rest, a Friar, eminent for his Learning and Vertue, and who had a particular Esteem and Friendship for me, perceiving the Matter, came up close to me, and taking me by the Hand, spoke aloud these Words: Sirs, forbear to Injure a Stranger in the Court of the Mother of God. I know this Man very well, and will be Responsible for him; he is a Catholick-Clerk, and Servant of the Living God. The Rabble gave a great Shout at the End of this Harangue; and had not my Sicilian Master made a narrow escape, they would have endangered to tear him in Pieces. I know not what became of him afterwards, but I attended the Friar into the Temple, where we staid during the Celebration of their Mass; and, then he conducted me through the inner Parts of the Temple, by private ways into the Lodgings of the Priests; whence we issu'd out by a Postern, and, taking Boat, we cross'd the River Seine into the Fields. The Friar congratulated my Escape from the Hands of the Multitude; and, I return'd him a Thousand Thanks, for lifting me out of the Mire.

Thou seest, Dear Friend, that the Arabian Proverb speaks not in vain, when it says; That the Habitation of Danger, is on the Bor- ders of Security: And, That a Man never runs greater Hazards, than when he least fears them.

He that turns the Scales of Life and Death, Good and Evil, grant, that some happy Emergency may always arise, to divert the Perils which thou shalt incurr in this Uncertain Life.

Paris, 7th. of the 9th. Moon, of the Year 1644.

LETTER XIX.

To the Kaimacham.

THIS Court is now in Mourning, for the Death of the Chief Musti, or Pope. And indeed, there seems to be more than mere Ceremony in it, he having all along favoured the French Interest. He had almost pass'd the Twenty Second Year of his Pontificate; which few of the Popes have done since St. Peter, a Disciple of their Messias, from whom they pretend to derive their Succession. Their Histories say, that this Peter, was the Musti of Rome Five and Twenty Years, and that since him not one, whether he was elected Young or Old, has enjoy'd the Sovereignty so long. Those that have approached nearest to it, were Adrian I. Sylvester I. and this Urban VIII. who is now dead. It is reported, that at their Coronation, the Master of the Ceremonies, kneeling down, burns Flax before him that is elected, and with a loud Voice, repeats these Words Thrice: O Holy Father! think not you are to live here as long as did St. Peter; but let this Flame put you in Mind, of the Vanity of the World, and how swiftly the Glory of it passes away.

Cardinal Pamphilio succeeds him in the Roman Chair, and has given himself the Name of Innocent X. it being the Custom always at their Promotion, to assume the Name of some Holy Man (a strange Piece of Hypocrisie, as if that was sufficient to atone for their own wicked Lives.) But, none of them has presumed to take the Name of Peter, out of Respect to the First Vicar of Jesus. This Pamphilio is above Threescore and Twelve Years of Age, by whose Exaltation the Family of the Barberini's, to whom he was a profess'd Enemy, begin to fall into Disgrace. Cardinal Antonio, one of that Family, is taxed with embezelling the Treasures of the Church, committed to his Trust.

He flies to France for Succour; and though he had no great Reason to expect Cardinal Mazarini's Friendship, having formerly opposed his Interest at the Roman Court, in the Time of the late Pope Urban; yet this Cardinal, by an Excess of Generosity, has espoused his Cause, and engaged his Master, the King of France, in his Quarrel.

What will be the Issue of this Contention, Time will evince. But, Men begin to talk already, That the King of France, will carry a War into Italy, which will ſhake the Walls of Rome it ſelf.

Thus, there is no Stability in Humane Affairs; but Time and Providence, perpetually ſtart new Events.

God grant that thou may'ſt live to ſee the Ottoman Creſcent, on the Top of St. Peter's Church in Rome.

LETTER XX.

To the Vizir Azem, at the Port.

THE great Preparations which Sultan Ibrahim is making by Land and Sea, affords a Subject of Diſcourſe to all Chriſtendom; but adminiſters a ſpecial Occaſion of Jealouſie, to the Republick of Venice.

They look on his declared Intentions to Invade Malta, only as a Cover or Cloak to his real Deſigns upon themſelves; being confirm'd in their ſuſpicion, by the Compliaints which the Sultan made to Soranzo, their Reſident at the Port, when he delivered himſelf with an Air, that expreſſed far deeper Reſentments than his Words.

Nor can the Artificial Strains of Courteſie which which are used toward the Resident, blind or cancel the apparent Affront and Contempt which he received from the Kaimacham; who refused to give him Audience after some hours Attendance, though at the same time Prince Ragotski's Envoy, was admitted at the first Word.

These Considerations, with others of like Nature, have sufficiently alarm'd the Venetians; so that they are making all the seasonable Preparations that are requisite, to oppose the Torrent of the Ottoman Fury and Rage, which they apprehend is to be poured on them. This, they perform with all imaginable Diligence and Secresie, being neither willing to give a just Ground of Jealousie to the Sultan, nor yet to be surprized unprovided.

There have lately been extraordinary Consultations in the Senate about these Affairs, some disapproving these Warlike Preparations, others promoting them: One Party judging, that a Peace ought rather to be purchased with a Tender of Gold: A contrary Side pleading that such a Purchase would be both dishonourable and disadvantageous; since upon every new Disgust, the Ottomans would commence, or at least, threaten a War, on purpose, to erect a continual Mart for Peace, the Sale thereof being like to prove so profitable to them. Among the rest of the Senators, Signior Grimaldi made an Oration, of which I have obtained an Authentick Copy; And, it speaks thus:

THIS Glorious Republick, which has flouriſh'd for ſo many Ages, ought not, in my Opinion, to become the Merchandiſe of upſtart Shepherds. 'Tis needleſs, to recount our Original, or wipe off the Ancient Duſt of our Primitive Records, that we may be able to tell the World, we are the Relicks of Troy. 'Tis bootleſs, to put you in Mind, how this moſt ſerene and flouriſhing State, laid her firſt Foundations in the Sea, and built her Neſt in the Floods: That the Nereids fled to her Shadow; and, the Reſt of the Sea-Gods, even Neptune himſelf, courted her Alliance and Protection. Suffice it to ſay, that this Victorious State thus founded and built, has ſpread her Conqueſts through Iſtria, Dalmatia, and Epirus; has annexed unto her Government, Corfu, Cephalenia, Zant, and Crete, with many other Iſlands of the Adriatick, and Mediterranean Seas; and, that this Virgin Commonwealth, has preſerved her ſelf undeflowered theſe Twelve Hundred Years. In all which Time, ſhe never ſubmitted to the luſtful Tyranny of any Foreign Conqueror: And, muſt ſhe now become a Common Proſtitute to Infidels? be bought and ſold at any Rate? and pay the Price of her own Slavery? Has this moſt Auguſt Senate, by a long Series of ſucceſsful Wars, been exalted to the Height of Sovereign Power, and is she now to be brav'd into a base and mercenary Peace, the gilded Mask of abject Slavery? We that have stemmed the Torrent of Ottoman Invasions, and resisted the Puissance of all Asia, must we now pull down our own Banks, and tamely let the proud insulting Enemy in, paving his Way with Gold? Rouze up my Lords, the Ancient Genius of this Mighty State, awaken the old Venetian Valour; and, unless you resolve always to bear the Ottoman Yoke, now shake it off, and make a War your Choice, rather than your last Remedy.

The Eyes of all the Western Nations are fixed on this August Assembly. The Fate of Christendom is now in the Scales; it is in your Power alone to turn the doubtful Balance, it is from your unshaken Valor, the Christian World expects a Benefit, which shall be recorded on the Pillars of Eternity. Suffer not your selves, Most Excellent Lords, to be cajoled by the specious Pretences of the Ottoman Foe, but confide in your own Illustrious Arms, and the Justice of your Cause, which will not fail to attract the Favors of Divine Providence. Let not those Laurels, which have been all along sprinkled with the Noble Blood of your Renowned Ancestors, be tamely taken from your Heads, and trampled under the Feet of Infidels. Whom do you fear? A Man supinely lull'd in wanton Pleasures; drown'd in the soft Delights of his Seraglio; a fitter Champion for the Fields of Venus, than for the bloody Toils of Mars, the harsh Fatigues of War? But what do you dread! The Bug-bear-Title of Grand Signior? It is in our Power, to check his boasting Grandure, and make him sensible, The State of Venice, has a Sword can match the Turkish Scymitar. Do but resolve, the Work's half done. I feel already in my Mind, blissful Presages of a lasting Peace, the effect of a Just and Seasonable War, which is much to be preferred to the precarious Truce (for it deserves no better Title) which they design to cheat us with, in Contemplation of our Gold; a Truce, which they will break at Pleasure, to Start new Grounds of Composition. Thus, could we drain the Indies dry, we must refund our Treasure into the Ottoman Coffers, and all too little to satiate their Greedy Avarice, and Tyrannous Demands. Thus would the most Serene Republick of Venice, be post-pon'd to the Divan of Algiers; who have already shaken off the Turkish Yoke, retaining indeed the servile Name of Subjects, but refusing the Tribute they were wont to pay. Let us not suffer that Barbarous Little State,

thus Nobly to assert their Liberty, whilst we resign our Necks to the Yoke. Our Fleets are numerous, our Soldiers disciplin'd, our Seamen bold and expert, our Treasury full of the Nerves of War. Let us be in a readiness, and, if Sultan Ibrahim dare; be the first Aggressor; then beat Drum, sound Trumpet, and every Man to his Post.

This huffing Harangue of Signior Grimaldi, though it met with some Abettors in the Senate, yet the Counsel of the Graver and Wiser Heads prevailed; which was, to send Orders to the Venetian Resident at Constantinople, to sound the Inclinations of the Sultan, and if possible, to make a Pecuniary Accommodation.

This Intelligence I receive from a Jew, living at Venice; one whom I confide in, and who gives me a constant and faithful Account of all the Important Occurrences of that State. He is familiar with Girolamo Pusserla, and Bernardino Lupulo. Two of the Savatori who voted for Peace; by which Means, he can easily feel the Pulse of the Venetian State, nothing of Moment being conceal'd from him by these Clarissimo's.

The late Action of Giacomo da Riva, Sopraveditor of Tino against the Ships of Tripoli and Tunis, is interpreted to be done altogether in his own Defence. I doubt not, but it will be otherwise represented at the Port; but, I wish some Mens groundless Discontents, and the private Interest of others, be not improved to the Notion of Publick Injuries, by the Artifice of ſuch as wiſh not well to the Ottoman Empire.

I diſcharge my Duty, in ſending thee the beſt Intelligence I can in this Juncture.

God, the Supreme Monarch of the Univerſe, diſpoſe theſe Overtures, and all other Humane Events, to the Exaltation of the Ottoman Empire, and the Propagation of the true Faith.

LETTER XXI.

To Mirza Muhammed Effendi, Vicar to the Mufti.

THE Jews have a Proverb, That he who breeds not up his Son to ſome Trade, makes him a Thief. And the Arabians ſay, That an Idle Perſon, is the Devil's Play fellow. Therefore, our Holy, and Wiſe Lawgiver, has commanded all True Believers, to exerciſe themſelves every Day in ſome Manual Occupation. Neither is the Sultan on his Throne, any more exempted from Obedience to this Univerſal Precept, than he who cleans the Streets. The Soul of Man, is active as Fire, or, to take our Compariſon as the Hebrews do, from another Element, it can no more ceaſe from being ing busie, than Water can withhold it self from running out of every Hole of a Sieve. Men will be always exerting their Faculties one way or other, and there is no Medium between Good and Evil. Whosoever is not employ'd in One, must necessarily fall into the other. These are the Points to which all the Lines of Humane Actions tend, the Centers where all our Affairs meet. But, though there be no such Thing as a Mediocrity between these Two Extremes, and every Man is within the Circumference either of Vertue or Vice: Yet, there are certain Steps and Degrees in each; Specifick Differences also, which take their Rise and Proportions from Nature, Morality and Religion. Thus, Humane Prudence teaches us, of Two Evils to chuse the least; while the Divine Oracle instructs us, Not to stand upon Niceties and Punctilio's with Vertue, but to push forward till we arrive at an Heroick Generosity.

As for me, who serve the Grand Signior in this Station, I am forced to compound with the Laws, and capitulate with the Severer Precepts of the Alcoran. I tell many a Lye, that I may do the more effectual Service to Truth: I am compell'd to deny my Religion, that I may prepare a Way for others to propagate it. By oblique and remote Fetches of Policy, I accomplish the Direct Intentions of Justice, while I commit little Vices among the Infidels, to introduce great Vertues. Thus, making good the Counsel of the Persian Philosopher, That it is necessary for him who would reach his Journeys End, sometimes to go round about. And thou knowest what Encouragement has been given me; being assured by the Sovereign Prelate of our Holy Law, That while I keep in the Orb of my Duty to the Grand Signior, I am out of the Devil's Circle.

If thou wouldst know how I busie my self at my Hours of Leisure: I make Watches; not knowing how better to spend my vacant Time, than in framing an Instrument whereby I may perceive how Time passes away. This little Engine, points out each Minute, and measures exactly the Succession of Hours; it keeps Pace with Years, yet out-runs not Months. 'Tis the Journal of the Sun, a faithful Record of his daily Travel through the Heavens. In a Word, 'tis the Secretary of Time; and a compendious History of the First-born Issue of Eternity.

Eliachim the Jew, takes some off my Hands; and the Rest I present to the Grandees, or any Body whom I would oblige. I have sent some by the Way of Vienna to the most Venerable Mufti, and to thy self, as also to others of my Friends at the Sublime Port. They are all sealed up, with Directions to those for whom they are Design'd. I wish, that this mean Testimony of my Duty and Affection, may be accepted. And that my Superiors would from hence conclude, that I am no bad Husband of my Time.

The Unchangeable Essence, who moves all Things, yet is mov'd of None; who sets all the the Springs and Wheels of Nature a-going; yet remains himself in Eternal Rest; beholding all Things past, present, and to come with one undivided Glance; grant, that I may be approved of Heaven, while I obey the Mufti, and his Vicar on Earth.

If thou favoureſt the Cauſe of the Merchant who brings thee this Letter, thou ſhalt do well. He will inform thee of his Affairs. God encreaſe thy Felicity.

LETTER XXII.

To Hali Omri Baſſa.

THOU that art exalted from a Page, to one of the Higheſt Dignities in the Empire, and poſſeſſeſt an Eminent Share of the Sultan's Favour, will not be diſpleaſed if Mahomet, whom thou haſt formerly honour'd with thy Friendſhip, puts thee in Mind of ſome Qualifications that are requiſite in a Favourite. I know thy Abilities are great; yet he that walks on Pinnacles, will not refuſe the Aſſiſtance of any kind Hand that offers it, nor tax a Man with Preſumption, for endeavouring to preſerve him from a Fall.

It will not be ſufficient, that thou art very

Zealous

Zealous to serve the Sultan, to aggrandize his Honour, and prop the Imperial Dignity: Nor, that thou art extremely accurate in managing the Affairs committed to thy Charge: That thou art assiduous and extraordinary careful; not addicted to Recreations and Pleasure: That thou art rigorously Just, deaf to Flattery, and inexorable to Bribes; but in all Things solicitous for thy Sovereigns Interest and Greatness, without any other Byas, save that of untainted Loyalty. (All these, I must confess, are great Vertues in a Statesman and a Favourite; yet, they may become Vices, by their Excess as well as their Defect, and he that steers not his Course in the Golden Mean, may soon precipitate himself into Ruin.) But it is also necessary for thee, to have an Eye to the Satisfaction of the Subject, as well as to the Prince's Prerogative. It will not be safe to immolate the People's Interests and Liberties, to the Humours and Caprices of their Sovereign. Neither will he thank or reward thee, for such a dangerous Piece of Zeal. Nay, should he himself command thee to do any thing, which would intrench on their Rights and Privileges, thou oughtest rather to shew thy Fidelity, in humbly remonstrating to him the ill Consequences of such a Proceeding, than by a blind Obedience, to betray both him and thy self to the Publick Odium. On thee, to be sure it will fasten, however thy Master may escape; and thou must fall a Victim to appease the incens'd Multitude and save him harmless.

This was the Case of the Duke d' Olivarez, the late Minister and Favourite of the King of Spain. He was endued, with all the forementioned Vertues requisite in a Statesman; but, his immense Zeal to advance the King's Prerogative, betrayed him to such Measures of Oppression and Tyranny, as were the Occasion of his Ruin.

The Spaniards claim certain Franchises and Immunities, which when granted them, they pay a voluntary Homage to the Castilian Crown. D' Olivarez sought to bereave them of these their Native Customs and Liberties, which by degrees gave so general a Disgust to that apprehensive Nation, that they broke out into an open Rebellion. Hence sprung the Revolt of Catalonia and Russilion; and, the total Defection of Portugal. He thought by Rigour, to drive these People to Extremes, making them fall into Treason, and then taking advantage of their Crimes, to make his Master more absolute. But, these indirect Courses never prospered; and, we now see the Duke of Braganza, by this Means established in the Throne of Portugal, that Kingdom quite rent from Spain, and the other Provinces in the Hands of the French.

The Spanish Grandees, sensible of the Male-administration of the Favourite Duke, grew disgusted, withdrew from the Court, and from their Charges, leaving the King almost destitute of Attendants at Home, or Officers Abroad; yet, none durst discover the Grounds of their Discontent, till the Constable of Castile file broke the Ice, on the following Occasion. This Constable, is one of the Prime Nobility of Spain, deducing his Pedegree from a Race of Kings. Him had Olivarez made his Mortal Enemy, by proposing a Match between a Son of his, and the Constable's Daughter. This Son, whether Natural or only Adopted, is not certainly known, but, he had lived an obscure and debauched Life, not so much as taken notice of, unless for his dissolute Manners and enormous Crimes, which had once expos'd him to the Sentence of Death, had he not met with better Fortune than he deserved. All the Nobles were highly disgusted, when they saw this Prodigal own'd by Olivarez for his Natural Son and Heir invested with the highest Dignities of the Kingdom, and made Master of prodigious Riches; especially, since he was no Ways worthy of such Preferment, retaining still his former Vices, and giving every where Proofs of an abject and base Genius. To see such an one made President of the Indies, and at the height of Honour, in a fair Way to succeed the Duke in his Ministry, irritated the whole Court, and drove the Constable of Castile to Impatience. He utterly refuses the Match, disdaining that his Daughter should be linked to such an Upstart. He remonstrates to the King, the exorbitant Ambition of Olivarez. In fine, being seconded by other Lords of the Court, and by Letters from the German Emperor, he so far prevail'd on the King, that his Eyes began to be open'd, and he now clearly saw, that all the Disorders of the Government, ow'd their Origin to the ill Conduct of Olivarez.

Where-

Wherefore, taking the Advice of his faithful Counſellors, he baniſh'd him the Court, depriv'd him of all Authority, confin'd him firſt to a Place not far from Madrid, and afterwards to Thoro, a City in Old Caſtile.

Thus fell that great Miniſter, through his own Ambition to riſe. Seeking by unwarrantable Methods to ſecure his Maſter's Favour, he incurred the Height of his Diſpleaſure, and brought upon his own Head, an irrecoverable Diſgrace and Ruin.

I ſend thee this Example, as a Teſtimony of my Friendſhip and Fidelity; and, that thou may'ſt inform the Divan, of the true Grounds of this Man's Misfortune. The King has now taken the Reins of Government into his own Hands, though, 'tis thought, too late.

I wiſh thee an Encreaſe of Vertues and Happineſs, and that thy Moderation may keep thee ſtedfaſt in the Sultan's Favour.

LETTER XXIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

IT is, thou knoweſt, a conſiderable Time ſince I was Love ſmitten with the Beautiful Daria, who was Fair as an Angel, and diſcreet above any Mortal Creature. It's hard to ſay whether the Beauty of her Mind or that of her Body, ſtruck deepeſt Impreſſions on my Soul. How long were the Nights and how ſhort my Slumbers, and what a general Diſtraction of Thoughts was I in? I could not abide my Chamber, and when I went out, no other Place could pleaſe me. I knew not what I ſaid or thought, whether I dreamt or was really awake, ſtood or ſate, went backwards or forwards, all Poſtures and Places being alike, ſeeing none of them could afford me the Relief I ſought after.

I imagin'd no leſs, but that I muſt thus languiſh on; yet I find, That Time and Abſence have, at length, made Way for Reaſon. Marvel not, dear Oglou, I have ſuffered theſe Tranſports. Our Paſſions are not in our Power, we cannot love and hate when and whom we pleaſe. There is a Conformity of Blood, wherein the Stars, they ſay, work Wonders. It's true, no Man can love and be wiſe at the ſame Time; but prithee tell me, didſt ever know any Wiſe Man, who was not one Time or other in Love? Remember thine own Paſſion for the ſame Object, which will will make thee the easier to excuse mine. I'll tell thee a Story, which I have some-where read; which, if it does not palliate, yet will not aggravate my Weakness.

A certain Country-Man having lost his Ass, came to the Muezin, or Cryer, desiring him to give Notice at the Door of one of their Mosques: which he did for Three several Festivals. But no News being heard of the Animal, the Owner urged the Muezin to continue his Proclamations, with the Reward of a fat Pig to the Finder. The Muezin being an Arch Wag, and tired with the Fellow's Importunity, one Day when the Ceremonies of their Superstitious Worship was ended, and People flockt amain out of the Mosque, he made this following Proclamation: If there be any Man here amongst you, who will come forth, and solemnly profess, he never was in Love, he shall have a fat Pig.

An ungainly loobily Fellow, who was leaning listning on his Staff, bawled out, That he could safely take his Oath, he was the Person who had never been in Love. Whereupon the Muezin taking him by the Sleeve, presents him to the Country-man, saying, Here Friend, I have found your Ass, the Pig is mine.

Rejoice with me for the Recovery of my Liberty, and believe an experienced Man, when he tells thee, that a Man's Love to his Friend, though it be not so violent and strong as that to his Mistriss, yet is more solid and lasting.

LETTER

LETTER XXIV.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem, at the Port.

SInce thou, who art the Centre and Source of all Dignity, haſt drawn back one Ray of Honour into thy Self, whoſe Emanation before made ſome of thy Slaves Illuſtrious, with the Title and Power of Captain Baſſa: Since thou thy ſelf, I ſay, who art always Generaliſſimo by Land, vouchſafeſt alſo at this Juncture to become Baſſa of the Sea; I wiſh that both Elements may prove propitious to thee, and Fate crown thy Arms with the Height of Succeſs. May the King of the Waters, proclaim a Neſtrum where-ever thou ſaileſt, and may the Winds pay Homage to the Banner of the Ottoman Empire. In a Word, may yielding Waves, and timely Gales, convey thee ſafe and proſperous to Venice; and, may Fortune always attend that Courage, which never forſook thee when thy Maſter's Honour lay at Stake.

The Empire of the Oſmans, is highly obliged to Providence, for ſuch a Valiant and Experienced Leader of their Armies. There is need of the Reſolution of Alexander the Great to encounter with all the Formidable Difficulties and Hazards of this War. Thou art not marching againſt the ſoft and effeminate Perſians, sians, Men drown'd in the Luxurious Debaucheries of Asia, and enervated by continual Voluptuousness: But thou must combat with the fierce Russians, hardy Servians, the valiant Inhabitants of Dalmatia and Istria. Men inur'd to Toils and Fatigues, and steel'd in Blood and Slaughter. I tell thee, there is no State in the World, that takes more Care to breed her Subjects up in all the Discipline of War, than this Republick. Thou hast heard of the famous Arsenal of Venice, wilt thou believe what Adonai the Jew has told me, concerning that Nursery of War? He is newly come from thence, and says, That this Arsenal alone is half a League in Circuit; That there is but one Gate and Channel into it, by which their Vessels pass in and out; That in this Place, as in a Seminary, are bred up an infinite Number of Slaves, who are a little Common-wealth by themselves. Some of these are employ'd all the year round, in making Gallies, Galliasses, Pinnaces, Brigantines and other Shipping, with all Materials belonging to them, as Masts, Oars, &c. Others make Bullets, Chains, Anchors, Cannon, and all kinds of Artillery. A Third sort, are busied in making Ropes, Sails, Shrowds, and such like Naval Implements.

He says moreover, that in this Magazine are contained 40000 Pistols; 200000 Daggers, 60000 Partizans; Javelins 100000; Cross-Bows 30000; Long-bows 50000; with 500000 Swords, Musquets 160000; 1000 Cannon, as many Sakers; 500 Culverins. All these are

preserv'd as a Treasure of War, besides Infinite Quantities of all Manner of Weapons and Ammunitions, which are daily carried from hence, to furnish their Ships by Sea, and their Armies and Forts by Land. Thou wilt conclude from hence, That this is a Wise and Martial Nation, and that the Conquest of Venice will cost much Sweat and Blood.

Wilt thou hear what this Jew says of their Publick Buildings, which are all made of the best Marble? He counts Sixty six Parish-Churches; Fifty two Monasteries; Twenty six Nunneries; Eighteen Chapels; Seventeen Hospitals, and Six Schools. He numbers Fifty six Courts of Justice. Ten Gates of Brass; Four Hundred and Fifty Stone-Bridges; Eighty Thousand Boats, which cannot be served with less than double that number of Watermen. The Inhabitants of this City are computed to be 800000. By all this, thou may'st comprehend the Greatness and Wealth of this Republick, and that it is no Inglorious Enterprize to carry on a War against it.

These Infidels give a Publick Toleration to Harlots; which is practised not only in this City, but all over Italy, and brings a vast Revenue into the Treasury. The Whores-pence of Venice, is said to amount Yearly to 100000 Zechins.

The Multitude of Jews also, does mightily enrich that City, who have no less than Nine Synagogues there. They are Masters of Infinite Wealth, and engross the greatest Part of the Levantine Traffick, whereby Venice is become superlatively Wealthy, and has required the Epithete pithete of Rich. This is grown a Fashion in Italy, That every City has its peculiar Title, as Rome the Holy, Padua the Learned, Milan the Great, Naples the Proud, and Venice the Rich.

One thing extremely pleases me, and had it not a shew of Idolatry, I could not but applaud it, as an Argument of the Generosity of this State. Adonai tells me, That there are no less than 165 Marble, and 23 Brazen Statues, erected by the Order, and at the Charges of this Republick, in Honour of the like Number of Valiant Soldiers, who have merited well of the Publick. This is an efficacious Encouragement to Others, a Spur to Vertue, the Cherisher of Martial Ardour. And Venice herein seems to imitate the Gratitude of Ancient Rome, which never spared any Cost, to honour her Heroes, and render their Memory Immortal.

God grant thee Victory over these Infidels, that at thy Return, laden with the Venetian Spoils, thou may'st rejoice in the Royal Caresses and Favour of our Glorious Sultan, and that not only Constantinople, but all the Ottaman Empire, may celebrate Triumphs for the Success of thy Arms.

LETTER

LETTER XXV.

To Dgnet Oglou.

IT appears by thy melancholy Letter, thou haſt not forgot the Loſs thou formerly ſuſtainedſt by Fire, but ſtill continueſt to diſturb thy ſelf, with diſmal Apprehenſions of ſpending thy Days in Ignominious Poverty. I am afraid, thou didſt ſet thy Heart too much on thy Wealth, which makes thee ſo uneaſie under thy Misfortune. Perhaps thy Money was thy Maſter, and God in removing it from thee, has made thee free, and thereby fitted thee for the Contemplation of the Univerſe.

Never fear Want, the ſame Providence which took Care of thee before thou cameſt into the World, will never be wanting to thee now thou art in it. It is but a Little that we need, and it will not be long before it will be impoſſible for us to want any Thing. Poverty never meets the thinking and induſtrious. And a Man may ſatisfie Nature, without the leaſt Obligation to Fortune; who, when ſhe ſeems moſt angry with us, ſcarce ever denies us Neceſſaries. The Belly indeed, is a troubleſome Creditor, yet is quieted with a Little. Seneca tells us, That Epicurus confined himſelf to a narrower Allowance, than that of the ſevereſt Priſons, to the moſt heinous Offender; and, found himſelf at Eaſe too in a ſtricter Diet, that any Man in the worſt Condition needs to fear. But the Miſery of it is, we are governed in all Things by Opinion, and every Thing is to us as we think it to be.

The ſame Great Man tells us, of one Apicius, who poiſon'd himſelf for fear of ſtarving, when he had Two Hundred and Fifty Piaſters in his Coffers. And, another more Modern Philoſopher relates, That a rich Man, an Acquaintance of his, falling mad, ſnatche up a Straw, and complained he muſt periſh with Hunger, for he ſaw there was no Grain in the Empty Husks.

It's ſaid of the Emperor Galba, That he was wont to weep, when he ſaw his Table better covered than ordinary. And, I have read of a certain Chriſtian Muſti, who was ſo wretchedly covetous, that he would ſteal privately into the Great Moſque of Rome, and put out the Lamps there to ſave Charges.

But methinks, I hear thee murmuring me an Anſwer, That this was never thy Humour, and theſe Citations make little Impreſſion on a Man, that has had his Houſe and Goods burnt, and narrowly eſcaped in his own Perſon.

Shall I tell thee then, what hap'ned lately in theſe Parts, which will, perhaps, make thee more contented and thankful for thy Life, ſeeing what was theſe poor Peoples Lot, might have been thine.

Certain conſiderable Merchants coming to this Town, and Lodging at an Inn, not far from my Quarters, the House being full of Guests, they were forced to be content with an upper Room; where, entertaining one another with pleasant Discourse, to pass away the Time till Supper, on a sudden the Kitchin was all in a Flame, unfortunately encreased with combustible Matter lying near the Chimney. Some say, there was great Quantity of Oil and Gun-Powder (an odd Store-House to lay such Commodities in.) However, the Fire appeared so suddenly and violently, that in a Moment all the Floor under them, was seiz'd with it.

These Gentlemen, who were Two Stories high, in a Chamber towards the Street; as soon as they heard the Cry of Fire, began to make towards their Trunks and Port-mantles, which were lock'd up in a large Coffer, the Key of which hung at their Hostess's Girdle. They were for going down to fetch it, but the Fire had, in a Manner, consum'd all beneath them. Whilst they were busied in trying to break open the Coffer, and to take out every Man his own, their Chamber became instantly so full of Smoak, as was like to Choak them. They could neither save themselves by going up or down, the House being all over in a Flame. Moreover, their Neighbours seeing their own Houses in Danger, were so concerned for themselves, that they had no time to Pity Others. So that, few People attempted to succour these poor Gentlemen, who, on their side, endeavoured with great Pieces of Wood, to force a Passage; but the Walls and Windows were too Strong to give Way to their Efforts, being secur'd with thick Iron Bars, fastned in the Stones. In this lamentable Condition, having this inexorable Flame before their Eyes, which had already seized on the Chamber, tearing the Hair off their Heads, and stamping on the Ground, they sent forth such dreadful Skrieks, as moved all that heard them to extreme Compassion.

They threw their Gold and Silver into the Streets, in vain crying for Help; the Fire being so encreas'd, that before the People could bring Ladders and other Instruments to break a Way into the Chamber, these poor Wretches miserably perished in the Flames.

Thank God thou hast still thy Life and Senses. Turn these last the Right Way, and thou wilt find thou hast lost Nothing.

LETTER XXVI.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

THE Spaniards, are the Proudeſt People in the World. They ſtrut like Cranes, as they go along the Streets, and Walk by Rules of Geometry. Here are many of them in this City, ſince the Revolt of Catalonia and Rouſſillon. The French accuſe them of Uncomplaiſance and ill Manners, in that they will not change their Habit or Gate, in a Country ſo averſe from Formality.

They are extremely addicted to Rhodomontado's; as thou wilt eaſily gueſs by this which follows: Lewis XIII. asking a Spaniſh Officer, who was a Priſoner of War, Why the Kings of Spain went not in Perſon to the Wars, as the Kings of France: He Anſwer'd, If the King, my Maſter, ſhould lead his own Army into the Field, the whole Earth would tremble under him.

Another being ask'd; Why the Spaniſh King in his Style, boaſted, That the Sun was his Helmet, replyed, Becauſe that Luminary never ſets on all my Maſter's Territories. But the French man wittily retorted, He will neither ſet, nor riſe on any of your Maſter's Dominions ere long, if the Great Lewis goes on with his Conqueſts.

In

Indeed, to pass from Jest to Earnest, this Victorious King, continually pares away some Part or other of the Spanish Monarchy. I have acquainted the Ministers of the Divan, with the most important Passages of this War, except the taking of Graveling, which I did not then think so considerable a Place, as I am since inform'd it is. 'Tis a Sea-Town, lying on the Northern Shore of France, and commanding the Narrow Seas, between the Continent and England. Some say, that it is one of the strongest Towns in Europe. The French King, by the Conquest of this Place, is in a condition to give the Law by Sea, to all the Northern Nations.

The Great God who protects the Ottoman Empire, set Limits to the Conquests of this Christian King, and so continue the Wars of these Infidel Princes, that neither any One of them may be in a Condition, nor All of them together be agreed, to make Head against the Arms of our Invincible Sultan.

LETTER XXVII.

To Dicheu Huſſein Baſſa.

THOU haſt already in the Divan, heard of the preſent Convulſions of the Engliſh State. I communicated to the Vizir Azem, what Intelligences I had received of the Troubles of that Kingdom. Beſides, the Imperial City is full of Strangers of all Nations, who maintain Correſpondences with their ſeveral reſpective Countries: Whence it comes to paſs, That whatſoever is done in the moſt remote Corners of the Earth, is ſoon known to the Miniſters of the Sublime Port, which is the Sanctuary of the Whole World. But, I ſhall gratifie thee, in unveiling the Interiour of thoſe Events, which have made ſuch a Noiſe. Thou art naturally curious in thy Reſearches; and, I ſhall preſent thee with ſome additional Remarks, which I have made on the Engliſh Affairs, ſince I wrote to the Supreme Miniſter on that Subject.

I acquainted him, that the late Cardinal Richlieu, had a hand in Embroiling that Iſland, as he had in exciting the Tumults of Catalonia, and promoting the Revolution of Portugal. The part which he acted, was by Proxy. He had his Agents there, to blow up into a Flame, the Sparks which lay ſmothering in the Breaſts of that Diſcontented People. Thoſe of the Latin Church, reflect it as a Judgment on the Engliſh

Engliſh Nation, that they have never been free from Conſpiracies, Seditions and Rebellions, ſince the Time they ſhook off their Obedience to the Roman Muſti; which was, in the Days of King Henry VIII. As if that Revolt in Point of Religion, had been the Source of all the following Tumults and Diſorders in the State. 'Tis certain, Religion has great Influence on Mens Morals, and where a Liberty of innovating is once allow'd, it makes continued Progreſſions. Some French Antiquaries ſay, that the Engliſh embrac'd the Roman Communion for the Space of Seven Hundred Years; and, that during ſo long a Time, they never had any Civil Wars, but ſuch as were made on the Account of Succeſſion to the Crown. But, that after they had chang'd their Faith, they were always reſtleſs, ſtill hatching ſome Alteration in the Government. I know not how far theſe Obſervations are juſtifiable, Men being generally partial to their own Cauſe. But, the preſent Stirs in that Iſland, ſeem to owe their Increaſe, if not their Birth, to the Latitude which the Subjects take in Matters of Conſcience. Whilſt every Man carves out to himſelf ſuch a Religion, as beſt pleaſes him; without being accountable to the State, or paying any Tribute, as is the Practice of the Ottoman Empire. Hence, it is few Mens Ambition, to conform to the Religion of the Prince; but, every Sect endeavours to perſwade both Prince and People, to ſubſcribe to their Sentiments; and, the moſt potent Party, threatens all the Reſt with the ill Consequences of War, in Case their Tenets be not establish'd. Among all the Religions which divide the Inhabitants of that Island, there is none for which they have so general an Aversion, as that which they call the Roman Catholick, though it were once the Establish'd Religion of the Country. This is now become the publick Eye-sore; and, the rest of the Sects, though they are at immortal Difference with each other, yet all join Heart and Hand to oppose this Common Bug-bear. The French say, That the Protestants are like the English Mastiffs, Two of which, I remember, were presented to Sultan Amurath, by the French Ambassador, with this Character of them, That though when they quarrel'd they would fight with each other to Death, yet should a Bear be let loose upon them, in the Midst and Heat of their Fury, they would soon become Friends; and turn the Battel upon their Savage Enemy. Such, they say, is the Humour of the English Sectaries; and, the Factious have improved it so far, as to fasten the Odium of the Vulgar on the King himself, by suggesting, That he designs to introduce the Roman Religion into that Country; whereas, according to the Relation of Travellers and knowing Men, he is a zealous Protestant. This is the Pretence of taking up Arms against him: An Artifice, by which Rebellion is generally usher'd in; whilst the Defence of Religion, is made a Cloak for Sacrilege and Treason.

The Infidels have found out a Way to divide a Man from himself, by Metaphysical Niceties, Niceties, a Science wherein the True Believers are happily ignorant. They are actually in Arms against their Sovereign, yet they declare they fight for him: Maintaining their Rebellion by this Sophistry, That they fight against his Natural Person, to defend his Political; as if they could separate one from the other. Some thinking Men say, 'tis well if they do not divorce his Soul from his Body by the Help of these Juggling Distinctions.

His Viceroy in Ireland, has already lost his Head, for no other Crime, but his Loyalty to his Master, who is blam'd for giving Consent to the Execution of so faithful a Minister. Yet, the Curious pretend to trace the Footsteps of Justice in this Man's Destiny, since he fell a Sacrifice to the same Democratick Principles, whereof he had formerly been a zealous Patron, having been observed to be once a great Opposer of the Royal Prerogative. If this be true, it seems as if Nemesis her self had brought him to his Punishment.

Thou wilt wonder at the Presumption of these People, in divesting the King of the Military Power by Sea and Land, and assuming it themselves. Especially, when thou considerest, that this is the Essential Prerogative of Sovereignty, without which it is but an Empty Title.

Our Invincible Sultans are possessed of such an uncontroulable Authority, as cannot be transferr'd to any Subject, or to all the Subjects of so vast an Empire put together; but is only communicated at the Imperial Plea-ſure, as Rays from the Sun, whoſe Emanations, though they are immenſe and infinite; yet do they not in the leaſt, diminiſh or weaken that Immortal Fountain of Light. But, the Engliſh have not that Veneration for their Prince, as is found in the Muſſulmans: They eſteem Him but the Truſtee of the Commonwealth, the Creature of the Populace, having imbib'd the Principles of Ariſtotle, Cato and other Democratick Philoſophers; who teach, That the Sovereign Power is Originally in the People, and but tranſmitted from them to the Prince, by way of Deputation and Credence. My Letter to the Prime Vizir, will inform thee what the Engliſh Parliament is. At this Time, as I'm inform'd, it conſiſts for the moſt Part of Men of this Stamp: Yet they do not openly profeſs theſe Antimonarchick Tenents; but, under the Mask of Loyalty, amuſe the credulous Multitude with ſpecious Pretences, Of making the King the moſt Glorious Monarch, and his Subjects the Happieſt People in the World. But, 'tis thought he will rather confide in his Arms, the Juſtice of his Cauſe, and the Protection of God, than ſuffer himſelf to be any longer cajoll'd by their falſe Rhetorick.

He has given them Battel once, wherein they ſay, the Victory was in an even Balance, and neither Side could claim it.

The Rebels have put to Death the Engliſh Mufti, whom they call the Archbiſhop. They ſtruck off his Head with an Ax, in the open Street, on the 10*th*. Day of the 1*ſt*. Moon of the Year 1644.

Before

Before I conclude this Letter, I shall relate to Thee a Passage, which happen'd in this King's Infancy, worthy of Remark: In former Ages, there were a Sort of Philosophers or Prophets in England, whom they call'd Druids, and Bards. These instructed the People in the Belief of a God, the Immortality of the Soul, and other Principles of Natural Religion. They foretold Things to come, and had acquir'd so great a Reputation, that the Kings of that Country would undertake no Affair of Moment, till they had first consulted these Oracles. 'Tis said, there are yet living some of that Prophetick Race in the Mountains of Scotland. One of which, a Man of great Sanctity and Wisdom, being an Hundred and Twenty Years old, came to visit this King's Father; at which Time he saw this King, being then an Infant in his Nurse's Arms, whilst his Elder Brother and Heir of the Crown stood by. The Old Man, after his Compliments to the Father, takes the Infant Prince in his Arms, and bestows his Benediction on it, in these Terms, Hail, Royal Babe, Heir of Two Crowns; thou shalt Reign a long Time happily; but in the End, a Flower-de-luce shall be thy Bane. The Nobles that were present, thinking that the Extremity of Age had bereav'd him of his Reason, were ready to thrust him away; offering to take the Child from Him, and telling Him, That he mistook; for, this was not the Heir of the Crown, but his Brother who stood by. But he, with a composed Look and an assured Carriage, made Answer, That what he spoke, was Truth; adding withal, That the Elder Elder Brother should die before his Father; and, That this should live to inherit the Kingdoms of Scotland and England. The Event has made good some Part of his Prophecy; for, his Elder Brother dyed at Twelve Years of Age, and he at this Day poſſeſſes thoſe Two Kingdoms; but, how the Flower-de-luce ſhall be his Bane, Time muſt evince. It is thought, That by it is meant, the French King; becauſe that is the Arms of the Royal Blood of France. It is hard to determine of future Events; yet there are ſome, who obſerving the Influence which this Court has had on the Engliſh Commotions, and how far Cardinal Richlieu had engaged King Lewis XIII. in Revenging the Affronts which were given to his Siſter the Queen of England, by that Inhoſpitable Nation, make no Difficulty of interpreting this Prophecy; but conclude, That the Unfortunate King of England, will at length fall a Victim to the French Reſentments, though his own Subjects be Inſtrumental to his Ruin.

I will continue my Intelligence of the Engliſh Affairs, as I receive them. In the mean while, I pray the Great God, to protect the Muſſulman Empire from Sedition and Treaſon, and keep the Subjects of Sultan Ibrahim in their due Obedience.

LETTER

LETTER XIV.

To Bajazet Ali Hogia, Preacher to the Seraglio.

HERE are to be met within these Western Parts, infinite Numbers of People, who not only despise and vilifie our Law, but their own, and openly scoff at all Religions in the World. These are known by the Name of Libertines or Atheists, which is to say, People that profess themselves Enemies to the Belief of a God. A lewd and unthinking Herd of Animals, who dare not be alone, lest they should come to the Remembrance of themselves, and be Wiser.

These People are in some sort, like Ninus that great Assyrian Monarch, who vaunted, He never saw the Stars, nor desired it; Worshipp'd neither Sun nor Moon, never spoke to his People, nor took any Account of them, but was valiant in Eating and Drinking.

He was said to have this Inscription on his Tomb:

I WAS FORMERLY NINUS, THE GREAT LORD OF THE WORLD, AND LIVED AS THOU DOST, BUT AM NOW NOTHING BUT DUST. ALL THE MEAT I HAVE EATEN, EATEN, ALL THE HANDSOM WOMEN I HAVE ENJOY'D, ALL THE WORSHIP THAT WAS PAID ME, AND ALL THE RICHES I WAS POSSESS'D OF, HAVE FAIL'D ME; AND WHEN I SET FORWARD FROM THIS WORLD INTO THE INVISIBLE STATE, I HAD NEITHER GOLD, NOR HORSE, NOR CHARIOT. I AM NOW, I SAY, BUT THE DUST THOU TREADEST ON.

Such another was Sardanapalus, one of the Successors of Ninus in that Monarchy, and in the Corruption of his Manners. An effeminate Prince, a Slave to his Lusts, and not worthy of an Imperial Crown. It was not to his Vertue or Courage that Nineveh was obliged, for sustaining a Siege of Eight and Twenty Moons, but to the Impregnable Strength of her own Walls. For, so soon as he was told, that the Oracle was fulfill'd, and that the River Euphrates was join'd in League with his Enemies, and had by an unusual Flood, broke down a considerable Part of the Walls in which he trusted; all his Bravery vanish'd; he shew'd he was a Coward and kill'd himself for fear of Death. Yet such was the sordid Impotence of his Spirit, that even in this Way, he durst not die alone; but, taking his Concubines and nearest Attendants, with all his Gold and Jewels, he forced them to accompany him into the Hollow of a Funeral Pile, which he fired with his own Hands, and and burnt his Servants with Himself. I do not esteem it an Effect of Courage, to make Death a Sanctuary from the inevitable Miseries of a hated Life. But, to be either willing to die, in the Height of humane Enjoyments, or to be resolved to live and out-brave these very Calamities, which would tempt any Man to die, is the peculiar Mark of an Heroick Resolution.

However, thus died Sardanapalus, having desired, that a Monument might be erected to his Memory, with this Inscription;

SARDANAPALUS LIV'D MUCH IN A LITTLE TIME, HAVING ALWAYS GRATIFIED HIS SENSES: HE BUILT TWO CITIES, ANCHIALA AND TARSUS, IN ONE DAY; PERFORMED THE TASK OF MANY YEARS, IN FOUR AND TWENTY HOURS. ADVISES THEE, READER, TO IMITATE HIS EXAMPLE; EAT, DRINK, AND ENJOY THYSELF; FOR AFTER DEATH, THERE IS NEITHER PLEASURE NOR PAIN.

These were but Pigmies in Atheism, in Comparison of others. Dionysius, the Sicilian Monarch, was a Gyant in Infidelity. He not only committed Sacrilege, but, made it his Pastime. He droll'd upon the Gods, while he robb'd their Temples; into which he never enter'd without a Jest, nor departed from from their Altars without a Satyr. He put a Woollen Garment on the Image of Jupiter Olympius, instead of the Golden Robe with which King Hiero had cloath'd it; and, excus'd the Sacrilege, by saying, Exchange was no Robbery, and, That he consulted the Ease and Health of the God, both for Summer and Winter. He play'd the Barber to the Statue of Æsculapius; and, shav'd off his Golden Beard, saying, That since Apollo his Father was beardless, it was but good Manners for the Son to be so too: When he came into a Rich Temple in Syracusa, and saw in the Hands of Mars, a Sword, whose Hilt was thick set with Diamonds, Emeralds and Rubies, he made a mock Obeisance, and took the Sword from the extended Arm of the Image, saying, The God of War presented him with that Sword, as an Earnest of his future Victories, and, he should be very ungrateful and impious, not to accept the Gift of the Deity. It was a nasty Affront which Nero put upon the Syrian Goddess, when he caused his Excrements to be thrown in her Face.

These were Royal Atheists, and no Body durst controul their Impious Pranks. The Libertines now a-days are more modest and politick. They dare not violate Temples, nor prophane the Altars of the Christians openly, but secretly they undermine all Religion, and dispute People out of their Faith.

Some of these Atheists maintain the World to be Eternal. Others hold, that it came by a fortuitous Concourse of Atoms; which, after after an Eternal Dance in an Infinite Space, at last jumbled together into that exquisite Order we now behold and contemplate. They profess themselves Disciples of Epicurus, yet wilfully corrupt the Doctrines of that Vertuous Philosopher; who, though he taught, That the Supreme Felicity of Man consisted in Pleasure, yet never meant that of the Body, but the purer Joys and Tranquility of the Mind, arising from a Life lead according to Reason. Whereas, these Modern Epicureans, place their highest Contentment in the Satisfaction of their Sensual Appetites. A Jolly Crew, who number their Days by Debaucheries, and reckon that Hour misspent, wherein they have not drawn some Line of Voluptuousness. And, as if they had consecrated Themselves to Bacchus and Venus, Women and Wine, divide the most important Actions of their whole Lives.

They are professed Enemies to the Doctrine of the Resurrection, of Good and Evil Spirits, of the Day of Judgment, of Heaven and Hell. They esteem Religion only as an Invention of Politicians, to reduce the World under some Form of Government; and spare not to call Moses, and Jesus the Son of Mary, Impostors, as well as Mahomet our Holy Lawgiver. They laugh at Miracles, and ridicule Prophecies; and, you had as good talk to them of a Man in the Moon, as of an Apparition from the Dead.

These Sort of Libertines, are not only to be found in the Court of France, but in General all all over Europe. The Contagion is Epidemick, the Infection has spread it self through Clergy and Laity, Nobles and Vulgus; insomuch, as he passes for a Man of no Wit, who has not a Spice of Atheism.

This will not seem strange when thou shalt know, that even among their Mufti's themselves, there have been some Lucians; who esteem'd Religion but an Old Wife's Tale, and us'd the most important Articles of their Faith, but as Instruments of Ambition and Avarice, to aggrandise themselves and fill their Coffers. Leo X. a famous Roman Pontiff, will be recorded to all Posterity, for that Sarcasm of his on Jesus, the Messias of the Christians; How much are we enriched, by this Fable of Christ? Indeed, if we reflect well on the Maxims and Practices of that Court, it will not be hard to conclude, That Gold is the Great God of the Romans, and the Ultimate Object of their Adoration, since that alone can open or shut Heaven and Hell; no Piety or Vertue, no Prayers or Tears, Alms or Penances being available, unless made so by the meritorious Adjunct of this powerful Metal. Neither need the most enormous Sinners despair of Pardon, if they have but Pluto for their Proctor, and Gold for their Apology; there being certain Rates set upon all Sins, which if paid, those of the deepest Dye are as readily absolv'd, as the smallest Peccadillo's.

This Spiritual Merchandise of Souls in the Supreme Court of Christendom, has in no small Degree contributed to the Atheism of the Age.

While

While Religion is thereby render'd Cheap and Vile, a meer Artifice of Government, a Stratagem of the Prieſthood, to keep Fools in Awe and Subjection. And therefore, ſuch as have a better Opinion of themſelves, and would be thought Men of Senſe, take Occaſion to carp at the very Fundamental Principles of all Religion, and to diſpute againſt the Being of a God. Rather than tamely couch under the Luggage of manifeſt Impoſtures, they like wild Colts, throw off the Yoke even of natural Religion and common Morality: And, becauſe they have too much Senſe to be abus'd with Religious Umbrages, and too little Faith to ſwallow all the Pious Frauds of the Church for undoubted Oracles of Heaven, they will have no Faith at all, nor give any Credit to the Dictates of Correct Reaſon; but, turning Scepticks in all Things, are ſtedfaſt to Nothing but the Satisfaction of their Luſts; looking upon it as ill Husbandry of the preſent Time, to ſquander away the leaſt Moment on the Thoughts of a Future Life.

But thou, Venerable Hogia, who haſt been preſent at the Myſteries of the Holy Sepulchre, and kiſs'd the Floor of Abraham's Oratory, are happy in the Poſſeſſion of a blameleſs Faith. Thou haſt renounced the vain Pleaſures of Senſe; and, thy Life, is one continued Series of Abſtinence, Prayer, Faſting, Alms and other good Works. Having been bleſs'd, with frequent Viſions of Paradiſe, and Anticipations of the Immortal State; pray that Mahmut may perſevere in the Faith of a Moſſul-

man,

man, and the Integrity of a Loyal Slave to the Grand Signior.

LETTER XXIX.

To Egry Boinou, a White Eunuch.

I Cannot forget the Time, since thou and I sate together in the Chiosc at Scutari, and entertained each other with the Stories of the Ancient Greek Poets. The Prospect which that Gallery afforded, renew'd our Memory of several Nations Strife about the Birth-place of Homer; and, from thence gave us Occasion, to discourse and make Comparisons between Him and Hesiod, Orpheus, and the Rest of the celebrated Poets, Philosophers, and Sages of the East. I remember, we passed by Degrees from one Subject to another, till at length we fell upon the Translation of their Heroes, and the Genealogy of their Gods. Thou wilt say, I have a good Memory, should I now rehearse the Series of our Conversation on this Point. But, I will not be so troublesome for the sake of Applause. Though I often think over thy Sentiments with infinite Delight, yet I will not repeat them here, lest I tempt thee to throw away my Letter, before before thou haſt half read it. Only give me leave to put thee in mind, How thou didſt then vindicate the Infant World, for placing thoſe Excellent Souls in Heaven, who had been Illuſtrious Benefactors to Mankind on Earth: And, that though after-Ages fell into the Crime of Idolatry, by giving Divine Honours to the firſt Inventors of Arts and Sciences, and by ſacrificing to the Manes of departed Heroes; yet, it was thy Opinion that thoſe who firſt conſecrated them to Immortality, and a Fame that ſhould know no End, did but perform the Rights of Gratitude, execute the Dictates of Innocent Nature, without ever dreaming of the Religious Ceremonies which their deluded Poſterity ſuper-induc'd.

To do thee Juſtice, this was a Noble Thought, full of Humanity, and exactly ſquaring with unbyaſs'd Reaſon; and, I muſt confeſs, I owe the frequent Cure of my Melancholy, to the Force of this generous Sentiment.

The Chriſtians, eſpecially here in the Weſt, out-go the Jews in the Superſtitious Narrowneſs of their Principles; and, as the latter confined Salvation to the Lineage of Jacob, ſo the former reſtrain it to the Latin Church. I have often convers'd with ſome of their Learned Derviſes, on the Theme of the Pagans Salvation, but can by no Arguments beat them off from their inveterate Prejudice. They will not allow ſo much as one of the Heathens to be ſaved, and but a Hundred and Forty Four Thouſand ſand of the Jews, accounting Twelve Thouſand of every Tribe. This is the ſevere Arithmetick of the Weſtern Religion, whoſe Profeſſors thereby render themſelves greater Infidels than thoſe they damn. 'Tis to be hop'd, there is a larger Calcule with God for the Number of the Bleſſed, or elſe one would think, Hell would be too populous, and the Devil would be forced to make frequent Decimations, and ſend Colonies abroad, to make Room for the ever freſh Glut of his new Gueſts.

For my Part, who was Educated in the impartial Rudiments of Truth, in the ſerene Principles of the Mahometan Faith, I believe, That there are ſome ſaved of all Religions; and that at the Day of Judgment, there ſhall be erected a Fourth Banner for ſuch to reſort to, who never heard of Moſes, Jeſus or Mahomet. Aſſuredly, there is no Malice in the Omnipotent, and he will not damn Men for their Involuntary Ignorance of his Revealed Laws, provided they live up to the genuine Dictates of Nature and Reaſon, which are the trueſt Standards of Vertue and Poſitive Religion.

The Chriſtians have a Heaven for their Saints, and a Hell for Sinners; in this they agree with the Muſſulmans. They have a Limbo for Infants, that die unbaptized; and, another for the Vertuous Iſraelites, who lived before the Meſſias. Their Charity had been complete, had they provided a Third, for juſt and Vertuous Men of all Religions; whom it is too hard to damn on the Score of what they know not, so long as they unblameably practise whatsoever Good they know. The Chapter of Prisons in the Alcoran, seems to contain a more equal Distribution of Justice, when it assigns a Middle-Place, between Paradise and Hell, to those who have led an indifferent Life, equally checquer'd with Vertue and Vice. They there shall behold the Joys of the Blessed, and the Torments of the Damned; yet shall neither taste of the One, nor feel the Other; but pass their Time in a tedious Neutrality, between the Height of Bliss, and the Depth of Misery.

But, what Mussulman will question the Salvation of the Gentiles, when the Book of Glory it self tells us, That Alexander the Great was an Holy Prophet; and yet we know, he neither was of the Seed of Abraham, nor was he so much as Circumcis'd.

My Converse with the Learned Dervises in this City, has taught me some of their School-Distinctions; among which, they use a pretty one in the Damnation of Unbaptized Infants; teaching, That such are damn'd to the Pain of Loss, but not to the Pain of Sense. I am apt to think, this Distinction may very well be adapted to the Case of many Men, who as their Vertues are not of that Heroick Stamp, as to carry them directly to Paradise; so neither are their Vices of so black a Tincture, as to sink them immediately to Hell. I believe, there are Proportionate Rewards and Punishments, for all Sorts and Degrees of Vertue and Vice;

Vice; and that the Souls of the Departed are marshall'd and disposed in Receptacles agreeable to their proper Rank and Quality. And, if I can but get to Virgil's pleasant Greens and shady Woods, the fortunate Mansions of Innocent and Just Men; I will not envy the Heroes, nor desire to be canoniz'd among the Gods. Elyzium or Paradise are much One to me: I seek not the Name, but the Nature of Bliss. Provided I may but gain a Place of Rest and Refreshment, and be admitted into agreeable Company, I will not complain, nor disturb the Peace of the Blessed, with an Ambitious Quest of the Highest Dignities in Heaven; as if a Man could not be Happy, unless he be made a Vizir of the Bench above.

Let thou and I, dear Egry, live in such an exact Conformity of Manners here, that when we go hence, we may by the Divine Numen, be both disposed in the same Apartment and Society, carry our Friendship along with us to that other World; and let us make a Covenant, That whosoever dies first, shall soon appear to the Survivor, and give him a true Account of his State, if it be in the Power of the Dead to perform such Bargains.

In the mean Time I counsel thee to make much of this present Life; not by sordid Voluptuousness and Vice, from which I know thy natural Aversion; but by borrowing from each Element, an Occasion of improving thy Science and Vertue. This is the Way to be raised above the Elements, in which at present ſent thou art a Sojourner; and, to attain thy Native Skies, and Kindred Stars, where the Renown'd Poets, Philoſophers, Law-givers, and other Vertuous Men, are gone before us, expect our Coming, and are ready to welcom us to the Rights of their happy Society. Adieu.

Paris, 13th. of the 4th. Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XXX.

To the Selictar Aga, or Sword-Bearer.

IT is apparent, that the States of the World are void of Compaſſion, and that they are altogether actuated by a Principle of Intereſt.

Monſieur la Tuillerie, Ambaſſador from France to the King of Denmark, arrived at that Court with ſpecious Pretexts of Mediation, promiſing to do his utmoſt to accommodate the Differences between the Two Crowns of Denmark and Suedeland, with all poſſible Advantages to the former. But, when the Buſineſs came to the Tryal, when he ſaw King Chriſtian advancing into the Field againſt Guſtavus, with an Army of near Twenty Thouſand Men, which in all likelihood would have given the Suedes occaſion to repent their rash and unjust Incursions; he charmed the good-natur'd old King, with such fair Promises, and subtle Insinuations, that he caused him to retreat at the Moment of giving Battel.

In the same Manner dealt Galasso with the King, who did but make a show with his Forces, without doing any effectual Service. For, when he might have compelled the Swedish General, either to Fight or Retire, he suffered him freely to pass through Holstein and return into Germany.

The Curious and Inquisitive, lay the Blame of this Treachery on Cardinal Mazarini, whose Pistoles, they say, had corrupted Galasso, and made him run counter to his Master's Instructions.

But, in my Opinion, this is an unjust Censure of the Cardinal, who was afterwards known to be Instrumental, in spurring on the Hollanders to compose these Quarrels: Which at last was accomplish'd, by the dextrous Mediation of this Great Minister.

I wish the Differences between our glorious Sultan and the Venetians, were as well adjusted with Honour to the Ottoman Empire.

LETTER

LETTER XXXI.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State.

THE Wars of Germany and Sueveland are the Principal Subject of Diſcourſe all over Europe; eſpecially in this Court, which has a great Intereſt in the good Succeſs of the Sueviſh Arms; the Houſe of Auſtria, being the moſt formidable Enemy, that France has in the World.

General Torſtenſon marches about, like another Scanderbeg; Victorious where-ever he ſtrikes. 'Twas to his own Ruin, that Galaſſo ſuffer'd him to paſs quietly through Holſtein; when, in Conjunction with the Daniſh Army he was in a Condition to give him Battel, or compel him to retire.

No ſooner was Galaſſo ſeparated from the Danes, and Encamped near Magdeburgh; but, Torſtenſon began to obſerve his Motions, and lay down not far from him, between whom there paſſed many Skirmiſhes, which very much leſſen'd the German Army. Beſides, they were extremely incommodated for want of Proviſions; ſo, that at his return to Bohemia, he could preſent the Emperor but with a few of his Men, and give but a ſhallow Account of the Loſs of the Reſt.

In the mean Time, Coningſmark and Pa-

penheim, Two other Suediſh Commanders, are not idle, having taken Staden and Boxtehaven, with moſt of the other Important Places in the Archbiſhoprick of Bremen.

Thus the German Affairs decline apace; and, the Suedes, who not long ago were obſcure and ſcarce regarded, begin to make a conſiderable Figure in the World.

I ſhall ſend thee a conſtant Account, of what is moſt Remarkable. God augment thy Felicity.

Paris, 27th. of the 4th. Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XXXII.

To Berber Muſtapha Aga.

THE Bloody Battel of Jankow, has unpercht the Emperial Eagle, which can no longer endure the Smoak of Suediſh Gun Powder.

The German Court is removed in a great Fright to Prague in Bohemia, there to curſe the Avarice of the Souldiers; whoſe greedy Deſire of the Suediſh Prey, betray'd the German Army to the Swords of their Conquerors.

This Battel was fought, on the Sixth Day of the Third Moon of this preſent Year. Goetz, one one of the Imperial Generals, was kill'd in the first On-set; which so Inflamed Baron John de Werdt, that with Four Thousand Men, he brake into the Left Wing of the Suedes, putting them into an Irrecoverable Disorder. The Germans seeing their Enemies retreat in much Confusion, fell to plundering the Baggage. General Torstenson, turning their Covetousness to his Advantage, lets them alone till they were all entangled and loaden with Booty; then suddenly falls upon them, and turn'd the Fortune of the Day to his own Side.

There were above Three Thousand of the Imperialists kill'd upon the spot, and Four Thousand taken Prisoners; among which, were the Generals, Hatsfeldt, Mercy, Broy, Zaradeskie, and Seven other Principal Commanders.

By this Fatal Stroke, the Suedes have opened to themselves a Passage into Moravia, Austria, and Hungary. So that, in Time they may extend their Conquests, even to the Confines of the Ottoman Empire.

I pray the Great God, to continue the Wars between these Infidel Nations; that so, not attending to the General Interest of Christendom, but weakening each other, they may at Length become a Prey to the True Believers.

Paris, 9th of the 5th. Moon,
of the Year 1645.

LETTER XXXIII.

To Osman Adrooneth, an Astrologer at Scio.

I Know not whether it be an Effect of the Stars, or the Sport of Spirits, that has happened here lately; whether it proceeds from Heaven or Hell, Nature or Magick, Art, Chance or Destiny; the Marks it has left behind are very Terrible, and the Astonishment is not yet off from the Peoples Hearts.

Three Days ago, I was riding from Paris to St. Germain en Lay, where the Court resides. When I was got about Half-Way on the Road, there arose a sudden Blast of Wind, which rushing vehemently among the Trees, made an uncouth Noise, and struck me with some Surprize and Horror: But, my Amazement was soon encreased, when I perceived the Hedges and Trees that grew along the Road side, torn up and carried away by an Invisible Hand. I was afraid, my Horse and I should have been taken up for Company. For, this Whirlwind passed very near us, twisting in all that was in its way; and, swiftly moving in a Circular Figure, it grew to such a Bigness, by the continual Addition of Trees, Hedges, Stones, Earth, &c. that it seemed like a flying Wood.

I tell thee, though I was not without some Appre-

Apprehenſion of Danger, yet hitherto this was the pleaſanteſt and moſt diverting Spectacle that ever I ſaw in my Life. Trees are a very grateful Object on the Earth, but they are much more ſo in the Air; and, eſpecially at that Height and Diſtance, they affect the Eye with unſpeakable Delight. I was raviſhed to ſee a moving Foreſt, almoſt as high as the Clouds. The penduleus Gardens of Babylon, would have appear'd but a Triſle, in Compariſon of this Noble Scene.

I followed it with my Eye as far as I could, till at length my Sight was intercepted by a thick Shower of Rain, which drove me into a Houſe for Shelter. Where, before I came away, I was informed, that what I eſteemed ſo delightful, proved very Tragical to the Neighbouring Villages. Falling down from that Height I left it at, and ſcattering its former Load, it fell violently into the Groves and Orchards, tearing up ſome Thouſands of Trees by the Roots, and carrying them away like Chaff in the Air, throwing down many Hundreds of Houſes, removing others from the Foundations, and doing the poor Husbandmen ſuch irreparable Damages, as the like has not been known in the Memory of Man.

Common Humanity taught me to pity theſe Infidels; and, the Natural Principle of Self-preſervation; made me bleſs my ſelf, That I had eſcaped ſo imminent a Danger. But tell me, Thou who art converſant in the Secrets of Nature, who knoweſt the Influ- ences of the Stars, and the Hidden Force of the Elements, What is the Cauſe of theſe wild Fits and Convulſions of the Air? The Superſtitious here ſay, the Devils are let looſe at ſuch a Time from their Infernal Priſons, to keep a Carnaval, and play their wanton Pranks in open Light, there being no Holidays in Hell. Others believe Magicians are at Work; and, by the Force of Spells, raiſe Hurricanes and Storms. But, the Learned ſay, That theſe are only the Effects of Nature, proceeding from Meteors and Exhalations in the Air. I, for my Part, never puzzle my ſelf with a vain Search after that which cannot be demonſtrated. If theſe Hurricanes be Natural, then 'tis certain, Nature does not diſcover her Power at all Times, nor in the conſtant Series of her Works; but, has her Reſerves, and Times of State, wherein ſhe diſplays her Self with greater Pageantry, to create Reſpect: Since the unthinking Part of Mankind, is ſooner taken with ſuch unuſual Events as make a Noiſe, than with the Ancient ſtanding Miracles of the Creation, the ſilent and regular Motions, exquiſite Order, and never ceaſing Activity of the Sun, Moon and Stars. Thus, we are never ſenſible of the Heat that is within us, or the Circulation of our Blood, becauſe we are always habituated to feel it from our Embryo.

I tell thee, Sage Oſman, if I have any Dread upon me, it is of Earthquakes; becauſe they take from us all ſure Footing. From Thunder, Lightning, and all the Storms in open Air, Ti- berius's Remedy may ſecure us: Nay, the very Beaſts will be our guides to ſome ſafe Den or Cave: But, from an Earthquake there's no Retreat; that undermines and blows us up without any warning, neither have we Time or Means to eſcape. This makes me always think, I walk upon a Cobweb; ſo thin and brittle is this outward Cruſt of Earth we tread on.

He that Founded the Earth, and has admirably kneaded this Globe together with Water, grant us a Refuge in Time of Danger, and an Eternal Sanctuary in Paradiſe.

LETTER XXXIV.

To the Kaimacham.

I Need not Apologize for my long Silence, Eliachim assures me, he has acquainted Nathan Ben Sadi with the Occasion of it, by whom the News of my Imprisonment might be transmitted to the Sublime Port. When I was first seized upon, I had not the Liberty to send for Eliachim, or see any Body that I desired to speak with. But, that honest Jew, soon heard the News, and writ to Vienna to prevent any Dispatches that might come from thence, or from Constantinople. He has now fully convinced me of his Fidelity, which I so long suspected; and, I dare trust him henceforward, with the most important Concerns of my Commission. His Sagacity and Conduct in this Occurrence, is worthy of Acknowledgment and Reward; having dextrously blinded Cardinal Mazarini, who is an Argus: baffled his severest Scrutinies, and been highly Instrumental in procuring me the Liberty I now again enjoy.

The Arabian Proverb says, The Camel that Travels often to Mecca, will return Lame at last. I had for a long Time essayed, to penetrate into the Drifts of this Cardinal, as well as those of his Predecessor Richlieu, yet found nothing but Riddles. One might as soon soon trace Arethusa in her Wandrings under Ground, or pursue a Man in the Intricate Mazes of Dædalus, as discover the Intrigues of this State-Serpent. His Designs are a perfect Labyrinth. However, walking one Day in one of their Churches, I cast my Eye on a Stone in the Pavement, just before the Image of the Virgin Mary, which, by the perpetual kneeling of many Thousand Votaries, was worn away half a Cubit. The Sight of this made me conclude, That there is no Difficulty so great, which by assiduous Industry, and constant Resolution, may not be overcome. Chear'd with this Thought, I determin'd with my self, never to faint, or give over my most strenuous Endeavours, to unlock the Cabinet of this Great Minister, wherein I knew all the Secrets of Europe were laid up. I left no Stone unturn'd, to compass my Design. I haunted the Court daily, and follow'd the Cardinal like his Shadow. I insinuated with his Followers and Creatures, Flatter'd the Soft and Ambitious, presented Gifts to the Covetous; was Merry and Frank with some, Reserv'd and Grave with others: In fine, I so aim'd to comport my self with every One, that I might win All. At length, knowing that there was a private Agent from Prince Ragatski come to this Court, my Zeal for the Grand Signior, suggested to me, That if I could wind my self into this Man's Acquaintance, I should be able to unravel some great Secret, and do an Acceptable Service to the Ottoman Empire.

Opportunities are seldom wanting to the Watch-

Watchful and Diligent. I had acquaintance enough at the Court. And appearing often in the Retinue of Mazarini; and, the Cardinal ſometimes ſingling me out, and Diſcourſing with me, in the Preſence of the Tranſylvanian, this Stranger took more than ordinary Notice of me: Which gave me Occaſion to addreſs my ſelf to him, in Hopes to accompliſh my Purpoſe. But, Fate had otherwiſe decreed. The Agent remember'd my Face, and told me in the Sclavonian Tongue, That he had ſeen me in the Grand Signior's Seraglio. It is not hard for thee, Illuſtrious Kaimacham, to conceive the Diſorder I was in at this Challenge. But, reſuming Courage, I replyed, That it was poſſible he might have ſeen me there; for, I had formerly ſerved a German Ambaſſador at the Ottoman Court, in Quality of Secretary. He ſeem'd ſatisfied with my Anſwer, diſſembling his farther Thoughts: But, as I afterwards perceiv'd, I owe my Confinement to this fatal Interview. No doubt, but he remark'd the particular Station I was in at the Seraglio, when he came thither to Negotiate for Prince Ragotski, in Sultan Amurath's Time. For, before I went to Bed that Night, I was ſent for to Cardinal Mazarini, and ſtrictly Examined about my Country, my Religion, my Buſineſs at Paris, and other Matters; and, was ſent away Priſoner to the Baſtile, (which was formerly a Cittadel, erected to awe this Town, but not being found ſerviceable in that Kind, is ſince made a Priſon.) That which moſt puzzles puzzles me, is, That I was not confronted Face to Face, with this Transylvanian. My Confinement was very close, being denyed the Use of Pen, Ink and Paper, and the Access of any of my Friends. Indeed, I knew not what use to make of those Materials, nor durst I write to any Body, lest I should have brought them into the same Snare, and done my self a greater Disservice. All my Comfort was, That I had left no Writings in my Lodgings, which could discover the Affairs of my Commission. 'Tis true, when I was search'd they found the Alcoran in my Pocket, which gave a mighty Jealousie to the Cardinal; but, I excused it by saying, I kept that Book, that I might not forget my Arabick; in which, the Cardinal knew I was well skill'd, having formerly seen a Translation, which I made out of that Language for Cardinal Richlieu. Besides, they found in my Chamber Plutarch's Lives, the Annals of Tacitus; Livy's Roman History; a Philosophical Treatise of Averroes, and a small Tract of St. Augustine, one of the Christian Fathers: Which made it appear, as reasonable to conclude me a Pagan or a Christian, for having their Books by me, as a Turk for having the Alcoran.

I still persisted, in asserting my self to be Titus of Moldavia, and that I was a Christian (Heaven forgive the Perjury!) I had a Friar sent to me, who exhorted me to a Confession of my Sins, thinking this way to pump the Mighty Secret from me. But, this turn'd to my Advantage; for, calling to mind a Learned and Ingenuous Friar, with whom I had convers'd, and contracted some Friendship, I signified my Resolution to confess my self to him. This is a Privilege could not be denied me, it being lawful for every Man, to chuse his own Confessor. The Friar was sent for: And, this being the only time I was like to speak to any of my Friends without Witnesses, I improv'd the Advantage; and, to make my Confession seem the more sincere, I accused my self of what I ne'er was guilty of, telling him with a well counterfeited Sorrow, That the true Reason of abandoning Moldavia, was, because I had murdered a near Kinsman there. My Confession ended, and Absolution granted, the Friar embraced me, and told me, That he would do me all the Service he could, in order to my Release. I expressed my Gratitude in the best Terms I could, and begged of him to visit me often, since he was the only Person would be allowed to do me that kind Office. I will not detain thee longer. Sage Bassa, in Expectation of the Issue.

This honest Friar was as good as his Word. He was admitted to see me almost daily, without Suspicion. I trusted him with Eliachim's Acquaintance; which render'd him very Serviceable; for, he often brought me Money from the Jew, when he knew not how otherwise to convey it to me. In a word, between them both, they so wrought on the Cardinal, that after Six Moons Imprisonment, I was

I was releas'd, and am now in more Credit than before.

The Great God grant, that the Malice of the Infidels, may always turn to the Advantage of the True Believers; and that from their Jealousies, occasions may arise to promote the Interest of the Ottoman Empire.

LETTER XXXV.

To the Reverable Muti.

AT length I am releas'd from a tedious Imprisonment, the Occasion of which the Kaimacham will acquaint thee with. Had this happened in Spain, my Usage had been much worse. And for this Reason, I esteem France the Noblest and Freest Kingdom within the Pale of the Latin Church; that it never would submit to the Tyranny of the Inquisition. Which is a Kind of Ecclesiastical Divan, or High Court of Judicature, where Crimes against the Church and State are tryed. It was first erected, at the Instance of one Dominick, who for this meritorious Project, was afterwards canonized a Saint. The original Design of it was to extirpate the Moors and Jews out of Spain and Portugal. But now, 'tis made a Trap for all Strangers, and especially ally those they call Heretick. Whosoever falls into it, is commonly fleec'd of his Estate, and not seldom thous'd out of his Life. For, the first Thing the Holy Fathers Inquisitors do, is, to make a zealous and devout Inspection into the Possessions of the Prisoner. If they find him Rich, that is sufficient to make him Criminal; and, the good Fathers, will take a pious Care to dispose of his Wealth. They have their Spies in all Companies, who inform them of Men's Words and Actions. These Hounds, are always upon the Scent; and will smell a Heretick out, if he breaths within the Purlieu of their Hunt. A Man dares not say, his Soul is his own in these Countries; nor, claim the Privilege to exercise his Reason. The Inhabitants live in a most abject Slavery to the Priesthood, and Travellers must drag the Chain, bridle their Tongues, and curb their Actions for their own Security. But, in France, the Inquisition is abhorr'd, and, an Immortal Aversion conceived against the Tyranny and cruel Practices of the Spaniards. The People are of more generous Tempers, the Laws not so rigorous, and yet they come far short of the Justice of the Ottoman Empire. Though my Confinement was tedious, yet 'twas tolerable; and, if I could not be happy in a Prison, so neither was I properly miserable.

When Evil surprises us, we commonly affright our selves, by beholding it in its gross Bulk, our scattered Spirits, are astonished at an infinite Bugbear. Whereas, if we take a more particu-particular Survey of the dreadful Object, anatomize and view it Piece by Piece; we find, that the greatest part of what so dismay'd us, had no other Existence, than in our own Imagination. Thus, when I was first seized by Cardinal Mazarini's Order, I presaged to my self no less than insufferable Tortures, an ignominious Death, and (which affected me with the most sensible Grief) the Discovery of my Commission, and the Affairs of the Sublime Port. When I first enter'd the Prison, I bid adieu to all Joy and Comfort in this Life, and thought of Nothing but preparing my self for that Other World, where I hope to be renewed again to immense Pleasures, the Delights of Paradise, as a Reward of my sufferings for that Law, which was brought down from Heaven by the Angel Gabriel.

These were my first Thoughts in Prison; but, when Sleep had composed my Spirits, and Time had render'd me more familiar with the Place of my Restraint, I began to think, it was not impossible to live, and even to regain my Liberty. However, I resolved to alleviate the Grief of my Restraint, by contracting my Desires within a narrower Compass, and circumscribing my Wishes within those Walls which confined my Body. I framed to my self Felicities, out of the Contemplation of my Misery; and, by considering what I enjoyed, I pacified my Discontent for what I wanted. I was not so close shut up, but that I could at Pleasure let in fresh Air, and take a Prospect of the City and adjacent Fields, as my my Window. This made me reliſh my Priſon with ſome Degree of Content. The Want which moſt afflicted me, was, that of Fountain Water; which I durſt not ſo much as ask for, in ſuch Quantities as are requiſite to the Cleanneſs of a Muſſulman, leſt I ſhould have confirmed them in the Suſpicion, which was the Occaſion of my Impriſonment. For, I was ſure, my Actions would be narrowly obſerved. The ſame Caution, made me not refuſe to eat of Swines Fleſh, and drink freely of Wine, when once invited to the Governour's Table. 'Tis true, I had great Scruples and Fears upon me. But, I comforted my ſelf with thoſe Paſſages in the Alcoran, which ſeem to indulge us this Liberty in Caſe of Neceſſity, by aſſuring us, That God is the Merciful of the Merciful, and that he requires not unreaſonable Performances of his Creatures. Otherwiſe, I ſhould have thought every Morſel I ſwallow'd of that execrable Meat, would have choak'd me, and every Draught of Wine, have been my Poiſon. Tell me, Great Oracle of Truth, whether in this I have not ſinned? I think my ſelf not Innocent, till thou haſt pronounced me ſo. However, this Frankneſs in Eating and Drinking, with the Chriſtians, without the leaſt Reſerve or Niceneſs, contributed ſomething to their better Opinion of me. Men are generally ſo wedded to their own Cuſtoms, that he looks like a Monſter, who thwarts them, and does not comply with the preſent Mode. And, the French, have a Proverb, That when a Man's at Rome, he muſt live like the Romans.

I be-

I believe, I was invited to this Collation, in Order to a Discovery; and, had I refused to eat and drink what was before me, it had, no doubt, been a convincing Argument to these Infidels, That I was a Musulman.

If I have sinned in this Point, I humbly crave thy Absolution and Prayers; but, if I have done well, inform me, that so I may have Peace of Conscience.

LETTER

LETTER XXXVI.

To Mehmet, an Eunuch Page in the Seraglio.

THOU hast long ago heard of my Imprisonment at Paris: let not the News of my Releaſe be unwelcome to thee. If thou didſt then Sympathize with my Sufferings, now take a Share in my Joy. I believe, thou haſt Friendſhip enough to do both; and, I am willing thou ſhouldſt divide the One with me, as well as the Other.

I will not therefore make thee melancholy, with a Rehearſal of my Fears and Apprehenſions, my Wants and Diſcontents, with other doleful Circumſtances of a Priſon. I am now at Liberty. Let Sadneſs vaniſh. Yet, I have not ſo forgot my late Grief, as to be now exceſſive in my Joy; ſince I am liable to the ſame, or a Worſe Diſaſter again. It is never good to be ſecure, while we are ignorant what's the next Portion that Fate is tempering for us. Moderation keeps a Man upon his Guard; and, if any Stroke of Misfortune be aim'd at him, if he is aware of the Blow, and ſo can either dextrouſly ward it off, or at leaſt take Honourable Quarter: Whereas, he that ſuffers himſelf to be diſſolv'd, and his Mind unbent with Proſperity, is taken Captive by Evil, without being able to make any eaſie Conditions tions for himself. I love to have my Eyes open, and to look round the whole Horizon of Contingencies: I watch for the very Possibilities of Misfortune, that so I may not be catch'd napping by a Calamity, but be always in a State to Fence, or make Composition.

I will now tell thee with more Freedom than I did the Mufti, what happened to me during my Imprisonment. The Governour of the Citadel where I was confin'd, invited me one Day to a Banquet. I need not give thee an Inventory of the various Dishes, with which his Table was furnished: Our Entertainment was generous, he regal'd me beyond the Expectation of a Prisoner; and, had there not been a design in it, I should have admired the Bounty of this Infidel. But, his Treat was a Snare, and contrived for a Test of my Religion. Whether I was a Disciple of Mahomet or Jesus. Thou knowest, the Christians eat Swines Flesh, and drink Wine, which the Mussulmans have in Abomination. We had Plenty of both at this Feast, and I durst not be squeamish at either. I tell thee, though I eat of the one with little Pleasure, yet I drank of the other without any Disgust. These Nazarenes imitate the Ancient Græcians at their Banquets, in drinking of Healths to such as they most esteem. The Governour plied me with Glasses, and I quaffed liberally. Policy and Self-preservation, taught me to begin the Debauch; and, the Charms of that temping Liquor, would not suffer me to shrink to the End.

The

The Wines of France are very delicate, and we had choice of the Best. The Pleasure I enjoyed at this Banquet, had almost reconciled me to the Disciples of Hali; and, I could have wish'd, our Prophet had been in a better Humour, when he forbid us the Juice of the Grape. He promises us Rivers of Wine in Paradise, and, while I was in my Cups, I thought he might connive at us, for taking a Glass or two sometimes on Earth. If thou hast not yet tasted this Enchanting Liquor, I wish thee to abstain as long as thou livest; for otherwise, thou will find it very difficult, to overcome the Desires of it, or to live without it. For my Part, I greedily longed for it, before ever I tasted it, because it was forbid: And now I have often had my Fill of it, my Appetite is encreased. The more I drink, the greater is my Thirst after it, which is never like to be quenched, till I shall drink at the Original Fountains of Wine in Paradise.

I do not think it is so great a Sin, as our Doctors would make us believe; since, the Divine Lawgiver prescribes Abstinence from Wine, rather as a Counsel, than a Command. If thou art of another Opinion, I Censure thee not. The late Sultan Amurath was of my Mind; and many Grandees at the Port, count it no Heresie. All the Danger lies in the Excess. I am no Advocate for Drunkards.

Let these Things be spoken like Words in a Dream, which cannot be remembred again. Thou hast Prudence enough to take Care, that this Letter fall not into the Hands of such as ſhall diſpoſe of it in the Wall of the Hazoda. It is evident that I love thee, in that I thus frankly diſcloſe ſuch Paſſages, as I would not have others be privy to.

After all, I declare I ſhould eſteem my ſelf much more happy, might I exchange Paris for Conſtantinople, and the moſt delicious Wines of Europe, for the wholeſome Sherbets of Aſia.

May Heaven fulfil my Deſire, to ſee thee once again, with the Reſt of my Friends at the Seraglio. Continue thy Affection to Mahmut, who loves his Friends without Hypocriſie. Adieu.

Third Volume OF LETTERS

Writ by a

Turkish Spy,

Who lived Five and Forty Years, Undiscover'd, at

PARIS:

Giving an Impartial Account to the Divan at Constantinople, of the most Remarkable Transactions of Europe; And discovering several Intrigues and Secrets of the Christian Courts (especially of that of France) continued from the Year 1645, to the Year 1682.

Written Originally in Arabick, Translated into Italian, and from thence into English, by the Translator of the First Volume.

The Fourth Edition.

London: Printed for J. Hindmarsh at the Golden Ball over against the Royal Exchange in Cornhil; and R. Sare at Grays-Inn-gate in Holborn. 1694.

TO THE READER.

OUR Arabian having met with ſo kind Entertainment in this Nation: ſince he put on the Engliſh Dreſs, is reſolved to continue his Garb, and viſit you as often as Convenience will permit.

He brings along with him many Foreign Commodities, to gratifie the Various Expectations of People: His Cargo conſiſting of Jewels and other Rareties, which are the Genuine Product of the Eaſt; and ſome Kinds of Merchandiſe, which he has purchaſed here in the Weſt, during his Reſidence at Paris.

It will be Pity to affront this Honeſt Stranger, by raiſing Scandals on him, as if he were a Counterfeit, and I know not what. This will appear Inhoſpitable, and Unworthy of the Engliſh Candor and Generoſity.

To ſpeak without an Allegory, in this Third Volume of Letters, as in the former

Two, you'll find an Exact Continuation of Modern History, acquainting you with all the Memorable Sieges, Battels and Campagnes, that were in Europe, from the Year 1645, to 1649. As also, with all the Remarkable Negotiations and Transactions of State, Embassies, Leagues and Overtures of Princes; the Policies and Intrigues of Publick Ministers, especially those of Cardinal Mazarini; the Great and Stupendous Revolutions and Civil Wars, in England, China, Naples, Turky and Paris, the Prodigious Rise of a Poor Young Beardless Fisherman, to the Height of Sovereign Power; the Dismal Tragedies of an English King, and a Chinese Emperor; with the Murder of a Turkish Sultan. And, all these intermix'd with Proper and Useful Remarks, Pleasant and Agreeable Stories; couch'd in a Style, which being peculiar to the Arabians, cannot be match'd in any other Writings that are Extant.

If his Philosophy will not abide the Test of our Learned Virtuosi, yet it may pass Muster in a Mahometan; since it is taken for granted, That the Men of that Faith rarely apply themselves to such Studies; or, at least, not in the Method us'd in Christian Schools. They may have the

ſame Idea's of Natural Things as We: but they expreſs themſelves in a different Manner.

As for his Morals, they are Solid and Grave, and ſuch as could not be reprehended even in a Chriſtian Writer, if we reduce what he ſays to Univerſals. For, abſtracting from the Particular Obligations he had to his Native Religion, and to the Grand Signior, whoſe Slave he was; there will be found little Difference, between his Ethicks and ours. He every where recommends Loyalty, Juſtice, Fortitude, Temperance, Prudence; and all thoſe other Virtues, which are requiſite to fill up the Character of a Hero, or a Saint.

And, who will not bear with him, for Patronizing the Religion and Intereſt in which he was bred; it being Natural for all men, to adhere to the Notions, they have ſuck'd in with their Mothers Milk? In this alſo, he ſhews great Moderation; and a more unbyaſs'd Temper, than one would expect from a Turk: Which may, in Part, be aſcrib'd to his Studying in the Chriſtian Academies, his Converſation with the Learned'ſt Men in Paris, and ſome of the moſt Accompliſh'd Perſons in the World. Hence it was, that he was accus'd by his Superiors at the Ottoman Port, of Inclining to Chriſtianity or Atheiſm; as he takes Notice, in his Apology to a Religious Dignitary, in the Firſt Letter, of the Third Book of this Volume, Pag. 255, to which the Reader is referr'd for farther Satisfaction.

In his moſt Familiar Letters, ſuch as this laſt mention'd, and others to his Intimate Friends, you will find ſome Expreſſions, diſcovering a certain Fineneſs and Strength of Thought, which is not very Common in Chriſtian Writers. Which is an Argument, That the Mahometans are not all ſuch Block Heads, as we take 'em for.

And, though his Picture, which we have affix'd to Our Tranſlation, ſince we had the Italian Tomes, repreſents no Extraordinary Perſon, yet you know Juvenal's Remark, Fronti nulla Fides. And, it has been a Common Obſervation of one of the Greateſt Philoſophers in this Age, That by his Outward Aſpect, no Man would gueſs, what an Illuſtrious Soul lodg'd within.

If you would know, how the Italian came by this Picture (for, in his Preface, he aſſerts it to be the True Effigies of this Arabian), he ſays, That being acquainted with the Secretary of Cardinal Mazarini, and

Our Italian being ſatisfy'd, after ſome Diſcourſe about him, That this Stranger was the very Arabian, whoſe Writings he had ſo happily found, got leave of the Gentleman, to have a Draught of the Picture taken, by a Skilful Limner, which he afterwards plac'd in the Front of his Tranſlation.

LETTER I.

Mahmut, an Arabian at Paris, to Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

I Believe, the News of my Imprisonment, might fill thee with Doubts of thy own Liberty; and, make thee careful to avoid at Vienna, such a Misfortune as befel me at Paris. Yet, if thou wert much surprized at this Accident, it is an Argument, that thou art but a Novice in the World, and art yet to learn the firſt Rudiments of Uſeful Wiſdom, which teach us, That there is no Stedfaſtneſs in Humane Affairs.

There has Nothing happen'd to me in this, which I was not before provided for; neither did the Suddenneſs of the Event, make me change Countenance. I ſmil'd at the fulfilling my own Preſages, and, went to Priſon as unconcern'd, as I would have gone Home to my Lodging. Not, that I would have thee think, I was inſenſible of a Loſs ſo afflicting as that of Liberty; but, my Chains did not appear ſo very formidable, having made them familiar to my Thoughts long before.

When I firſt came to Paris, I look'd on my ſelf, but as a Priſoner at large; owing the Freedom I had to walk about, only to the Careleſneſs of the State, and the Favour of Deſtiny. So that when that Indulgence was retrench'd, no new thing happen'd to me. What I had expected for Seven Years together could not ſeem ſtrange when it came to paſs.

By what I have ſaid, thou may'ſt learn to prepare thy ſelf for the Worſt Events, which commonly ſteal upon the ſecure and unthinking; being wrapt up in greater Darkneſs and Silence, than the Moments which bring them to Light. Theſe ſlide away without our Advertiſement; unſeen, unheard: Neither can our Watches or Dials, inform us any thing of them, till they are paſs'd. So, there is no Index to point out to us, the Hidden Hidden Decrees of Fate, till they are accompliſh'd; no Ephemeris of Deſtiny, but our own Experience.

Thou, and all thy Nation, are ſuſpected by the Chriſtians: They eſteem you Enemies of their Intereſt, as well as of their Law. They deſpiſe and vilifie you, calling you, The accurſed of God. Yet they admit you, as Members of their Common-wealth. They receive you to the Protection of their Laws, and entruſt you with their Secrets, that they may ſerve themſelves of your Mony. Thus are you become Banquers for your ſworn Enemies: And, while you profeſs an Eternal Obedience to the Injunctions of Moſes, you make underhand Leagues with the Diſciples of Jeſus. I do not accuſe your Commerce with theſe Infidels; but, I ſay, you have Reaſon to be upon your Guards, when you are environ'd with ſo many Millions of Enemies. They are not ignorant of the Intimacies betweeen the Miniſters of the Sublime Port, and thoſe of thy Nation: It is common in the Mouths of the French, That the Jews are the Turks Intelligencers. Thou oughteſt therefore, to have a ſpecial Regard to thy Conduct, that no imprudent Action may expoſe thee to the Jealouſie of the State where thou reſideſt. That Court is full of Eyes; and, thou haſt need of a ſtricter Veil, than what thou weareſt in the Synagogue. The very Walls of thy Houſe, will betray thee; and, thy Domeſticks, may prove thy greateſt Enemies: Yet ſuſpect none more than thy ſelf. This will not ſeem harſh Counſel, if thou reflecteſt Twice on it; there being nothing more certain, than, That it is not ſo eaſie to defend ones ſelf from him in whom we confide, as from one we are jealous of: and, every Man is apt to put too much Truſt in himſelf. I believe, thou art faithful, and abhorreſt Treachery; yet, at the ſame Time, thou mayeſt be remiſs and weak: What could not be extorted from thee by an Open Enemy, may be diſcovered by the Inſinuations of a Pretended Friend. Thy own good Nature may cajole thee; and therefore, 'twill be no ſmall Point of Wiſdom, to beware of thy ſelf. As for Contingencies, I adviſe thee not to be perplex'd about them, or be uneaſie. Thou canſt not avoid the Inevitable Appointments of Heaven: Only, be ready for the Worſt that may happen: ſince, thou canſt never be certain of any Thing.

Thy Predeceſſor Carcoa, was a Man of exquiſite Fore-caſt; always on his Watch, prying into the dark Orb of Futurities; yet, an Accident ſurprized him once, of which his ſtricteſt Caution never gave him Warning. I read it in one of his Letters to the Kaimacham, which thou ſenteſt me from Vienna. The Story is this. As he was one Day writing Diſpatches to the Port, a certain tame Bird, which he kept for his Divertiſement, ſnatches from the Table, the Paper on which he was writing to the Tefterdar? and the Window being open, flies with it out into into the Streets. The Paper was dropt in the Garden of the Auguſtin Friars, at the very Moment when the Spaniſh Ambaſſador was walking there with the General of that Order. 'Tis true, the Letter was unfiniſh'd, no Name ſubſcribed, and ſo Carcoa eſcap'd an imminent Hazard of his Life. But, the Secrets therein contain'd, gave a vaſt ſuſpicion to the Imperial Court, it being ſoon carried to the Principal Secretary of State, and by him communicated to the Emperor and Divan. Strict Inquiſition was made throughout the City for the Author of that Letter. A Reward of a Thouſand Rix-Dolars, promis'd to any that would diſcover him. The Bird was ſeen by many, to fly along with a Paper in her Bill; but, from whence ſhe came, none knew. Nor had any curious Eye, attended her uncertain Motions back: No man divining, That that Paper was deſigned to tranſmit to the Ever Happy Port, the moſt important Counſels of the German Empire. Neither was Carcoa's Hand taken Notice of, having lived very privately, and uſed another Character in his common Dealings. But how near was he to a Diſcovery, when he ſays himſelf in his Letter, That he wanted but Five Words to the Concluſion, where he would have ſubſcribed his Name! From hence thou mayeſt learn, That a Mariner in a Tempeſt, amongſt Rocks and Sands, runs not greater Hazards, than he who acts in thy Station.

However, thou may'ſt now continue thy Advices to Paris, but obſerve the Directions of Eliachim, who brings thee this Letter. He will inform thee, of whatſoever is neceſſary for thee to know; taking this Journey on Purpoſe, to prevent the wakeful Jealouſie, and active Inquiſition of Cardinal Mazarini, from whom Nothing can be hid, that's truſted to the Poſts. Receive him with ſingular Honour; he is an incorruptible Friend of the Ottoman Port. From him thou ſhalt learn the ſafeſt Methods of our future Correſpondence. He is the Apollo of thy Nation; and, his Wiſdom and Fidelity, will be recorded in the Regiſter of that Empire, which ſhall know no earlier Period, than the Moon, whoſe Creſcent is her Arms, and the Happy Omen of her Encreaſing Luſtre.

When thou beholdeſt that Noble Enſign of Mahomet, on the Top of the Chief Temple of Jeſus in Vienna, let it augment thy Veneration of our Law, and convince thee, That all Nations muſt ſubmit to the Meſſenger of God and Seal of the Prophets. Be Faithful and Wiſe, and thou canſt not miſs of Happineſs.

Paris, 28th. of the 7th. Moon, of the Year 1645. According to the Chriſtian Style.

LETTER

LETTER II.

To the Kaimacham.

SInce my Releaſe, I have inform'd my ſelf of ſome Paſſages, to which I was a Stranger during my Reſtraint. The Tranſylvanian Agent, continues ſtill at this Court; and, his Negotiation is not now a Secret. Monſieur Croiſſy is gone Ambaſſador Extraordinary to Prince Ragotski, on the ſame Errand, from this Crown. The Subject Matter of both their Embaſſies, is a League. Cardinal Mazarini ſuſpected Tergiverſation in that Prince, and that he would privately Treat with the Emperor, if the Grand Signior ſhould withdraw his Aſſiſtance and Protection from him; or, if he himſelf ſhould grow weary of the War. Wherefore Monſieur Croiſſy, according to the Cardinal's Inſtructions, would not ſign the League, till Ragotski had call'd Home his Ambaſſadors, who were treating with the Imperialiſts at Tyrne, and ſent away the German Envoy from his Camp.

The League being concluded, he inſiſted on the Neceſſity the Prince lay under, of marching his Army nearer to Torſtenſon, the Swediſh General, that ſo they might ſupport one another againſt the German Forces.

This was the Pretence; but, in Reality, it was design'd to engage the Transylvanians, beyond the Power of a Retreat, and to post them under the Eye of the Suedish General; who soon after possessed himself of Tyrne, the Place appointed for Treaty between the Imperialists and Prince Ragotski.

It is a Town in the Lower Hungary, not far from Presburgh. The Suedes entred this Place the 17th. of the 5th. Moon, but left a Garrison in it of Seven Hundred Hungarian Horse, and Three Hundred Foot, according to their Articles with the besieged.

These were soon forc'd to quit the Town by Count Forgatsch, an Imperialist, the Suedes and Transylvanians being march'd a great Distance off: And, 'tis said, this Hungarian Garrison, yielded not unwillingly to the Imperial Arms.

'Tis certain, General Torstenson puts but small Confidence in the Hungarian Soldiers: For, above Six Hundred of the Common Sort deserted him, the 29th. of the 5th. Moon, and the rest raised such frequent Tumults and Mutinies, that their Commanders stood in more Fear of them, than of their Enemies. It's reported likewise, That there has been lately no good Understanding between Ragotski and Torstenson, about the designed Siege of Presburgh: The former seeming too much to favour the Hungarians and being rather inclin'd to carry his Arms into the Emperor's Hereditary Countries. Yet he would not consent, that

Presburgh ſhould be in the Hands of the Suedes.

The French ſay, that the Prince is humorous and wavering, yet of a fair Intention; but, that the greateſt Part of his Officers, are corrupted by the Emperor: And, that therefore, both they and the Common Soldiers, were for Peace; only his Wife, his Son, and ſome few of his Counſellors, perſuaded him to adhere to the Suedes.

They add, that the Young Prince, being inſtructed by his Mother, one Day in a full Aſſembly of the Chief Commanders, made the following Oration, Ragotski himſelf being alſo preſent:

"PErmit me, moſt Serene and Illuſtrious "Prince, my Royal Father, to perform "the Part of a Dutiful Son, a Faithful "Counſellor, and a Loyal Subject. The Law "of Nature and of Nations, entitles you to "my Obedience; and, the particular Honour "you have done me, in admitting me to "your Cabinet, obliges me to exemplifie "it, in an humble Remonſtrance of my "Sentiments, at a Time when the Inte-"reſt of Tranſylvania calls for freedom of "Advice.

"It is with no ſmall Complacency, "that I now behold you encompaſſed "with a Circle of Hero's, whoſe Valour "and Fidelity may give ſuch a Luſtre to "your Victorious Arms, as ſhall eclipſe the "Glory of the Roman and Grecian Con-

"querors. The Alexanders, Cæſars, Scipio's
"and Hannibals, ſhall no longer draw the "World into an Admiration of their ob"ſolete Atchievements. The Regiſter of "your Deeds, ſhall foil their antiquated
"Hiſtories; whilſt Plutarch, Tacitus and Livy, "muſt veil to Modern Pens, the Recorders of "your Matchleſs Actions.

"Let not the Crafty Inſinuations of the "German Court, warp your Reſolutions, and "cajole you with the deceitful Umbrages of "Peace, only to gain Time, that they may
"more ſucceſsfully carry on the War. Nei"ther ſuffer your ſelves already in Part Vi"ctorious, to be amus'd with feigned Trea"ties, and Overtures which you cannot but "ſuſpect. We are now in a Condition to "give the Law; and, ſhould Fortune turn
"the Scale, it will ſtill be in our Power
"to make our own Terms of Compoſition.
"The Alliance of Sueden and France, have
"rais'd us to a Capacity of braving all Eu- "rope: Whilſt the One with a Potent Army
"on the Rhine, the Other on the Danube,
"keep the Imperialiſts in ſuch perpetual
"Action, that it will be impoſſible for them
"to Barrier Germany from our Conquering
"Arms. Now is the Time to raiſe Tranſyl-
"vania above the Title of a Tributary Pro- "vince, and reſtore this Kindom to her An"cient Renown. If we miſs this Opportu"nity, we muſt for ever be Slaves to the "Turks or Germans. Let us not ſeek any "longer Protection, but from the Juſtice of

"our

" our Cauſe and the Dint of our Swords.
" Let not France and Sueden boaſt of their
" Turenne, their Torſtenſon, as if no other Na" tion could furniſh the World with ſa-
" mous Generals ! Whilſt Prince Ragotski lives,
" and lives at the Head of ſuch an Army,
" your Fidelity and Courage, ſhall render " his Name more terrible than that of " Tamerlain, and his Attempts more proſpe" rous than thoſe of Scanderbeg. And our
" Poſterity ſhall be oblig'd, to raiſe Pyra- " mids to your Honour; and from, your pre-
" ſent Atchievements, to date a New Epo-
" cha, the Eternal Memoir of Tranſylvania's
" Redemption.

'Tis ſaid, that Ragotski was not very well pleas'd with his Sons Speech, ſuſpecting that he held ſome private Correſpondence with Torſtenſon, for whom he had no great Affection. Laſt Moon he inſiſted earneſtly on the Mony and Men promiſed him by Rebenſtock. But, General Torſtenſon thought it ſufficient, that he himſelf was ſo near him with his Forces. Yet leſt he ſhould take an Occaſion of Diſcontent, he ſent him a Supply of Mony; though he was not without ſome Apprehenſions, that the Prince having receiv'd it, would underhand treat with the Emperor.

'Tis ſaid here, that a Chiaus was arrived in the Tranſylvanian Camp, expreſly forbidding Ragotski to enter into the Hereditary Provinces of the Emperor. But, that he, truſting truſting to the Strength of his Army (which conſiſts of Five and Twenty Thouſand Germans, Tranſylvanians, Hungarians and Wallachians) was reſolved to purſue his firſt Reſolution.

Thou knoweſt what Reaſons the Port had, to ſend him this Prohibition. The French ſay, 'twas out of Fear, that he would join with the Emperour's Forces.

By this thou may'ſt know, what Opinion the Infidels entertain of the Meaſures taken by the Sovereign Divan. They deſcant at Liberty, whilſt I ſend up Vows to Heaven, for the Exaltation of the Ottoman Empire.

LETTER

LETTER III.

To the Inſtructed in all Knowledge, the Venerable Muſti.

HAil, Holy Interpreter of the Sacred Law; may the Divine Light guide thee beyond the Errors of Humane Frailty. I am amongſt Infidels, Enemies to the Truth; who yet ſeem as certain of being in the Right, as thou art ſure they are in the Wrong. They hate us with an Inveterate Hatred. I muſt diſſemble my Reſentments; whilſt, with the loweſt Proſtrations to the Unity, I celebrate his Glorious Mercy, who has ſent us ſuch a Star, to guide our Feet into the Way of Peace.

The Chriſtians ſcoff at the Faithful People, as divided into ſeveral Sects. Would my Death could wipe out theſe Reproaches, and vindicate the Honour of the Holy Profeſſion. I could retort, that Error ſhews it ſelf infinite in them; but, I muſt hold my Peace, and reſtrain my ſelf, leſt my Zeal tranſport me beyond Diſcretion: Remembring, I am not ſent here to Diſpute, but to act ſecretly for my Great Maſter, whoſe Empire be extended over all the Habitable World.

Theſe poor Wretches, boaſt much of their Traditions, their Sacred Synods and Fathers; as if we ever wanted Holy Men, working Wonders, and penetrating into the profoundeſt Myſteries, Myſteries, by only wiping their Eyes with the Duſt of their Feet.

They talk much of Faith and Reaſon; at which I ſmile, as knowing it to be only Education. Yet, as the Worſt of People have ſomething that is Good; ſo, theſe are not wholly deſtitute of Devotion. They pray often, but not ſo often as the True Believers; it being, as thou knoweſt, a juſt Exception againſt a Witneſs amongſt us, That he prays not Six times a Day. They pray to Men and Women deceaſed; whereas, thou knoweſt, there is no Deity but One. They faſt often, but not ſo ſtrictly, as the aſſiſted with the Vertue of the Supreme Diſpenſer of Graces. They are Charitable; but, this hinders 'em not from excluding all from the bleſt Abodes, who are not of their Belief: Whereas, thou affirmeſt (who art the Reſolver of all the Problems of Faith) That it will go well at the Laſt Day with all Honeſt People; ſeeing theſe have all the ſame Object of Worſhip; and, their Different Religions, are but as ſo many Different Ways, which lead a Man to the ſame Place of Reſt, like various Roads to the ſame City.

Theſe Chriſtians whip themſelves often with ſmall Cords; which Humour, they ſay, was ſet on Foot by an Hermit's Preaching and Example. Not many Countries diſtant from that where I am, there happen'd ſuch an odd Inſtance of this Extravagant Zeal (which was to be heightned, it ſeems, with the Fumes of Wine) as plainly juſtifies our

Prophet

Prophet's Wiſdom, in charging the Faithful to avoid it. It was particularly the Cuſtom of ſeveral People in this Place, in their Proceſſions to whip themſelves, till the Blood ſtreamed down their Frocks; which were ſo made, as to cover their Faces, and leave only their Backs bare. One of theſe Zealots, diſtruſting the Firmneſs of his Conſtitution, had taken ſuch large Draughts of this intoxicating Liquor, that reeling up and down with his Whip in his Hand, and his Head againſt the Walls, he was followed by all the Boys of the Town hooting after him; which ſo leſſen'd the Repute of this ſottiſh Religion, as made 'em abſtain for the future, from this pompous Uſage of it. What low Thoughts have theſe People of the Almighty Lord of All; when, allowing him to be Omnipotent, yet repreſent Him to themſelves and others, as delighting in Cruelty; Whereas, thou knoweſt, this Paſſion is only to be found amongſt the Weak and Miſerable.

That the Divine Preſerver of Men, may continue thee long for the Edification of his Elect, are the paſſionate Wiſhes of the meaneſt of thy Servants, Mahmut.

LETTER IV.

To Muſtapha, Berber Aga.

WOuld to God, I could converſe with thee Face to Face in the Seraglio, as in former Times. I vent many paſſionate Wiſhes to Conſtantinople, that happy Reſidence of my beſt Friends, the Nurſery of my Childhood, the School of my Youth; and, I hope, the future Repoſitory of my Old Age. When I think of that City, 'tis with a Paſſion hardly ſecond to that, which I cheriſh for the Place of my Nativity. In Arabia, 'tis true, I firſt ſaw the Light of the Sun, but, 'twas in Greece I receiv'd the more friendly Illuminations of the Moon, the Splendors of the True Faith; which, though they diſcloſe not to us, ſo clear a Proſpect of the Earth and all its Gayeties; yet, they preſent us with an unveil'd Diſcovery of the Heavens and Stars; ſhewing us Paradiſe, with its glittering Inhabitants, the purpl'd Colonies of True Believers, Champions and Martyrs of the Eternal Unity. In the Deſart I left my Father; or rather, he left me before I found my ſelf, being but an Infant when he died; but, in the City I found Friends, which is not a leſs endearing Title. He gave me but my Birth, whereby I entred on the Stage of Miſeries; with which he ſoon after left me to ſtruggle, before I could diſtinguiſh Miſery from Happineſs. But, they gave me Education, which taught me how to ſhun thoſe Evils, which are the Natural Conſequences of our Birth. So that in the Main, I am more indebted to them than to him. Let it be how it will, I cannot ceaſe to love them, and often wiſh my ſelf with them. This is Second Nature. And, becauſe I cannot have my Deſires fulfill'd in that, I gratifie my ſelf by often writing to them. Should I make Compariſons, thou wilt ſay, I am a Flatterer. Suffice it to tell thee, That thou art one of the Number, whoſe Remembrance affects me with ſenſible Complacency. Yet, I cannot write to thee nor any of my Friends, ſo often as I would, without entrenching on the Obligations I have to the other Miniſters of the Sublime Port. I ſend Diſpatches to all by Turns, ſacrificing my Private Regards, to the Expectations of the State, and the Pleaſure of my Superiors.

Had I been at Liberty, I could have ſent thee the earlieſt News, of the Slaughter which the Germans made Three Moons ago, in the French Army at Mergentheim. 'Tis not too late now to ſay ſomething of it. The Imperialiſts owe that Triumph to the Candor of Turenne, and the degenerate Craft of the Duke of Bavaria; who to lull the French in a Fatal Security, ſent an Agent into France, to negotiate a Peace, with deceitful Overtures and Umbrages; commanding alſo, that none of his Soldiers, ſhould dare to call the French their Enemies. Yet, ſome lay the Blame of this Overthrow, on the Suedes: whoſe unſeaſonable Suſpicion of a Private Treaty between the French and Germans, hindred Torſtenſon from joining the former; and, expos'd Turenne, with his raw and unexperienced Forces, to the Numerous Army of Veterane Imperialiſts.

French

'Twas a Fatal Engagement, and the French loſt many brave Men; beſides an Hundred and Fifty Commanders taken Priſoners, Fifteen Hundred of the Common Soldiers, Fifty Enſigns, with many Waggons, and Four Mules laden with Mony.

It is reported, that whilſt Turenne, in the general Retreat and Flight of his Army, betook himſelf to Mergentheim, as he lay on his Bed the firſt Night, one of his Officers was coming to alarm him with the News of the Germans Approach to that Town, but unfortunately ſtumbled at his Chamber-Door; With the Noiſe of which, Turenne awaked: and, fearing ſome Attempt on his Life, leap'd off his Bed with his drawn Sword; and, making toward the Door, juſt as the Officer open'd it, he run him into the Heart. By which Miſtake, he himſelf, and the Troops that were in the Town with him, had like to have fallen into the Hands of the Bavarians. But receiving Notice of their Approach accidentally by ſome other means, he withdrew his Troops out of the Town by a contrary Road, and eſcaped the Purſuit of his Enemies.

This

This Victory has given new Courage to the Imperialiſts; and has not much diſpirited the French, who are by this Loſs, enflamed with greater Ardors, meditating a ſpeedy Revenge. The Genius of this Court, ſeems to be undaunted, breathing Nothing but War.

I ſhall not fail to ſend thee ſuch Intelligence, as will demonſtrate, That Mahmut paſſes not away his Time in vain.

I pray the Sovereign of as many Empires, as there be Worlds, to diſtinguiſh thee, by ſome particular Mark of his Favour, from the Crowd of thoſe he makes Happy.

LETTER V.

To Shaſhim Iſtham, a Black Eunuch.

AT length thou haſt condeſcended to beg my Pardon, for the Calumnies thy Tongue has loaded me with. I am not ill pleaſed with thy Letter. It abounds with elegant Expreſſions of thy Sorrow, for an Offence to which thou hadſt no Provocation. Thy Submiſſion, though late, abates my Reſentment; and, if thou performeſt thy Promiſe, 'tis baniſh'd. The firſt Crime ſo ingenuouſly nuously acknowledg'd, claims a Title to Forgiveneſs: Let Eternal Oblivion ſeal it. I am not by Nature revengeful. I rather bluſh for Shame, than grow pale with Anger, at him that injures me. Yet Self-Preſervation will rouze our Choler; which is the moſt active Humour, and precipitates many to violent Courſes. The Effect it has on me, is, to put me on my Guard, leaſt he who has wrong'd me, without any Signs of Repentance, ſhould continue his Malice to my Deſtruction. But, thou haſt diſpers'd all my Suſpicions, by thy ſeaſonable Addreſs; and, if I cannot pronounce thee Innocent, I will believe thou art not Incorrigible. The beſt Advice I can give thee, is, henceforwards to attend to thy own Affairs, and refrain from thoſe of others; remembring the Arabian Proverb, He that peeps in at his Neighbour's Window, may chance to loſe his Eyes. There is a great deal of Wiſdom couch'd in theſe ſhort Sentences. They are not the product of one Man's Experience, nor of a few; but, they are the Reſult of Univerſal Obſervation. And our Country has been happy above others in the choice of her Proverbs. This that I mention'd is peculiar to the Eaſt: Yet, I can produce an Inſtance, whereby 'twas lately verified in the Weſt.

There is hardly a Night paſſes in this Populous City, wherein ſome Murder is not committed in the Streets. Two Nights ago, a Man was found dead on the Ground, whereupon a Tumult was gathered about his Bleeding Carkaſe.

kaſe. Amongſt the reſt, a Fellow came crowding in, inquiſitive what ſhould be the Matter. Thoſe who ſtood by, beholding his Cloaths bloody, which he was not ſenſible of himſelf, ſeized on him as the Murderer. His wild Looks encreaſed their Jealouſie; and, the incoherent Words with which he endeavoured to excuſe himſelf, rendred him Guilty in the Judgment of the Rabble. They carried him before a Cadi, by whom he was ſtrictly examin'd: He ſtoutly deny'd the Fact; and, no Proof could be brought againſt him, but his ſtained Cloaths. 'Tis the Cuſtom here, to put to the Torture, Perſons ſuſpected of Capital Crimes, in Order to draw a Confeſſion of the Truth. This they did to this poor Wretch; and, in the Extremity of his Pains, he acknowledg'd, he had kill'd his Wife that Evening, but was altogether Innocent of this poor Man's Death, who was Murder'd in the Streets. All the Torments they inflicted, could force no other Confeſſion from him, ſave that which his real Guilt prompted him to make. For which, he was condemned to Death, according to the Laws. Thou ſeeſt by this, that had he gone about his Buſineſs, without prying into other Mens Matters, he might have eſcap'd a Diſcovery. But, that medling Itch of the Imprudent, betray'd him (not without the particular Direction of Fate) to a Death, which indeed he merited, but not on the Score of the murder'd Man, whom he went out of his Way to ſee.

Thou

Thou wilt ſay, this Story is not applicable to thy Caſe; ſince, thou haſt never yet embru'd thy Hands in any Man's Blood. I tell thee, what I have ſaid, was not deſign'd as a Reflection on thy paſt Offence (let it be forgotten;) but, as a Caution for the future, not to engage thy ſelf, in Matters out of thy Sphere. For, a buſie Body, is never without Troubles.

Above all, I counſel thee, to practiſe the Government of the Tongue, which is a great Vertue, eſpecially in the Courts of Princes. The Arabians ſay, That a Wiſe Man's Soul, repoſes at the Root of his Tongue; but, a Fool's is ever dancing on the Tip.

Thou haſt no Reaſon to take in ill Part, the Freedom with which I adviſe thee for thy Good: unleſs, thou thinkeſt thy ſelf too Old to learn. But, I have a better Opinion of thee, than to rank thee among Pythagoras's Aſſes.

I have ſaid enough for a Friend; too much for an Enemy. It is in thy own Choice to make me which thou pleaſeſt. Adieu.

LETTER

LETTER VI.

To Zelim of Rhodes, Captain of a Galley.

THOU haſt never vouchſafed to acknowledge the Advice I ſent thee ſome Years ago, of a Chriſtian's Deſign againſt thy Life. Perhaps he wanted an Opportunity, to put his Revenge in Execution that Way; and therefore, the Caution I gave thee look'd like a falſe Alarm. Thou truſteſt in thy Courage, the Strength of thy Veſſel, the Multitude and Fidelity of thy Slaves, and thinkeſt thy ſelf invulnerable. But, let me tell thee, That neither thy Courage, nor thy Veſſel, can defend thee from the Stroke of Deſtiny; and thou haſt no greater Enemies than thoſe who eat thy Bread. Whether it be, the Continuance of thy Cruelty; or, the Natural Regret of Servitude has rend'red them ſo, I know not; but, if what I am inform'd of be true, thou art the miſerableſt Man in the World. Wert thou only in danger to loſe thy Life by a Stab, a Bullet, or the ſwift Effects of Poiſon, it would be a Happineſs, in Compariſon of the Method that is now taken to deſtroy thee: And, the Inviſible Death which thou wert formerly to receive from a Prayer-Book, would have been ſoft as the Stroke of Cupid's Arrow, in Reſpect ſpect of the Tragical and Unheard of Fate, which is now preparing for thee. Think not I go about to amuſe, or, affright thee with Chimera's and Tales, ſuch as Nurſes uſe to awe their Children into Compliance and good Manners. What I tell thee, is Matter of Fact; and, confirm'd by many Letters from Italy, to ſeveral eminent Merchants in Paris. I have ſeen ſome of them, and hear that the reſt agree in the ſame Relation.

They give an Account, That at Naples, on the Second of the laſt Moon, Three Witches were ſeized, and accuſed of practiſing Diabolical Arts; of enchanting ſeveral Perſons; of doing great Miſchief; and in fine, of having private Commerce with the Devil. They ſtoutly denied all at firſt, and made very ſubtle and plauſible Apologies. Inſomuch, as the Inquiſitors were almoſt perſuaded of their Innocence; till it was ſuggeſted, That their Houſes ſhould be ſearch'd. Officers were ſent accordingly; who, after a narrow Scrutiny, found ſome Magical Books, ſeveral Vials of ſtrange Liquors, Pots of Ointment, with an Image of Wax, reſembling a Man, but partly melted. There were imprinted on the Breaſt of the Image, ſeveral unknown Characters, Figures and Magical Symbols; And, on the Forehead was to be read, ZELIM EBEN SAGRAN. All theſe were brought, and expoſed before the Inquiſitors (of whoſe Office thou art not ignorant.) Great Deliberation was had about this unuſual Emergency. The Images and and Cheiks, were ſent for and conſulted. The Witches were examined apart; and put to the Torture, as is the Cuſtom in Capital Crimes. Admirable was their Conſtancy for a conſiderable time; but, at length, overcome by the Continuance and Sharpneſs of their Pains, they confeſs'd they had for ſome years practis'd Magick Arts, convers'd with Familiar Spirits, rais'd Tempeſts, Earthquakes, and done other wicked Feats. Being examin'd about the Image of Wax, they declar'd, That it was the Image of a Turkiſh Captain of a Galley, whoſe Name was written on the Forehead: And, that they were hired, by certain Italians, who had been Slaves in the Galley of the ſaid Captain, to bewitch him to Death, in the moſt lingring Method they could invent: That, in Order to this, they had made this Image; That every Night they met together, with a Fourth of their Gang, (who was not to be found) and made a Fire of the Bones of Dead Men, which they ſtole from the Graves and Charnel-Houſes: That they laid this Image down at a convenient Diſtance before this Fire, repeating certain Magical Words and Charms; and, as this Image gradually melted, ſo the Body of the ſaid Turkiſh Captain, did inſenſibly waſte and decay. And, to add to his lingring Death an intolerable Torment, they baſted the melting Image with the Oils, and other Liquors, which were contain'd in the Vials and Pots: That, by this Means, he was perpetually rack'd with moſt pungent and acute Pains in his Bowels, Head, and all Parts of his Body; raging under moſt violen Fevers, inſatiable Thirſt, and want of Sleep. Finally, That this lingring kind of Death would continue, as long as they pleas'd to protract the Diſſolution of the Waxen Image.

This Confeſſion, though extorted from the Witches in the midſt of inſufferable Torments, yet was delivered without any Inconſiſtencies, and with all the Demonſtrations of a real Penitence. And being ſeconded with the Teſtimonies of many Credible Witneſſes, who had overſeen them in ſome of their Nocturnal Ceremonies; the Inquiſitors moved with a juſt Horror of ſo nefandous Abominations, ſentenc'd them, To be burnt, and their Aſhes to be ſcatter'd into the Sea. Which was accordingly executed, on the Sixth of the laſt Moon, in the Preſence of infinite Spectators.

The News of this Extraordinary Event, is freſh in the Mouths of almoſt all the Inhabitants of this City; Yet, no Man, I dare ſay, hears it with that Concern for the Turkiſh Captain, as I do. Even thoſe among the Chriſtians who abhor Witchcraft, would nevertheleſs rejoice, if not only thou, but all the Muſſulmans were deſtroy'd with Enchantments; ſince, they can never hope, it will come to paſs by the Succeſs of their Arms.

Ian

I am not credulous of every Story that is related of Witches being ſatisfy'd, That Superſtition and Ignorance, has liſted many in that Infernal Number, who were Innocent and never deſerv'd it: Some having been forc'd by Racks and Tortures, to confeſs themſelves Guilty of practiſing Enchantments, when, after their Execution, there have appear'd evident Proofs to the contrary. Yet I cannot be ſure, but that there have been ſome in all Ages and Nations, who have entred into Leagues and Aſſociations with Devils, and have been enabled thereby, to perform Things above the Power of Nature. However, I have a Particular Deſire to hear from thee, and to be inform'd, Whether thou haſt experienc'd the Effect of their Enchantments. If thou haſt not, bleſs thy Stars, that thou wert born and bred a Muſſulman, againſt whom the Magick of the Infidels cannot prevail; and, that thou haſt ſwallow'd the Impreſſion of Mahomet's Seal, which is of Force to diſſolve and make invalid, all the Charms of Men and Devils. But, if thou haſt felt the Force of their Enchantments, and pineſt away with unaccountable Pains and Languors; then, think with thy ſelf, That thou art defective in keeping ſome Point of our Holy Law; That Mahomet is angry with thee, withdraws his Protection, and expoſes thee to the Malice of Evil Spirits. Neither perſuade thy ſelf, That becauſe the Three Witches are put to Death, thou ſhalt preſently recover thy former Health and Eaſe again.

For, ſo long as there is a Fourth living; and out of the Reach of Juſtice, thou art not ſafe. Nay, if ſhe were taken and Executed too; ſo long as thy Enemies are yet alive, who firſt employ'd theſe Hags, thou art ſtill at their Mercy. They will ſearch every Corner of Italy, and of all Europe, but they will find Inſtruments of their Revenge. They will rummage Hell it ſelf, to gratifie their Fury. The beſt Counſel I can give thee in this Caſe, is, To pacifie thine Enemies, by extraordinary Acts of Civility to the Chriſtians, whereever thou meeteſt them; by uſing thy Slaves mildly, and giving them their Freedom, after a limited time of Service; without exacting a Ranſom, which neither they, nor their Relations and Friends can ever be able to pay. This will abate the Rancour of the Infidels, and turn their Revenge into Kindneſs and Love. Thou wilt every where be free from Dangers; and, thoſe very Perſons, who now ſtudy all Means to take away thy Life, will then hazard their own to preſerve thee from Death.

Think not, that I go about to perſuade thee to change Temper with thy Slaves, and from the Reſolution and Bravery of a True Muſſulman, to ſink into the abject Timerouſneſs of a Chriſtian. Be fearful only of thy ſelf, and ſtand in Awe of none more than of thy own Conſcience. There is a Cato in every Man, a ſevere Cenſor of his Manners; and he that reverences this Judge, will ſeldom do any thing he need to repent of. Let not the Authority of thy Station, tempt thee to be Cruel or Unjuſt; but, in all things, Do as thou wouldſt be done unto. This is a Precept engraven on every Man's Heart; and, he whoſe Actions write after this Copy, will always be at eaſe here, and tranſcendently happy hereafter. Follow this Rule, and thou wilt experience the Effect. Adieu.

LETTER VII.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem.

IF One may judge of future Events, by applying to them the Symptoms of Things paſt; and, if a Man may compare one Kingdom with another; I ſhould think that France will in time extend the Limits of her Empire, as far as any of the Four Great Monarchies, that have been recorded in Hiſtories for their Univerſal Sway. I will not ſay, as far as the wide-ſtretch'd Empire of the ever victorious Oſmans: Yet, the Genius of this Nation, ſeems in ſome Manner to inſpire the French with as ardent a Thirſt of Glory and Conqueſt, as that which has in all Ages, appear'd to be the Inſeparable Vertue of the Muſſulmans. They preſs forward to the Mark, for which they take up Arms; that is, to ſubdue all before them, and lay Kingdoms, Provinces, and Cities at the Feet of their Sovereign. They are not diſcourag'd at Difficulties and Loſſes. The Checks and Oppoſitions they meet with, do but animate them with new and freſh Vigors. So that it is become a ſure Prognoſtick of ſome great Succeſs to that Nation, when at any time they receive ill News from their Armies. In this, their Courage ſeems to be of the Quality of Naptha; which, by pouring on of Water, takes Fire; although, thou knoweſt, theſe two Elements be contrary to each other. So, this Warlike People, inſtead of being dejected, or made timerous by any Defeat given to their Armies, are rather inflam'd with more active and valiant Reſolutions; as will appear, by the Repulſe given them by the Duke of Bavaria, not many Moons ago.

As ſoon as that News arrived in this City, one would have expected to have ſeen ſome Tokens of Fear in the People; but, it wrought a contrary Effect. No Tears of Women and Children, no compaſſionate Sighs for their ſlain Husbands, Fathers or other Relations; no down-caſt Looks, or ominous ſhaking of Heads; no melancholy Whiſpers or portentous Stories, were murmur'd in the Ears of the Multitude: But, all Things appear'd lively and proſperous; the very Women exciting the Young Men to liſt themſelves Soldiers, and the Boys in the Streets making all all their Paſtime conſiſt, in imitating the Men of Arms, and learning the Diſcipline of War. There was no need, to force Men to the Field. No ſooner was the King's Intention to raiſe New Forces divulg'd in the Provinces, but Thouſands came voluntarily and took up Arms; chuſing rather to ſeek Honourable Deaths in the Toils and Hazards of War, than to lead Inglorious Lives at Home, in the ſoft Enjoyments of Peace.

Theſe Things appear'd to me, as certain Preſages of the Riſing Greatneſs of this Monarchy, and an Evident Sign, that the French Nation in this Age, ſhall out-do their Anceſtors in Warlike Deeds.

The Stage of that Bloody Combat, between the Forces of the Duke of Bavaria, and thoſe under the Command of Mareſchal Turenne, was Mergentheim. Since which there has been a more fierce Encounter between the French and Imperialiſts at Allerſheim. Wherein the former, have recover'd the Honour they ſeem'd to have loſt in the Spring, owing much to the Bravery of the Landgrave of Heſs-Caſſel; who, with his Regiments, had a conſiderable Share in the Actions of this Day; and therefore, has been preſented with Magnificent Gifts by the Queen-Regent. The Bavarians loſt in this Battel, above Two Thouſand Common Soldiers, beſides many Officers of Note. On the French ſide, the Duke of Enguien (who had newly join'd his Forces to thoſe of Turenne) was wounded in the Arm, with Two other Commanders. Monſieur Grammond was taken Priſoner; but, honourably treated and ſent away with Preſents by the Duke of Bavaria, together with Inſtructions about a Neutrality; who is exchang'd for a German of equal Quality. The French have alſo loſt in this Battel, above a Thouſand of the Common Soldiers; ſo that their Victory coſt them dear.

The Duke of Enguien, notwithſtanding his Wounds, marches on the next day with his Army to Norlingben, offering to that Town a Neutrality, and Liberty for the Garriſon to march out, which conſiſted of Three Hundred Bavarians. But receiving a fierce Anſwer from the Governor, he cauſed the Approaches to be made in order to an Aſſault, which was begun that very Night, and a Breach made in the Walls; upon which, the Inhabitants were forc'd to intercede with the Duke, that there might be a Ceſſation of Violence till the next Morning, promiſing that then the Soldiers ſhould ſurrender at Diſcretion; which was done accordingly.

There he tarried Eight Days, to refreſh his Army. Then he marched to Dunkenſpule, which was defended by a Garriſon of Five Hundred Bavarians. He tooke this place by Storm, yet gave Quarter to the Soldiers, who laid down their Arms, and yielded themſelves Priſoners. Leaving a Garriſon of Three Hundred French in the Town, he remov'd his Forces toward Heilbrun. But, in regard this Place was defended by Fifteen Hundred Men, Men, he forbore to assault, and only Quarter'd his Army in the Neighbouring Villages.

Since that time, which was about the middle of the last Moon, there has been no considerable Action between the French and the Germans. Yet, those who pretend to be vers'd in Military Affairs, laugh at the ill Conduct of the Arch-Duke Leopold; who, when he had the French shut up in a Narrow Streight, through which it was impossible for them to pass, but by single Files, neglected that Opportunity to cut them off; deferring the Victory (whereof he was too secure) till the next day, by Reason of the present Weariness of his Soldiers. In the mean time Turenne, with his whole Army, pass'd the Streight in the dead of the Night, and came to Philipsburgh.

This Oversight of the General, is much talk'd of; because, had he pursu'd his Advantage, he had not only entirely defeated the French, but, in all Probability, falling with the whole Force of the Empire on the Swedes he had likewise vanquish'd them, and so put an end to the War. But, it seems, as if the Inscrutable Providence had determin'd to infatuate the Minds of the Germans, and reserve those Two Potent Nations, their Enemies, to be a farther Scourge to the Empire.

Adieu, Great Guardian of the Eternal Monarchy, and believe Mahmut, when he solemnly swears by Mount Sinai, and by the Tenth Night of the Moon, that he adores thy consummate Virtue and Wisdom, which never fail thee in Extremities.

Paris, 8th. of the 9th. Moon,

LETTER VIII.

To Cara Hali, a Physician at Constantinople.

I AM weary of writing News of Battels and Sieges to the Grandees; and, I know, thou seldom troublest thy self with the Care of Foreign Transactions. Besides, I have no certain Intelligence of Moment to communicat. But, I can acquaint the with something more agreeable to thy Studies and Genius.

Here is a Man in this City, who was not born Blind, but by some ill Hap lost the Use of his Eyes. Yet, Nature seems to have recompens'd that Misfortune, in the Exquisitenels of his Feeling. Thou wouldst say he carried Eyes in his Fingers Ends; since he distinguishes those things by his Touch, which are the only proper Objects of Sight. Believe me I think there can be no Deceit or Confederacy, whereby he might blind others, thers, inſtead of being ſo himſelf. I ſaw him muffled up with a Napkin which cover'd all his Face, then divers Pieces of Eaſtern Silks of various Colours, were laid on the Table before him. He felt them attentively, and told us the Colour of each Piece exactly. I, who was never over-credulous of extraordinary Pretences, ſuſpecting that either the Fineneſs of the Linen which veil'd his Face, might give him ſome Glimpſe of the different Colours; or, that ſome By-ſtander, with appointed Signs, might inform him; caus'd all the Company to withdraw, except a Learned Derviſe, who was intimate with me. We threw a thick Velvet-Mantle over his Face, which reached down to his Navel, girding it about his Waiſte, ſo as to leave his Arms at Liberty. Then I procur'd ſmall Shreds of Silks, ſuch as I could conceal in the Palm of my Hand: Theſe I caus'd him to touch with his Fingers, brought up as high as his Chin, ſo that 'twas impoſſible for him to ſee them, had he had the Uſe of his Eyes: Yet, he made not the leaſt Miſtake in five ſeveral Colours. We chang'd the Order of the Silks, and ſometimes gave him the ſame Piece four or five times together; yet, as ſoon as he had felt it, he readily told us, 'Twas the ſame Colour.

I tell thee, O learned Hali, ſuch an uncommon Experiment, afforded me Matter both of delight and wonder. I concluded from hence, That Nature is no Niggard in her Gifts, but ſupplies the defects of one Senſe, Senſe, by the ſuperabundant Accuracy of another. We ask'd this blind Perſon, by what Diſtinction he thus knew one Colour from another, without the Help of his Eyes. He was not able to expreſs the particular Manner of this diſcriminating Senſation; but only told us in General, that he felt as much Difference between the Red Silk and Black, as he had formerly done, during the Enjoyment of his Eye-Sight, between the Silks of Perſia, and the fine Linen of Europe: Which, thou knoweſt, are as different to the Touch, as fine Paper and Vellum.

Thou that daily pryeſt into the Faculties of Humane Bodies, art beſt able to judge whether this Man's Excellency, lay in the Tenuity and Fineneſs of his Skin, the Subtlety of his Spirits, or ſome unuſual powerful, yet delicate Energy of his Soul; or, whether it conſiſted in all theſe together.

The Derviſe who was with me, ſeemed not much to admire at this rare Quality of the Blind Man: Telling me moreover, that about Ten Years ago, in his Travels, he had ſeen a Blind Statuary at Florence, who undertook to make the Reſemblance of an Image, in the Chief Temple of that City; which he finiſh'd ſo much to the Life, that his Work could no otherwiſe be diſtinguiſh'd from the Original than by the difference of the Materials, that being Alabaſter, his white Clay; which he ſo temper'd and moulded with his Fingers, as he continually felt of the other, that no Lineament was left unexpreſs'd.

Indeed

Indeed, when I reflected on our Mutes in the Seraglio, and the unaccountable Sagacity with which they apprehend those Words which they never heard, I ceas'd to be surpriz'd at what I had seen the Blind Man perform, or what the Dervise had said of the Statuary. I remember in Sultan Amurath's time, there was a Mute, in whom the Grand Signior took infinite Delight. For, Besides a Thousand pretty Gestures and Tricks, with which she us'd to divert that Prince, he often made her his Secretary, employing her in Writing Letters to his Bassa's and others, whilst he dictated to her by Signs. Although she could never receive the Sound of Words, nor utter any that were articulate; yet I have seen her transcribe a whole Chapter in the Alcoran, containing a Hundred and Seventy Versicles, in as fine a Character, as the most celebrated Scribes of the Empire; and, when she had done, would explain what she had thus written, by Signs, which made it evident that she perfectly understood the Alcoran.

These are rare Gifts, my Friend; yet, were all the Mutes Educated with as much Diligence and Care, as was Saqueda, (so was she call'd) 'tis possible they would attain to greater Perfection. I have been told, that her Tutor, one of the Learned'st Men in Arabia, bestowed twenty Years in Teaching her this Method of Reading, Understanding and Writing.

This

This puts me in mind of a Man, who was bred a Mahometan, but being taken Captive by the French, embrac'd their Religion; not in his Heart, but only in outward Profeſſion. When I firſt came to Paris, I fell into his Company by accident, and underſtanding that he was an African, I deſired to ask him ſome Queſtions; but he was Dumb, ſo that I had almoſt laid aſide my Hopes of converſing with him; till perceiving that he mov'd his Lips, and open'd his Mouth as one that was Talking. I offer'd him Pen, Ink and Paper; making Signs to him, that I would gladly know his Mind in Writing. He accordingly writ in Moreſco, That he was ſtruck Deaf and Dumb about Eighteen Years ſince; telling me alſo, the Place of his Nativity, and how he came hither. I took the Pen, and in the ſame Language, expreſs'd my Compaſſion of his Misfortunes. When he ſaw that I underſtood Moreſco, he writ again, ſignifying to me, That if I open'd my Mouth wide at the Pronouncing of every Syllable, he could underſtand my Meaning by the Poſture of my Lips and Tongue. I found his Words true, to my no ſmall Admiration; for, he would write down what I had ſaid. We convers'd together often; and at length I procur'd his Eſcape, in the Retinue of a Chiaus that was returning from hence to Conſtantinople.

I beſeech the Wiſe Architect of Nature, and Repairer of Humane Defects, either to continue continue to us the Uſe of our Sences, or to ſupply that Want, by ſome Superlative Endowments of the Mind.

LETTER IX.

To Uſeph Baſſa.

THOU wilt ſay, I am unmindful of my Duty, in not Congratulating thy New Honour before this; and, that I forget the good Offices which formerly paſs'd between us in the Seraglio. I tell thee, my Obligations are infinite, not only to thee, but to many others of my Friends at the Port: It is impoſſible for me to acquit my ſelf of ſo many Engagements. As for the Dignity to which the Sultan has rais'd thee, I receiv'd the firſt News of it within theſe fourteen Days. And, I dare affirm that none of thy Friends, or of thoſe whoſe Dependance is on thee, could with greater Complacency, behold thee Veſted by our moſt Auguſt Emperour, than I read the Letter which conveyed to me this welcome Inligence.

Long mayſt thou Live to enjoy the Bleſſings which thy good Fortune has heap'd on thee. Yet I counſel thee to enjoy them ſo, as not to forget thou muſt die. Let not the Grandeur of thy Station, render thee proud and wilful: But remember, when thou art ſurrounded with a Crown of adoring Suppliants, That Death ſhall level thee with the Meaneſt of thy Slaves. Thus the Ancient Philoſophers, ſpar'd not to perform the Office of Monitors, to their Kings and Princes: and, I hope, thou wilt not take in ill Part, the wholeſome Advice of Mahmut, who diſcovers a Temper void of Hypocriſie, in the Freedom he aſſumes. If thou giveſt Ear to Flatterers, they will Complement thee to thy Ruin; and when thou art on the Brink of a Precipice, they will perſuade thee there is no Danger, though, if thou goeſt on, they know thy Fall is inevitable. They will pride themſelves in the Dexterity of their Malice, and inſult over thee with ſcornful Sarcaſms, whom not long ago they idoliz'd.

The Eminent Command thou haſt, requires thy frequent Preſence in the Sovereign Divan: And that thou mayſt not ſit there, only as an Auditor of other Mens Counſels, and incapable of making one in the Number of thoſe, who become Remarkable by their Orations, or Reports of Foreign Events; I will now entertain thee with ſome Paſſages, which have happen'd in Europe ſince the beginning of this Year, whereof the other Baſſa's may poſſibly be ignorant.

The Diet of Francfort, which had continued for three Years, was diſſolv'd on the 11th.

12*th*, of the 4*th*. Moon. This may be known at the Port, while they remain Strangers to the Reaſon of it. There are a Sort of Chriſtians in Germany, whom they call Evangelicks. Theſe are oppoſite to the Roman Church, both in Religion and Intereſt; and their Cauſe is chiefly eſpous'd by the Dukes of Saxony and Brandenburgh. It was to comply with theſe, that an Aſſembly was appointed at Oſnaburgh; but the Emperour and the Catholicks, were either for continuing that at Francfort, or tranſlating it to Munſter. While the contending Parties were bickering, and ſtriving to gain their ſeveral Ends, the Deputy of the Duke of Bavaria, tired out with ſuch intolerable Delays, departed from Francfort; whom the reſt of the Deputies follow'd. And this thou may'ſt report for the true Occaſion of the Diſſolution of that Diet.

Thus at the beginning of the Year, the Diſputes which theſe Infidels rais'd about Safe Conduct, Exactneſs of Titles, Priority of Addreſs, and many other vain Punctilio's, hindred them from coming to any Concluſion, about a Peace, which was the principal Cauſe of their Aſſembling. And this is a Folly peculiar to the Nazarenes, that in all Publick Aſſemblies the very Strength and Vitals of their Counſels, are ſpent in a vain adjuſting of empty Ceremonies.

It is credibly reported here, That the King of Poland earneſtly ſollicits a Match with Queen Chriſtina of Suedeland. It ſeems, he had without any positive answer, or effecting any thing in it. In the second Moon of this Year, that Queen sent an Ambassador, to give the King of Poland an Account, that she had taken the Government upon Her. While he tarried in the Polish Court, there were not wanting such; as by the King's Order, fitted his Inclination, in Reference to this Affair. It was propos'd to him, That this Match would be a happy Occasion to Unite the two Kingdoms in a firm and durable League; That the Evangelicks in Poland, would be much eas'd thereby; That Uladislaus, was not much decay'd in his Natural Vigour; That Suedeland might in the mean while be govern'd by the Council. With many other Propos'als and Encouragements to this Purpose: Among which, I must not omit, that it was suggested, how easie 'twould be for two such Potent Crowns, in Conjunction, not only to humble the Germans, but also to put a stop to the Victorious Arms of the Ottoman Empire. But, all this came to Nothing; that wary Queen suspecting that there was a deeper Design in the Courtship of this Old Fox: And, that by such a Match, the Kingdom of Suedeland, in Default of the Issue-Royal, might be subjected to a Foreign Crown.

However, it is easie to apprehend from this, That if the Poles maintain at Present their Accord with the Sublime Port, 'tis for want of Strength to break it; and, that they only wait an Opportunity, to make some Potent and Firm Alliance, which may second the Designs formed by that Court, against the First

Throne

Throne on Earth, whereof thou art One of the Principal Pillars.

Remain firm in thy Station; and, let neither the Tempeſts of War, nor the Convulſions of State, which are the too frequent Products of Peace, ſhake thy Conſtancy. But, above all, ſuffer not thy Integrity, which is the Baſis of all Vertues, to be undermin'd by Bribes.

If thou followeſt this Counſel, God and his Prophet ſhall Eſtabliſh thee, al Men will Honour thee, thy Sovereign ſhall Exalt thee; and Mahmut will rejoice to ſee thee in time become the Atlas of the Eternal Empire.

LETTER X.

To Ichingi Cap' Oglani, Præceptor to the Royal Pages of the Seraglio.

THERE is a vaſt Difference betwee thy Letter, and that of Shaſhim Iſ-ham. He is Eloquent in the Acknowledg-ment of his Crime; thou Rhetorical in th own Juſtification. Thou haſt plunder'd De-moſthenes and Cicero, and robb'd 'em of al the Flowers and Tropes of Oratory, to dreſ up a faint, liveleſs Excuſe. Such an artifi-cial Apology, inſtead of cancelling, heighten thy Offence. It might have procur'd thee th Applauſe of the Academy; but, it come ſhort of giving me Satisfaction, for the In-juries I have receiv'd at thy Hands. I have Reaſon to eſteem them ſuch, becauſe ſo de-ſign'd, although they took no Effect. For Wrongs of this kind ought to be meaſur'd by the Intention of the Author, not by their Succeſs. The Miniſters of the Divan, will hardly be prevail'd on to ſuſpect Mahmut, who has given ſubſtantial Proofs of his Fi-delity.

Tell me, in the name of God and Ma-homet, what was the Motive that induced thee to ſlander me? Wherein have I merited this Perſecution at thy Hands? It could not be be Revenge, becauſe I never gave thee Occaſion: unleſs thou ſtill retaineſt a Grudg on the Score of my Studying in the Academies; and that at my Return from Palermo, thou wert not able to expoſe me, in the Preſence of the Muftis, in any Point of Language or Learning. But I had rather charitably believe 'twas thy Ambition, not thy Malice, which gave Birth to thoſe Calumnies thou haſt vented againſt me. Thou envieſt me the Honour of ſerving the Grand Signior in this Station, thinking thy ſelf capable of diſcharging this Office more ſucceſsfully than Mahmut. I cenſure not thy Abilities; but I think 'tis beſt for every Man to be content with his own Condition, ſince Deſtiny diſtributes the Employments of the World among Men, by Rules into which we cannot penetrate.

Thou art Maſter of the French Tongue; but doſt thou think that a complete Qualification for a Man in my Poſt? Art thou fit to Converſe in the Court of a Foreign Prince, who canſt not govern thy Tongue in that of thy Native Sovereign? Thou art yet to learn a Courtier's Maſter-piece, which is, To diſſemble even the neceſſary Art of Diſſimulation. That is, as the Arabians ſay, To have a Veil upon a Veil; or, as the Italians, To have a Maſk with a Natural Face on the Out-ſide. Thou art ſo far from this, that thou canſt not yet draw perfectly the firſt rough Strokes of a Counterfeit.

To

To ſpeak plain, hadſt thou by an Artificial feigning of Friendſhip to me, made Way to inſinuate thy Story into the Belief of the Grandees, thou might'ſt have prais'd me to my Ruin. But to go bluntly to Work without preventive Encomiums, diſcover'd at once the Weakneſs of thy Judgment, and the Strength of thy Paſſion; giving the Miniſters Occaſion to think, there was leſs of Truth, than of Deſign in thy Accuſations.

For the Future I adviſe thee to mind thy Books and Scholars, and meddle not with Mahmut, whoſe Buſineſs is to ſtudy Men. Adieu.

LETTER XI.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State.

With extream Joy I have received the certain News of the taking of Canea by the Invincible Ottoman Arms.

I muſt confeſs, when I firſt apprehended the Intentions of Sultan Ibrahim, to make War with the Republick of Venice, I was ap-to hearken to some thinking Men in this Court; who, making their Observations, of the Sultan's indulging himself in Female Pleasures, conjectured from thence (as by a Common Rule) that he would not have discovered such a Martial and Active Spirit, in asserting the Honour of the Ottoman Empire. His dext'rous concealing his Designs, even to the very Execution of them, has struck a Damp into all the Courts in Europe; insomuch, as Cardinal Mazarini, this Day told the Queen-Regent, That he doubted, lest Sultan Ibrahim would prove another Junius Brutus, who, being the Nephew of Tarquin, One of the Primitive Kings of Rome, for some years, counterfeited an extraordinary Simplicity and Weakness of Spirit: but, having privately secured a Faction to his own Interests, by Popular Arts; he, to gain the Sovereignty, chang'd the Form of Government; procur'd himself to be made Consul, and discovered a Genius, surpassing in Policy and mature Judgment, all his Predecessors.

Though the Cardinal's Comparison, be disproportionate to the Grandeur of the Sovereign Emperor of the World; who cannot without a vast Injury, be post-pon'd in Virtue, Wisdom or Power, as a Second or Imitator of any Prince upon Earth: Yet, the Character holds good in the Main, That he has timely and maturely dissembled, the most Sublime Abilities and Endowments a Sovereign Prince is capable of, rendring thereby his Enemies ſecure and careleſs; till at length, all thoſe Illuſtrious Attributes exert themſelves on a ſuddain, breaking forth like the Sun from an Eclipſe; at once dazling the aſtoniſh'd World, and ſurprizing the Enemies of the Ottoman Empire, in the Slumbers which proceeded from the Contempt of his Sacred Majeſty.

by

I thought indeed once, that the Venetians would have been in a Condition to have fac'd the Ottoman Navy, and diſputed their farther Progreſs on the Seas. I expected no leſs than that they would have made ſome huſſing Attempts on the Iſles of the Archipelago? that they would have enter'd the Helleſpont, brav'd the Dardanels, and ſailing forward would have block'd up the Ottoman Navy in the Propontis, or driven them into the Euxine Sea for ſhelter. And, who could have thought otherwiſe, had they been provided for a War? But, our Sage Emperor, by Secrecy, which is the very Soul of all great Undertakings, has anticipated their very Fear and leap'd upon the Prey, while the Keepers were aſleep.

Had the Chriſtian Princes and States, laid aſide their Private Punctilio's and Animoſities, when the Venetians firſt made their Application to them for Aſſiſtance, it might have prov'd a doubtful War. But, inſtead of generouſly Uniting their Forces in the Common Defence of Chriſtendom, they began to divide their Intereſts and Hearts one from another; and that, upon the vaineſt

Motives

Motives in the World; one State disputing with another, about Precedency of Posts in the Army; which proceeded to that Height as to frustrate the Main Design: For the Pope himself at last, is forc'd to raise the greatest Aids the State of Venice are like to have; joining his Galleys with theirs, and sending a Thouland Foot on Board, at his own Cost.

Thus does Divine Providence, out of the Discords of Christian Princes, draw Occasions to enlarge the Sacred Empire of the Mussulmans; and to spread the Ottoman Conquest's o'er the Western World.

LETTER XII.

To the Magnificent and Redoubtable Vizir Azem.

IT appears that the Queen of France is very Indulgent to her Generals, having call'd Home the Duke of Enguien from the Toils of War. This Prince neglecting the Wounds he receiv'd in the Battel of Allersheim, not many Days after, fell into a violent Fever: so that he was carried in a Horse-Litter to Philipsburg, with no small Danger of his Life.

As ſoon as he recover'd his Health, he was commanded to return to France, and the Charge of the whole Army committed to Mareſchal Turenne.

Such Tenderneſs is never ſhew'd to the Invincible Ottoman Generals, neither would they eſteem it a Favour, but a Diſgrace. When they go to the Wars, they make no underhand Leagues with the Elements to ſpare their Bodies; but, are reſolv'd to combat with Cold, Heat, Hunger, Thirſt, and all the Hardſhips to which Soldiers are liable, as well as with the Swords of their Enemies. They take no other Armour againſt the Rigorous Froſts of a Ruſſian Winter, or the Scorching Sands of a Perſian Summer, but an Unſhaken Reſolution, an Invincible Patience, and a Mind incapable of bowing under the worſt Misfortunes. They are not angry with the Weapons of their Adverſaries, when they carve in their Limbs the marks of an Honour, which will far outlaſt the Pain of their Wounds; and, in their Fleſh hew deep Characters, of an Immortal Fame, and a Renown which ſhall know no Period. They are not parſimonious of their Blood, but court their Enemies to ſpill it on the Ground, from whence it will ſpring up in Laurels and Wreaths, to Crown 'em with Triumphs and Glory whilſt they live, and to ſweeten their Memory with the Praiſe of Future Generations.

Thus, Magnanimous Vizir, do the Muſſulman Heroes, the Props of the Firſt Empire, manifeſt

manifeſt their Courage, in defying of Dangers and Wounds, and ſcorning to capitulate with Fortune for Eaſe and Exemption from Death. They know, that when they march againſt the Infidels, 'tis in Vindication of the Eternal Unity: And therefore, inſtead of endeavouring to ſhun, they Court a Death ſo glorious, as that which will immediately tranſport them to the Boſom of our Holy Prophet, and to the Inexpreſſible Delights of the Gardens of Eden. Where this Truth is firmly rooted, there is no room for Fear to plant it ſelf. But the Caſe is otherwiſe with Infidels, who blaſpheme that pureſt Undivided Eſſence. They aſſert and believe a Plurality of Gods, and therefore, in time of Danger, amongſt ſo many Deities, they know not whom to addreſs, or whom to confide in. The Apprehenſion of Death, is terrible to them, whoſe Hope is only in this Life; Whoſe Conſciences are ſtained with a thouſand Pollutions, and yet renounce the very Method of being Clean. Who not only err themſelves, but by their evil Example and Influence, (for I ſpeak of the Princes and Great Ones) draw Innumerable after them, to taſte of the Tree Zacon, which grows in the Middle of Hell.

People ſpeak variouſly of the Duke of Enguien's Conduct in the Battel of Allerſheim. His Creatures extol his Valour and Experience with Hyperboles: Whilſt his Enemies endeavour to leſſen his Reputation. Some ſay, he owes his Revocation to the Queen's diſlike; others attribute it to the extraordinary Concern ſhe has for his Health. But, ſuch as would be eſteem'd the Wiſer Sort, ſay his Return is voluntary and ſought by himſelf, ſcorning to hold his Commiſſion any longer at the Pleaſure of Cardinal Mazarini; who, 'tis thought, firſt procured him this Employment, only to have him out of the Way, and take off his Application from the Domeſtick Affairs of France. Theſe are the Diſcourſes of the People at preſent, who yet perhaps may change their Opinions before the Sun goes down. They will always be cenſuring and diſcanting on the Actions of their Superiors; few being willing to think their Tongues were given 'em to lie Idle. It is but a Little Member, but often does Great Miſchief by its Activity. One of the Ancients gave no good Character of it, when he call'd it a Demon. Yet, we are not bound to believe all that the Philoſophers ſaid. Æſop gave the moſt impartial Account of this Member, when he ſaid, 'twas the Beſt and the Worſt. Sometimes I ſit ſilent many Hours together; not for want of Company; (for here's a Glut of that in this Populous City) nor, becauſe I know not what to ſay, (for I could ſpeak a great Deal more than 'tis fit for others to hear) but, that I may ſtudy with leſs Interruption, how to ſerve my Great Maſter. For much talking enervates the Judgment, and evaporates the Mind into Air. Beſides, by thus practiſing Silence in Private, I learn the Art of reſtraining my Words in Publick, when it is requiſite to promote the Ends at which I aim. 'Tis not for a Man in my Station, to be open and talkative; but to diſtinguiſh Perſons and Seaſons; to underſtand derſtand the due Stops and Advances of my Tongue; ſometimes to ſay Much in a Little, at other Times to ſay Little or Nothing at all; but ever ſo to ſpeak, as not to lay my ſelf naked to the Hearers; yet to ſeem a very frank, open-hearted Man, in what I Diſcourſe of.

I would not have thee conclude from what I have ſaid, That Mahmut uſes any Reſerve to the Miniſters of the Divan, who are Mines of Science and Wiſdom, and can eaſily diſcern the Heart through the moſt artificial Veil of Words. But it is abſolutely neceſſary for me, to uſe Diſſimulation in this Court; ſeeming many times Ignorant of what I really know, that I may not be thought to know more than they would have me. I was never yet ſo indiſcreet, as to publiſh any Secret that was committed to my Charge; whereby I have gained great Confidence, with Men who delight to unboſome their Intelligence. They eſteem me a Man of Integrity, and fit to be truſted. Thus am I made privy to many Intrigues of the Grandees, and a Repoſitory of the Court-News: whilſt they whiſper in Mahmut's Ear, what is tranſacted in the Royal Bed-Chambers, and private Apartments.

By this means, I came acquainted with an Amour of Cardinal Mazarini, which is known but to a few. This Miniſter has none of the Worſt Faces, and a proportionate Elegance in his Shape: much addicted alſo to the Love of Women; yet he manages his Intrigues with that Caution and Privacy, as not to expoſe the Honour of his Function. Among the reſt, he had frequent Access to the Chamber of a certain Countess-Dowager, her Husband being lately deceas'd. This was not carried so privately, but 'twas whisper'd about that a Man was seen often to come out of this Ladies Chamber a little before day; but no Body knew who it was (for the Cardinal went disguiz'd.) At last it came to the Queens Ear, who was resolv'd to unravel this Intrigue. She caused Spies to be placed at a convenient Distance from the Ladies Chamber-Door, which opened in a Gallery of the Royal Palace, with Orders to trace him Home. That Night the designed Watch was first set, it fortun'd, that the Cardinal being in the Countesses Chamber, her Maid, (who was privy to this Amour) overheard these Spies talking to each other concerning her Lady; which made her more attentive (being in a Place where she could not be seen) till at length she plainly discovered, That they lay in wait to find out who it was that had been seen coming out of the Chamber. She quickly acquaints the Countess with this News. She consults the Cardinal what was best to be done to avoid Discovery. In fine, it was agreed between 'em, That the Countess should put on the Cardinal's Disguise, and he a Suit of her Clothes. That she should go out at the usual Hour of her Retreat, and walk in the Gardens; That, if examin'd, she should pretend, this Disguise was to guard her from the rude Attempts of Men, who if they found a Lady alone in the Night-Time, would not fail to offer some Incivilities; that soon after her Departure, the Cardinal ſhould go forth in her Dreſs, and ſhift for himſelf. This was perform'd accordingly. The Counteſs walk'd into the Gardens in the Cardinal's Diſguiſe, followed by the Spies, whilſt he goes to an Intimate Friend's Houſe, (an Italian, whoſe Fortune depended on this Miniſter) and changes his Female Accoutrements, for the proper Apparel of his Sex. The Counteſs having walk'd about half an Hour in the Garden, was ſeiz'd on by ſome of the Guards, under ſuſpicion of ſome ill Deſign. She was carried before the Queen, and examin'd. She then diſcover'd her ſelf, begging the Queens Pardon, and telling her, That a particular Devotion, had oblig'd her to take that Courſe for ſeveral Mornings; but, if it offended Her Majeſty, ſhe would hold her ſelf diſpenſed with, and would forbear. The Queen ſeeming ſatisfied with this Anſwer, diſmiſſed her. Thus the Amours of the Cardinal and the Counteſs, remain'd a Secret; and there are but three Perſons (beſides themſelves) that know any thing of it; among which Mahmut is one.

Thou ſeeſt, Illuſtrious Miniſter, that the Reputation of my Secrecy, has gain'd me the Confidence of one of the Cardinal's Privado's; for I had this Relation from the Italian, whom I mentioned, at whoſe Houſe the Cardinal chang'd his Diſguiſe. I am not without Hopes, by the Prudent Management of this Diſcovery, to penetrate farther into the Court Intrigues. For he that told me this Story, conſider'd not that he made me thereby Maſter of his Fortune; and that it is no longer ſafe for him, to deny me any Intelligence I require of him. He has put a Key into my Hand, which will open his Breast at my Pleasure.

Yet I need not magisterially claim Discoveries from him, as the only Conditions, on which he is to expect my Concealing what he has already disclos'd. There is a more dextrous and serviceable way to become his Confessor, without such an ungrateful Insult; whilst with a well acted Candour, I feign a Relation of such things, as I suspect, yet cannot be certain are true, till attested by himself; professing at the same time, not to believe those pretended Reports I heard. If I shall be so happy, as to do any effectual Service to the Grand Signior by this Engagement, it will answer my Ends, and I shall not repent of my Craft.

Mahmut Salutes thee, Sovereign Bassa, in the humblest Posture of Adoration, lying prostrate on the Ground, in Contemplation of thy Grandeur. Beseeching God, That he would grant this Favour to thee, to live happily, and to die in thy Bed.

LETTER XIII.

To Egri Boinou, a White Eunuch.

THOU giveſt me abundant Proofs of thy Affection and Friendſhip, in frankly telling me what they ſay of Mahmut in the Seraglio. I do not expect to be free from Cenſure; and am ſo far from being diſcouraged at the Obloquies ſome Men faſten on me, that it adds to my Comfort; it being an aſſur'd Mark of Innocence, to be traduc'd. I am not deſirous, that the Arabian Proverb ſhould be verified in me, which ſays, That he deſerves no Man's Good Word, of whom all Men ſpeak well. I dread to be Popular at ſuch a Price, and will rather court the Slanders of the Envious, by a ſtedfaſt Perſeverance in my Duty, than lay a Train for the Complements of Flatterers, by favouring Sedition. Thou knoweſt what Reaſon I have to ſay this. There needs no Interpreter between us. Though the Black Eunuch has recanted his Aſperſions, yet there are others who perſiſt in their Malice; and it will be difficult for the Maſter of the Pages, with his beſt Rhetorick, to exempt himſelf from the Number.

I have received both their Apologies, and have anſwered them. I wiſh they would reform this Vice; not ſo much for my Sake, who am Proof againſt their Accuſations, as for their own: For the Injury they intended to do me, will redound moſt to themſelves. Miſery is on him, that perſecuteth his Neighbour.

He that is Merciful and Gracious, who hath ſeparated the Brightneſs of the Day from the Obſcurity of the Night, defend both thee and me from the Malice of Whiſperers, from the Enchantments of Wizards, and ſuch as breath Thrice upon the Knot of the Triple Cord.

LETTER XIV.

To Muſtapha, Berber Aga.

THOU wilt Laugh at the Hypocriſie and Folly of the Nazarenes, when thou ſhalt know the Articles agreed upon between the Elector of Saxony, and Koningſmark, one of the Suediſh Generals, on the 27th. of the 8th. Moon.

The Suedes had prevail'd on the Son of the Elector, to intercede with his Father for a Truce; but the Old Duke would not hearken to any thing of that Nature, till Torſtenſon gave Orders to the Suediſh Army in thoſe Parts, that they ſhould oppreſs the Elector's Subjects, by exacting from them unreaſonable Taxes and Contributions; and that they ſhould lay Deſolate all the Countries about Dreſden, if they refuſed to pay what was demanded of them. Accordingly they took a Caſtle, which commanded a large Valley of Meadows and Cornfields. The Suedes burnt the Corn on the Ground, led away the Peaſants Captives, and demoliſh'd many Towns and Villages; yet not without ſome Loſs on their Side: For the Saxons one Night ſtole upon them while they were ſecurely ſleeping, and ſlew an hundred and twenty, taking above three hundred Priſoners. Thoſe who were left in Poſſeſſion of the Caſtle, met with no better Fortune; being compell'd in a few Days, to ſurrender this

their new Conqueſt, with five Enſigns, and a hundred and fifty Priſoners, which were all carried in Triumph to Dreſden.

One would have thought, that theſe Succeſſes ſhould have confirm'd the Elector in the Averſion he had already conceiv'd for a Treaty, that he would rather have purſu'd his good Fortune with Arms: Eſpecially, when by entring into a Private Separate Treaty with the Suedes he muſt needs give a great Suſpicion to the Aſſembly of the Deputies. But the Old Duke doated; and what neither the repeated Solicitations of his Son, nor the continual Ravages which General Koningſmark made in his Territories, could procure from him, that he granted to the charming Addreſſes of a Beautiful Lady.

The Elector's Son adhering much to the Suediſh Intereſt, and finding all other Means ineffectual to oblige his new Friends; It was agreed upon between him and Koningſmark, that he ſhould at leaſt perſuade his Father to a Truce of a few Days: That during this Ceſſation of Arms, the Son ſhould invite his Father to a Banquet, where Koningſmark ſhould be preſent, with ſome of the Principal Suedes in his Army. All this ſucceeded according to their Wiſhes. The good Old Man conſented to a Ceſſation of Arms; and to give Koningſmark a Meeting at his Son's Banquet. The German Gallantry, and indeed that of all North-Europe, conſiſts much in their Exceſſive Drinking: He is eſteem'd the moſt polite Man, who can bear moſt Wine, with leaſt Alteration of his Temper.

per. This they call Carouſing. The Son had provided Plenty of thoſe Wines, which grow on the Banks of the Rhine, eſteem'd the wholeſomeſt and moſt delicious of all theſe Parts. It is not neceſſary to repeat particularly their firſt Salutes and Addreſſes: Both Parties ſeem'd emulous to exceed in Civilities. They fell to their Wine, with Freedom and Mirth, after the Manner of the Country. When in the midſt of their Glaſſes, whilſt the Heart of the Old Duke was elevated with the Juice of the Grape, came into the Room a tall Perſonage all in Armour, and making his Obeiſance to the Company, deliver'd a Letter to General Koningſmark. The General having receiv'd it, the Stranger was invited by the Elector's Son to ſit down with them. He was Maſter of the Feaſt, and only Koningſmark and the Stranger, beſides himſelf, were privy to the Intrigue.

The Stranger unbuckling his Helmet, and pulling it off (for all the reſt of the Company were uncover'd, it being the Hotteſt Day in all the Summer) diſcover'd a Face and Hair, much like one of thoſe Nymphs, deſcrib'd by Poets and Painters.

The Duke could not withdraw his Eyes from this ſurprizing Beauty, nor fix his roving Thoughts: ſometimes it put him in mind of Ganymede, the diſcarded Minion of Jupiter; but Ganymede, was never ſeen in Armour. Then he thought of Adonis, then of the Babylonian Pyramus, the Indian Atis. In fine, he run over all the Celebrated Youths of the Eaſt, to match the Beauty of this Illuſtrious Stranger.

He

He drank and gaz'd, whilſt his Son and Koningſmark, were pleas'd to ſee the Bait take. From ruminating on our Sex, he paſs'd to that of Women: And remembring that in ſome former Battels between the Suedes and Germans, ſeveral Ladies had diſguiſed themſelves in Armour, and followed General Torſtenſon to the Field, he concluded preſently, that this was ſome beautiful Female of Suedeland.

This thought put the Old Duke into a pleaſant Fit of Raillery, yet not without ſome mixture of Paſſion for this lovely Heroine. There was ſomthing ſo peculiarly graceful in all her Carriage and Addreſs, as Charm'd the Elector's Heart. The Women in thoſe parts of Europe, are not ſo preciſe in their Converſation with Men, as in the Eaſt. And 'tis a great Point of Education, ſo to adjuſt the Punctilio's of their Deportment, as neither to appear too open, nor too reſerv'd. This was her Maſter-piece; for ſhe ſo equally divided the Parts ſhe was to Act, both of a Maid and a Soldier, that neither entrenched on the other, but ſhe acquitted her ſelf with exquiſite Honour and Gallantry.

The next Day after the Banquet, the Son renewed his Mediation for a Treaty? but the Elector ſeemed cold. All his Thoughts were buſied in ruminating on his Fair Enemy.

Not to detain thee longer in expectation of the Iſſue; The Love of this young Amazon had taken ſo deep Root in his Heart, that he would grant nothing but for her Sake, neither could he deny any thing which ſhe deſired.

Thus

Thus by this Stratagem, they accompliſh'd their Aims, and he condeſcended to a Treaty, after fourteen Days Debate on the Articles: Of which I here ſend thee a True and Particular Copy, that thou maiſt find ſome Divertiſement in the Folly of the Infidels. The Articles are as follows:

"THAT it ſhould be lawful for the Duke to "keep due Faith to the Emperor; nor "ſhould he be obliged, to admit any thing con-"trary to the Intereſt of the Empire.

"That the Elector ſhould not lend the Em-"peror above three Regiments of Horſe, nor "ſhould permit him to raiſe Soldiers in his Prin-"cipality.

"That the Suedes ſhould have free and ſafe "Paſſage through Saxony, provided they came "not within three Miles of Dreſden.

"That there ſhould be free Traffick, between "the Elector's Subjects and the Suedes by Land "and Water.

"That at the end of three Months, each "Party ſhould be obliged to declare, Whether "they would prolong the Truce, or break it off.

"That the Elector ſhould again enjoy his Re-"venues, except thoſe which were drawn from "Leipſick. That he ſhould pay the Suedes ele-"ven thouſand Rix-Dollars a Month, and a "certain quantity of Corn.

"That the Elector ſhould do nothing which "might hinder the Siege of Magdeburgh.

Theſe

These Articles, at first Sight appeared to be equally favourable to the Saxons, as to the Suedes. But, in Reality, they serv'd only as an Umbrage to deeper Designs, which the Suedes had in Agitation. For this was the first Step to draw the Saxon off from the Emperor's Party; and Torstenson was now secure, that whilst the Suedes rushed farther into Germany, the Saxon would not molest them behind.

For my Part, I neither understand the Policy nor the Integrity of the Elector, in signing these Articles; nor how he can reconcile the First of them, with any of the Rest: To give safe Conduct, and kind Entertainment to the Enemies of his Sovereign: To be obliged not to lend him any more Assistance, than his Enemies shall allow, nor suffer him to raise Forces at his own Charges: To be cheated of his own Revenues, and tamely yield to pay a monthly Tribute besides: To be tyed up from succouring one of the Principal Towns in his Principality, at that time Besieged by the Suedes; this is a new Method of keeping due Faith to Sovereigns, or of observing common Prudence for ones self. But Women and Wine cause a Wise Man to stumble, as the Arabians say. And this Old Prince is blessed in a hopeful Son, who is not ashamed to turn Pimp, that so he may betray his Father to his Mortal Enemies. But let the Christians proceed in their Falshood and Treachery, one against another, while every good Mussulman, prostrates himself Five Times a Day; and Prays in his Integrity for the Consummation of that time, wherein God has determin'd to put a Peria Period to the Monarchies of these Infidels, and to reduce them to the Faith and Obedience of his Holy Law.

I wish some of my Friends, would send me some Relation of what passes in the East: I have heard nothing of Moment out of Asia, these many Moons. I could almost think my self banish'd from the Eternal Providence, while I reside among these Uncircumcised.

Think sometimes on Mahmut; and, if thou canst not relieve his Melancholy, at least pity him, whom all the Honours and Pleasures of these Western Parts, would not be able to exhilarate, so long as he apprehends himself forgotten by his Friends at Constantinople.

LETTER XV.

To Mahummed Hogia, Derviſe, Eremit, Inhabitant of the Sacred Cave at the foot of Mount Uriel in Arabia the Happy.

THY Remembrance is as the Dew of the Evening, or the Midnight Breezes in Africk, after the ſcorching Fervors of a Summer Day, when neither Trees, nor Houſes, nor higheſt Mountains afford any Shadow. Such are the Employments of State, keeping the Mind in as reſtleſs an Activity, as that which the Philoſophers ſay is the Occaſion of Heat. Such alſo is the Refreſhment I find in thinking of thee, whoſe Soul is a Manſion of Tranquility, an Umbrella of Temperance and all Vertue. Thither I retreat for Reſpiration from the Fatigues of worldly Buſineſs. Pardon the bold Acceſs of an humble Slave, who cannot be ſo happy as to viſit thee any otherwiſe than by Letters, yet would be miſerable in the want of this Privilege.

Ever ſince I had the Honour to kiſs the Duſt of thy Feet in that Sacred Retirement, I was fill'd with Love and Admiration of thy Sanctity. Thrice happy are the Neighbouring Shepherds, whoſe Flocks feed under thy auſpicious Protection. No fierce Lions, nor ravenous Tygers, dare violate that Sanctuary; or, hunt for Prey within those Meadows, Consecrated by thy Presence, That Rich and Flow'ry Vale, was first secured, with an Eternal Immunity from Spoil and Rapine, by the Blessing of our Holy Prophet. Now that Blessing seems to be redoubled by thy Prayers and Abstinences, who inheritest his Spirit as well as his Abode. 'Twas in that Holy Cave, the Messenger of God fasted for the space of three Moons: Thy whole life there, is one continued Abstinence. When thou liftest up thy Venerable Hands to Heaven in Prayer, the Enemies of our Holy Law are seiz'd with Fear and Trembling: Thou art the Guardian Angel of the Ottoman Empire. Thy Body attenuated with twenty years Fasting, is purified almost to Immorality: Thou art become a Denizon among the Spirits. Neither the Beasts of the Earth, nor the Fowls of the Air, nor the Fish of the Sea, will charge thee with their Blood: Thy Table never smoak'd with slaughter'd Dainties. Every Tree affords thee a Feast, and the Meadows regale thee with a Thousand harmless Delicacies. Thy Thirst is allay'd with the Crystal Streams; and, when thou art disposed to Banquet, the Arabian Sheep supply thee with Nectar. Thus, like a prudent Traveller thou accustomest thy self before-hand, to the Diet of the Country whither thou art going: thou livest the Life of Paradise here on Earth.

Thou art not privy to the Wickedness of the Age: that Cell guards thee from other Mens Vices: while thy incomparable Humility, defends thee from thy own Vertues. Thou art not not puffed up with thy Sublime Perfection. Pride is a Serpent, which commonly Poiſons the Root of the faireſt Endowments. But thou haſt cruſh'd this Serpent in the Egg.

In that Solitude, the Angel open'd the Heart of the Sent of God, and took out from thence the Devil's Seed-Plot. When Mahomet awaked (for this was done while he lay in a Trance) he ſaid, I am a Worm. When Gabriel ſaw his Humility, he pronounced a Bleſſing on the Place, That whoſoever ſhould dwell in that Cave, ſhould be Meek as Abraham, Chaſt as Joſeph, and Temperate as Iſmael. Thou haſt experienc'd the Effect of his Benediction.

There is another Happineſs alſo attends thy Retirement: Thou liveſt free from Cares and Anxieties: Thou committeſt the Publick Good to the Conduct of thy Sovereign, and thy Private Welfare, to the Protection of Providence; neither diſquieted for the one, nor ſollicitous for the other. Who riſes, and who falls, in the Favour of the Sultan; who purchaſes the Government of the Empire by their Merits, or who by their Money; whether it be better to remain in the Seraglio, or to be made Baſſa of Ægypt, are Cares that never moleſt thee. Thou canſt ſit in that Sanctuary of Peace, and pity thoſe whoſe Ambition, and the Love of Glory, has driven into the Toils of War. Thou canſt behold with Compaſſion, the burdenſom Attendants of the Great; their Labours by Day, and their Watchings by Night; their reſtleſs Thoughts, and buſie Actions; macerated Bodies, and uneaſie Souls:

while with indefatigable Pains they purſue mere Shadows, and endeavour to graſp the Wind, or ſecure to themſelves a Bubble, which is no ſooner touched, than it vaniſhes. Thou in the mean time, art filling thy Mind with ſolid Knowledge, and laying up Poſſeſſions which ſhall never be taken from thee: For the Soul carries her Goods along with her, to that Other World.

I often wiſh my ſelf with thee; and the Remembrance of what I once enjoy'd in thy Converſation, cannot be effac'd by Diſtance of Time and Place. The farther I am from thee, the more ardently do I long to ſee thee. But even in theſe Innocent Deſires, there is a neceſſary Mortification; ſince we are not born for our ſelves, but to comply with the Myſterious Ends of Fate. I am appointed to ſerve the Grand Signior in this Place: where I endeavour to acquit my ſelf a Faithful Slave, and a Good Muſſulman. If I fail in the Firſt, my Great Maſter will puniſh me; if in the Laſt, God and his Prophet will revenge it. Yet I hope every Frailty, will not be eſteem'd a Tranſgreſſion; ſince the Heart and the Hands, go not always together. I often ſtrive to imitate thy Abſtinence, but my Appetites are too Strong for me; I return to my Old Courſe again, like a Bow that is forcibly bent. Yet I ſin not in this, ſince it is not required at my Hands.

Pray for me, Holy Man of God, that while I aim at the Beſt things, I may not fall into the Worſt; and by ſtriving to arrive at Perfection, I may not crack thoſe Powers which are requiſite to keep me ſtedfaſt in the High way of Moral Vertue. I leave thee to t Contemplations, and the Society of thy Co teous Angels, who ever wait at the Door of t Cell.

are

LETTER XVI.

To Uſeph Baſſa.

I Formerly acquainted thee, That Uladiſl King of Poland, ſought Chriſtina Queen Sueden in Marriage; but that his Propoſal rejected. Now thou mayſt know that Monarch has made a more ſucceſsful Am being Married to Louiſe Marie de Gonza Princeſs of Mantua. The Nuptial Solemni were performed in this City, by the Ambaſſ of Poland, who was his Maſter's Proxy. greateſt Part of the laſt Moon was ſpent Masks, Banquets, and Court-Revels, to Ho the Eſpouſals of this New Queen; who is fi gone towards Poland, being attended to Frontiers by a numerous Train of the Nobil with all the Ceremonies and Regard due to Perſon of her Rank.

The French, who are never ſparing in Words, are too liberal in the Praiſes they beſtow on this Princeſs. For if all were true they ſay of her, ſhe might be liſted in the Number of Angels: Whereas, ſome more impartial Eyes have diſcover'd ſuch Imperfections, as ſpeak her yet on this ſide a Saint. But ordinary Vertues in Princes dazzle the Multitude; borrowing a greater Luſtre from the Nobility of their Blood, and the Eminence of their Quality: Whilſt their Vices are either ſhrouded from the Vulgar, or made to paſs for Vertues, in the Artificial Dreſs, which Flatterers put on them. 'Tis under this Advantage, the New Queen of Poland is cry'd up for a Diana; though a late Satyriſt, vindicates her from being half ſo Cruel as that Goddeſs: It being no Secret that a Young Italian Marquis had ſomething kinder Uſage than had Acteon, when he accidentally encountred this Princeſs, as ſhe was walking alone one Evening in a Grove belonging to her Palace.

I am no Patron of Libels: nor would I ſpeak irreverently of thoſe, whoſe Royal Birth claims Reſpect from all Mortals. But the Stupidity of the Nazarenes provokes my Pen, who allow their Women all the uncontroulable Freedom and Opportunities, that commonly give Birth to the moſt irregular Amours, and yet believe 'em Innocent. They are perfect Idolaters of that Sex; not having learned, with the illuminated Muſſulmans, that Women are of a Creation Inferior to that of Men, have Souls of a lower Stamp, and conſequently more more prone to Vice; and that they shall never have the Honour to be admitted into our Paradise.

But thou who believest the Doctrines Clear and Intelligible, and hast kiss'd the Garment of the Sent of God, wilt not suffer thy Reason to be blinded by the Enchantments of these deluding Fair Ones; but so love Women, as still to remember thou art a Man, which is something more Sublime.

LETTER XVII.

To the Kaimacham.

IT is hard to gueſs, where the French Victories will terminate. Either Fear, or the deſire of Novelties, opens the Gates of moſt Cities to them; and when that will not do, the Force of their Cannon makes a Paſſage into the ſtrongeſt Holds of their Enemies, and puts whole Provinces under their Subjection.

Their Enemies ſay, that the French never Beſiege a Town, but their firſt Aſſaults are made with Bullets of Gold; and when that will neither prevail on the Governor, nor win a Party, then they only try the Force of the courſer Metal. Yet this will appear but a Slander, if thou conſidereſt a late Action of the Duke of Orleans, when he lay down before Bourbargh.

He had ſcarce finiſh'd his Trenches, when the next Morning an Arrow was found with a Letter faſtned to it, not far from his Tent. The Letter was directed to the Duke, and ſubſcribed by the Governour of the Town. The Contents of it were, to ſignifie to him, That if he would give him Fifty Thouſand Pieces of Gold, and continue him in his Office, he would the next Night open the Gates, and let in his Army; and that before Mid-day, he would ſend a Meſſenger to know his Pleaſure. The Duke waited the Arrival of the Meſſenger, who ſeconded what his Maſter had ſaid. But the Magnanimous Prince, in ſtead of accepting his Offer, ſent him back to his Maſter with this Meſſage; That he came not before the Town as a Merchant, to purchaſe it at the Price of a needleſs Treaſon; but as a Soldier, at the Head of an Army flush'd with continual Victories: Summoning him forthwith to Surrender at Diſcretion, That being the only Way to experience his Generoſity.

This Year has been ſignaliz'd with much Action in Flanders, Catalonia, and Italy. The Field was ſhared among many brave Generals.

The Duke of Orleans had the Command of the Army in Flanders, where he took the Forts of Vandreval, Bourgurgh, Link, Dringhen, Bethune, St. Venant, Guiſca, Lens, Mardyke, Lillers, Mening, and Armentiers.

Theſe Places were won by ſeveral Parties under the Commands of the Mareſchals de Gaſtion, de Rantzau, and the Duke of Guiſe, who all acted in ſeparate Bodies, under the Duke of Orleans.

Nor was the Count d' Harcourt idle in Catalonia, where he ſucceeded in the Charge of the Mareſchal de la Mothe. The firſt Effort of his Arms, was the retaking of Agramont, which the Spaniards had ſeiz'd; a ſtrong City, and which kept a large part of Catalonia in Subjection.

From hence he marched toward Roſes, one of the moſt Important Places for Strength, under the Spaniſh King's Dominions, and govern'd by an experienced Soldier, who fail'd not to defend the Place to the laſt Extremes; but after a Siege of two Moons, was compell'd to yield for want of Proviſions. After

After this, the French General cut off Seven Hundred Spaniards, who were posted to hinder his Passage over a River. The next day the whole Armies meeting in the Plains of Llorens, there was a furious Encounter; in which the Spaniards lost ten Regiments of Horse on the Spot; the rest threw down their Arms and yielded. The Marquess of Mortare, one of the Spanish Generals was taken Captive; with other Persons of Note; among which was the Standard-Bearer of Spain.

Yet this was but the Engagement of One Wing: For when the Other enter'd the Combat, the Slaughter was dreadful. Of the Spaniards were slain six thousand Horse, and sixteen hundred Foot. And three and twenty hundred of them were made Prisoners. The French lost not above three hundred in all, and had but a few wounded.

This Battel has brought infinite Glory to the Count d' Harcourt. After which there happen'd nothing remarkable in Catalonia, save the talking of Balaguier, which is like to end this years Campagne on that Side.

Prince Thomas of Savoy Commanded in Italy, but had no great Number of French in his Army, the Main Body being drawn off to serve in Catalonia. Yet vexed to see the Success of the Spaniards, who had possess'd themselves of a Strong Castle, and kept the Field in a Bravado, as if he were not able to Face them; he raised some Recruits, and enter'd the Milanese, where he took the City and Castle of Vigevano. After this, designing to return into Pie- mont, he found all the Paſſages block'd up by the Spaniards, who had a far greater Army than his. Yet, aſſuming Courage, he attempted to paſs the River Moura; and, the Enemy preſenting themſelves to oppoſe his Deſign, he gave them Battel, and killed Five hundred and three-ſcore of them; among which were Nine Officers of Principal Command and Quality: On his Side, were loſt Two hundred Common Soldiers, and Twelve Officers; among which was his Brother, Prince Maurice of Savoy. Theſe are the Chief Actions on that Side. As for Portugal, there has happened nothing in that Kingdom, worthy of Remark.

I have in this Letter, Sage Governour of the Imperial City, obſerv'd the Method thou enjoined'ſt me. I have acquainted thee, with whatſoever has Occurred in the preſent War of France and Spain during this Year.

'Tis diſcourſed here, that the Venetians will lay Siege to Canea next Spring, in Hopes to recover that Important Place, from the Arms of the Victorious Ottomans.

The Duke of Orleans will be on his March for Flanders, toward the latter End of the next Moon, reſolving to make an early Campagne; being alarm'd with the late Loſs of Mardyke, which the Spaniards took by Surprize, without much Bloodſhed; having not the fourth Part of a hundred Men kill'd on their Side. Whereas when the French took it from them, it cost Five thouſand Lives of the beſt Soldiers the King of France had in his Army.

The Hour of the Post will not permit me to say more, than that I am the humblest of thy Slaves.

Paris, 14th. of the 12th. Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XVIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

I Will not make trial of the Virtue of Friendship at this time, in the Way that Philosophers propose to be used between such as own that Title. I will not complain of the Dolors I undergo, that so by making thy Compassion share them with me, I may ease my self of a Part. It appears to me a pusillanimous, if not an unjust Action, for a Man to transfer his Sufferings, by discovering 'em to his Friend, and designedly throw that upon another, which is scarce tolerable to himself.

I am sick; and Custom has rendred this almost as Natural to me as Health. My Constitution, is not Proof against the envenom'd Arrows, that are shot from the Stars. Nor am I Constellated, to resist the Secret Contagions that lurk in the Elements. The Herbage of the Field languishes, when poyson'd with Invisible Atomes from above; and all the Leaves of the Forest wither, when touch'd with the baneful Emissions of certain Meteors, or scorch'd with the winged Exhalations of the Night. So our Bodies receive a Thousand Impressions from Things without us, and not a few Maladies from our selves. The very Channel of Life, proves many times the Vehicle of Death; while our Lungs suck in unwholesome Airs, and our very Breath becomes our Bane. We have Radical Poysons in our Complexions, which though they do us no hurt, while we let them lie dormant; yet once excited by our Passions and Vices, they become noxious and Fatal, hurrying us into the Chambers of Death by unaccountable Diseases, and Pains which are under no Predicament.

This makes me bear my present Distemper with an equal Mind, because I know its Original, and 'tis not in the List of those Maladies which have no Name: whereby I can easily calculate its Duration, and almost point to a Day, when I shall be well again. For, it in the Number of those Physicians call curae; and the Anguish it inflicts confirms the Title.

Take not this for a Complaint; nor what I am about to say, for a Paradox, when I tell thee, That I know not which is greater, my Pleasure or Pain during this excruciating Fit. These Affections border so near one upon another, that I find it difficult to distinguish 'em. They seem to be Inn-mates to each other, and blended together in their Roots. Sure I am, they are so twisted and interwoven in my Constitution, that I never felt One without the Other. Every Man may experience, that his strong Desire Desires, are compounded of these two Passions; and the very Moment of Fruition it self, cannot separate 'em. The Minute of Enjoyment, is but Consecrated to his Loss, while the heighth of his Joy is the Rise of his Grief, since the smallest Particle of time, cannot distinguish the Life and Death of his Pleasure.

Do but reverse this Contemplation, and apply it to my Sickness, and thou wilt find no Riddle in my Words, when I assure thee, That as the Torment of my Fever advances, so does my Ease. Pleasure and Pain, sit and shake Hands in my Heart, embrace, and equally divide its Systole and Diastole between 'em.

Yet I must needs own, I am indebted for this Allay of my Dolors, to the Presence of my Mind; which I suffer not to be torn from it self, or carried away by the violent Motion of my agitated Spirits. Were it not for this, a Fever would prove a Hell upon Earth, and every Pulse a Tormenting Fury. My very Drink (which is all my Subsistence now) would appear but the loathsome Distillation of that Tree, whose Unpalatable and Scalding Gum, is appointed for a Beverage to the Damned. The softest Entertainment of my Bed, while awake, would but be a Translation of the Torments of Ixion and Sysiphus; and the flattering Intervals of Sleep, would but renew the Sufferings of Tantalus. Whereas now, whether asleep or awake, my Mind keeping aloft in her proper Sphere, bussed in the Contemplation and Enjoyment of her self and Superior Objects, partakes not in the Fever of my Body; but, as if on the cool top of ſome high Mountain, ſurveys all the Valleys beneath, without being ſenſible of their raging Heats.

I owe this Tranquility, in the midſt of Bodily Perturbations to the Examples of Ancient Philoſophers, which, thou knoweſt, have far more Influence than Precepts. Ever ſince I read, That Plotinus could chaſe away the racking Tortures of the Gout and Stone, by the ſole Force of his Thought, I daily try'd the Experiment, ſpurr'd on by Emulation of his Vertue; as judging it Ignoble in a Muſſulman, to give the Palm to a Pagan in any Point of Maſculine Bravery.

'Tis recorded of the ſame Philoſopher, That by the mere Strength and Majeſty of his Mind, he diſſipated the Enchantments of Apollonius Tyaneus; and the Infernal Spirits confeſs'd they were baffled by that Thinking Man. As if his Soul were of the Nature of Meduſa's Head, which turn'd all into Unactive Statues, who did but look on it.

Surely, great is the Efficacy of Contemplation, hinted at in the Arabian Proverb; which ſays, He that can ſee his own Eyes without a Glaſs, ſhall be able to move the Bulls Horns. Which Myſterious Expreſſion, is thus interpreted by the Learned Avicen. A Prophet or Spiritual Man, who always Converſes within, ſhall have power to ſhake the Foundations of the Earth. Which, thou knoweſt, reſts on the Horns of a Bull, according to the Doctrine of our Holy Law-giver.

I need

I need say no more to convince thee, That I am in a Fever. My thus expatiating and running from one thing to another (when I thought to have said all in a few Words) will satisfie thee what Temper I am in. Yet recollecting my self with Comfort, that I know my Distemper, I will crave leave to tell thee a short Story, of a Man who was sick for many years, and yet the ablest Physicians in Paris, could not discern his Malady.

This Person, was an Officer of the City; whose Business 'twas to arrest Men that were in Debt. He was observ'd, to be the subtlest of all his Brethren, and the most dextrous at plotting another Man's Ruine. This augmented his Estate, and he grew extremely rich. But, in the One and fortieth Year of his Age, he was seiz'd with an unknown Malady, a Distemper to which the most skilful were Strangers. He languish'd Five Years in a Condition which movid all Men to Pity. 'Twill be tedious to recount the Symptoms of his Illness. At length he died; and, according to his own Will, was dissected. The Physicians found all Parts of his Body decay'd and wasted; but when they came to his Head, they were above Measure astonish'd, to see a Nest of Serpents instead of Brains. This was concluded by all to be the Source of his Distemper; and People descant variously on it. Some say, 'twas a Judgment of God inflicted on him, for his cruel Subtlety, in trapanning Men out of their Liberties by a Thousand Wiles. Others are of Opinion, That it is a Natural Product; it being usual in some Constitutions, for this Sort of Creatu to be bred out of their Vitals. A Merchan that had been in Peru told me, That in a Pro vince of that Empire, there were People, wh by drinking the Water of a certain River, ha Serpents often engender'd in their Bowels That he had seen one presented to the King o Spain, which was taken out of a Dead Man Heart, a Cubit in Length. He said 'twas of Crimson colour, without Scales or Eyes; ne ther was it Venomous. This he asserted so solemnly, and with Imprecations.

I tell thee, dear Friend, if these things true, who can be sure he harbors not some loathsome Inn-mate in his Body: Yet, I wo not have thee grow Melancholy upon it, disturb thy Repose. The day will come, wh we shall all be metamorphosed into Worms a Serpents in the Grave.

In the mean while, live thou happily, in Favour of thy Sovereign, in the Enjoy of thy Health, the Vigor of thy Senses; have sometimes in thy Thoughts, a Man full Infirmities, without murmuring, Mahom that loves his Friend in all Conditions.

LETTE

LETTER XIX.

To the Selictar Aga, or Sword-Bearer to his Highness.

I Wish I cou'd time my Letters so, as to gratifie all the Ministers of the Blessed Port, by making each alternately, the first Relater of some acceptable News, in the Mysterious Divan, where all Humane Events are scann'd with Impartial Judgment. But every Moon does not present us with Sieges or Battels; neither can I receive Intelligence of all remarkable Events, so soon as they come to pass. What I shall now transmit to thee, is an Account of what has been omitted in my Dispatches to the other Ministers.

Europe is a Field, fertile in Rebellions, Tumults, Disorders, and Unnatural Wars. No Part of Christendom, which is not polluted with Treasons, Perfidies, and Massacres; no Corner undefiled with Humane Blood. The Son Conspires the Death of him who first gave him his Life. The Brother lays Trains to ensnare the Partner of his Blood, the Off-spring of her that bare himself. No Bond of Affection or Tye of Consanguinity, is of Force to restrain these Infidels, from pursuing each other with Malice. Neither has their Religion any more Influence on their Passions, than the Fables of the Ancient Poets. In Publick and

Pri-

Private, all things are govern'd by Interest. Thus, while every Man and every State, are only byas'd by the narrow Principles of Self-preservation; they abandon the General Good of Christendom, and expose it as a Prey to the next daring Invader.

There is no Reason, that we should grieve at this Folly of the Nazarenes. 'Tis from their Impiety and Vices, the Vertue and Wisdom of the Victorious Mussulmans receive the greater Lustre; who are created to displant these Uncircumcised, and instruct the Nations which they possess'd, in the Faith free from Blemish.

Yet, Since the Depredations which the Suedes have made in Germany and Denmark, the neighbouring Crowns and States, notwithstanding their Insincerity, have seemingly interposed their Endeavours, to prevent the worst Effects of a War, so destructive to the Common Interest of Christendom. Deputies were sent from all Parts, to Munster and Osnaburgh, with Instructions from their respective Sovereigns. They have squander'd away much time in vain Overtures of Peace; whilst the Suedes daily get Ground on one Side of the Empire, and the French are not Unsuccessful on the other.

The Enemies of France, sensible that they cannot reduce this Crown by open Force, have Recourse to Artifice. They endeavour to corrupt her Allies and insinuate into the minds of the United States of the Low Countries, all those Apprehensions, which may serve to improve prove the Jealousie they had already conceived of the French Neighbourhood. Suggesting, That the Spanish Netherlands are the only Bar, which stops the Armies of France from overrunning Holland, and the rest of the United Provinces. In fine, they have prevail'd on them to enter into a Separate Alliance, and not to treat in Conjunction with the other Ministers at Munster.

On the other Side, The French by their Agents in Holland, endeavour to unmask the Artifice of the Spaniards; representing, That they have no other Design in these Insinuations, but to breed an ill Understanding between this Crown and the United Provinces; that so, by their ill Offices, in Time Things may come to a Rupture, and the States be depriv'd of the Friendship and Protection of France, which alone is able to support that Commonwealth, against the Pretensions of their old Enemies, the Spaniards. All Europe is astonish'd to see, that notwithstanding the utmost Condescensions of the French Court to conserve Peace, yet the States led by their Ill Destiny should embrace the Proposals of Spain. This makes a great Impression on all the Ministers assembled at Munster and Osnaburgh, who now conclude, That the Spaniards only seek Occasions to perpetuate the War in Europe; that whilst the Princes of the Empire are engag'd in a Defence of their Territories, and the Suedes and French are busied in pursuing their Conquests, they may pick a Quarrel with their New Friends, whom they have have depriv'd of a more powerful Protection, and re-eſtabliſh themſelves in the Revolted Provinces.

The Deputies have had ſeveral Conferences about this Important Affair; and the Reſult of their Counſels, is to ſollicite the French Court, to uſe its utmoſt Power, to prevent the ill Conſequences which this Separate Treaty will bring along with it.

'Tis diſcours'd here, That Monſieur de la Tuillerie will be recall'd from the Court of Suedeland; being eſteem'd the fitteſt Man to diſſuade the Hollanders from this New Alliance; He having been already employ'd in ſeveral Negotiations with the States, and is well vers'd in the Methods of treating with that Nation.

This ſome judge to be the Reaſon of the Sieur Chanut's being ſent to Suedeland, that he may reſide, at Stockholm, and continue to act there in the Abſence of la Tuillerie.

So nice and delicate in this Affair, that all France cannot afford another Man duly qualify'd, to manage it with any Probability of Succeſs. If he ſhew not more Candour in this Negotiation, than he did when he was ſent to mediate a Peace between Suedeland and Denmark, he will receive but ſlender Thanks at his return. But, if he ſucceeds, 'tis ſaid, That Cardinal Mazarini has declared, he will merit to be inſtall'd in the Order of the Holy Spirit. I have formerly ſpoken of this in one of my Letters, as the moſt Eminent Order of Knighthood in France.

I wiſh

with the Christians may ever find Difficulties, to obſtruct the Meaſures they take to eſtabliſh an Univerſal Peace; and may continue to amuſe and vex one another, till the Day of the Scourge.

Paris, 20th. of the 1ſt. Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XX.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

It is not yet publickly known, what Deſigns have mov'd this Court, to order a mighty Fleet to be fitted out to Sea. But it is privately whiſper'd that they will ſail to the Levant, to aſſiſt the Venetians againſt the Turks.

People diſcourſe variouſly, according to the Strength or Weakneſs of their Reaſon; and five Days ago an Old Man went to Cardinal Mazarini, pretending to ſpeak by Inſpiration: He told him, that 'twas in vain to truſt to their Winged Caſtles, (ſo he call'd the Ships) the Multitude of their Armies, or in the Treaſures of their Money; for a Decree was ſign'd in Heaven, againſt all the Nations in Europe; That the War was begun Above, between the Potentates who have the Cuſtody of Kingdoms and and Empires; That they should soon see the Banner of the Eternal, display'd in the Firmament; That the Stars should fight in their Courses, against the Wicked Professors of Christianity; That the Ismaelites should come out of their Holes, and should flow down like a Torrent from the Mountains of the East, overrunning all Christendom. In fine, That Germany, France, Italy and Spain, should be laid Desolate, their beautiful Cities sack'd, and the Inhabitants led into Captivity; That the Pope, with all his Priests, should be exterminated; and, that all Nations should embrace One Law.

They put him in Prison, but he was found walking next Day in the Streets. The Keeper chain'd him in Irons; but, in the Morning he was standing at the Gate of the Prison, Preaching to the People. Some say he is a Chymist, and has found out the Master Secret: others say he is a Prophet: But, most judge him to be a Magician. He seems now to have lost his vigor, not being able to release himself from the Chains, which fasten him to the Ground where he lies, Yet he continues to foretel the Ruine of Christendom. 'Tis said he will be sent to Rome, there to receive Sentence of the Holy Father, according to his Demerits. I am no Admirer of Visionaries; yet there appears something extraordinary, in the Constancy of this Man. Time will demonstrate, whether he be a True or a False Prophet.

A Courier came to this City last Night from Swedeland, who brings Letters from Monsieur Chanut, which say, that he has received great Encouragement to hope for the Ships which he was to buy in Swedeland. Thou hast already heard, that Monsieur la Tuillerie, Ambassador from this Crown to Queen Christina, was thought the only proper Instrument, to dissuade the United States of the Low Countries, from entring into a Separate Treaty with Spain; and that therefore Monsieur Chanut, was sent to reside in his Absence at Stockholm, to observe what passes, and to continue the Alliance between the Two Crowns.

This Minister arrived in Swedeland, the 15th. Day of the Moon of December, in the last Year; where Monsieur la Tuillerie, had prepared all things ready for a speedy Dispatch of his Negotiation; having the Day before his Arrival, made known to that Court, the Pleasure of the King of France, and the Queen-Regent; whose Letters were receiv'd by Queen Christina, with all the Marks of Royal Affection; she telling the Ambassador, That she infinitely honoured the Persons of the King and the Queen-Regent; and, that she would give them such Proofs of the Integrity of her Friendship, as would demonstrate, That she was sensible of her Obligations to them, for what they had contributed to the good Success of her Affairs: And, that there was nothing more dear to her, nor more fixed in her Resolution, than to conserve inviolably, the League that was between them. She further told the Ambassadors, that it was with no ordinary Complacency she now beheld Two Ministers of France in her Court, after she had been without any for a long time. In fine, she assur'd them, that whatsoever could be spar'd from the necessary Defence and Service of the Kingdom, whether Ships, Arms, or Men, should not be wanting to the Aid of the King of France.

By this thou mayest perceive, that though the King of France has powerful Armies by Land, yet he is defective in Naval Forces: Or, if he has Ships enough to defend his own Realm by Sea, and to serve as Convoys to his Merchants, it must be concluded, that some Foreign Expedition is design'd, which has put him upon this extraordinary Method to encrease his Fleet.

I thought it highly necessary to acquaint thee with this Passage, that the Ministers of the Port, August and ever Happy, may consult what Measures to take with this Prince, if it be true, that he designs to break the League which he made with Sultan Ibrahim four Years ago. There is but little Confidence to be reposed, in the most Solemn Oaths of Christian Monarchs, who hold not themselves obliged to keep Faith with those whom they esteem Infidels; and, thou knowest, that is the best Title they can afford the Observers of the most perfect Law in the World. Yet, the French, among all the Nations of the Messias, seem to bear the greatest Respect to the Ottoman Empire.

pire. But they are inconstant, and changeable, which is an Argument of Insincerity. They are very prompt and warm in contracting Friendships, and as ready to infringe those Sacred Bonds, on the least Occasion, especially where Interest and Ambition have the Ascendant.

The Venetian Resident at this Court, makes daily Visits to the Queen-Regent, and has frequent Conferences with Cardinal Mazarini. Many Couriers pass between Munster, Stockholm, and this City. Yesterday one arrived from the Venetian Ambassador at Munster, giving an account, that the Secretary of that Embassy, whom he had sent to Queen Christina, was return'd with the Promise of Eight Ships of War, lent by that Queen to the Republick, to assist them against the All-Conquering Mussulmans.

It seems, as if Sweden were become the Common Arsenal of Europe, from which the other Kingdoms are supply'd with all the Instruments of War. But, what is most observable, is, That the Venetians obtain'd not this Favour, without the Mediation of the French Minister at Stockholm. By which it seems evident, that this Court has newly entered into a Private League with the Republick; And, that they design to surprize the Ottomans, with some sudden Enterprize by Sea.

I shall not let a Moment escape, which may present me with the least Opportunity, to discover what is in the Hearts of these Infidels.

If

If thou wilt favour me with thy Inſtructions, I ſhall make the ſafer Steps. God, whoſe Eye penetrates into all Obſcurities, enlighten us with a Ray of that Wiſdom, which once revealed to his Meſſenger, the ſecret Conſpiracy of the Corei's, when they plotted to deſtroy the Temple built without Hands. LETTER XXI.

To William Voſpel, a Recluſe, at Halmerſtadt in Auſtria.

I Received thy Letter with Abundance of Complacency, in that it argues the Continuance of thy Friendſhip; and that I trace therein no Footſteps of an Angry Pen, notwithſtanding the Liberty I took to deſcant on thy Manner of Life. On the Contrary, thou ſendeſt me an Apology full of Meekneſs. Thy Reaſons have a marvellous Force in them; they ſeem to ſpring from a Soul veget and living, yet dead to Paſſion. Thou almoſt perſuadeſt me to affect a Monaſtick Life, which may not unfitly be term'd, a Sociable Solitude.

I much admire, what thou ſay'ſt concerning Silence; and wiſh I could practiſe that Paſſive Vertue. It is the firſt Step to Wiſdom, the Nurſe of Peace, and the Guardian of Vertue. Words do but ruffle and diſcompoſe the Mind, betraying the Soul to a Thouſand Vanities. Therefore, Pythagoras enjoyn'd his Diſciples Five Years Silence, before he admitted them to his Myſterious Philoſophy.

But tell me, why thou didſt not rather chuſe to live in a Deſart, remote from Men, where thou wouldſt have no Temptation to ſpeak, unleſs thou wert diſpoſed to hold a Conference with the Trees, or Beaſts, or hadſt a Mind to ſport thy ſelf and have thy Words retorted

by mocking Eccho's? If a Recluse Life be thy Choice, for the sake of Contemplation, I would advise thee to turn Hermit. But perhaps, thou dareſt not venture thy ſelf among the Satyrs of the Wilderneſs; or thou art afraid of the Wild Beaſts. As for the Firſt, they are either the Dreams of Poets; or, if there be any ſuch Beings in Reality, they will not hurt thee, ſince thou voluntarily forſakeſt the Company of Men, to become a Sylvan, as they are. As for the Latter, I muſt confeſs, I cannot diſcommend thy Fear, there being no Friendſhip or Intelligence common between us and the Lions, Tygers, Bears, &c. of the Foreſt. Yet, I can tell thee for thy Comfort, that by long and aſſiduous Practice, the fierceſt of theſe Creatures have been taught to converſe with Men, to obey their Commands, and to perform the Parts of Diligent Servants, and faithful Friends.

The Wilderneſs will afford thee a fair Opportunity, of ſtudying the Natures of Plants and Animals, the various Alterations in the Elements, the Influence of the Winds and Rains, Meteors and Exhalations; with many other Secrets, which are hid from the greateſt Part of Men, who are buried alive in populous Towns and Cities, baniſh'd from the Familiarity of their Mother-Earth, and moſt of her genuine Products.

In the Deſert, the unforc'd Harmony of Birds, ſhall lull thy Soul in innocent and grateful Slumbers; the gentle Winds ſhall waft Immortal Whiſpers to thy Raviſh'd Ears, breathing unutterable Sounds from Paradiſe. The murmuring muring Streams shall warble forth their soft and sweet Eternal Stories. All shall conspire to serve thy Contemplation, and to transport thy Mind with Sacred Ecstasies.

If after all this, thou shalt prefer the Monastick Enclosure; follow thy Resolution, and be Happy. Only remember, that though thy Body be shut up within those Walls; yet if thy Mind straggle in Vain and Worldly Thoughts, thou art no longer a Recluse. Adieu.

LETTER XXII.

To the Captain Baſſa.

IF all be true, that I have Reaſon to ſuſpect, thou wilt find a warm Divertiſement at Sea this Spring. Though the Europeans have ſeem'd ſlow in their Preparations to aſſiſt the State of Venice, ſuffering their ſeparate Intereſts to ſuperſede the Care of that Republick, yet now they turn their Eyes thither. Their Backwardneſs hitherto, is owing to the Secrecy, with which our Sage Emperor meditated the preſent War. His Counſels were never whiſper'd out of the Seraglio, till the ſame Winds tranſported the News, which wafted our Invincible Fleet to the Shore of Candy. Now they behold the Ocean, cover'd with the Ships of the Eaſtern Empire, Fear ſurprizes them; the Princes of the Nazarenes tremble. They look no longer on the Republick of Venice with the Eyes of Envy, becauſe of her Preheminence in Traffick, but with another Regard: They conſider her, as the Bulwark of Chriſtendom; the only Bank, which has hitherto ſtemm'd the Tide of the Ottoman Puiſſance, and ſtopp'd our Victorious Armies from overflowing all Europe.

I have informed the Reis Effendi, of what I knew concerning the Naval Forces which are fitting out, in ſeveral Parts of the North and and West, to aid the Venetians; but I have not told him what the Christians say of thee; neither am I willing to believe it. They speak of thee, as of a Man not more difficult to be corrupted, than was thy Predeceſſor, who was ſtrangled by the Order of the Sultaneſs-Mother. This Cenſure, I hope, is an Effect of their Impudence; while they flatter themſelves with the Imagination of bribing him, from whoſe Courage and Fortune they can expect nothing but Defeats.

They truſt much in the Force of thy Birth and Education, and diſcourſe of a certain Magical Character, imprinted in thy Soul, when thou was baptiz'd, which, they ſay, is indelible; And, they promiſe themſelves, that thy Native Chriſtianity, has more Influence on thy Heart, than Forced Circumciſion; and that thou wilt not Fight with any Zeal, againſt Men of the ſame Principles, as thoſe who gave thee thy Breath. But, they confide more in the Charms of their Gold, with which they deſign to bribe thee. In fine, they drink Healths to the Honeſt Renegado. So they term him, who commands the whole Fleet of the Ottoman Empire.

I do not give Credit to theſe Calumnies, having good Grounds to boaſt of thy Integrity. However, I Counſel thee, by ſome extraordinary Service to thy Maſter, to give the Lye to theſe Infidels: And, ſuffer not that, which at preſent may be but a bare Suſpicion, to be improved by thy Neglect or Cowardiſe, into a palpable Evidence, That thou art falſe and perfidious to the Supreme Lord of the Globe.

LETTER XXIV.

To Adonai, a Jew at Venice.

NOW thou art fixed, 'tis time to write to thee: Thou haſt been a Rambler theſe Three or Four Years, and no Body knew where to find thee. I have received Eleven Diſpatches from thee, ſince thy firſt Departure from Genoua: Wherein thou haſt informed me, of many Paſſages of State. Now I deſire thee to ſend me ſome Remarks, of the different Nature of the People thou haſt ſeen, their various Cuſtoms and Laws, with whatſoever was worthy Obſervation in thy Travels.

Italy is a fair Field, yet produces Darnel as well as wholeſome Corn. It is a Beautiful Garden, yet bears Aconite intermix'd with her Roſes: Great Vertues, and no Leſs Vices. The Region is famous for the Wiſdom of its Inhabitants, and for their Proverbs: It is the Arabia of Europe, in many Sences. Yet, much leſſened in its Renown, ſince the Decline of the Roman Empire. The Goths and Vandals turned all into Deſarts, where they came; and have left such Impressions of their Northern Barbarism behind them, as made the People they conquer'd, half-Savages. Hence came the general Decay of Learning and Knowledge in these Western Parts: Hence the Corruption of Ancient Manners. The Great, the Noble, and the Wise, bowed under the Yoke of their New Masters, learned their Fashions, and gloried in their Shame. Their Examples influenc'd the Vulgar; Debauchery became Modish and Authentick: Thus a general Depravation of pristine Integrity took Place, and Men became Vicious by a Law.

Neither has Wickedness planted it self only in Europe: The Sea could not stop this Boundless Evil. Asia is infected also, and the Vice of Italy is transported to the Empire of the True Believers. Thou hast seen all the Chief Cities between the Alps and Rhegium, which is the utmost Angle of Italy, to the South: tell me whether Sodom could exceed any of them, in Licentiousness: We will not except, even Rome, the Seat of the Christians Mufti. These Uncircumcised, have learned of thy Nation, to call the Ancient Philosophers, Infidels: but, had any of those Sages liv'd to see the Abominations of the Modern Nazarenes, they would have despised the Faith which produced no better Works.

Adonai, put in Practice the Import of thy Name; be Lord of thy self; and, if thou stumblest at the Light of the Mussulmans, walk in that of Moses, but shun the Paths of the Christians; for, they are enveloped in Darkneſs, and grope at Mid-day. Live according to Reaſon, and thou ſhalt be Happy. Adieu.

LETTER XXV.

To Muſtapha, Berber Aga.

THE preſent War of Candy, is like to render that Iſland as much the Subject of the World's Diſcourſe, as it was formerly famous, for being the Cradle of Jupiter. In thoſe Days, it was called Crete, much Celebrated in the Writings of the Greek Poets. Afterwards, it became a Province of the Roman Empire; then of the Grecians; next it ſubmitted to the Saracens. But, in the time of the Chriſtian Expeditions in Paleſtine, when Baldwin Earl of Flanders, was Crown'd Emperour of Conſtantinople, this Iſland came into his Poſſeſſion: which he gave to a certain valiant Commander in his Army, a Man of a Noble Deſcent; of whom the Venetians purchaſed it, and in their Hands, it has continued ever ſince. But now, in all Probability, it will be the Prey of thoſe Arms which nothing Sublunary can reſiſt.

The Poſts from Italy and the Sea Coaſts of this Kingdom confirm each other's News; all agreeing, That notwithſtanding the Utmoſt Efforts

Efforts of the Venetians and Candiots, to hinder the Relief of Canea; yet, our General is got into that Haven, with vaſt Quantities of Proviſions, and a ſufficient Reinforcement of Men. They add, that Forty thouſand of our Soldiers have made a Deſcent in another part of the Iſland, have gain'd the Forts of Ciſternes, Colmi, and Bicorno, and were on their March towards Suda, with a Deſign to Beſiege that Place. They accuſe our General of barbarous Cruelty, in that he cauſed Five of the Principal Noblemen of that Kingdom; to be put to Death; becauſe they refuſed to betray their Country, or enter into the Intereſts of the Grand Signior.

I muſt confeſs, Magnificent Aga, That whatever may be ſaid in Commendation of this General's Policy, and Fidelity to his Maſter; it is no Argument of the Goodneſs of his Diſpoſition. I rather admire the Temper of the Duke of Orleans, who when Gravling was ſurrendred to him, juſt as he entred the Town, was heard to ſay theſe Words: Let us endeavour by Generous Actions, to win the Hearts of all Men; ſo may we hope for a daily Victory. Let the French learn from me, this new Way of Conqueſt, to ſubdue Men by Mercy and Clemency.

Theſe are Heroick Sentiments, and agree well with the Character of this Prince, who is ſaid, never to have been the Author of any Man's Death, nor to have revenged himſelf of any Injury: Yet, a valiant Soldier, an expert Commander, and no bad Politician.

It is not hid from the Court, with what a Matchleſs Vertue he diſmiſs'd a Gentleman that was hired to Murder him. This Assassin was suffered to pass into the Duke's Bed-Chamber one Morning early, pretending Business of great Moment from the Queen. As soon as the Duke cast his Eyes on him, he spoke thus; I know thy Business, Friend; thou are sent to take away my Life: What hurt have I done thee? It is now in my Power, with a Word, to have thee torn in Pieces before my Face: But I pardon thee; go thy Way, and see my Face no more.

The Gentleman stung with his own Guilt, and astonish'd at the excellent Nature of the Prince, fell on his Knees, confess'd his Design, and who employ'd him: And, having promis'd eternal Gratitude for this Royal Favour, departed without any other notice taken of him; and fearing to tarry in France, entred himself into the Service of the Spanish King. It was his Fortune afterwards to encounter the Duke of Orleans, in a Battel in Flanders. The Duke at that instant, was oppressed with a Croud of Germans who surrounded him; and, in the Conflict, he lost his Sword. Which this Gentleman perceiving, nimbly stepp'd to him, and deliver'd one into the Duke's Hands, saying with this, Now reap the Fruit of thy former Clemency. Thou gavest me my Life, now I put thee into a Capacity to defend thy own. The Prince, by this Means, at length escaped the Danger he was in; and that Day the Fortune of War was on his Side. The French had a considerable Victory.

Thou seest by this, that Heroick Actions have something Divine in them, and attract the Favours of Heaven. No Man ever was a Lo-by good Works; For, though he be not presently rewarded; yet, in Tract of Time, some happy Emergency or other arises to convince him, That Vertuous Men are the Darlings of Providence.

Thou that art near the Person of the Grand Signior, mayst find an Opportunity to relate this Story to him, which may make no unprofitable Impression on his Mind. Princes ever stand in need of faithful Monitors.

Adieu, Great Minister, and favour Mahmut with the Continuance of thy Protection and Friendship.

Paris, 25th. of the 3d. Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXVI.

To Naſſuf, Baſſa of Natolia.

I Received thy Letter, as an Argument of the Continuance of that Friendſhip which was between us, when we lived together in the Seraglio. Since that time, thou and I have been employed Abroad, in different Services of our Auguſt Emperour, who has now rewarded thy Fidelity with a Command; which, if it be not adequate to thy Merit, is nevertheleſs agreeable to thy Wiſhes.

I Congratulate thy Honour, and wiſh thee a gradual Increaſe of it; for, ſudden and violent Leaps are dangerous. But, our Glorious Sultan, diſcovers his Abilities in Nothing more eminently, than in adapting Places of Truſt to the Deſerts and Capacities of his Faithful Slaves. So that, if he ſhould in time think fit to exalt thee to the Higheſt Dignity in the State, we might from the Choice of ſo wiſe a Prince, preſage thee a better Fortune, than befel one of thy Name, in the Reign of Sultan Achmet III. who from a Slave ſold in the Market for Three Sequins, was advanced to an Honour too weighty for his Vertue; being made Vizir Azem, and Lord of the moſt delicious Provinces in Aſia. But, being Ambitious of abſolute Sovereignty, he plotted Treaſon againſt his Maſter; which being diſcovered, the Fatal Firman was ſign'd, and all his Deſigns were ſtifled with a Bow-ſtring,

By

By this thou mayst comprehend, how necessary it is for Princes, not to overload any Man with Dignities, beyond the Proportion of his Humility and Faithfulness. Yet Rewards well placed, give new Vigor to the Endeavours of a Slave; whereas, when good Services are slighted, it does but quench the Ardour, with which they were perform'd. Few Men are so Spiritual, as to do Great and Heroick Things, purely for the Sake internal Complacency. And, I doubt not, but the Decii themselves, in so freely sacrificing their Lives for their Country, had regard to Humane Glory. Even Seneca, whom one would take for the most mortify'd Stoick of that Age, by his Writings; yet, is conceived to have found more Encouragement, in the Treasures of Gold, with which Nero's Bounty had fill'd his Coffers, than in all his Morals, of which he had such refin'd Sentiments, and Elegant Expressions.

What I have said, thou hast Wisdom enough to apply to thy Self, without being vain-glorious: Let those whom thou employest in any meritorious Services, and who discharge their Trust well be encourag'd with the same Proportions of Bounty. Munificence will not only add to thy Glory, but also advance thy Interest; since, thou wilt ever have Occasion for thy Slaves: And, he who has once tasted thy Liberality, as a Reward for any Eminent Performance; had he no other Motive, than the Pleasure of renewing so profitable an Experiment, will freely hazard his Life, to serve thee in an Extremity.

This Method thou wilt find of no ſmall Uſe to thee, in the Wars to which thou art going; where it will be neceſſary for thee, to recompence the leaſt ſingular Bravery of the meaneſt Soldier, not only with Applauſe, but with ſome Preferment in the Army. This will not only prove a Spur to others, but even to the Perſon ſo rewarded; and put him upon new Efforts of Courage, to attract the Eyes of his Munificent General. This will be the Way for thee, in time, to have an Army compoſed all of Captains, or Men qualified for ſuch.

Yet let not this diminiſh the Severity of the Diſcipline, which is requiſite to retain a proſperous Army in their Obedience. I counſel thee to be ſtrict in requiring the leaſt Military Duty, and Induſtrious in performing thy own Part; which will be an Example to the Reſt: Yet rather be forward to lead in Labours, than in Dangers: in regard thou wilt be more ſerviceable in a Battel, by thy Counſels and Orders, than by perſonally entring the Combat. In all things prefer the Welfare of the Ottoman Empire, to whatſoever elſe is moſt dear to thee, even to thy own Honour, which yet ought to be dearer to thee than thy Life.

If thou thinkeſt I have taken too much Liberty to adviſe thee, accuſe thy ſelf for having honour'd me with thy Friendſhip, which admits of no Reſerves in Converſation.

LETTE

LETTER XXVII.

To the Kaimacham.

IT is a vaſt Diſappointment to the Venetians, that our General in Candy has ſo opportunely revictuall'd Canea, and encreas'd the Garriſon there. Moroſini is blam'd for this, by thoſe that wiſh him no Good. What will not Envy ſuggeſt when it beholds a Man on the Top of Honour? This General, to give an Enemy his Due, is a Man of Spirit and true Fortitude; neither courting, nor ſhunning Dangers in the Service of his Country; but when once engag'd in Perils for that Cauſe, he is fearleſs as a Lion. If he has not hitherto had Occaſion to give the State ſo deſperate a Proof of his Loyalty, as once did the Roman Curtius (who bravely gallop'd into the Bottomleſs Chaſm, to pacifie their Angry Gods) yet he has often demonſtrated, That his Courage and Fidelity come not ſhort of the Ancient Heroes. In a Word, he has done too much for the Republick of Venice, to eſcape the Spleen of other Grandees. All muſt be Generals, or the War will not proſper. Each Man's Ambition dictates this to the State, That a Man of Conduct, would ſoon expel the Turks out of that Iſland: Thus, in his Conceipt, laying a Train for his own Promotion.

Wouldſt thou know Moroſini's Crime, that excites all this Paſſion? To ſpeak the Truth, it was an Overſight advantageous to the Ottomans mans. He put out with his whole Fleet to Sea, and left the Port of Canea open. By which Means, Three of our Ships got in with Plenty of Proviſions. So that the Town is now in a Condition to ſuſtain a long Siege, and the Venetians deſpair of ever recovering it. Yet Moroſini has made ſo plauſible an Apology, that the Senate have acquitted him; not judging it conſiſtent either with Juſtice or their Intereſt, to ſuffer one Miſcarriage, the Effect of a fair Intention, to out-weigh his numerous Merits and Services. For, the Occaſion of his thus ſuddenly abandoning the Avenue of that Haven, was, to chaſe ſome of our Veſſels, then under Sail not many Leagues off; and the Taking of thoſe Veſſels, on Board of which were abundance of Slaves, juſtified to the Senate, the Truth of his Pretenſions. However, there are not wanting ſuch as ſay, he held a private Correſpondence with our General: Others, That the preſent Governour of Canea, had formerly taken Captive at Sea a Son of Moroſini's, whom he now offer'd to reſtore, in caſe he would withdraw his Ships from before the Haven, for a few Days. I know not how far this may be credited. But, 'tis a certain Truth, That Moroſini has his Son again, and he defended himſelf by pleading, That he redeem'd him by exchanging a Mahometan Captive of Equal Quality, whom he had aboard his Ship.

And, thou knoweſt, That this Manner of Barter, is lawful in War. Adonai the Jew, ſends me this Intelligence; and, I dare believe him: For, ſince the Inſtructions I ſent him to

Genoua,

Genoua, he has taken Care to aſcertain his Reports. I wiſh it were as true, that Moroſini cou'd be prevailed on, to accept the Friendſhips of the Sublime Port. But, the Character of that General, gives me no Encouragement to hope, for ſo fortunate a Treachery, from his ſevere Vertue.

However, I will hope and believe, That the Eternal Patron of True Believers, will give ſuch a happy Iſſue to the Ottoman Arms in Candy, and and all other Parts, as ſhall diſpoſe the Nazarenes, that remain unconquer'd, to honour Him whom they have hitherto deſpiſed and blaſphem'd; even the Prophet, who cou'd neither Write nor Read.

LETTER

LETTER XXVIII.

To Cara Hali, a Phyſician at Conſtantinople.

THE time of Year is now come, wherein the Earth turns her Inſide out; and Nature calls forth the hidden Vertues of that Element, to grace the World with an infinite Variety of pleaſant Forms and Colours. The Eye is loſt in ſuch a Croud of different Beauties, and every Sence is raviſh'd with delightful Objects. The Young Men and Virgins throng the Fields, to behold the Reſurrection of Flowers and Herbs; and the Old feel new Vigours ſpringing in their Bodies, as though they had been in Medea's Cauldron. Even Mahomet himſelf, who has droop'd all the Winter, now begins to lift up his Head, and partake in the Common Reſtauration of all things.

If I am capable of gueſſing at the occaſion of my frequent Sickneſs, I believe it may in part be attributed to the Want of freſh Air, in the Place where I Lodge. There is a vaſt Difference between the Streets of Paris, and thoſe of Conſtantinople. I ſeem to my ſelf to be buried alive in this cloſe City, where my Chamber-Window, affords me no farther Proſpect than I can ſpit: Whereas, in Conſtantinople, the Gardens are ſo intermix'd with Houſes, That it looks like a City in the midſt of a Foreſt and and, by the Advantage of its Situation, is always refreshed with Breezes from the Sea.

Besides the Impurity of these Infidels, who empty all their Filth in the Streets, so that the Dirt of Paris may be smelt some Miles off; the Uncleanness of their Diet, contributes in no small Measure to my Distemper; being forced either to feed on Flesh with the Blood in it, or live on Herbs. They laugh at the Niceness of the Mussulmans, who will eat no Meat, that was knock'd down or strangled. They seem to be greedy of Blood, saving it in Vessels; and, mixing it with Flower of Wheat, make a certain Bread thereof, which they devour without the least Squeamishness. A True Believer, would tremble at the Sight of such Impiety. I tell thee, it is impossible to live among them, and not be pollured: They have no Methods of Purification. They wallow, and hug themselves in their Uncleanness: they are worse than the Beasts.

Now the Spring has provided a new Banquet wherein there is no Impurity, I am resolved to live like a Mussulman, and conform to the Precepts of our Holy Law-Giver; Who, when he beholds my Zeal and Abstinence, will send the Angel of Health from his Paradise, to repair my decay'd Constitution.

The French Philosophers, are busied in an Inquisition after certain Kinds of Birds, which from the Second Day of this Moon, they say are not to be found in the whole Kingdom, though the Woods and Fields were full of them during the Winter. Some are of Opinion, that that they fly to the Moon; asserting, That if their Wings will but carry 'em beyond the Magnetick Force of the Earth, it will be no Pain to glide through the Upper Aiery Region, till they arrive within the Attractive Energy of that Planet, where they will Naturally seek Rest. Others, with more Probability, say, That these Birds take their Flight to some other Region of Earth, whose Climate is more agreeable to their Natures, at this time of Year.

I wish I could as easily once a Year take my Flight to Constantinople, where my Heart is Winter and Summer. Adieu, dear Hali, and pity Mahmut, who counts himself unhappy in nothing so much, as in being absent from his Friends.

LETTER

LETTER XXIX.

To the Tefterdar, or Lord-Treaſurer.

IT appears, That France has ſome extraordinary Deſign by Sea: when and where 'twill be put in Execution, is not yet known; but the vaſt Preparations that are making, ſeem to threaten ſome Foreign Invaſion, rather than a Naval Combat: It looks, as if they had an Expedition in Hand greater than that of Xerxes; to make a Bridge over the Ocean, and joyn the ſeparated Parts of the World together. New Arſenals are built, in ſeveral Maritime Towns; and, all the Foreſts are cut down to fill them with Timber for Ships of War: The Mountains are left naked of Trees, and the ſtately Woods are tranſplanted into the Havens. An Infinite Number of Men are employ'd in making Cordage, Chains, Bullets, Anchors, Ordnance, and all other Neceſſaries belonging to a Navy.

This is Cardinal Mazarini's Project, under Pretence of ſetting the Poor of the Kingdom at Work, and diſburthening the Common-wealth of Vagabonds and Idle Perſons. But, Mahmut is not placed here, to be amus'd with State-Umbrages. It is evident, that this Miniſter deſigns to render his Maſter formidable on both Elements. Agents are ſent to buy Ships in all Parts; and, the very Peaſants are forced from the the Vineyards and Fields, to Man the Greatest Fleet that ever this Kingdom fitted out to Sea.

Last Moon the Sieur de Quesne was sent to assist Monsieur Chanut, in purchasing Vessels in Suedeland. It seems, there had been some Demurrs in his Negotiation; to remove which, this latter was sent with fresh Instructions. But, Monsieur Chanut rejected him; and Ten Days ago, came an Express from that Minister, desiring, that a more Intelligent Colleague might be sent him; in regard, he found it difficult to treat successfully with a People too much elated with continual Victories.

Upon this, the Court have sent a Courier to Stockholm, with new Orders: whereby he is forbid to make any farther Overtures in Order to the Continuance of the League between these Two Crowns: That France may not always appear in a Supplicant Posture, whilst the Suedes seem careless to conserve a Friendship, which they themselves first coveted.

These Misunderstandings may in a short time proceed to a greater Alienation; and, in the End, to an open Rupture. Which has the more Probability, in that General Koningsmark lately stopp'd some French Troops in their March, under pretence of seeing their Passports; but really, as 'tis thought, to corrupt the Soldiers, and withdraw them from the Fidelity they owe their Sovereign.

This is highly resented here; and, they begin to discourse, of making Peace with Germany.

What

What the Iſſue of theſe Things will be, is yet in the Dark; but God, from whoſe Throne hangs the Chain of Deſtiny, which reaches to the Center of the Earth, will, I hope, ſo diſpoſe of all Humane Events, That the Quarrels of the Nazones ſhall miniſter occaſion to the Oſmans to encreaſe the Territories of our Puiſſant Emperor.

LETTER

LETTER XXX.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

I Cannot but highly applaud the Reſolution thou haſt taken, as thy Letter intimates, to enquire into the Grounds of the Religion thou art of. This ſhews, that thou ſetteſt a Value on thy Reaſon, and thinkeſt thy ſelf beyond the Pupillage of a Child; that thou eſteemeſt thy ſelf of Years, to make a Choice of thy Religion, and not to take it up on the bare Credit of thy Forefathers. 'Tis certain, that Error may be Traditional as well as Truth: And the Pagan Idolaters, pleaded a Greater Antiquity for the Altars of their Gods, than could the Followers of Moſes, for the Temple of Jeruſalem, the Tabernacle in the Deſart, or for the Promulgation of the Law it ſelf on Mount Sinai: Since, there was ſcarce a Region on the Continent, which had not Eſtabliſh'd Rites and Ceremonies of Worſhip, long before Moſes, or even Jacob, the Great Father of the Iſraelites were born.

Among the Reſt of the Nations, Arabia my Native Country, was peculiarly bleſs'd with the Footſteps of the Illuſtrious Ibrahim, Grandfather to Iſrael, from whom the Jews deſcend. In this Happy Country, that Renowned Prophet ſojourned, converſed with Angels: And, with the Majeſty which cannot be uttered, he Preach-

of the Unity of the Divine Eſſence, Converted the People from their Idolatry, built an Oratory at Meccha, and was taken up into Paradiſe.

Iſmael his eldeſt Son, and Heir of his Father's Spirit, as of his Territories, trod in the Foot-ſteps of the Aſſumpt of God. He brake down the Idols, aſſerted One God, the Reſurrection, the Day of Judgment, the Joys of Paradiſe, and the Torments of Hell. His Off-Spring Multiplied, and Peopled all the Eaſt: The Princes of this Holy Line, ſubdued the Infidel Nations, and rooted themſelves in the moſt fertile Regions of Aſia, profeſſing themſelves Muſſulmans or True Believers. Thus paſſed the Light of God from the Face of Ibrahim, to his Poſterity by Succeſſive Generations; till at Length, it reſted on the Face of Mahomet, Our Holy Lawgiver, and was encreas'd with admirable Splendor, by the frequent Viſits of the Angel Gabriel. He took the Root of Evil, out of the Prophet's Heart; brought him down the Alcoran from Heaven, and gave him Victory and Honor; call'd him by a New Name, THE SEAL OF THE PROPHETS; carried him to the Throne of God, through Legions of Devils, that waited below the Moon to deſtroy him. And finally, made his Sepulcher Glorious and reſorted to, by the Believers of all Nations on the Earth.

I ſend thee this Abſtract of the Muſſulman Hiſtory, to the End, thou maiſt ſee what Pretenſions the Children of Iſmael have to the True Law; which you, of the Poſterity of Iſaac would monopolize to your ſelves: As if, God had had not sent Prophets to all Nations, to lead them into the Right Way, and not into the Way of Infidels. Nevertheless, take not these Things on my Credit, but examine the Records of thy own Nation, and the History of past Times. Weigh all Things in the Balance: Consult thy Reason, which is an indeficient Light, to those who follow it. Your Law, was once Pure and Uncorrupted; but, in time, the Devil inserted many Errors: He seduced your Fathers; they return'd upon their Steps, and fell back into Idolatry. Then God raised up the Messias, to reform all things; but Him ye rejected. And when he was taken up into Paradise, ye reported, That he was hang'd on a Tree. In this, the Nazarenes are your Fools, and fight against themselves; Whilst they assert, as you do, that he who is Immortal and Triumphant, among the Hundred and twenty four thousand Prophets, Was Crucified between Two Thieves; Thus bringing a Reproach on the Apostle of God, and on their Own Faith; in believing things inconsistent with the Goodness and Power of the Divine Majesty. Without doubt, Jesus, the Son of Mary, is Ascended Body and Soul into Paradise; who, whilst he was on Earth, said, Worship One God, Your Lord and Mine.

Let me not seem importunate, or troublesome. I seek not to circumvent thy Reason, but to direct it. Think Seven Times before thou Change Once. I will procure the Books of our Law; Peruse them with Judgment; and tell me then, whether thou hast ever seen any Writing comparable to the Alcoran? The Majesty of the Style, speaks it above Humane Original: It is exempt from Contradiction, from the Beginning to the End: it confirms the Old Testament, which thou believest: it is all over cloath'd with Light. Doubtless, it is no other, than a Transcript of the Book written in Heaven.

If after all thy Search, thou shalt determine otherwise, follow thou Thy Law, and I will follow Mine. We both Worship One God, Lord of the Universe.

LETTER XXXI.

To the same.

LET not the Fear of displeasing those of [your] Nation, hinder thee from embracing the Truth. God shall protect thee from the Ma[lice] of Unbelievers. Thy Interest is already gr[eat] among the Mussulmans; our August Emper[or] will augment both that, and thy Honour. T[ake] hold of the strongest Knot and adhere not[hing] Tagot. The Cleanliness and Delicacy of [the] Mussulmans, may invite thee; which far ex[-] ceeds that of the Jews, and yet is void of [all] superstition: We only obey the sincere Dictates [of] Nature, which teach us, That so long as [the] Soul dwells in this Mansion of Flesh, it [par]takes of Bodily Pollutions. 'Tis to avoid this [that] we abstain from certain Meats and Dri[nks] which cannot be touch'd without Contamin[a]-on. To this End, do we observe that superst[i]tive Niceness, in our Washings and Purifica[-]ons, which discriminates us from all the Wo[rld] beside. Doubtless, Our Law is but the Law of Moses, refin'd and sublimated from the Dreg[s] of adventitious Error.

Write often to me, and whatever Reason may prevail on thee not to change thy Religion, let no Arguments tempt thee to swerve from thy Fidelity to the Sovereign of Sovereigns on Earth, the Grand Signior, in whose Veins runs the most Exalted Blood of Humane Race.

Here

Here is a Report in this City, that the Elector of Brandenburg, will demand the Queen of Sweden in Marriage: let me know if it be true, that I may inform the Ministers of the Lofty Port, from whom nothing ought to be concealed, that occurs of Moment betwixt the Two Poles.

Inform me also, what passes remarkable in the Assembly of the Deputies at Munster, and whether it be true, that the Danube has lately overflow'd its Banks, and carried away Four hundred Houses in its rapid Course.

Such Stories are told here, by those who know not how to pass away their time, but in hearing after Foreign News, to furnish themselves with Matter to amuse the Credulous, and beget Admiration of their Intelligence.

I have sent thee a Watch of my making; If thou accepteſt it with good Will, 'tis a sufficient Acknowledgment.

May God, whose Presence fills the Universe, manifest himself to thee, in the way of Salvation, and continue to breath good Motions into thy Soul.

Paris, 19th of the 7th Moon, in the Year 1646.

LETTER XXXII.

To the Kaimacham.

A Daoud the Jew, has much improv'd him in his late Progress thorough Italy: H grown a perfect Statesman; having found the Way to penetrate into Secrets, and to ſpatch Buſineſs without any Noiſe. He prove very ſerviceable at Venice, during the ſent War of Candy. His Acquaintance in Cry, gives him Acceſs to the Cabals of Senators; who ſpare not, over their Wi whiſper the Counſels of the State, and t cant to the Meaſures that are taken to that Republick, againſt the Invincible P of the Ottoman Armies.

It is publickly known, that they have Embaſſadors to the Crown of Moſcovy, Poland, and to the Coſſacks; inviting the enter into a League, againſt the Grand S But few are acquainted with the private they are making, with the Baſſa of Alepp owe this Diſcovery, to the Diligence and of this Son of Iſrael. He has drawn the Se from the Mouths of ſeveral Eminent Coun of State; and aſſures me, That the Senate made ſuch Propoſals to the Governour, as not fail of inducing him to Revolt.

This may prove of ill Conſequence, if timely prevented: The pernicious Exam this Baſſa, may incite others to tread Steps, especially his Neighbours of Sidon and Damascus, who have for a long time meditated a Sovereignty, Independent of the Throne which first establish'd 'em in those Charges. Besides, the single Forces of this Bassa, will be able to give a powerful Diversion to the Arms of the Porte, already engag'd in Candy, Dalmatia, and other Parts, by Sea and Land. He says, that Persians speak much in praise of this Bassa's Justice, whereof they relate many Examples: Among the rest, a certain Cook among the Jews of that City, was accus'd of dressing and selling putrify'd Flesh, whereby many that eat thereof were infected with the Plague. Complaint being made of this to the Bassa, he sends for the Cook, and examines him about it: He reply'd, that he sold none but good and wholsome Meat; for, if it happen'd that at any time he was forc'd to keep any Flesh in his House above Three Days, he so season'd it with Spice and Herbs, as made it very savoury, and without any ill Scent.

The Bassa, not having Patience to hear any more of this fetid Apology, commanded his Arms and Legs to be cut off, and the Veins to be seared up: Ordering, that during the short time he had to live, he should have no other Food, but what was made of his own Limbs.

They relate one more Passage, of a Complaint that was made by a Peasant, whose Daughter this Bassa's only Son had ravish'd: The Bassa compell'd him to Marry her, with this Charge, Let me hear no more Complaints of her, unless thou art resolved to leave me with ut a Son.

It is reported here, That the King of Persia has made a Peace with the Great Mogul; and that they will both turn their Forces, against our August Emperor.

Here is also a Courier arriv'd from Marseilles, who brings News of the Revolt of Candia, the Inhabitants of that Place, having shook off the Obedience they owe to the Sultan, and put themselves under the Protection of the Venetians: And, that General Grimani, has taken Four Ships of Ragusa, laden with Ammunition for our Army. He adds also, That Malta has Thirty small Vessels, besides Galleys, under the very Walls of the Dardanells. I long ago suggested to the Vizir Azem, That the Weakness of those Castles would, one time or other, encourage the Christians to perform some notable Exploit in the Hellespont. But, Mahomet's Counsel was not regarded: Now the Event justifies my Advice, the Port will Consult the Security of that Avenue. I wish they do not practise the Trojan Wisdom. The Venetians have a powerful Fleet: If they block up the Hellespont, and hinder our Ships from sailing into the Archipelago; and the Cossacks, in the mean while cover the Black Sea with their Barks, committing a Thousand Piracies and Ravages, what will become of the Imperial City? Whence will they provide Sustenance for so many Millions of People, as inhabit that City, and the Parts adjacent.

These Things are worthy of Consideration. And thou, who hast the Care of that Capital Seat of the Ottoman Empire, wilt not be Mahmut, for putting thee in mind of the Danger which threatens even the Seraglio it self at this Juncture. However, I have done my Duty, Sage Minister, and refer the rest to thy Wisdom. My Letters are all Register'd; and if Affairs should succeed ill, it will be manifested, That Mahmut, who watches Night and Day, to save the Great Master of the World, has not been wanting to give timely Notice of what might be advantageous to the Monarchy of the True Faithful.

Mah-

Thou, who art celebrated for thy Justice and Probity, pardon the Liberty which my Zeal for Thy Master and Mine, renders worthy of Excuse.

BOOK II.

LETTER I.

To the Most Magnificent and Illustrious Vizier Azem, at the Port.

OSmin the Dwarf, whom I formerly mentioned, remains still in the Court; and continues his good Offices, in communicating to me such Passages as come to his Knowledge. He has a subtle Wit, and bears no hearty Love to the Christians, though he be one himself in Profession.

feſſion. He freqently viſits me, and truſts me with his Secrets. One day he convinc'd me by evident Circumſtances, That Cardinal Mazarini, was projecting to give ſome ſecret and ſudden Blow to the Ottoman Empire, to which Oſmin ſeems to be concern'd by a Natural Inclination; being, as I told thee, born of Mahometan Parents, he was uneaſie, till he had acquainted me with his Apprehenſions; and, I gave him ſuch Inſtructions, as I thought moſt proper on this Occaſion. I ſet my Thoughts on the Rack, to prevent the dire a Miſchief. And, having premeditated well on this Affair, I pitch'd on a Courſe which would at once clear me from the Cardinal's Suſpicion; and, by ſeeming to favour his Deſigns, would abſolutely overthrow them. I went to him boldly one Day; and being admitted to his Cloſet, I thus addreſs'd that Politician;

'THERE are now Nine Years elaps'd, Great Miniſter, ſince I firſt breath'd the Air of France; during all which time, I have not only ſhar'd in Common with the Natives, the Benefits which have accru'd to this Noble Kingdom, under the Auſpicious Miniſtry of Cardinal Richlieu, and his no leſs Eminent Succeſſor; but have alſo receiv'd many particular Honours from that Illuſtrious Prince of the Church, to which Your Eminence has been pleas'd to make some undeserv'd Additions. To you both, I owe the Character which has introduc'd me into the Acquaintance and Favour of the Nobility; who, on that Score, have thought me worthy to Instruct their Children, in the Greek and Arabick Tongues; have vouchsafed to admit me to their Salt; and to encourage me with the Hopes, of finding a Comfortable Repose in the Bosom of the Gallican Church, after a tedious Peregrination from my own Country.

When I reflect on all the accumulated Blessings I enjoy, under the Protection of Your Eminence; Blessings equally transcending my Ambition, as they do my Merits; I apply all my Studies, to find out some acceptable Way of Acknowledgment to my Gracious Benefactor. And, because nothing can be more Welcome to the Guardian of France, than the Means of advancing the Publick Good of the Kingdom committed to his Care; I now presume, as a Testimony of my Gratitude, to propose to Your Eminence, some Speculations, which if put in Execution, will in my Judgment, not only render France the most Formidable and Absolute Monarchy on Earth, but also the whole Catholick World in Eternal Obligations to her; and give just Reason to change the Style of his Christian Majesty, from Eldest Son of the Church, to that of Father of all Christendom.

Your Eminence will not wonder at the Zeal of a Stranger, or the Care that Transylvania or Moldavia takes for France, in being Sollicitous for this Kingdom, if I consult the Welfare of my own Country, and of all the Nations which profess the Faith of Jesus; since it is easie to see, That in the Fate of France, that of all Europe is involv'd.

It is a long time since the Dismembred Reliques of the Roman Empire, bordering on Asia, found themselves too weak to resist the Puissance of the Ottoman Arms. All Greece was soon o'run, by the VVarlike Turks. Transylvania, Wallachia, Moldavia, with the greatest Part of the Upper Hungary, quickly became Tributaries to the Inveterate Enemies of the Christian Name. And Germany it self is so enfeebled by their repeated Incursions, that all the Emperor can do, is to make himself cable and costly Compositions, buying a Precarious Peace with little less Charges, than would serve some more Fortunate Prince, to carry on a Glorious and Successful War. Neither is the State of Venice in any better Condition of Defence, the Turks having par'd away whole Provinces, from that once flourishing Common-Wealth; and, by their continual Invasions and Hostilities, reduc'd her to a Necessity of Merchandizing with the Ottoman Port for Peace: Which is no sooner concluded, but, on the least Pretence, is broke again, by those, who hold themselves not oblig'd, to keep Faith with Christians. Behold, at this time without Provocation on the Part of Venice, or a Declaration of War by the Grand Signior, the late League broken on a sudden, and in a most Clandestine manner. Behold Candy environ'd with their Fleet by Sea, and her fertile Plains cover'd with Armies of Mahometans by Land. Behold her Cities in the Hands of her Enemies, and her Villages laid Desolate; her Nobles put to the Sword, and her Merchants led into Captivity. In fine, behold this afflicted Common-wealth yet struggling with her Fate, and sending her Ambas- ſadors to all the Princes and States of Chriſtendom, Demanding, or rather in a ſuppliant Manner, Imploring their Aſſiſtance. Yet, ſhe finds little or no Help from any but the Pope, and the Knights of Malta. And, his Holineſs has enough to do, to preſerve the Patrimony of the Church from Violence. The State of Genoua, is too intent upon her Traffick, to regard the Calamities of her Neighbours. And, all the Princes of Italy have ſuch Diverſions at Home, as render their Application to Things Abroad, very Cold and Indifferent. In the mean while, the Turks gain Ground, double their Strength, and encreaſe their Victories! O Deplorable State of Chriſtendom! Is there no Redreſs for theſe Miſeries? Yes ſurely, there is, and ſuch a Redreſs, as only lies in Your Power, Great Miniſter, to apply; which, in the Experiment, I dare be ſure will prove Effectual.

I do not pretend to the Viſions and Inſpirations of Peter the Hermit, who garbl'd Secular and Divine Offices; and arming himſelf in Habiliments of Steel, went Dragooning up and down Chriſtendom, at the Head of a Confus'd Rabble, to render himſelf Popular, and acquire acquire the Triple Character, of Pilgrim, Priest and Captain. The ill Success of his rash Expeditions, shew'd, that he was only stung with a Religious Caprice; and that God approv'd not his Folly. I do not go about to propose another Crusade, or contrive a Way to shed whole Deluges of Humane Blood, with no other Consequence, than to stain History with the Sanguine Memoirs of Christendom's Vanity and Misfortune. Besides, that would be found Impracticable in this Age, which was easie to put in Execution, Five or Six Hundred Years ago; the World is not so Devout now, as it was in those Days; neither are Men so prompt to run the Risque of their Lives, on Religious Errands, for the Honor of being esteem'd Martyrs. 'Twill be difficult to find out a new List of Godfreys, Baldwins, Guys, and other Heroes, to lead the Champions of the Cross, through all the Hardships of Sea and Land, so many Hundred Miles, into Remote and Desolate Regions; to combate not only with Flesh and Blood, but with Famine, Pestilence, and all the Miseries of Humane Life; And, as if this were not enough, to sheath their Swords also in each others Bowels, for Punctilios, mere Trifles of mistaken Honor, and ill-tim'd Emulation. And all this only, to purchase the Empty Title of King of Jerusalem, or the Precarious Authority of a Governour for an Emperor; both short liv'd Honours, the One to be lost in a little time, and all Palestine, to the Saracens; the Other depending only on the Pleasure of the Multitude. Such were the Glorious Fruits of the Christian Arms in those Days! Such the Triumphs, attending our Victories! These the Trophies which our Fathers erected to their own Disgrace; when after a War of so many Years, they left the Holy Land in a worse Condition than they found it; and of so many hundred thousand Men as marched thither, threatning the Total Subversion of the Saracen Empire, scarce return'd enough, to disperse the News of their own Overthrow.

Waving therefore these Viponous Expeditions, I now propose to you a Commence, an Undertaking, which tho it may make less Noise in the World, yet carries more Probability of Success, and will not only promote the Interest of France, but redound to the Advantage of all Europe.

No Man who is acquainted with History, can be ignorant, what Claims the Kings of France have made to the Empire of the West, since the Days of Charlemaine, the Royal Predecessor of his present Majesty, who was dignified with the Imperial Title, by the Soverain Pontif. Neither is it unknown by what Artifices, the House of Austria have procured the Translation of this Sacred Dignity to their own Family.

Your Eminence is sensible, by what Tyrannous and Unjust Methods, they have maintain'd themselves in this high Pitch of Humane Glory; and, not content with this, how they have aim'd after the Monarchy of the Whole World. All the North have groan'd under the Burden of their Insupportable Tyranny. And their Encroachments on the South, have render'd that Line Infamous. They spare neither Civil nor Ecclesiastical Rights, in the Pursuit of their Ambition; not even the Patrimony of St Peter, which has ever been esteem'd Sacred and Inviolable by Christian Princes. They have forc'd it from its Lords, and led the Supreme Pastor of the Church into Captivity. What should I speak of the Hollanders, Suitzers,

Grisons

'Griſons and other Nations, which, impatient of the Auſtrian Yoke, revolted from their Cruel Maſters; and, have ever ſince aſſerted their Liberty, by the Force of their Arms? What ſhould I mention, the frequent Troubles in Bohemiah, Tranſylvania and Hungary, where the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries, grown deſperate with their daily Oppreſſions, have bravely endeavour'd to redeem themſelves and their Poſterity from perpetual Servitude; but, for want of a Powerful Protector, have been forc'd to yield to their Old Maſters. That Inceſtuous Race, are grown Odious to the whole World: Even the Princes of the Empire, are forced to ſmother their Reſentments, when they behold one to poſſeſs the Imperial Diadem, which they cannot but hate!

'That therefore which I aim at in this Addreſs, is, to repreſent to Your Eminence, how eaſie it will be in this Juncture, for his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to recover the Imperial Crown, which of Right belongs to None but the Successors of the renown'd Charlemaine; and which even the greateſt part of the Germans themſelves, wiſh to ſee placed on the Head of Lewis XIV. Moſt of the 'Electors, are already inclining to the 'Interests of France: It will not be diffi-'cult to win the rest. The Hungarians, 'are long for a Deliverer; And, the 'other Provinces beyond the Danube, will 'freely open the Gates of their Cities, 'to let in his Armies, whom they look on 'as the Hope of all Christendom. The 'Helvetians, who are Allies of this Crown, 'will not fail to perform their Part. The 'Swedes have already pluck'd many Fea-'thers, from the Ravenous Eagle. And, 'the Forces of this Crown, have blun-'ted her Talons. Another Campagne 'will quite deplume her, enervate her 'last Vigour, and end the tedious Con-'troversie.

'Let not therefore an Untimely Peace 'with the Emperour, so much talk'd of, 'stop the Current of the French Tri-'umphs! Let not the Sinister Practices 'of German Pensioners in the Swedish Court, 'occasion a Rupture between Two the 'most Potent and Victorious Crowns in 'Europe! Or rather, let not Queen Chri-'stina, reap the sole Glory of so fortu-'nate and profitable a War! His Ma-'jesty has a Formidable Army by Land; 'and, in a short time, will have an In-'vincible Fleet by Sea. Continual Victo-

'ries

'ries, court the Perſeverance of the 'French Valour: whilſt the Juſtice of 'your Cauſe, invites to the Battel.

'All things conſpire to put a Period
'to the Auſtrian Grandeur. Only ſeize
'the preſent Opportunity; which once
'loſt, may never be recover'd again.
''Twas only the ſudden and unexpected
'Fate of Henry IV. this King's Grand'father, of Eternal Memory, that hin-
'der'd him from putting in Execution
'the ſame Deſign I now propoſe. And
'if Lewis XIII. did not proſecute it,
''twas becauſe he wanted a favourable
'Juncture. Now, behold, it offers it-
'ſelf: 'Tis in your Power Supreme Di-
'rector of the State, under his Majeſty,
'to build the Fortune of France ſo high,
'that all the Nations of Chriſtendom may
'repoſe under its Shadow. Purſue the Suc-
'ceſs which Heaven has already granted.
'And when all Europe is thus ſettled
'in a Durable Peace, either making ho'nourable Friendſhips with, or entring
'ſubmitting to this new Gallick Empire,
'then will be the time to call the Ot-
'mans to an Account, for the Ravages
'and Spoils they have committed on 'Chriſtian Countries, and to carry Our 'Arms to the Walls of Conſtantinople, and 'drive

drive these Barbarians, back to their Primitive Rocks and Desarts; from whence they have thus long straggled, to ruin the most desirable Provinces of Asia and Europe; nay, and of the Whole World.

There is no other Way but this, in my Judgment, to stop the Progress of the Turkish Victories. Since it is impossible to make a Durable Peace among Christian Princes, but by Conquest; I mean, such a Peace, as will inspire them with the Resolution, and put them into a Capacity, to unite all their Forces, in a War against the Mahometans. As for the present Condition of the Republick, if their Loss were greater, than they are like to be, yet they will be inconsiderable, in Comparison of the mighty Gain which will afterwards accrue, not only to them, but to all the Christian Nations, by advancing the French Crown to that Height of Grandeur, design'd for it by Fate. Hitherto the Christian Princes, have only endeavour'd to apply a Remedy to the Part particularly affected; from whence, if by Fortune they chas'd the Distemper, it soon broke out in some other Member;

'whence it came to pass, that we lo
'Provinces after Province, and the Tu
'are almost gotten into the Heart of 'rope. If therefore, we design to d
'them thence, it is necessary to follo
'this Method, which will be found
'only Way, to pluck this Evil up by 'Roots.

'Go on then, Most Prudent and
'lustrious Guardian of the Cross,
'stin'd to Command the Earth; Go
'and lift up our Great Master to
'VVreath with which the Tutelar
'gel of Europe, is ready to environ
'Sacred Temples. Let not the Ge
'Deputies at Munster, any longer
'muse You with feigned Overture
'Peace. But pursue the Propitious
'of France, which waits to lead
'Armies to Victories, Triumphs
'Glories; and to establish a New E
'in the World, to which all Na
'shall pay Homage, and fly for
'tection.

This is an Effect of his Natural Diſpoſition; which he is wiſe enough to improve to the Ends of Policy. There being no ſubtiler Artifice to gain a Popular Eſteem, than by the Reputation of a Generous Temper.

However, I think I ſaid Nothing that could juſtly offend Him, unleſs he were indued with the Incommunicable Gift of diſcerning Hearts. For otherwiſe, at the Worſt, he could but tax me with a Loyal Preſumption and Miſtake, in propoſing things altogether Impracticable.

Theſe were ſuch, as thou wilt eaſily diſcern, when thou conſidereſt, that though they appear fair and eaſie in the Attempt, as the Circumſtances of Europe are at preſent; yet the Revolution of a few Moons may quite change the Face of Affairs: new and unthought of Difficulties may ariſe: the Emperour may make a Peace with Suedeland: the Pope might interpoſe his Mediation and Authority, the Aſſembly at Munſter might have a Concluſion according to their Wiſhes; the Electoral Princes, might be more firmly faſtned to the Intereſt of the Empire. Beſides, another Campagne may prove as fatal to the French, as the former have been propitious. After all, if they ſhould find Encouragement to begin this Enterprize, and ſhould meet with anſwerable Succeſs in the Proſecution of it; yet a thouſand Occurrences would would emerge, to hinder them from enjoying their new-gotten Empire long; or from being able to maintain a War against the Empire, whose Subjects are Infinite, and Treasures inexhaustible.

If thou, who art the Light of the Ofman Monarchy, shalt approve of what I have done, my Happiness will be great; nevertheless, thy Reproofs will not make me Miserable, since they are Arguments of thy Condescension and Favour.

LETTER II.

To Iſmael Mouta Faraca, a White Eunuch.

THY Letter is come ſafe to my Hands, accompany'd with a Munificent Preſent from Egry Boinou, who thou telleſt me is depriv'd of his Eyes by the Grand Signior's Order. I condole the Calamity of my Friend, yet accuſe not the Juſtice of Him who is Maſter of us all. We are Muſſulmans, and muſt not diſpute the Pleaſure of Heaven, or the Commands of our Sovereigns. It is an Argument of their Clemency, when they retrench their Anger, and ſpare the Lives of their Slaves. The Sultan is merciful in a higher Degree, in not extending his Hands to the Wealth of our Friend; but hath left that, and his Liberty untouch'd: whereby he is ſtill in a Capacity, of enjoying many Pleaſures, which are denied to Thouſands who have their Sight.

I do not write this, as if I were void of Compaſſion toward my Friend. I owe him ſtill the ſame Affection, as when he was able to read the Sincerity of it in my Face. But, I would not have the Loſs of his Eyes, abate the Sight of his Soul, which is his Reaſon. Let him remember, that a Famous Philoſopher has done that voluntarily to himſelf, for the Sake of a leſs interrupted Contemplation, which

LETTER III.

To Dgnet Oglou.

I AM extreamly surprized, and equally troubl'd at the severe Punishment which Sultan Ibrahim has inflicted on Egry Boinou. His Successor, Ismael Mouta Faraca, sent me the first News of it, but said nothing of the Eunuch's Crime. Neither wou'd I request that satisfaction of a Man, who derives a new Lustre from the Tragical Eclipse of my Friend; lest my Love shou'd have betray'd my Discretion, and tempted me to utter that, which is not proper for a Slave of the Sultan's to express. Our Thoughts are our own whilst we keep them chain'd up in our Breasts; but, if once we suffer 'em to take Air in words, they become another Man's, who may make use of them to our Ruin. I never had Familiarity enough with Ismael, to trust him with Reflections of this Nature. Besides, his own Letter to me, discover'd too much Freedom to be void of Design, it being the first that ever pass'd between us; which, for that Reason, ought to have been dictated in a Style more reserv'd. I gave him a Pattern in my Answer; not letting a Word escape my Pen, which might speak less Resignation to the Will of our Master, than Tenderness for my Friends Suffering.

But with thee I dare use greater Freedom. My long experience of thy Integrity, will justifie this Boldness. Tell me, my Dgnet, was not the Blindness of Sultan Ibrahim's Passion, which has robb'd Egry of his Sight? Answer me without Disguize; Was it not some Caprice of Jealousie? Was it not because the Master thought he saw too much, that the Slave sees not now at all? If that Sence was so judg'd Criminal in Egry, why was it in particular punished? But, 'tis in vain to measure the Cruel Frolicks of a Sovereign Monarch by Rule, who makes his Will a Law.

The Christians say, the Ottoman Prince is a Butcher, and the whole Empire a Shambles, where Persons of all Degrees, are sacrific'd to the Lust or Passion of a Tyrant. I tell this, though I approve not the Licentious Tongues of these Infidels; yet, it appears too true, that no uncontroulable a Power as the Eastern Monarch are inveſted with, prompts them to commit many Violences, for which Juſtice can make no Plea. It were to be wiſh'd, That the Practices of the Sublime Seraglio, did not too often verifie it. Suffer me to be exaſperated a little, for the Cruel Sentence executed on my Friend; the moſt accompliſh'd Perſon within the Walls of that Magnificent Palace. Doubtleſs, he owes the Loſs of his Eyes, to the Grudge of ſome Envious Minion, who would not brook ſo dangerous a Rival in the Sultan's Favour. For, this Unfortunate Eunuch, who charm'd all Hearts, had made ſome Impreſſion alſo on the Cruel Ibrahim's. He often lov'd to hear him ſing the lively Dorick Strains, to chaſe away his Melancholy: For, Egry is a Second Orpheus, whoſe Voice thou knoweſt, inſpir'd the Trees and Rocks with Paſſion. Beſides, he has many other Gifts, which render'd his Perſon and Converſation delectable to all; and taught the whole Seraglio, new Leſſons of Platonick Love.

When thou haſt received this, I deſire thee, to give him a Viſit: Thou knoweſt his Houſe at Galata. Embrace him in my Name, and give him a Kiſs of Faithful Friendſhip. Forget not alſo to return him my Acknowledgements, for the Diamonds he ſent me. And, chear him with this Thought, that one day his Eyes ſhall be renew'd in Paradiſe, far brighter than thoſe Glittering Jewels. Adieu.

Paris, 20th. of the 6th. Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER IV.

To Dicheu Huſſein, Baſſa.

'TIS not eaſie to gueſs at the Motive, which induc'd the Duke of Orleans, to begin this Years Campagne in ſo Rigorous a Seaſon. It was the Firſt Moon, and the Ground was covered with deep Snows (An ill time to march in an Enemies Country.) And, when theſe Snows were diſſolv'd, Floods follow'd. It ſeems as if he were thirſty of Fame, and would acquire the Character of a Hardy Warriour: Reſolving to ſhun no Fatigue, which might advance the Reputation of his Arms.

The Duke of Enguien, ſpurr'd on with a glorious Emulation, ſoon followed with another Army, but by a different Road. There are Four Mareſchals of France, gone with them. Their early Marches, make a great Noiſe. But, little of Action could be expected, while the wary Flemmings, knowing the Paſſes of the Country, and the Force of the Floods, have not have kept their Winter-Quarters; ſpending the time at Eaſe, in preparing all things neceſſary for a more ſeaſonable Campagne, which they have now begun.

In this, the Spaniſh Policy deſerves Commendation; who would not expoſe the Health and Lives of their Soldiers to unneceſſary Rigour, but waited till the Sun had well dry'd up the unwholeſom Damps of the Earth, and ſhedding his his benigner Influence through the Air, invited them forth into the Field. But, when I thus approve the Wisdom of the Spaniard, think not, that I condemn the sprightly Genius of the French, who seem to approach neareſt the Bravery of the Mussulman Armies.

The Action of a French Officer, was worthy of Remark; who being sent from the Camp, with Letters to the King and Queen, arrived at the Court the 24*th*. Day of the Second Moon, whilst the Ground was yet frozen hard. After he had deliver'd his Message the Chamberlain of the Royal Houshold, appointed him a Lodging for that Night in the King's Palace, he being to return to Flanders the next Day. But, he generously refused it, saying, It became not him to lie in a Bed of Down, when his General, with the whole Army, were forc'd to sleep on the frozen Earth. Therefore, causing some Straw to be brought out of the Stables, he took his Repose thereon in the open Air. The Young King, extreamly pleas'd with his Gallantry, order'd him a Hundred Pieces of Gold; and recommended him to the Duke of Orleans, as one of the braveſt Men in his Army.

I swear by the Whistling of the Winds, and the Rustling of the Leaves, that I honour such Vertue even in an Infidel.

Paris, 10th. of the 6th. Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER V.

To Kerker Haſſan, Baſſa.

THY Letter is come to my Hands, with the Preſent of Kotha; which is ſo much the more acceptable, becauſe thou broughteſt it thy ſelf from the Valley of Admoim, the Place of my Nativity. It is an evident Sign, that thou haſt not forgot thy Countryman, in that thou condeſcendeſt to oblige him in ſo peculiar a Manner. The Place where we drew our firſt Breath, is always dear to Mortals; and the Remembrance of that delicious Vale, affects Mahmut with ſingular Delight. 'Tis true indeed, I was brought from thence before I could diſtinguiſh one Place from another; but, I have viſited that Region ſince, and have Reaſon to pronounce it, the moſt Delectable Part of Arabia. Had the Grecian Poets ſeen that Paradiſe, they would not have ſo extoll'd the Celebrated Fields of Tempe in Theſſaly. This happy Vale is the Elyzium of the World, bleſs'd with an Eternal Spring.

Thou art highly oblig'd to the Sultan, for the Liberty he has given thee to viſit the Place of thy Cradle, and to ſojourn ſo long among thy Kindred. Thy Father was famous in that Country, for hunting of Lions, and other Beaſts of Prey. I have heard ſome of our Tribe, praiſe his Valour and Dexterity, in the Chaſe of thoſe Fierce Animals. They told me, That in the Space of Two Years, he had presented the Beglerbeg with Twenty Lions Heads, kill'd by his own Hand: That he had Three Tame ones in his House, which he had taken when Whelps from a Lioness of prodigious Bulk: That the Walls of his House were hung with the Skins of Tygers, Panthers and Lions, the Trophies of his Indefatigable Diligence, Skill and Courage, in Pursuit of Wild Beasts. In a Word, they said he was the most successful Hunter in all Arabia. If thou inheritest his Inclinations as well as his Blood, (for they commonly go together) thou hast had a fair Time, to range the Forests, and purge the Desart of those Ravenous Creatures. Were it not for the Enmity of the Gnats, the East would be over-run with these Savages. They say, this little despicable Insect, destroys more Lions, than all the Huntsmen in Asia. For, swarming about them in the Heat of Summer, they chiefly fasten, on their Eyelids; which they sting so vehemently, that the Lions thinking to ease themselves by scratching, often tear their own Eyes out, and so are famish'd.

Space

To understand well the different Natures of Beasts, is a Study fit for Kings. 'Twas the Glory of Solomon, to be accurate in this Knowledge: And, Alexander the Great, had such an Esteem for it, that he bestowed on Aristotle the Philosopher Eight hundred Talents, only for writing a Treatise of Animals. Our Holy Prophet was eminent above all other Mortals, for his Familiarity with the Brutal Generations; understanding their Qualities and Language, and often discoursing with them. When he lived in the Desart, a Libard continually waited at the Door of his Cave, and did all the Offices of a kind and faithful Servant. Such Grace is given but to a few.

But I forget my own Opportunity, of vending my Affections to my Country and my Friends. I forget, that I am writing to one who is newly come from Arabia. Would to God I could see thee, were it but for an Hour. I have a Thousand Questions to ask about our Relations; and what Changes have happened since I was there.

But, I must Sacrifice these Natural Fondnesses to the Will of Destiny. I am a double Exile: And, since it is for the Service of the Grand Signior, I am resign'd.

Adieu, Happy Minister; and, if Mahomet may be admitted sometimes to mingle with the Train of thy better Thoughts, he shall count himself happy, wherever he is.

of the Year 1646.

LETTER VI.

To Huſſein Baſſa.

THE taking of Retimo in Candy, has fill'd the Nazarenes, with Apprehenſions of greater Calamities.

The firſt fortunate Strokes in a War, make deep Impreſſions on the Enemy; the Vulgar looking on them, as the Index of their future Deſtiny; But, repeated Succeſſes chill their Vitals, bereave 'em of Courage and Hope, leaving 'em Nothing but Ominous Portents, and Superſtitious Prelages of their approaching Ruin. So hard a thing it is, to judge of Humane Events, without being carried into Extreams. They already give over the whole Iſland for loſt. I wiſh and believe it may prove true. Yet, at the ſame time, I know the Fortune of War is uncertain; and, another Campagne, may repair or revenge the Damage they have ſuſtained in this and the former.

The Venetians loſt Five thouſand Men before the Walls of that Town; among whom, was General Cornaro, the Viceroy of the Iſland, ſlain in the firſt Onſet; beſides what were killed by our Soldiers, when they entred with the retreating Candiots, and ſacrific'd all to the Heat of Martial Paſſion.

But, that which appear'd moſt Ominous to their Cauſe, though the preſent Damage were leſs, was the falling out of the Soprave- ditor and the Proveditor of the Iſle: Who not agreeing about the Extent of their different Commiſſions, formed Two Parties; between whom there happened a furious Encounter, in which Four hundred were ſlain on both Sides.

Theſe ſiniſter Events, occaſion'd the Republick to make freſh Applications to the Court of France; and, an Ambaſſador is ſent from this Crown, to Conſtantinople, in Order to mediate a Peace. They call him Monſieur de Varennes; a Man of a preſumptuous Diſpoſition, and who delights to attempt difficult things. When there could not be found a Perſon, willing to undertake a Negotiation, which carries ſo little Probability of Succeeding; this Gentleman, in a Bravado offered himſelf; telling the Queen, That he made no Doubt, of ſo repreſenting Matters to the Grand Signior, as would infallibly produce a Peace.

It had been eaſie for Cardinal Mazarin (whoſe Counſel the Queen follows in all things) to have hindred this Man's Voyage. But, thoſe who are acquainted with the Pique that is between them, conclude, That the Cardinal conſented to his Commiſſion, on purpoſe to lay a Train for his future Diſgrace; as knowing, the Boldneſs of his Temper, was far from being ſeconded with equal Wiſdom and Conduct; and, that though he was prone to undertake Great and Hazardous Actions, yet he never had the good Fortune to accompliſh any thing of Moment.

They that know this Gentleman's Character, ſay, That any Example will encourage him to rush into Labyrinths and Perils. And, where Examples are wanting, he is Ambitious to be made one himself. He fears not to tread in the Footsteps of such, as have miscarried in the most Desperate Enterprizes; but, promises himself Success, where a Thousand have fail'd. In fine, he is esteemed the rashest Man living.

I send thee this Description of the French Ambassador, that thou mayest communicate it to the Sovereign Divan. It will be no small Advantage, to know the Temper and Qualifications of Foreign Ministers, residing at the August Port: Especially at this Juncture, whereon the Fate of Christendom depends. Besides, there cannot be too great Caution us'd, to obviate the subtle Trains of Cardinal Mazarini, who, I fear, is contriving no kind Offices to the Ottoman Empire.

I Kiss the Hem of thy Vest, Illustrious Bassa, and bid thee Adieu.

To the Same.

THE Captain Baſſa, has the Reputation of a good Seaman among the French. They highly applaud his expeditious Relief of Candia, and no leſs commend the Secrecy, with which he landed his Army and took the Town of Retimo. The French are generally great Critics in Military Affairs; and are not ſo partial to the Honour of the Chriſtians, as to deny the Praiſes that are due to an expert Leader among the Muſſulmans. Yet, they are inconſtant, and ſeldom retain the ſame Sentiments long. Every Circulation of their Blood, begets new Friendſhips, new Opinions, new Cenſures. In this they ſeem to inherit the Vices of the Ancient Gauls, as well as their Country.

A Roman Emperor, who made War in this Nation, has left excellent Memoirs behind him; wherein among other things, he deſcribes the Nature of the Gauls, their Diſpoſitions, and General Inclinations. He that ſhall read his Writings, which were penn'd above Sixteen Hundred Years ago, and ſhall converſe with the preſent French, will eaſily conclude, That the Latter are a living Tranſcript of the Former; and, that their Humours and Actions, are exactly copied from his Words. Yet, in Nothing does the Character of the Primitive

Gauls,

Gauls, ſuit more truly to the preſent Inhabitants, than in their furious Onſets in a Battel, and their equal Readineſs to Flight. Their Firſt Aſſault ſeems to ſpeak 'em More than Men, their Second, Leſs than Women; and, they ſeldom venture on a Third.

Wilt thou know then, how they obtain ſo many Signal Victories? It is by Stratagems and Mony. Where they cannot circumvent their Enemies, they corrupt a Party of 'em with Bribes and Penſions. Thus they purchaſe their Conqueſts, with a more powerful Metal than Steel. The Force of Gold, to which all things yield, lays Cities and Provinces, at the Feet of the Invincible Monarch.

But, I pray Heaven, ſo to proſper the Armies of the Empire founded on Vertue, that this Infidel Prince, and all the Nazarenes, may experience their Gold to be as ineffectual as their Swords, againſt the Valour and Juſt Revenge of the True Believers.

LETTER

LETTER VIII.

To the Venerable Mufti, Sovereign Guide of the True Believers.

THou, who art all Goodneſs, the Arch-Type of Clemency and Vertue, wilt not number me among the Importunate, for ſo often troubling thee with Diſputes of our Holy Law. I offer thee no Common Queſtions; neither am I curious, ſeeking Occaſions to darken what is Apparent, or invalidate the Teſtimony of Him who touch'd the Hand of God. I revere the Oracles, and the Book not dictated on Earth. Every Chapter I read in the Alcoran, makes me bleſs the Angel, who took ſo many Flights to bring down the Sacred Pages from Heaven. And, my Reverence is encreas'd towards the Volume of Glory, when I conſider, it was not haſtily compos'd; every Verſicle, being the Product of Divine Premeditation. Doubtleſs, it excels all the Writings in the World. No Scripture, before or ſince, has approach'd to the Myſterious Elegance of thoſe Celeſtial Lines. Yet methinks, I find a great Profundity of Wiſdom in the Treatiſes of the Ancients.

Thou wilt ſay, My Station requires me to read Men more than Books, being not ſent hither to Contemplate, but to act for the Intereſt of my Maſter, and the Ottoman Empire. 'Tis true, my Buſineſs is now to unravel the Deſigns of

of the Infidels; but, bear with me, if I tell thee, That in Order to this I took no wrong Course, when in my Younger Years, I apply'd my self to Books, which are but Men turn'd inside out, or Metamorphos'd into Letters; against whom, thus surviving themselves, the Stroak of Death cannot prevail.

Those who have erected Statues of Gold, Silver, Brass or Marble, to the Memory of departed Heroes, can but transmit the Effigies of their Bodies to Posterity; which, thou knowest, is the Ignobler Part of Man: And herein, they come short of the Ægyptians, who have the Art of preserving the Bodies themselves Incorruptible, for a Thousand Generations. But they who left their Writings to Posterity, have oblig'd the World with an Immortal and Lively Image of their Mind: This is properly the Man, and lives for ever; when the Body is consum'd in the Grave, and the Statue perhaps is eat up by time, or demolish'd by Envy.

Pardon this Digression, Oraculous and Uttering Mouth of God, I have a great deal to say, and cannot comprehend it in a few Words. It has been enjoyn'd by our Holy Doctors, That a Mussulman should not read the Books of Prophane Infidels. But tell me, thou who art the Resolver of Doubts, Whether this Precept is extended to all, without Exception; or, Whether a Dispensation may not be allow'd, to such as read those Books with One Eye, whilst the Other is fix'd on the Law, which balances the Mind with Truth? The Alcoran tells us, That the Devil has inserted some Falsities in the Best

Writings:

Writings: But, is it not possible for a Man to separate the Good from the Bad? I read in the Book of Glory, many remarkable Things concerning Alexander the Great: But, is it unlawful also to peruse what has been writ by others of the Life of that Famous Warrior, and Prophet? Both Grecian and Roman Historians have related his Adventures in Asia, his Battle with Darius the Persian Monarch, and Porus the Indian. They praise his Continence and Modest Regard to Sysigambis and her Daughter, when they were his Captives; his Inviolable Friendship to Ephestion, whilst living, and the affectionate Tears he shed for him, after his Death. Yet, they condemn him of cruel Ingratitude, for Sacrificing Clitus to his Choler and the Fumes of Wine, who was a Faithful Friend, a Valiant Soldier, and once had saved his Life in a Battle. They cannot pass over the Burning of Persepolis, without some Reflections on the unmanly Softness of this Warrior, who, to please his Concubine, gave Order that the Fairest and most Magnificent City of Asia, should be set on Fire. The Persians boast That that City was built all of Cedar; That Cyrus had wholly displanted not only Mount Libanus, but the choicest Nurseries of that Tree-grant Wood, through all Asia, to build his glorious City, in Emulation of Soloman, King of the Jews, who was by other Princes thought to value himself too high, for building the Temple of Jerusalem of the same Material. They add, that Alexander found in this City Ninety Millions of Caracks in Gold; that after the the Debauch was over, and the Flames had consum'd to Ashes this Phœnix of Asia, the Conqueror wept, and commanded the Money he had found there, should be expended in raising Another in its Room, more glorious than the Former; But, that Thais, who had perswaded him to burn it, was the only Obstacle to its Re-edification, For, such was her Empire over this Monarch, that he could deny her Nothing.

What I have said of Persepolis, is recorded by Persian Historians; Other Writers make some mention of it, but not so particularly. There are some also, who mention his demolishing of Tyre; a City so Ancient, that 'tis said to be first built by one of the Grandchildren to Noah; of whom, thou knowest, the Alcoran speaks often. They tax him also with Cruelty, in causing Two thousand of the Chief Tyrians, to be Crucified, as a Sacrifice to Hercules. Thou art best able to Judge, whether this be agreeable to Truth; for, what Mussulman will believe, That the Victorious Prophet, was guilty of so Barbarous an Idolatry?

The Method he took to subdue this Impregnable City, is an Argument of his Invincible Courage; and, that there is Nothing Impracticable, to a Mind arm'd with Resolution and Perseverance.

Tyrus was situated above Half a Mile in the Sea, when the Macedonian demanded a Surrender. The Citizens trusting to the Strength and Height of the Rock whereon they liv'd (for, 'twas a perfect Island) and to their Distance from the Shore of the Continent; bid

Defiance

Defiance to him, whom God had ordained to subdue all Nations, between the the Extremities of India and the Pillars of Hercules. The Conquerour, enflam'd at their Refusal of offer'd Peace, prepares for an Assault. He attempted, without the Miracle of Moses, to make a Path for his Army through the Sea. He follow'd the Steps of the Babylonian Monarch, who, not Three Ages before, had joyned this Proud Nest of Merchants to the Firm Land. Twice his Industrious Soldiers rais'd a Causey, above the Waves, to the very Walls of Tyrus; and as often was their Labour defeated, by the Watchful Tyrians. When, the Third time he prov'd successful; and, in Spight of all their Resistance by Fire and Sword, after a Siege of Six Moons, he scal'd the Walls of that Queen of Maritime Cities; and convinc'd the World, that no Humane Force could put a Stop to his Conquests, whom Destiny had appointed to chastise the Nations of the Earth.

That Chapter in the Alcoran, which speaks of this Renowned Worthy, tells us, That he marched so far Eastward, till he came to a Country where the Sun rises. This Passage the Christians ridicule, saying, That the Sun rises and sets in all Countries; and, that there is no Stated Point of East and West, in the Fabrick of the World, since the same Place which is East of one Country, is West of another. Thus, the Despisers of our Holy Law, cavil at the Alcoran, and say, 'tis compos'd of Old Wives Tales; a Rude indigested Collection of Eastern Romances, and Superstitious Fables, calculated for the Meridian of Ignorance; first promulg'd in the Savage and Unpolish'd Desarts of Arabia, and afterwards propagated by the Sword through those Countries, whose Vices had banish'd their Learning, and rendered them flexible to a Religion, whose highest Pretensions consisted in Gratifying the Senses.

These Criticks consider not at the same time, That they argue against the Old and New Testament, (which is esteem'd the Alcoran of the Christians) wherein there is often Mention made, of the Rising and Gowing down of the Sun, of East and West, as proper Points or Marks, from which to take the Situation of Countries. Assuredly, in this they are captious: For, though there be no stated Point of East or West in the Globe; yet India being the nearest Region of this Continent, to that Part of the Horizon where the Sun daily first appears, it has not without Reason, gain'd the Additional Epither of East. And 'twas here the Macedonian Heroe sweat, because he could conquer no farther, unless he would have begun a War with the Fish of the Sea.

There are many other Passages related of Alexander's Temperance, Moderation, Justice, Fortitude and such like Vertues; and, something of his Vices. But, I will not tire thee with all that is said of this invincible Monarch, nor trace him in all his Marches through Asia, I will not trouble thee with what they say of his Journey into Ægypt, and aspiring to be call'd the Son of Jupiter Ammon; his being poyson'd at Babylon, in the Height of all his Triumphs; and, the Cantonizing his Empire, among his Chief Captains. Whatsoever in these Histories is agreeable to the Holy Alcoran, I acquiesce to; what is repugnant to that Summary of Truth, I reject as a Fable.

and,

Tell me, thou Sovereign Resolver of Doubts, Whether on these Terms, I may not read the Writings of Infidels? Books are Relief to the Mind oppress'd with Melancholy, and especially Histories, which also bring Profit, by right informing us of the Transactions of Past Ages: So that Things, which were done Thousands of Years ago, are made present to us. Where then is the Crime in Reading these Memoirs of the Ancients? It is not consistent with the Faith of a Mussulman to read these Histories, because they were penn'd by Heathens? Must we reject all that the Pagans did or said? Why then are the Works of Plutarch had in such Veneration by the Princes of Our Law? I tell thee, I not only read Plutarch, Livy, Tacitus, Xenophon, Polybius, with many other Historians that were Pagans, but I improve by their Writings. Such rare Examples of Vertue, such Illustrious Patterns of Justice, such solid Precepts of Morality, as these Authors abound with; cannot, in my Opinion, hurt any Man, who desires to square his Life by the best Rules.

I read also the Poets, whose Fables and Parables, seem to me, but to veil many excellent and profitable Maxims of Human Life.

The Story of the Birth of Typhon, his War with Jupiter, and his final Overthrow; denote the monstrous Rise of Factions in a State, and their Ruin.

The

The Cyclops being employ'd by Jupiter in making Thunderbolts, and killing Æsculapius, for which they themselves were afterwards slain by Apollo; intimates the Use, which Sovereign Princes make of Cruel, Covetous and Unjust Officers: Who when they have fulfill'd the Pleasure of their Masters, are abandon'd by them, to the Revenge of the Oppress'd Subjects. This is commonly experienc'd in all Monarchies, and especially in the Mighty Empire of the Ottmans; where the Bassa's, though the Grand Signior, for the Ends of State, connives a while at their unjust Oppression of the Musulmans under their Government, yet in due time, to shew his Abhorrence of their Villanies, consigns 'em over to the Executioner. Thou knowest, to whom the Bow-string was sent last; I wish his Successor may not equally merit it.

Acteon's being devoured by his Dogs, only for seeing Diana in a Bath; might have serv'd as Warning to Useph, the Black Eunuch, who could not restrain his Tongue, from babling out the private Amours of Sultan Ibrahim. It was Danger enough to know the Secret; but, to divulge it, was a sure way to incur the Revenge of the Prince.

Not much unlike was his Error, who tho' he did not report to others, yet had the Presumption to check his Sovereign to his Face, and reproach Him with Luxury. Had he been acquainted with the Fable of Endymion and the Moon, it would perhaps have taught him, That 'tis not the Part of a Favourite, to take Notice of his Master's stol'n Pleasures, but rather to invite him sometimes from the Toils of State and unbend his Mind with Recreations.

There are many other profitable Remarks hidden under the Fictions of the Poets: Which, tho they may seem Mysterious at first View, yet being examined with a little Attention, prove as easie to be understood, as the Hieroglyphicks were of old to the Ægyptians, who knew no other Letters.

God, the First Intellect, who imprinted his Mind on Tablets of Marble, in Letters of Arabick, and Writ the Decalogue with a Beam of his Glory; having also inspir'd all Nations with the Knowledge of Letters, grant, that while I read the Records of the Gentiles, I may not forget the Precepts of the Alcoran.

LETTER

LETTER IX.

To Murat Baſſa.

A Courier came to this City laſt Night, bringing News of the taking of Courtray by the French Army. This is a conſiderable Town in Flanders, and commands a great part of the Country. The Duke of Orleans, inveſted it on the Ninth of the laſt Moon, and on the Fifteenth, lay down before it with the whole Army. The Spaniſh Generals, haſtn'd to its Relief, and brought Thirty thouſand Men of ſix Nations, to combat with the French. But they quarrel'd about Precedency of Poſt. High Words paſs'd between the Duke of Lorrain and General Lamboy. Thus, while they ſpent their Time in Needleſs Conteſts, the French took the Town: And, having left a ſtrong Gariſon there, part of the Army, commanded by the Mareſchal de Grammont, is marched to joyn the Hollanders, with Deſign to attack Antwerp; and the reſt follow the Duke of Orleans, who they ſay, intends to beſiege Mardyke. This is a Sea-Town, that has nothing in it conſiderable enough to tempt a Conquerour, ſave the Haven, which is of great Importance in thoſe Parts.

We have had no Rains here theſe Three Moons, which maker the People fear a Famine. Proviſion of all Sorts, is very Dear; and and thoſe who have great Quantities of Corn will not bring it to the Markets. The Fruits are all blaſted, and a Diſtemper rages in the City, which fills all Places with Death and Mourning. The Cattel drop down dead in the Fields, and the Rivers are almoſt dried up. Men languiſh and wither, as if parch'd up by ſome inward Fire. Fearful Apparitions are ſeen in the Air; each Night brings forth New Prodigies. The People lament the preſent, and preſage greater Calamities to come. While Mahmut perſeveres unmov'd; and neither moleſts himſelf nor others, about the Inevitable Decrees of Deſtiny. I keep in the Path of my Duty, without turning to the Right Hand or to the Left. I ſerve the Great Signior faithfully: I pray for his Health, and for the Welfare of the Empire. I neither give Alms to the Infidels, nor do them any Injury. In fine, if I cannot reap any Profit from other Mens Vertues, I take care their Vices ſhall do me no Harm.

'Tis ſaid, there will be a Proceſſion here ſhortly, whereat the King, the Queen-Regent, and the whole Court will aſſiſt bare-foot, for an Example of others. The Body of a certain Female Saint, whom they eſteem the Patroneſs of this City, will be taken out of the Church where it lies, and will be carried with other Reliques of Saints, through the Streets of Paris, to appeaſe the Wrath of Heaven, which ſeems to be kindled againſt them.

In the mean time, I pray Heaven to ſend down its Bleſſings on the Ottoman Empire, and preſerve the True Faithful, from the Three Scourges of God.

Paris, 23d. of the 7th. Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER X.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

I Perceive thou haſt follow'd the Advice I formerly gave thee, to read Hiſtories, wherein thy Letter ſpeaks thee very converſant. Thou wilt have no Reaſon to repent of a Labour, that affords ſo agreeable a Diverſion, eſpecially to a Soldier and a Stateſman. They open the Graves, and call forth the Dead, without diſturbing their Repoſe; and preſent to us thoſe Hero's living, talking and acting Great Things, whoſe Bodies have lain buried in Silence and Obſcurity many Ages. They introduce us into the Cloſets of Princes, revealing their moſt Secret Counſels. They make us familiar with the Intrigues of Politicians, and the Stratagems of Warriours. In fine, there is Nothing Publick or Private, in the Courts or Camps of the Greateſt Monarchs, to which an Hiſtorian is a Stranger.

I applaud the Choice thou haſt made of Ottoman Hiſtories, and others of the Eaſt;

yet, I counſel thee, not to neglect thoſe of the Weſt. The Ancient Roman Writers, are full of rare Examples; and Modern France, which emulates all Great and Glorious Undertakings, takes equal Care to commit to Poſterity, the Lives of Illuſtrious Perſons. I ſay not this, in Contempt of other Countries in Europe. The Chriſtians of theſe Parts in General, are accurate Hiſtorians. They are univerſally Learned; in Regard, there is no Kingdom in Europe, where they have not Schools and Academies, where all Languages and Sciences are taught. The Plough-men in the Field, ſpeak Latin and Greek; which thou knoweſt, are now grown obſolete, and no where to be learn'd but in Books. The Mechanicks are Philoſophers; and, every Man ſets up for an Hiſtorian, or an Antiquary. It was not ſo in former Times, when the Eccleſiaſticks had engroſs'd all Manner of Learning to themſelves, except ſome few of the Nobility and Gentry, who had the Advantage of Patrimonial Libraries, and Leiſure to apply themſelves to Study. For, then it was difficult to purchaſe Books, there being but few; and for thoſe, they were obliged to the Labour of the Scribe. Hence it came to paſs, that only ſuch as had Plenty of Money, and a ſtrong Inclination to Knowlege, monopoliz'd the choiceſt Manuſcripts into their Hands, and bequeath'd them as a Legacy to their Off-Spring. But, ſince the Invention of Printing Books are infinitely multiplied, grown Cheap and Common: And those Histories and Sciences, which before were shut up in the Latin, Greek, or some of the Oriental Languages, are now translated into the Vulgar Speech of every Nation; whereby the lowest Sort of People who can but read, have the Privilege to become as Knowing as their Superiors, and the Slave may vie for Learning with his Sovereign. This makes the Nazarenes, upbraid the True Faithful with Ignorance and Barbarism, because Printing is not suffered throughout the Mussulman Empire. They consider not the bad Consequences of this Art, as well as the good: And, that the Liberty of the Press, has fill'd the World with Errors and Lies: Besides, they are Strangers to the Education of the Mussulmans, who are generally taught the Arabick and Persian Tongues from their Childhood: In which Two Languages, how many famous Histories have been writ? There is no point of useful Wisdom, which is not compriz'd in the Writings, of the Eastern Sages. And, as for unprofitable Treatises and Pamphlets, with which the Europeans abound, they are superfluous and burdensome, bringing a double Loss, both to Writer and Reader; while they rob them of their Time and Money, and commit a Rape on their Understandings. Add to this, the Fatal Effects which this deprav'd Indulgence of Printing has produc'd in Christendom. What Sacrileges, Massacres, Rebellions and Impieties, have overflow'd most Parts of the West in this licentious Age? What Hatred among Christians, What Seditions among Subjects, Diversities in Religion, Contempts of all Law, both Divine, Natural, and those of Nations? The Vices, at which former Times would have blush'd; nay, at the very naming of which, our Fathers would have started, as at a Prodigy, are in these Days committed openly, without Shame, without Contradiction; whilst there are Authors, who dare publickly assert the Cause of Impiety, and patronize all Manner of Prophanations.

But thou, who hast the Honour to guard the Incorruptible Seat of Justice and Vertue, the Bright Throne of the Osman Emperours, who are the Shadows of God on Earth; hast made such a Choice of Books, as commends thy Wisdom, and the Sincerity of thy Morals. Thou wilt not suffer thy Imagination to be tainted, with those enchanting Ideas of Evil, which are drawn by the Pens of some Elegant Writers. All that thou seekest in Books, is to inform thy Understanding, rectify thy Judgment, and enflame thy Affections with the Love of Vertue. To this End, serve the Divine Precepts of our Holy Doctors, and other Learned Sages; the Writings of Philosophers, and the Examples of Renowned Heroes. From these thou gatherest Strength, to practise the Four Maternal Vertues, and all the Good Qualities, that spring from those Roots.

Go on, and increase in the Graces and Accomplishments, which shall render thee Worthy to be made the Subject of a Panegy- lar Hiſtory; while the Old ſhall recommend, and the Young ſhall covet, nothing more paſſionately, than to read the Life of Caſſim Hali, Janizar-Aga.

Mahmut ſalutes thee with a Kiſs of Affection. Reverence thy ſelf, and all Men will Honour thee: So taught Pythagoras.

Paris, 17th. of the 8th. Moon, of the Year, 1646.

LETTER XI.

To the ſame.

I Had forgot to perform in my other Letter, what thou commandedſt me. Yet knowing the eſteem thou haſt for Women of Vertue and rare Endowments, and with what Pleaſure thou readeſt their Stories; I ſhould never ſend any Diſpatch to thee, wherein there is not a Relation of ſome Heroine. I will be more diligent hereafter, to obſerve the Diſpoſition of my Superiours: and will endeavour to procure a Collection of the Lives and Characters of all the Famous Women, that have been Recorded in Hiſtory. In the mean while hear what the French ſay, of Chriſtina Queen of Suedeland, of whom thou requireſt a Deſcription.

She is the onely Daughter of Guſtavus Adolphus

dolphus, the moſt Victorious Prince, that ever govern'd that Nation; and, one of the moſt Succeſsful Warriours in the World. As his whole Life was led in the Field, ſo there he received an Honourable Death, being ſlain in the Battel of Lutzen: Some ſay, by the Treachery of Duke Albert; who had in Appearance, deſerted the Emperour, and offer'd himſelf a Voluntier to Guſtavus Adolphus. I formerly mention'd this Duke, and that he was kill'd by a Swediſh Lady. If the Suſpicion of the Swedes be well grounded, and that Duke Albert was really Guilty of the Murder of Guſtavus, it may be, this was the Motive which brought thoſe Amazons into the Field, to revenge the Death of their Prince. But, it is impoſſible to be aſſur'd of the Truth, among ſo many different Opinions.

When the French ſpeak of Guſtavus Adolphus, they cannot reſtrain their Words on this Side a Panegyrick. They ſay, he was a Prince above all Praiſe. 'Tis certain, his very Enemies admired his unimitable Courage, and matchleſs Fortune. I have ſent thee the true Effigies of his Face, wherein thou wilt ſee, a moſt agreeable Mixture of Majeſty and Benignity, creating Reſpect and Love at the ſame Time in the Beholders. He was ſo familiar with every one, as if he had forgot himſelf, as well as he was a Stranger to Pride. He was a great Student in his Youth, and made himſelf Maſter of Latin, French, and Italian; being alſo perfectly skill'd, in Ancient and Modern Hiſtories. He had a wonderful Faculty Faculty, in diſcovering Impoſtures; a dextrous Wit in Time of Danger and Difficulty, being Ready at Counſel, and Swift in Execution; and as Cunning at a Stratagem, as he was Bold at an Onſet. He was Liberal to his Officers, and to all Men of Merit; but, a ſevere Puniſher of Diſorders in his Army. And, that which Crown'd all the reſt of his Vertues, his Piety to God was ſingular and worthy of Remark. The French relate a Memorable Saying of this King, when he was once in his Camp before Werben. He had been ſolitary in the Cabinet of his Pavilion ſome Hours together, and none of his Attendants durſt interrupt Him; till at Length, a Favourite of his having ſome Important Matter to tell him, came ſoftly to the Door, and looking in, beheld the King very devoutly on his Knees at Prayers. Fearing to moleſt him in that Sacred Exerciſe, he was about to withdraw his Head, when the King ſpied him, and bid him come in; ſaying unto him, Thou wondereſt to ſee me in this Poſture, ſince I have ſo many Thouſands of Subjects to pray for me. But I tell thee, That no Man has more Need to pray for himſelf, than He, who being to render an Account of His Actions to None but God, is for that Reaſon, more cloſely aſſaulted by the Devil, than all other Men beſide.

Guſtavus was born in the Year 1594. At which Time, they ſay, a Comet was ſeen in the Form of a Sword, with its Point directed toward Germany; which the Aſtrologers of those Times, interpreted as a Presage of that King's Warlike Genius, and of his future Conquests in the Empire. He came to the Government, before he had seen full Seventeen Winters, and was cut off in the Eight and Thirtieth Year of his Age.

Is is said, That a few Days before his Death, when his Soldiers receiv'd Him with Infinite Acclamations, and all the Marks of an unusual and intemperate Joy, he seemed to be troubled at it, saying, That he took that Excessive Demonstration of his Soldiers Love, for an Omen of some approaching Disaster: And, that he was assured, God would, by taking him away, teach them, That there is no Confidence to be repos'd in any Mortal.

After the Death of Gustavus, the States of the Kingdom assembling, proclaimed Christina Queen; And, during her Minority, committed her to the Tutelage of Five Principal Officers of the Kingdom, who also took on them the whole Care of the Commonwealth.

She is perfect in Seven Languages. Well vers'd in Ancient and Modern Philosophy; and, a complete Historian. In fine, she has acquir'd the Title, of the Most Learned Princess of her Time.

She is of a Graceful and Majestick Aspect: Has a piercing Eye: Wears part of her Hair loose about her Temples, and flowing down in Curls to her Shoulders; the Rest braided up behind, in Form of a Wreath. Thus is she represented by her Picture, which I have seen ſeen in a Gallery of Cardinal Mazarine's Palace, who profeſſes a great Veneration for this Queen. Could I have purchas'd her Portraiture, as I did her Father's, I would have ſent it thee: But, all the Pencils in Paris are hardly ſufficient to ſupply the Cloſets and Galleries of the Nobles, with this Admired Figure. She is become the Idol of the French.

Many great Matches have been offered her; but, ſhe refuſes all, either for Reaſon of State, or Diſlike of the Perſons, or an Averſion ſhe has for a Married Life; or through Oppoſition of her Nobles who ſeem to covet to be governed by a Maiden Queen. Soon after her Father's Death, the King of Denmark attempted to make her his Wife; but his Redreſs was abruptly rejected.

No better Encouragement did the King of Poland lately meet with, who Twice ſollicited the ſame Thing for Himſelf, and was as often repulſed. But this, 'tis thought, proceeded from ſome Politick Reaſons; he being deſcended of Sigiſmund, a former Abdicated King of Sweden; all whoſe Poſterity, are for ever excluded from enjoying the Sueditſh Crown, by a Law.

The Engliſh alſo gloried in a Virgin Queen, the laſt Age: Her Name was Elizabeth; whom thou can'ſt not but have heard of. She was the Daughter of Henry VIII, King of that Nation. She was a Princeſs of an extraordinary Genius, remarkable for her Wit and Learning. 'Twas one of her Subjects, who the firſt of all Mortals, ſail'd round the Globe: And, by his fortunate Service, ſhe vanquiſh'd the reputed Invincible Armada of Spain. She governed her Kingdom with ſuch exquiſite Conduct, as made the Greateſt Potentates revere her Wiſdom. 'Tis to her Bounty, the United Provinces owe the Riſe of their preſent Grandeur and Riches; when they addreſs'd this Potent Queen in Form of Humble Suppliants, entitling themſelves, The poor diſtreſſed States. But now, they're High and Mighty; puſhing for an Equality with Sovereign Princes.

I cannot comprize in a Letter, all that may be ſaid of this Great Queen. Beſides, Hiſtorians vary in her Character. Thoſe that ſpeak moſt impartially, ſay, That ſhe had Extraordinary Vertues, yet was not free from Great Vices. We muſt not expect in any Mortal, a Temper exempt from the Common Malediction; much leſs in that Sex, whoſe Natural Weakneſs, claims our Indulgence and Excuſe. It is admirable to ſee or hear of a Female, whoſe Active Soul can diſingage it ſelf from the Common Frailties of Women, and perform Things ſcarce below the Power of Maſculine Vertue.

If thou thinkeſt my Letter too tedious, accuſe thy ſelf, for commanding me to write of Perſons, whoſe Uncommon Gifts and Tranſcendent Vertues, the moſt Accurate Hiſtorians can but render in Epitome; and the moſt durable Records of Fame will in-jure, in not being capable to tranſmit them to Eternity.

We

We ought not to contemn the Excellencies of the Nazarenes; who, though they are Unhappy in not knowing the Alcoran, yet they have a Law engraven on their Hearts; which if they obſerve, they ſhall be in the Number of the Bleſſed.

I am no Stranger to thy Moderation and Juſtice; being fully ſatisfied, that thou honoureſt Vertue, even in the moſt prejudic'd Enemy of our Holy Profeſſion. Let the Furioſo's among the Muſſulmans or Chriſtians ſay their Pleaſure; thou and I ſhall be conformable to our Holy Law-giver, in believing, That the Innocent and Good of all Religions, ſhall have no Reaſon to tremble at the Second Sound of the Trumpet.

LETTER XII.

To the Selictar Aga, or Sword-Bearer to the Grand Signior.

THE Duke of Orleans is newly return'd from the Campagne in Flanders. He ſeems to be either tired with the Fatigues of War, or at leaſt, to be ſatisfy'd with his Exploits this Summer.

After the Conqueſt of Courtray, of which thou haſt heard in the Divan; this Prince march'd directly to Bergues, which he took, after a Siege of Six Days. Then being joyn'd by the Duke of Enguien's Forces, he lay down before Mardyke. This Town had been in the Spaniards Poſſeſſion, ever ſince laſt Winter. Now it held out to a Miracle; but, after a Stout Reſiſtance, was at laſt forc'd to ſurrender. There were ſlain before it, many of the Chief Nobility of France. The French entred it, on the Four and twentieth of the laſt Moon.

The Churches here are hung with Mourning, and the Eſcutcheons of the Hero's, who loſt their Lives in the Bed of Honour. The Bullets, which know no Difference between the Noble and Vulgar, ſeem in this Battel, to have been directed by Art or Envy: As if the Flower of the Army, had been cull'd out for Marks.

In

In a Letter to Murat Baſſa, I gave an Account of a greivous Drought and Mortality in theſe Parts. Now Heaven ſeems to be pacify'd; and the Angel of Death, has put up his Sword. Yet, the Scarcity of Corn and other Neceſſaries, continues ſtill; only, there is Plenty of Wine: Which the Poor, who have moſt Need of it, abſtain from, leſt it ſhould enrage their Appetites, already ſharpen'd with Hunger, whilſt they have Little or nothing to eat.

Thou wilt wonder at the Dyet of theſe Miſerable Wretches, whom Oppreſſion and Poverty has forc'd to feed on Frogs and other Vermin. Yet, they extol it for a dainty Diſh. Both Poor and Rich reckon it a Feaſt, when they can make an Addition of a few Muſhromes, which they commonly gather themſelves. This is a Vegetable, of which the Italian Proverb ſays, Muſhromes well pickl'd with Spices, may do no Harm, but can do no Good.

God, who has commanded us to ſeparate the Clean from the Impure, and has taught us what we may eat without Pollution, grant, That we may not, either through Neceſſity, or to indulge our Appetites, taſte of any thing, which has in it the leaſt of the Seven Maledictions.

LETTER XIII.

To Abubechir Hali, Merchant in Aleppo.

THOU telleſt me a Tragical Story of One of thy Wives, That ſhe is become a Fugitive, and gone away with thy Slave Lorenzo; whom I remember to have ſeen at thy Houſe at Conſtantinople. Either thou wert too Unkind to them both, or gaveſt 'em both too much Liberty: Whichſoever of theſe Ways thou haſt exceeded, thou art in the Fault. Too great an Indulgence, either to a Wife or a Servant, makes them Preſumptuous: And, too great Severity, hardens them to Deſpair. However, ſince it is ſo, I adviſe thee to comfort thy ſelf with this Thought, That thou art rid of Two Evils. Had they prov'd Faithful, they would not have merited that Title; but now, they are neither worthy of thy Grief, nor of thy Revenge.

But if thou art reſolv'd to purſue them, ask not my Counſel or Aſſiſtance in this Place; where I ſhould have as much Reaſon to apprehend Danger, as they. 'Tis true, I know thy Slave; but, were I to meet him in the Streets of this City, I ſhould be very unwilling, by diſcovering him, to be made known my ſelf. Beſides, thy Paſſion has made made thee forget, That the Nazarenes would commend his Wit, and rejoice in his Fortune; who being a Slave to one, whom they eſteem an Infidel, has now by his Wife Conduct, purchas'd both his Liberty and a Beautiful Mate, with no ſmall Treaſure.

I rather adviſe thee, to apply thy ſelf to Jaſmir Sgire Rugial, the little Aſtrologer in Aleppo, who perhaps may tell thee ſome News of 'em. There is not a Star in the Eighth Sphere, can ſtir without his being privy to it. And, he pretends to behold in their Motions, whatever is done on Earth.

But, to be ſerious, thy Slave was an ungrateful Fellow, thus to abuſe all thy Favours. Thou hadſt made him in a Manner, Maſter of all thy Riches, only reſerving thy Wives to thy ſelf. And, if the Deſire of Liberty tempted him to eſcape, he ought in Juſtice to have ſacrific'd his Luſt, to the Regards he ow'd thee. But, every Slave is not a Joſeph. Lorenzo's Villany, puts me in Mind of the Continence of an Italian Marqueſs.

This Young Lord, fell in Love with a Dutcheſs of ſingular Beauty, but knew not how to make her ſenſible of it. At length Fortune favour'd him with an Opportunity; beyond his Expectation. One Evening, as he return'd from Hawking he paſs'd through the Fields of that Dutcheſs, bordering on the Palace. The Duke her Husband and ſhe, were walking together, as the Young Lord came by. The Duke ſeeing his Train, and what Game they had been at, ask'd him ſome Queſtions concerning their Sport; and being of an Hoſpitable Diſpoſition, invited him into his Palace to take a Collation. Nothing could be more agreeable to the Young Lover. He accepted the Offer, and here commenc'd an Acquaintance, which made Way in Time for an Aſſignation between the Dutcheſs and Him. He was let into the Gardens one Night, and ſo conducted privately to her Chamber, where ſhe lay ready in Bed to receive Him. After ſome Compliments the Dutcheſs ſaid, My Lord, You are obliged to my Husband for this Favour; who, as ſoon as you were gone from our Houſe, the firſt Time we ſaw you, gave you ſuch Commendations, as made me conceive an immediate Paſſion for you. Is it true, Madam? (replied the Young Lover already half undreſs'd) Then far be it from me, to be ſo ungrateful to my Friend. With that he put on his Garments again, and took his Leave.

But, it cannot be expected, that ſo much Vertue ſhould be found in a Slave. I would not have thee vex thy ſelf, for what cannot be recover'd. Adieu.

Paris, 14th. of the 9th. Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XIV.

To Solyman, his Couſin.

I Cannot approve thy Singularity, in preſcribing to thy ſelf a Rule of Life, different from that wherein thou wert Educated, and from the Laudable Manners of all True Believers. Thou haſt not done well, in deſerting the Publick Congregations of the Faithful, to follow the Superſtitions of New Upſtart Sects: Who, whil'ſt they profeſs greater Purity than Others, do ſecretly Undermine the Credit of our Holy Law-giver, reproach all the Muſſulmans throughout the World, and introduce Libertiniſm, and a Contempt of the Majeſty which cannot behold Uncleanneſs.

Are they Wiſer than their Fathers, who for ſo many Ages have obey'd the Sacred Traditions? Or, will they pretend to correct the Meſſenger of God? He commanded us, to obſerve the Purifications taught by the Angel: Whence do theſe Innovators derive their new-founded Authority, of Diſpenſing with the Poſitive Injunctions of Heaven? Will they enter into the Blaſphemy of the Infidels? and ſay, the Prophet was a Seducer, and that the Alcoran is but a Collection of Fables? If they believe the Pages repleniſh'd with Truth and Reaſon, why do they ſeek to retrench the Divine Commandments, and traverſe the Law tranſported from Heaven? Is it an Argument of their Piety, that they carve out to themſelves ſuch a Religion, as ſuits with their Licentious Spirits? And, that they pick and chuſe ſuch Precepts, as indulge them moſt in a Careleſs Life? Is this to be Muſſulmans, that is, Reſign'd, when they will not obey the Sovereign Law-giver of Heaven and Earth, but upon their own Conditions? Couſin, I counſel thee, to beware of theſe Schiſmaticks; who, by breaking the Union of the True Believers, ſecretly oppoſe the Eternal Unity it ſelf, on which our Mighty Empire is founded, and reſts.

I am obliged to the Poſt, who waits at my Door, till I have finiſhed my Diſpatches. Therefore, I cannot now anſwer thy Letter at Large: Another Time, expect a more ample Expoſtulation. Mean while, I adviſe thee, to return to the Practice from which thou art fall'n: Go to the Aſſemblies of thoſe, who pour out Devout Oriſons; Keep a Clean Skin, and a Pure Heart: And, make not thy ſelf a Companion of Swine.

LETTER

LETTER XV.

To Haſnadar-Baſſy, Chief Treaſurer to the Grand Signior.

THIS Day Paris makes a Figure like Ancient Rome, when that Miſtreſs of the World honour'd her Generals with Publick Triumphs, at their Return from the Conquer'd Nations. The Streets are hung with Tapeſtry, and ſtrew'd with Lawrels: The Shops are ſhut up. The Young Men and Virgins, are cloathed in their beſt Array. They walk up and down in Conſorts, ſinging the Duke of Enguien's Praiſe: Whilſt the Old and Decrepid, ſit at their Doors. to ſee the Hero make his Entry, and rehearſe the Memoirs of their former Years. With Tears of Joy, they heap Bleſſings on the Victorious Youth, as he rides along: And, throwing their Age and Crutches by for a while, they conſecrate the Reſt of the Day to the Publick Jubile.

Wouldſt thou know the Occaſion of all this Joy? 'Tis to welcom this Prince Home from the Succesful Toils of War. For, let his Courage and Conduct be what it will, if he had made a fruitleſs Campagne, his Entertainment had been different. But, Fortune has been propitious to him; and, the happy Event of his Arms, crowns him with Glory.

After

After the Departure of the Duke of Orleans from the Camp, the Command of the whole Army devolv'd on this General. Whose fiery Genius would not let him Rest, till he had done something worthy of the Character he aim'd at.

His first Attempt was, on a Place of no great Strength, called Furnes, which he took with Ease. Then he march'd to Dunkirk, one of the Strongest Towns in Europe. There was in it at that Time, a Garrison of Five and Twenty Hundred Foot, and Three Hundred Horse, commanded by a Nobleman of great Valour. I think they call him the Marquis de Leide. This Governour did so many brave Things, in Defence of this Place, as even surpass'd his own Fame, and the Expectations of others; though, both were very Great. Yet, at Length, he was forced to yield to the Courage and Fortune of the Young Duke; and that at a Time, when the other Spanish Generals were coming to his Relief. The Town was surrendred, on the 7*th* of this Month. And, the Duke having left the Necessary Commands to the Mareschals his Lieutenants, is come Home to receive the Acclamations of the People, the Honour of a Publick Triumph, and the particular Caresses of the King, and the whole Court. Amidst all this Applause and Glory, he must be content to stand the Shock of Envy, which always endeavours to lessen the Reputation of the Brave and Heroick.

As for Mahmut, he neither Envies nor admires the fading Honours of Mortality: Knowing, that when a Man is on the Higheſt Pinnacle of Humane Glory, he ſtands uneaſie; nor can he deſcend from thence, but by a Precipice.

LETTER XVI.

To Ibrahim Hali Cheik, A Man of the Law.

IF it be a Sign of a Flouriſhing State, when Vices are ſuppreſs'd; one would preſage, That Paris is in a thriving Condition. The Governour of this City, has newly publiſh'd an Edict, forbidding all Stews and Brothel-Houſes under ſevere Penalties; baniſhing all Harlots, and ſuch as by the Toleration of the Government, have hitherto made a Profeſſion of Whoredom, getting a Livelihood by Debauching the Youth of the City. This appears a great Novelty to the French; who, in this Matter, have been permitted all along, to live in an unbridled Licentiouſneſs. The lewder Sort, exclaim with open Mouth againſt this unſeaſonable Rigour (as they call it;) and thoſe who are aſham'd to appear publick Advo-

Advocates for Harlots, yet privately murmur againſt their Superiors, for retrenching a Liberty, without which, they ſay, their Lives would be uncomfortable.

They give a very favourable Character of a Whore; calling her, A certain kind Creature, born to mitigate the Labours, and ſoften the Cares of Human Life. They plead, That ſuch Women are Neceſſary Members of a Commonwealth; whilſt, with their Careſſes, they reſtrain libidinous Youth from falling into greater Enormities: That the State receives no ſmall Profit from the Tribute, which is levied on theſe Houſes of Pleaſure; and, that therefore they have been, and are permitted in all Countries. That the Holy Father himſelf tolerates an Infinite Number of them in Rome; which nevertheleſs has acquired the Title, of the Holy City: That all the Princes in Italy have followed his Example; there being no other way to prevent Adulteries, Inceſts, and the Vice which ought not to be named: That the State regarded not the Morality or Immorality of Men's Actions, any farther than they tended to the Publick Welfare: And, in fine, that ſo vaſt a Number of Prieſts, and Religious, ſerv'd for no other End, but to atone by their Sacrifices, Prayers, Alms and Faſtings, for the Sins of the People.

Theſe are the Diſcourſes of ſuch as patronize the Corruption of Government; and are unwilling to be wean'd from a Wickedneſs eſtabliſh'd by Immemorable Cuſtom in the City. But, thoſe who cheriſh an Eſteem for

Vertue

Vertue, and an incorrupt Life, applaud the Wiſdom and Reſolution of the Magiſtrate, ſaying, That he deſerves a Statue to be erected to his Memory, who firſt had the Courage to check this Popular Evil, and introduce an Integrity of Manners.

I, who was bred in the Profeſſion of Purity, and the Law which admits no Pollution, cannot but acquieſce to the Sentiments of the Latter; our Holy Law-giver, having expreſly forbidden the Practice of Uncleanneſs and Fornication with Strangers, and Women that proſtitute themſelves to all Lovers. It being ſufficient, that to gratifie Humane Paſſion, and to ſweeten the Toils of Life, he has indulg'd us the Uſe of Four Wives; and as many Other Females, as we can purchaſe either by the Sword or Money.

Adieu, Sage Cheik; and, if I have interrupted thy more Important Studies with ſo Trivial a Subject, believe, that it is for want of a proper Occaſion to ſignifie to thee, how much thou art in my Thoughts; and, that I would not have our Friendſhip die, through too long Silence.

LETTER

LETTER XVII.

To Muſtapha, Baſſa of Siliſtria.

THE Fortune of War, has raviſh'd Aſac from the Grand Signior, but has not robb'd thee of the Glory thou acquir'd'ſt Three Years ago in the Conqueſt of that City; nor ſullied thy preſent Arms, with any Marks of Diſgrace, that were of late ſo vigorouſly employ'd to relieve it. Had the Moſcovites performed the ſame Part, when thou did'ſt encircle that Neſt of Pyrates with the Ottoman Forces, as they have now done; the Coſſacks would not then ſo tamely have abandon'd their Native Seat, and left the Characters of their Deſpair, imprinted in the Ruines of their Habitations. The Protection of that Potent Crown, has given them new Vigor; and, 'tis to the Valour of thoſe Northern Salvages, they owe the Liberty they now enjoy, to fit by their own Fires.

The Moſcovites are a fierce and warlike Nation, inur'd to Hardſhips from the Womb. The Midwives plunge the new-born Infants in Cold Water; and, if they out-live not that Tryal, the Mother thinks her Child not worth a Tear. The Women have no partial Tenderneſſes for their Babes, but cherish all for the Service of their Country. They teach 'em, when Young, to rowl in Snow, and bath themſelves in Ice diſſolv'd in Water.

Water. They make 'em familiar with the Extremities of Heat and Cold, Hunger, Thirſt, and Labour, that when they come of Age, and can bear Arms, they may go boldly to the Wars, and bravely throw their Lives away to ſerve the Publick Good. In this they ſeem to revive the Wiſdom of the Ancient Spartans, who gloried in Nothing ſo much, as in educating their Youth hardly, and free from the Effeminate Softneſſes of other Nations. They eſteem'd Infancy and Youth, the Spring-time of Good Manners, when Vertue is in the Bloſſom: If that be nip'd or blaſted, the Fruit muſt prove abortive, and unprofitable. Therefore they took Care to ſeaſon their Early Years, with wholeſom Inſtructions, and Maſculine Exerciſes.

Who, among the warlike Oſmans, does not laugh at the unmanly Education of the Perſian Sophi's; who being for ſo many Years confin'd to the Company and Diſcipline of Females, ſeem fitter to be made Overſeers of a Nurſery, than to aſcend a Throne?

But, thou wilt ſay, I take large Leaps, from the North of Europe, to one of the moſt Southern Tracts in Aſia. I was diſcourſing of the Moſcovites, and the Aſſiſtance they afforded the Coſſacks in recovering Aſac. I paſſed from thence to the Manner of their Education. Permit me now, to divert thee with Something peculiar and uncommon, in the Character of the Ruſſian Women. I am acquainted with a Gentleman in this City, who has travelled through all that Part of Europe, and reſided ſome Years at Moſco. He ſays, The Ruſſian Wives think themſelves not beloved by their Husbands, unleſs they beat them every Day. They take his Correction, as a Mark of his Favour and Eſteem. If theſe ſilly Females are angry or peeviſh, he has no other way to court 'em into a better Humour, but by Stripes. This is the only convincing Argument of his Sovereignty over them, the Demonſtration of his Manhood, the Charm which faſtens both their Love and Obedience.

He highly applauds the abſolute Reſignation, which the People ſhew to their Great Duke; in that they pretend not to poſſeſs their Eſtates and Lives, but through his Favour, and during his Pleaſure. He ſays, the Succeſſion of the Czars, or Great Dukes of Ruſſia, was in former Times determin'd after this Manner. A great Stone was plac'd in a large Field belonging to the City of Moſco. When any Czar died, his Sons, or the next of Kin, were conducted into this Field, and placed all at an equal Diſtance from the Stone: Then, at a certain Signal given, they all ran together toward it; and he that firſt reach'd it, ſo as to ſtand on the Top of it, was eſtabliſh'd in the Throne.

The Reverence which theſe People pay to their Prince, may in Part be aſcribed to his ſeldom appearing in Perſon to them, and then ſurrounded with his Boyars or Nobles, in the moſt Magnificent Equipage, that can be be ſuppoſed proper, to ſtrike a Terror and Awe into his Subjects, and cauſe them to Honour him, as little leſs than a God. The Eyes of the Vulgar, are dazl'd with ſo many Splendors, of Silver, Gold and Jewels; And, when the Great Duke makes his ſolemn Appearance or Cavalcade, they are almoſt ready to think, That Heaven has deſcended to Earth, to do them the Honour of a Viſit. Theſe are the Arts of Ruſſian Policy, by which ſuch an Infinite Number of People are charmed, into an Obedience to the Sovereign. Doubtleſs, the Majeſty of a King, receives no ſmall Luſtre from External Ornaments; the Multitude being captivated with whatſoever is Gay and Glittering. Yet, our Glorious Sultans, ſcorn to borrow Advantage from, or owe their Grandeur to any Thing, but their Exalted Blood, and ſublime, innate Vertues.

But, every Nation have their peculiar Cuſtoms, and diſtinct Reaſons of State. The Conſtitution of all Governments is not alike: The Model of Lacedæmonian Policy, would ſuit ill with Athens.

Thou whoſe Education was in the Royal Seraglio of the Oſman Emperours; that haſt been inſtructed to imitate the Bee, which ſucks Honey, from every Flower: Thou that knoweſt how to make a Choice of Good Examples, and to reject the Ill; practiſe the Valour of One Nation, the Prudence of Another, the Frugality of a Third; ſo ſhalt thou be conſummate in Vertue, and acquit thy self a good General.

Paris, 15th. of the 11th. Moon, of the Year, 1646.

LETTER XVIII.

To Solyman, Kyzlar Aga, Chief of the Black Eunuchs.

I Am just now return'd to my Chamber, from the Palace of the King. As I pass'd along the Streets, I saw in every Face the Signatures of a profound Sorrow, which seems to have diffused it self over their whole Bodies; for, both the Court and City have put on Mourning, for the Death of Henry Bourbon, late Prince of Conde.

He was not full Sixty Years of Age, when he left this Visible World, to be new-born in a Region utterly unknown to Mortals. The French, not without Reason, lament the Loss of a Man, who, to speak the Least of him, buoy'd up the Domestick Interest of this Kingdom, which seemed otherwise inclining to totter. He was the Balance which pois'd the different Passions of the Court and City; by his Prudence and Justice, calming both into a peaceable Mediocrity.

He

He was born ſome Moons after his Father's Death, whom the moſt execrable Method of Murdering, would not ſuffer to Spin out thoſe Years which Nature would have indulg'd him; being ſnatch'd away by Poiſon.

Henry IV. So long as he remain'd without Iſſue, fix'd his Eyes on this Poſthumous Young Prince, and gave him an Education ſuitable to one, whom Fate had deſigned to be the Heir of the Crown. Yet afterwards, Jealouſie cool'd his Affection, when the Prince had married Charleotte, the Duke of Montmorency's Daughter, whom Henry IV. loved to a Degree of Paſſion.

It is dangerous to have a Sovereign Prince, ones Rival in Love. That Match had well-nigh ruined the Young Prince of Conde. He was forced to fly into Holland with his Princeſs, and make that Province the Sanctuary of her Honour. From thence he travell'd through Germany, and return'd not to France, till after the Murder of Henry IV.

During the Minority of Lewis XIII. he Headed the Factions, affecting to become Popular. Were it not for this Ambition, his Life had been without Blemiſh, and he might have blown out Diogenes his Mid-day-Candle. But, no Man is free from Fault. All the Difference between the Vertuous and Vicious, conſiſts in this, That one commits fewer Crimes than the other, and thoſe not by Intention or Habit, but through the Inſuperable Proclivity of Nature. Every Man has his Genial Vices, his Conſtitutional Errors; and though he may appear a Saint in all Things elſe, yet in theſe he will ſtill be a Sinner.

He ſuffered Five Years Impriſonment in the Baſtile, which is a Place put to the ſame Uſe, as the Caſtle of the Seven Towers in Conſtantinople. The Princeſs his Wife, was his Companion all the Time, and ſhared in his Misfortunes, as well as his Proſperity.

During that tedious Confinement, he became Father of a Daughter, who was afterwards Married to the Duke of Longueville. And, when he was ſet at Liberty, he begot the Duke of Enguien, now Prince of Conde, and the Prince of Conti.

The French ſpeak well of the Departed Prince. He was of a lively Spirit, chearful and affable in Converſation, mixing daily Recreations with his ſeverer Buſineſs, regularly obſerving Order in all his Affairs. Yet, they ſay, he was Covetous, having heaped up great Treaſures by a Parſimony which none of that Blood had ever before practiſed.

On his Death-bed he recommended Two Things to the Practice of his Son, the Duke of Enguien; Never to revenge a Private Injury; And, freely to hazard his Life, for the Publick Good.

I choſe to tranſmit to thee the News of this Prince's Death, with this brief Account of his Life, and Character of his Diſpoſition, in Regard thou haſt ſeen him in Germany, and I remember to have heard thee ſpeak in his Praiſe.

Con-

Continue to love Mahmut, who is never forgetful to oblige his Friends.

Paris, 15th. of the 11th. Moon, of the Year, 1646.

LETTER XIX.

To the Kaimacham.

THE Posts from Catalonia came in last Night, laden with ill News from the Army, which has been forced to decamp from before Lerida, leaving the greateſt Part of their Artillery to the Spaniards. That Place, was always Fatal to the French. Yet, the Paſſion of the Court, vents it ſelf on the Count d' Harcourt, becauſe he could not reverſe the Decrees of Deſtiny. All his former Meritorious Actions, ſeem now to be cancell'd, by this one Diſgrace, though it was unavoidable: So peeviſh are Princes, when their Expectations are croſs'd. Some ſuſpect him guilty of private Correſpondence; Others tax him with Cowardiſe. All this is, during the Heat of their Reſentments: The ſame Perſons, it may be, will change their Cenſure, when they conſider, that he had lain before it Seven Moons, even till the Trenches of his Camp were filled with Snow, and that his Soldiers died of Famine or Cold: For, the Winter, began to be insupportable, and the Country was barren of all Things necessary to sustain such an Army. I cannot see, wherein this General deserves Reproach; unless it be a Crime to be a Man, and to have the Command of such as are made of Flesh and Blood, as well as he.

In Italy, the French have taken Piombin and Portolongone. This Latter, is the most Important Town in the Isle of Elbe; yet was not able to sustain above Nineteen Days Siege.

They say, there is a Fountain in this Island, whose Waters flow at the Sun-rising; but, in the Evening, are dried up. The Superstitious have odd Conceits of this Fountain, relishing of the Ancient Pagan Vanities; but, the Learned attribute it to Natural Causes. So, the Jews tell of a River in the East, that stands still on the Seventh Day of the Week. This they adduce, as a Confirmation of their Law, which commands them, to rest from Labours on the Seventh Day; because, on that Day God rested from forming the Creatures of the World. They say also, That the Satyrs, and other Monsters of the Desart, shun the Light of the Sun that Day; hiding themselves in Caverns of the Earth, and Cursing the Sabbath because it surpriz'd God, before he had quite finish'd their Forms; for which Reason, they are Imperfect and Monstrous to this Day.

The Divine Unity, who is the Root of all Numbers, and has consecrated the Number Seven,

Seven, to many Myſterious Ends, grant, that neither thou nor I may forget the Anſwers we muſt give to the Seven Queſtions of the Porter of Paradiſe.

LETTER XX.

To Bajazet, Baſſa of Greece.

IT appears to me, by evident Symptoms, That there is ſome deep Deſign afoot in this Court. The Grandees aſſemble often, and ſit late. Extraordinary Couriers are ſent out, and come in, at all Hours of the Night. Strange Reports are induſtriouſly ſpread about the City. Trading is at a Stand, the Banquires reſerv'd, and little Money ſtirring; which makes the Populace murmur. They complain of the Times, as is uſual in Publick Diſcontents: The Old diſcourage and incenſe the Young, by making Compariſons of this Age and Reign, with the Happy Days of Henry the Great. They fill their Ears, with Golden Stories of former Times; and inſpiring into them a Love of the Paſt, they equally introduce a Hatred of the Preſent Government. Theſe are the Common Artifices of Faction. And, though none appears yet under any diſtinct Name or Title, yet 'tis eaſie to prognoſticate, from theſe Preludes, That ere long the Maſque will be taken off, and Sedition will ſhew her ſelf bare-fac'd.

'Tother Day, a Fellow run Crying through the Streets, God ſave the King, but the Devil take the Italian. He was followed by a few, and thoſe of the moſt Contemptible. Yet, no Officer or Magiſtrate in this City, would cauſe him to be apprehended, or attempt to ſuppreſs the Mutiny he was raiſing. The Citizens ſmil'd at his Boldneſs, and Money was brought him from unknown Hands. The Women bleſs'd him as a Prophet, and the Virgins fell down before the Altar, on his Behalf: The Temples were crowded with Votaries, or rather with the Fautors of this new Sedition; as if they ſtrove to draw their Gods into the Cabal, and would make Heaven it ſelf abett their Tumults. His Train increas'd as he meaſured the Streets, till at length he was ſeiz'd by the Royal Guards, the Rabble diſperſed, and all Things reſtored to Quiet. That Night, a Double Watch was kept throughout the City; the Fellow was ſtrictly examin'd, and put to the Rack; yet no Confeſſion could be extorted from him, ſave, That the Publick Good induc'd him to take this Courſe: That the Tyranny and Oppreſſion which Cardinal Mazarini exerciſed, were Inſupportable? and, That he was ready to ſacrifice his Life for the Welfare of his Country. He is condemn'd to the Gallies Gallies during his Life. And, great Endeavours are uſed to find out the Authors of this Novelty. For he is looked on but as an Inſtrument, ſet at work by ſome Malecontents of higher Quality, and the Forerunner of ſome more formidable Inſurrection.

Proclamations are iſſued out, to forbid all Diſcourſe of State-Matters; but, the People ſpare not, to whiſper their Sentiments.

The Young King is taken Ill, which augments the Publick Jealouſie: Men ſhake their Heads, and look dejected, as they walk along the Streets. Some menace Revenge with their furrow'd Brows; Others ſpeak openly, That the Kingdom is ſold to Strangers. A General Conſternation and Diſorder has ſeiz'd all, while their Fears prompt 'em daily to expect a Change. To obviate the Miſchiefs which thoſe Popular Paſſions threaten, Soldiers are drawn from divers Parts of the Country by Mazarini's Order, and by inſenſible Companies quarter'd up and down Paris. Between theſe and the Citizens, there happen divers Quarrels, frequent Murders are committed; while the Night, which covers all Things with Darkneſs, ſerves to ſhroud their mutual Outrages, and private Revenges. Thus, the Publick Calamities are cheriſh'd: What will be the Iſſue, Time will evince.

In the mean while, the Affairs of Germany and Swedeland, ſeem to be in a fair Way of Compoſure. Divers Treaties are on Foot, in in Order to a General Peace in Chriſtendom. The Embaſſadours and Deputies of the ſeveral Conteſting Crowns, have frequent Conferences. But, each Party inſiſts ſo vehemently on Circumſtantials, that Nothing but fruitleſs Demurrs conclude their Meetings. France has a great Stroke in all theſe Affairs: And, 'tis grown to a Proverb, That Cardinal Mazarini carries all the Courts of Europe in his Boſom.

The Suedes treat like Victors; and the Germans, though much enfeebl'd, yet cannot forget the Majeſty of the Imperial Sceptre. The Danes have an Intereſt to proſecute; and, the Poles are not without their Pretenſions. National Pride and Honour have a great Influence on theſe Crowns. But, the Hollanders, like Merchants, act according to the Rules of Profit. They ſtand on no Punctilio's, but ſuch as advance their Traffick; knowing, that Money is the Nerves of War. In this they are to be eſteemed Wiſe, their Commonwealth being as yet but in her Nonage; her Strength not knit, nor ſhe in a Capacity to wreſtle with her Potent Neighbours.

England finds Buſineſs enough at home, to employ both her Money, Wit and Arms. Nor can ſhe be at Leiſure, to attend to Foreign Tranſactions.

Spain ever follows the Intereſt of the German Court; it being the Unalterable Maxim of the Houſe of Auſtria, To remain United, and aggrandize it ſelf.

Italy

Italy has various Intereſts; and, Venice in particular, is in ſtrict Friendſhip with this Court.

Portugal is ſtill upon her Guard, againſt the reſtleſs Spaniards: And Don Juan de Braganza, makes Foreign Alliances.

The Supreme Monarch of the Viſible and Inviſible Worlds, who ſits on the Throne of Adamant, under the Covert of the Eternal Tree, grant, That the Diſtractions of theſe Infidel-Princes and States, may continue, till the Time appointed by Fate ſhall come, wherein the Faithful Oſmans ſhall poſſes the Red-Apple.

LETTER

LETTER XXI.

To Peſtelihali, his Brother.

I Thought my ſelf forgotten by the Son of my Mother, who has ſuffer'd ſo many Decads of Moons to meaſure out the Term of his unkind Silence, and of my Melancholy. 'Tis now Three Years ſince I heard from thee: But, I will not complain of a Fault ſo ingenuouſly expiated, though late. Thou haſt made me ample Amends, in ſending me ſuch an Elaborate and Succinct Hiſtory of thy Travels: In reading of which, I know not whether my Pleaſure or Profit is greater. Thou haſt ſo interwoven Delightful Adventures of thy own, and pleaſant Paſſages of others, with Curious and Solid Obſervations, that a Man Improves himſelf Inſenſibly, whil'ſt the Charming Language and Miſcellany, ſerve as a Spur, at once to rowze and faſten his Attention, to Points of moſt uſeful Knowledge.

The Chriſtians are apt to deſpiſe the True Believers, as a Company of Ignorant People, Unacquainted with the World, Unpoliſh'd both in their Underſtandings and Manners, not vers'd in the Liberal Sciences, nor addicted to the Study of any Thing, but Riches and Honour, and how to augment the Muſſulman Empire. They conſider not at the ſame time, that God has made us Rational Creatures, Creatures, as well as them; has indued us with the ſame Natural Faculties; and, that in all Nations, he has Inſpir'd ſome with a Thirſt of Knowledge, furniſhing them alſo with the Abilities and Means to attain it. They conſider not, that if Printing be prohibited among us, 'tis to ſuppreſs the Multitude of Unprofitable Books, with which Europe too much abounds: And, that in their Stead we have many Thouſands of Induſtrious Scribes, whoſe whole Employment is, to tranſlate the moſt Excellent and Learned Treatiſes of the Ancients. And, that conſequently, a ſtudious Mahometan cannot be deſtitute of ſuch Books, as may inſtruct him in True Philoſophy, ſound Morals, and the Hiſtory of the Moſt Memorable Tranſactions in the World. Aſſuredly, our Arabia may boaſt of her Avicen's; Meſue's, Averroe's, Hali's and Albumazar's; and, that ſhe has brought forth many others who need not in any Point of Humane or Divine Learning, yield the Palm to the moſt Eminent Doctors, Philoſophers, Orators and Poets among the Chriſtians.

Add to this the equal Benefit ſome of our Belief reap, by Travelling into Foreign Countries, which crowns all their Studies with Experimental Knowledge and Wiſdom: Rendring them as familiar, with the different Natures of Men, and the various Conſtitutions of Government, as before they were with Books.

This appears evident in thy Letter, which is

is repleniſhed with ſo many ſolid Remarks and ſage Comments, on the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Regions, through which thou haſt paſs'd, their Religions, Strength and Riches, and whatſoever elſe was worthy a Traveller's Notice; That were this Narrative publiſh'd in Chriſtendom, the Nazarenes, would forbear to ſpeak ſo contemptibly of the True Believers.

But, they flatter themſelves with a falſe Notion, That the Ottomans never travel beyond the Limits of their own Empire, except the Publick Chiauſes, who are ſent by the Grand Signior. They are ignorant, that the Auguſt Port maintains Private Agents in all Nations; and, that there is hardly any Prince's Court in Chriſtendom without a Muſſulman in it one Time or other. 'Tis true, we appear not in the Garb peculiar to the Eaſt. Our Miſſion requires a Conformity to the Faſhions of the People where we Reſide. But, we ſtill retain the Interiour Veſtment of Mahometan Purity; being in a double Sence Circumciſed. Thus we become Maſters of the Chriſtians Secrets, whilſt they account us Stupid, Ignorant, and Men void of Common Senſe.

Beſides, had we not this Advantage, in their Weſtern Parts; yet, the Univerſal Privilege of Travelling and maintaining free Commerce over all the Eaſt, muſt needs afford great opportunities of Accompliſhment, to ſome among the Caravans of ſo many Thouſands, as viſit Perſia, India, China, Tartary, and all Places were the Faith of the Miſſioner of God is profeſſed.

I am

I am extremely pleaſed with thy fortunate Eſcapes from Robbers on the Road, whoſe Malice rarely extends farther, than to deprive a Man of thoſe Outward Goods, which, if he be wiſe, he will not call his Own. Much more am I delighted, with thy Deliverance from thoſe Female Thieves, who ſteal from Men their Hearts and Reaſon; which laſt is our Nobleſt, and only proper Inheritance. All Perſia and the Indies, abound with Courtezans; and he had need of Oſman's Chaſtity, who would withſtand ſo many and ſtrong Temptations.

Thou needeſt not wonder at the Effeminacy of the preſent Mogul, who ſuffers himſelf and his State, to be govern'd by Women. That Subtle and Aſpiring Sex, have always ſought to undermine or over-reach our Race. They keep behind the Scenes, yet act their Parts, in all the Tragedies and Revolutions of the World. The Father of the preſent Indian King, made an Abſolute Reſignation of his Sovereignty to his Queen, for Four and Twenty Hours. This Prince, by a ſtrange Affectation, called himſelf, King of the World. His Wife was the Daughter of an Arabian Captain, who had ſerved him in the Wars: But, having forfeited his Head by ſome Notorious Treaſon, his Daughter went and threw her ſelf at the Mogul's Feet, to beg his Life. He fell paſſionately in Love with her, (for, ſhe had not her Equal for Beauty in all the Eaſt) granted her Petition, and married her. Afterwards, ſhe got ſuch an Empire over him, him, that he would do Nothing without her Advice and Consent. At her Instigation, he made War or Peace: And to please her cruel Humour, he put out the Eyes of his Eldest Son. But, not satisfied with these Discoveries of his Love, and resolving to make herself Famous by some Extraordinary Action, she never ceas'd solliciting the King, with all the Arts of Female Policy, till she had prevailed on him, to surrender up his Authority to her for the Space of a Day. In which Time (having prepared all things beforehand ready for her Purpose) she caused Two Millions of Roupies, in Silver and Gold, to be coin'd, and stamp'd with the Twelve Signs of the Zodiack; contrary to the Fundamental Laws of the Empire, the Express Prohibition of our Holy Prophet, and the Universal Practice of the Mussulmans throughout the World, who admit not the Representations of any Creatures that have Life. This Relation I had from my Uncle Useph, who resided in the Indian Court Eleven Years. He added moreover, That during this short Female Reign, she cut off the Heads of Seven Grandees, the most zealous for the Mussulman Faith among all the Indian Princes, and established as many Idolaters in their Places: And, that if her Orders had been fully executed, she had quite changed the Government, Consecrated the most beautiful Mosques to the Service of Idols, Exterminated the True Faithful, and restored the Ancient Abominations of the Infidels. Which thou wilt not think think Impracticable, when thou considereſt, That the Number of the Uncircumciſed in the Indies, far exceeds that of the Muſſulmans; there being Ten thouſand of thoſe, to a Hundred of ſuch as profeſs the Unity of the Divine Nature. But however, there was Loyalty found even among thoſe Pagans; and, they would not ſuffer a Blind Zeal for the Worſhip of their Gods, to ſupplant the Duty they ow'd their King.

The Deſcription thou haſt made of Candahar, and the Method thou haſt projected to take that Impregnable City, diſcover at once thy Conduct and Diligence, in procuring Liberty to ſurvey ſo narrowly, the moſt Important Place of the Indies; and thy Skill in Fortifications, with the Quickneſs of thy Invention, which has ſuggeſted to thee, that which all the Engineers of Aſia have never ſo much as dreamt of. This is the right Uſe of Travelling, when a Man returns from Foreign Nations, cultivated with Experimental Knowledge, and ſtock'd with Improvements, that may render him ſerviceable to his Country.

Thou condemneſt the Injuſtice and Avarice of the Indian Moguls; who, as ſoon as any of the Omrahs, or Great Men die, cauſe all his Eſtate and Goods to be ſeiz'd, to their own proper Uſe. Whereby it comes to paſs, that the Widow and Children of the Deceaſed, are reduced to the loweſt Condition of Poverty, being many Times forced to beg for a Subſiſtence. 'Tis true, this is an Oppreſſion not to be juſtified, eſpecially in thoſe who profeſs

to Believe in One God Creator of All Things, the Incorrupt Judge of the Universe. But, what thinkeſt thou then of our Sultans, who not having Patience to wait, till a Natural Death ſhall make them Heirs to the Wealth of a Baſſa, generally ſecure their Title, and haſten their Poſſeſſion by a Bow-ſtring? Theſe are Royals Violences: Though the Reſignation of Subjects, muſt not tax them with any Crime, who are Accountable to none but God.

It was, however a notable Piece of Raillery, with which the Widow of a Rich Merchant, reproved this Unreaſonable Cuſtom in the preſent Mogul. Her Husband was an Idolator, who had heaped together an Infinite Treaſure by Trading and Uſury; and, when he died, left her worth Two Hundred Thouſand Roupies. Her Son, ſome Years after coming of Age, demanded of her a Stock to ſet up with as a Merchant. Which ſhe, either out of Avarice, or for other Ends, refuſed him; furniſhing him onely with ſuch ſmall Sums, as ſerved to nouriſh his Diſcontent, and tempt him to a lewd, careleſs Life. But, at length, not being able to prevail on his Mother, to part with ſo much as would anſwer his Expectations, he complained to the Mogul, diſcloſing alſo what Eſtate his Father had left. The Mogul being informed of ſo much Riches, ſent for the Young Man's Mother, and commanded her, to ſend him Half her Money; ordering, that the other Half, ſhould be divided between her Self and her Son. The Widow not being at all ſurprized or caſt down at this unjuſt Propoſal, made the Mogul this ſhort Reply: O King, may the Gods make thee Happy. My Son has ſome Reaſon to require his Share of his Father's Eſtate, having his Blood running in his Veins; but I deſire to know, what Relation Thou art to my Husband or Me, that Thou claimeſt a Share in his Inheritance. The Prince abaſh'd at ſo ſmart and bold an Addreſs, commanded her to give Half her Eſtate to her Son, and ſo diſmiſſed her.

I have heard ſome of our Chiauſes praiſe the Magnificence of the Mogul's Court, the Infinite Number of his Attendants: But above all they extoll the Inimitable Grandeur of his Throne, which is adorn'd with ſo many Topazes, Rubies, Emeraulds, Pearls and Diamonds, as amount to Thirty Millions of Roupies. But, were it not much better, if in ſtead of all this Needleſs Glory, he could boaſt, That his Empire is founded in the Hearts of his Subjects? He does not conſider, That ſuch prodigious Heaps of envied Treaſure are but ſo many glittering Snares, Golden Manacles, which ſerve for no other Uſe, but to chain him up from that Freedom, and thoſe more Innocent Delights, that the Meaneſt of his Subjects enjoy.

Thou haſt, I perceive, diſcourſed with the Indian Bramins: Doſt not thou diſcover, even in theſe Idolaters, a Contempt of Riches? What mean Thoughts have they of the Splendor and Gayeties of the Court? What a low

Eſteem,

Esteem, of the Long and Proud Series of Titles, with which the Moguls endeavour to exalt themselves? Whilst they are call'd the Lights of the World, and Companions of the Sun: these poor Philosophers know, That in a little Time they shall be laid in Darkness, and have no better Society than that of Worms. What signifies their Pedigree; or, that the present Mogul, is but the Tenth Descendent from the Mighty Temurlen, who made all Asia tremble, if he has lost the Vertue of his Glorious Ancestor? 'Tis that alone, makes all Men truly Noble.

Thou telleſt me, That the Empire of the Mogul, affords him more Revenues, than the Dominions of any Two the most Potent Monarchs on Earth. I have heard as much from Others; which convinces me, That thou hast inform'd thy self rightly of the Present State of the Indies. But dost thou therefore esteem this Monarch the Richer? Consider the vast Extent of his Dominions, which are said to contain more than Six Hundred Leagues in Length, and thou wilt find, that to maintain so great a Tract of Ground, both against his Foreign and Domestick Enemies, he is oblig'd to keep in Constant Pay, some Millions of his Subjects and Strangers: For he is in the Midst of Enemies, even among his own Subjects. There are above an Hundred Sovereigns in his Empire, who perpetually by Turns molest the Government, refusing to pay Tribute, and raising Armies against him: Whereby he com-comes to paſs, That he is at an Infinite Expence to defend himſelf, and carry on thoſe Endleſs Wars. Thou thy ſelf having obſerv'd, That once in two Moons, there is an Indiſpenſible Neceſſity of paying theſe prodigious Armies: Not a Soldier throughout his Empire, having any thing to live on, ſave the Wages he receives of the King.

Conſider alſo, that this Monarch, always keeps ſome Thouſands of the fineſt Horſes in the World, near his Perſon, ſuch as coſt him Thouſands of Roupies apiece: Beſides a Thouſand Elephants; with an Incredible Number of Mules, Camels, and other Beaſts of Burden, to carry his Wives, his Goods and Proviſions, when he takes the Field: That whole Cities, even as Large as Conſtantinople, are obliged to follow the King's Camp for Subſiſtence, their Livelihood altogether depending on the Army. Add to this, the Immenſe Charges of his Seraglio, his Caſtles and Sea-Port Towns, with all the other Neceſſary Expences of the State, and thou wilt conclude, That when this Potentate comes to caſt up his Accounts, he will find himſelf a Poor Man.

But, I ſhall cloy thee with a Rehearſal of ſuch Things, as thou can'ſt not be a Stranger to.

Only tell me, Whether one of the Raias or Princes ſubject to the Mogul, be the real Deſcendent of Porus, the Ancient King of India, in the Time of Alexander the Great? I have been told by ſeveral Travellers, that there there is such an One, that his Name is Rama, and that an Hundred of the Idolatrous Princes pay Homage to him, as to their Natural Sovereign.

Thou confirmest the Truth, of what has been so often reported in these Parts, That the Prince of Java has Six Fingers on each Hand, and as many Toes on his Feet.

But, that seems very strange, which thou relatest, of a certain Language among the Indians, which is not Vulgarly spoken; but, that all their Books of Theology, the Pandects of their Laws, the Records of their Nation, and the Treatises of Human Arts and Sciences are written in it. And, that this Language is taught in their Schools, Colleges, and Academies, even as Latin is among the Christians. I cannot enough admire at this: For, where and when was this Language spoken? How came it to be disus'd? There seems to be a Mystery in it, that none of their Brachmans can give any other Account of this, save, That it is the Language, wherein God gave to the First Creature he made, the Four Books of the Law; which, according to their Chronology, was above Thirty Millions of Years ago. I tell thee, my Dear Brother, this News has started some odd Notions in my Mind: For, when I consider, that this Language, as thou sayest, has nothing in it Common with the Indian that is now spoken, nor with any other Language of Asia, or of the World; and yet, that it is a Copious and Regular Language, learn'd by Grammar like the other Maternal Languages; and, that in this Obſolete Language, Books are written, wherein it is aſſerted, that the World is ſo many Millions of Years old; I could almoſt turn Pythagorean, and believe the World to be within a Minute of Eternal. And, where would be the Abſurdity? Since God had equally the ſame Infinite Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs from all Eternity, as he had Five or Six Thouſand Years ago. What ſhould hinder him then from exerting theſe Divine Attributes ſooner? What ſhould retard him, from drawing forth this Glorious Fabrick earlier, from the Womb of Nothing? Suffer thy Imagination to ſtart backwards as far as thou canſt, even to Millions of Ages, and yet thou canſt not conceive a Time, wherein this Fair Unmeaſurable Expanſe, was not ſtretch'd out. As if Nature her ſelf had engraven on our Intellects, this Record of the World's Untraceable Antiquity; in that our ſtrongeſt, ſwifteſt Thoughts, are far too weak and ſlow, to follow Time back to its Endleſs Origin.

like

The Revolution in China, ſurpaſſes the Common Changes in Kingdoms and Empires. There is Something Exceſſively Tragical, in the Cataſtrophe of that Royal Houſe.

Brother, in beholding that, thou haſt ſeen Humane Nature in a Trance: And, thou art ſo thy ſelf, if, after this, thou canſt be fond of any Thing on Earth. Traveller, adieu.

LETTER XXII.

To Asis Bassa.

SEveral Dispatches have been lately sent between this Court, and that of Suedeland; containing rather Matter of Compliment, than any Thing of Great Importance. Queen Christina has been very Ill, which has occasion'd Letters of Condoleance from the Queen-Regent of France.

Those which come from that Part, say, That General Torstenson is made a Count; and the Dignity entail'd to his Posterity, in Recompence of his Eminent Services to the Swedish Crown.

These Letters add, That there have past some high Words, between Monsieur Chanut, and the Suedish Secretary of State. And, that the latter, in going out of the Chamber where they discourled, laid his Hand upon his Sword, with these Words: Monsieur Chanut, Were it not for the Fence which the Law of Nations has rais'd about your Person, I would answer you in another Language. To which Monsieur Chanut replied, That he wore a Sword to defend himself and his Private Honour, as well as any Suede in the Kingdom.

The Occasion of this Quarrel was, the great Resort of Roman Catholick Strangers to Monsieur Chanut's Chapel, which gave dis-

guſt to the Swedes, who allow not the Exerciſe of the Roman Religion within their Territories. They caſtrate all the Prieſts of that Communion, whom they find; and proſecute the Laity with rigorous Penalties. But, Monſieur Chanut pleaded the Law of Nations: And, when the Secretary told him, That the Queen permitted him and his Family the Liberty of their Religion, but deſired him not to admit any other Perſons of what Nation ſoever; This Miniſter replied, That he could not receive as a Favour or Permiſſion from her Majeſty, the Liberty of Exerciſing his Religion; ſince, he held it only of his Maſter, the King of France, who had ſent him thither, and, that he would not ſhut the Door of his Chapel, againſt any that would come in; That their Law, which according to their own Calcule, was made above Two Thouſand Years after the Foundation of their Eſtate, could not abrogate the Law of Nations, which is Eternal: That this Perpetual Law, gave particular Privileges to certain Perſons, and eſpecially to the Miniſters of Foreign Princes: That their New Law, ſuch as it was, being only made to maintain the Publick Worſhip, reſpected not what was done in the Houſe of a Foreign Miniſter, by a Special Privilege; it being of no Conſequence to the State, whether ſuch Foreigners ſerved God or not, or whether they worſhipped Him in a Right or Wrong Way: That no Suede came to his Chapel, but only ſome French who were Sojourners in the Land: That they did not uſe the Swediſh

Ambaſſadors ſo in France, who admitted whom they pleaſed into their Chappels. That the Houſe where he now dwelt, was the Houſe of the King of France; and that therefore, he could not by Conſequence refuſe any Catholicks an Entrance into it, eſpecially ſuch as were born Subjects of his Maſter: And, in Fine, That it was very Rude, to oblige him to be the Executioner of this ſevere Law, in requiring him to ſhut his Door upon his Countrymen againſt the Common Laws of Hoſpitality, the Honour of a Publick Miniſter, and the Pleaſure of the King his Sovereign.

To this the Secretary made ſomething too tart a Reply. Whereupon, Words increaſing between them, and the French Ambaſſador being reſolute to aſſert his Privilege, the Secretary broke out into a Paſſion, as I have before mention'd; laying his Hand upon his Sword, as he was leaving the Room.

The Suedes, are Naturally a ruggid, ſurly People, as are all the Northern Europeans. They are Strangers to Civility, and the Gentile Addreſs of the French. Yet, the Queen, when ſhe heard of this Paſſage, was angry with her Miniſter, and excuſed his Rudeneſs to Monſieur Chanut; telling him, That the Secretary was a Faithful Servant, but had been educated among the Bears of the Forreſt.

This puts me in mind of a Story, which the French tell of another Ambaſſador, whom Lewis XIII. ſent to the Court of Spain. The Spaniards are of a haughty Temper, expecting ing more than ordinary Submiſſions, from thoſe who approach the King's Preſence. This Ambaſſador, on the ſame Ground, was required to do ſome Homage, which would not conſiſt with the Inſtructions of his Maſter; and therefore he refuſed to comply. The King of Spain, thinking to put him out Countenance, ſaid aloud, What! has the King of France, no other Men in his Court, that he ſends to me ſuch a Fool as this? To which the Ambaſſador replied, My Maſter has many Wiſer Men than my ſelf about him; but, to ſuch a King, ſuch an Ambaſſador.

Thou wilt not perhaps approve ſuch Raillery as this to Crown'd Heads, who ought to be treated with Reverence and Gravity. Yet, I believe, thou wilt condemn the Cruelty of a Duke of Muſcovy, who cauſed the Hat of a French Ambaſſadour to be nailed to his Head, for ſitting covered before him. This is contrary to the Genius of the Eaſt, who abhor to ſee a Man bare-headed.

But, every Nation has its Mode: And I, according to the Faſhion of my Country, kiſs the Border of thy Veſt, in Token of my Submiſſion and Reſpect.

LETTER XXII.

To the Mufti, moſt Venerable, and Worthy of all Honour.

THE Criticks, who ſpend their Time, and manifeſt their Wit, in diſcanting on the Court and the Grandees, find perpetual Matter of Diſcourſe concerning Cardinal Mazarini. His daily Actions, furniſh them with New Themes; and ſometimes, they rehearſe the Old. They compare him with his Predeceſſour Richlieu, and with Cardinal Ximenes, a Spaniſh Miniſter. They term theſe Three, the Trinity of Chriſtian Stateſmen; Thus diſtinguiſhing their Perſonal Characters: Richlieu, they ſay, was Crafty, Covetous, and Revengeful; Ximenes was Politick, Severe, and Valiant; Mazarini is Wiſe, Merciful, and Liberal.

The Firſt made good his Character, they ſay, in heaping up ſuch Prodigious Treaſures; in raiſing all thoſe of his Family or Dependance to the Higheſt Honours; in occaſioning the Voluntary Baniſhment of the Queen-Mother; in ruining whomſoever he ſuſpected; and finally, in making himſelf ſo much the Maſter of all Secrets, that the King, however diſguſted and averſe from him, yet could neither ſit ſafe on his Throne without him when Living, nor venture the Management of the Publick to any of his Creatures when Dead. Thus ſpeak they of that Great Miniſter.

As to Cardinal Ximenes, they ſay he diſcover'd the Qualities which they aſcribe to him, in the Method he took to raiſe himſelf to that envied Greatneſs; which was, by ſeeming to ſhun the Honours at which he ſecretly aim'd. For, being a Devoted Derviſe, or Religious Friar, he appeared to be the moſt Mortify'd Man of the whole Order: Which being taken Notice of, he was made Provincial; from which Dignity, he made but one Step more to the Purple: And, growing Eminent for his Abilities, he was made the Firſt Miniſter in the Court of Spain.

He levy'd Sixteen Thouſand Men at his own Coſt, invaded Barbary, ſtorm'd their ſtrongeſt Cities, and reduc'd the whole Kingdom of Tripoli and Algiers to his Maſter's Obedience.

Whilſt he was at the Head of his Army, one Day there happened a Mutiny among his Soldiers. A certain Fellow, running up and down between the Ranks, and exciting them to chuſe a New General, ſaying, It was a Shame to ſerve a poor-ſpirited Friar: The Cardinal perceiving this, ſtepp'd to the Fellow, and, with one Blow, ſever'd his Head from his Body. This ſtruck ſuch a Terror into all, that from that time, there was not the leaſt Tumult or Diſorder in his Army.

They ſay, he was in the End poiſon'd by eating of a Fiſh, of which a Friend of his re-ceiv'd Intimation on the Road, as he was riding to the Place where the Cardinal was at Dinner. But, he came too late, to prevent the Effects of the Poiſon: For, though the Cardinal was but juſt riſen from the Table, yet he began to void Blood by his Ears, and the Extremities of his Fingers; and, in a few Days, drew his Laſt Breath. He was Tall, and well Limb'd: His Two Fore-Teeth of the Upper Jaw, grew ſo far out of his Mouth, that he was call'd, The Eccleſiaſtical Elephant. The Sutures of his Skull were ſo cloſely indented, that there was no more room for Tranſpiration of the Groſſer Vapours, than through the moſt Solid Part of the Bone. On this Account, he was ever troubled with the Head-ach; contrary to Cardinal Richlieu, who never felt any Pain in that Part, becauſe he had two little Holes in his Crown, through which the Fumes exhal'd.

Theſe are the Remarks which are made on Cardinal Ximenes. As to Mazarini, they ſay he ſurpaſſes both theſe Miniſters, in the exquiſite Moderation of his Temper: And, comes ſhort of neither, in the Contrivance or Succeſs of Affairs; being ſolid in his Counſels, ſecret and ſwift in their Execution. He has this alſo peculiar in his Conduct, that none are more ſure of his Favour, than thoſe who have done him Injuries. He is Magnifick in his Expences; building Palaces, that may vie with the moſt Celebrated Structures of the Ancient Romans: A curious Collector of Choice Paintings and Sculptures; furniſhing the the Houſes, with Utenſils of Cedar, Ebony, Silver, Gold, and other Ornaments befitting the Palace of a King: Liberal beyond the Expectation of his Friends and Servants; yet, not to Profuſeneſs. He was a wonderful Sagacity in diſcovering Cheats and Impoſtors; and, no leſs Dexterity, in diſcerning Men of Merit, though never ſo much obſcur'd by Misfortune.

Not long ago, he catch'd a Gentleman in a Crime, which expos'd him to the Laughter and Contempt of the whole Court, but not to the Cardinal's Hatred. He had been recommended to this Miniſter, by a Lady of the Court, for whom he had a great Eſteem. On which Account, he had free Acceſs to the Cardinal's Preſence, and would always mix with his Retinue.

But, his Curious Patron, had obſerv'd ſomething in his Carriage, which gave him Ground of Miſtruſt. For, he would always place himſelf, as near as he could, to a certain Table in the Chamber, where the Cardinal gives Audience. There is a Drawer under this Table, which commonly ſtands half open, it being the Place where all Petitioners throw in their Bribes or Preſents; It not being ſeemly for a Prince of the Church, to take Money himſelf. The Cardinal obſerv'd, that this Spark always had his Eye glancing on that Drawer, as if he coveted what was there contained. However, he took no Notice, but gave him all the Opportunities imaginable to do his Pleaſure; yet, ſtill one Accident or other, hinder'd the Gentleman from executing his Design; which was to borrow some of the Gold that lay in that Drawer. At length it happ'ned, that the Cardinal having appointed some Curious Pageants to be made in Honour of the King's Birth-Day, he with several of the Courtiers, stood looking out of the Windows, to see these Triumphant Shows pass by. The Gentleman, taking this Opportunity, whilst he thought all Eyes were intent on the Gayeties without, slips to the Table, and takes out of the Drawer a Bag of Gold, putting it up in his Pocket, and retiring to the Window again. He imagined that no Body had seen him, and therefore hugged himself in the Thoughts of his Booty. When the Show was over, and the Company withdrew from the Window; after a while, they all took their Leave, and departed: And, among the Rest, this Gentleman Thief was going out. But the Cardinal desired him to tarry in that he had something to say to him. The Gentleman, stung with the Guilt of what he had done, felt a trembling, and was ready to drop down at the Cardinal's Feet. But, he bid him be of good Comfort, saying thus to him; My Friend, what thou hast done, is not hid from me. If thou hast not Gold enough, I will double thy Sum. Therewith, he gave him another Bag of equal Value; saying withal, Go thy Way, and see my Face no more. I pardon, but cannot trust thee.

Would

Would'ſt thou know, by what means the Cardinal diſcovered this Theft? He always wears on his Finger a Ring, in which is ſet a Jewel of Ineſtimable Value; it being a Natural Mirror, and diſcovering all Things that are done in the Room, though behind a Man's Back. 'Twas on this Stone the Cardinal caſt his Eye, when the Gentleman thought he was looking out of the Window. Therein he beheld him go to the Table, take out the Money, and put it in his Pocket. Thou ſeeſt how curious this Miniſter is, to ſtock himſelf with uſeful Rareties.

May that Great Chancellor of Heaven, the Angel who beholds in the Divine Eſſence, as in a Mirror, whatſoever is done on Earth, and records all Humane Actions in the Book of Judgment, never diſcern any thing in Mahmus, which may render him worthy to be excluded the Preſence of God.

LETTER

LETTER XXIV.

To Danecmar Kesrou, Kadileſquer of Romania.

THOU that art Principal among the Judges of High Dignity, the Illuſtrious Ornament of Three Empires, the Strong Support of Equity, who preſerveſt Reaſon, and correctſt Vice; I congratulate thy deſerved Honour: And, in doing ſo, I wiſh Encreaſe of Joy to all the Faithful Oſmans.

The Knowledge which thou haſt acquir'd in the Law of Nations, and in the moſt perfect Sanctions of our Auguſt Monarchy, has made thee famous through the Seven Precincts of the Earth; and has veſted thee with the Robe of Sublime Honour, the Gift of the Lieutenant of God.

I made Choice of this Occaſion, at once to perform my Duty, and to acquaint thee with a National Villany; ſuch a Violation of the Publick Faith of a Kingdom, as it will be difficult to Parallel.

The Civil Wars of England, are known throughout the World: And, thou art no Stranger to the Particular Intelligences I have ſent to the Sublime Port, concerning this Nation.

Since that time, the Rebels have by Degrees gain'd Ground of their Unhappy King, chaſing chaſing him from One Place to Another: till at Length, finding, that neither by Arms nor Treaties, he could reduce them to any Terms of Reconciliation; and, being Beſieged in One of his Cities, which was not in a Condition to hold out long, this Unfortunate Monarch was forc'd to diſguiſe himſelf, and eſcape by Night; wandring through Unfrequented Ways, and enduring much Hardſhip. He at length threw himſelf upon the Faith of the Scots; who had ſolemnly engaged themſelves upon Oath, to defend him againſt all his Enemies whatſoever.

The Scottiſh Army was then in England, being hired to aſſiſt the Rebels. Whence ſome take Occaſion, to accuſe this Prince of Raſhneſs, and too much Credulity, in ſeeking Protection from thoſe, who firſt began the Rebellion; and, who had ſtain'd the Records of Scotland, with the Blood of many of their Kings. But, Innocency is void of Suſpicion; and therefore, becauſe his own Intentions were ſincere, he knew not how to be Jealous of others.

However, the Scots at Firſt, ſeem'd to act the Parts of Loyal Men. And, when they were threatned by the Engliſh Rebels, and their Pay was ſtopp'd, with Declarations alſo iſſued out againſt their Proceedings; they continued to aſſert the Juſtice of their Deportment, in receiving and defending their Injur'd King, who had fled to them for Succour.

They

They detained him thus, from the 4th. of the 5th. Moon, of the Year 1646. to the 30th. Day of the 1st. Moon of this preſent Year. At which time, having agreed with the Engliſh Parliament, for the Sum 400000 Sequins, as the Price of their Sovereign, they deliver'd him up to the Engliſh Commiſſioners, deputed by the Rebels for that Purpoſe.

The French Ambaſſador, was at that time in the Scotch Army: Who having been a Witneſs of their Deteſtable Perjury, took his Leave: And being attended with a Guard of Light-Horſe to the Sea-Port, at parting he pull'd out a Piece of Engliſh Money, valued at Half a Crown; and asking the Captain of the Guards, into how many Pieces of Coined Silver, that Half Crown might be divided, he anſwer'd, Into Thirty. For ſo much (replied the Ambaſſador) did Judas betray his Maſter.

Thou wilt better comprehend the Force of this Repartee, when thou conſidereſt, that according to the Chriſtians Belief, this Judas was a Slave of Jeſus, the Son of Mary; and, that for Thirty Pieces of Silver, he betray'd that Prophet to the Jews.

But, theſe Infidels have found out Ways, to elude all Engagements and Promiſes. They couch their Oaths, in Words more Ambiguous than the Oracles of Delphos. As if they thought, not only to circumvent Men by their Equivocations; but alſo to deceive Him who formed the Tongue and the Ear; even God, who is Perfect in Knowledge.

Such

Such a Story I have read of one Hatto, a German Biſhop, whoſe Perjury is recorded. This Prelate, had a Couſin who was accuſed of Treaſon againſt the Emperor. On which Account, he was cloſely beſieged by the Imperial Forces, in a Caſtle ſeated on the Top of an Impregnable Rock. So that the Emperor, deſparing to take him by Force, had withdrawn his Army; when this Biſhop came to him, and for a Sum of Money, promiſed to betray his Kinſman into the Emperor's Hands.

The Bargain being concluded, the Biſhop went to viſit his Couſin at the Caſtle, perſwading him to go and humble himſelf to the Emperor, and he would engage to procure his Pardon: Binding himſelf with a Solemn Oath, That if he would rely on him, as he carried him ſafe out of the Caſtle, ſo he would bring him back alive and ſafe again.

His Kinſman deluded with theſe fair Pretences, and ſecured by the Sanction of an Oath, truſts himſelf to the Conduct and Fidelity of the Prelate.

When they had rode about Half a League from the Caſtle, the Biſhop pretending he had forgot ſome Papers of Moment, which he had left behind him in his Chamber, they return'd back to the Caſtle; And, when they had found the Papers, they ſet forward again toward the Emperor's Camp. Being arrived there, the Impious Wretch deliver'd his Kinſman to the Emperor, who Condemn'd him to Die. He ſending for the Biſhop reproaches him with the Violation of his Oath. But, the Perfidious Biſhop, ſought to acquit himſelf, by ſaying, He had perform'd his Promiſe, in carrying him back ſafe to the Caſtle, when he returned to ſeek his Papers. Thus was his Kinſman betray'd by a Quibble, and loſt his Head. The Biſhop acquiring, for that Impious Deed the Odious Title, of Hatto the Traytor. And the Germans report, That he was afterwards carried away by Devils, and thrown alive into the Hollow of Mount Ætna: A Voice being heard at the ſame Inſtant in the Air ſaying, This is the Reward of Perjury.

to

The Nazarenes believe this Flaming Mountain, to be One of the Mouths of Hell: The ſame Opinion they have of Strombolo and Veſuvius. I am not curious, to pry into the Truth of ſo Coſtly a Secret; but leave the Experiment to the Forſworn, Treacherous Scots, who by this Barbarous Action, deſerve to follow the Fate of Hatto.

Much greater was the Integrity and Vertue of the Ancient Romans, whom theſe Infidels Number among the Damn'd. They eſteem'd Nothing more Sacred, than the Publick Faith; building Temples to its Honour, and ſtamping their Money, with the Figure of Two Hands joined together; having this Motto, THE FAITH OF THE ROMANS. But, the Scots ſhew themſelves to be of Lyſander's Mind, who us'd to ſay, Children muſt be circumvented with Good Words, and Men with Oaths.

The

This Monarch is now led in Triumph, like a Captive, by his Rebellious Subjects, who have confin'd him to one of his Country Palaces; ſuffering none of his Friends, or Faithful Servants, to come near him; but in all things, endeavouring to render his Reſtraint Inſupportable.

Thou who art accurate in interpreting the Laws of Juſtice, wilt condemn theſe Infidels of Horrid Treaſon; yet canſt not acquit the Muſſulmans, who have often Depoſed our moſt Auguſt Emperors.

I divide my Intelligence, among the Miniſters of the Sublime Port, and the other Grandees of the State; praying God, to guard the Sultan from Secret Machinations, and Open Enemies; and to grant, That an Exceſs of Good Nature, may not betray him to ſuch Misfortunes, as have befallen this Impriſon'd Monarch.

LETTER

LETTER XXV.

To Ragel Hamet, Antiquary to the Sultan.

THIS City is peſter'd with an Innumerable Multitude of Bats, and a Kind of Serpents, which they call Lizards or Newts. They breed in the Walls of their Houſes, and moleſt the Inhabitants Night and Day, ſwarming more than ordinary every Ninth Year.

The Pariſians give an odd Reaſon for this Plague. They ſay, That in former Ages, a certain Magician had undertaken to free the City from all Venomous Creatures; and, that accordingly, he had made ſeveral Images of thoſe Animals, annexing to them Enchantments, and hiding them in obſcure Places under the Earth; promiſing alſo, that ſo long as thoſe Images remain'd untouch'd, Paris ſhould not be moleſted with any Hurtful Thing. This ſucceeded according to his Words; till, at a certain time, as they were digging up the Foundations of an Old Temple, the Work-men found ſeveral Brazen Images, ſome repreſenting a Bat, ſome a Lizard. They making ſmall Account of theſe Magical Reliques, ſold them to the next Brazier for a piece of Money: Who, being ignorant alſo of the hidden Force of theſe Images, melted el them down for his own Uſe. And, ever ſince that time, the City has been over-run with Rats and Lizards.

I relate this to thee, in regard I have often heard thee ſpeak of the Ancient Statues, that were in the Atmidan at Conſtantinople, and in other Parts of the City; particularly of that Pillar, which had Three Brazen Serpents winding about it; which, when Mahomet the Great beheld, the Conquerer ſtruck one of them with a Battle-Axe, and ſmote off the Lower Jaw. Upon which, a Multitude of Serpents infeſted the City; but were ſoon exterminated, in Regard the Sultan, being warned by the Citizens, forbore to do any farther Injury to thoſe Images, which were the Guardians of the City.

The Annals of the Muſſulman Empire, make Mention of theſe Statues, as alſo of a Horſe of Braſs, and a Bull of the ſame Metal: The one erected as a Charm againſt the Peſtilence; the Other, as an Oraculous Sign, that the Enemies of the Grecian Monarchy, ſhould in that Place be repulſed, and driven out of the City. Yet, it proved otherwiſe: For, the Victorious Muſſulmans, againſt whom the Enchantments of the Infidels could not prevail, entred the Market-Place, where this Image ſtood, and drove from thence the timorous Grecians; cutting in Pieces all that made Reſiſtance, and rendring themſelves Lords of Conſtantinople, at that Time the Richeſt City in the World.

The

The Romans were extremely addicted to these Superstitious Vanities; Believing the Safety of their City and Empire, consisted in the Preservation of the Palladium, an Image which they thought fell down from Jupiter, and was transported from Troy to Italy by Æneas; being afterwards reposited in the Temple of Vesta, but burnt in that dreadful Conflagration, which happen'd in the Reign of Nero. They had in no less Veneration, the Buckler, which they were taught, drop'd down from Heaven, into the Hands of Numa Pompilius; whereon, the Fate of Rome was engraven, in Characters which none could read. Fearing lest this Sacred Shield might be lost, they caus'd Eleven others of the same Figure to be made, and all to be hung up together in the Temple of Mars.

And, to the End the Guardian Genius of the City, should not be entic'd from them by the Enchantments of their Enemies, the true Name of the City of Rome was kept Secret, even from its own Inhabitants: Insomuch that Valerius Soranus was put to Death, for publishing it to one of his Friends. Many have guess'd at this hidden Name; Some saying it was Valencia; Others, that it was Volia; a Third Sort, call it Anthusa. But, there is no Certainty in their Conjectures. For the Pagans were above all Things careful, to conceal the Names of their Cities and Patron-Gods; knowing, that those Spirits would not forsake them till they were call'd forth by their Proper Names.

The

They us'd also, to chain the Images of their Gods to the Altars, least they should depart from them by Stealth. Thus the Tyrians, when Alexander besieged their City, and they understood from the Priests, that Apollo, the Guardian of Tyre, was displeas'd with 'em, they fastned his Image with strong Fetters of Iron. So dealt the Spartans, with the Image of Mars. And this was the Common Practice, among those Idolatrous Nations.

As for Us, who have receiv'd the Law Clear and Intelligible, and believe in the Unity of the Divine Essence: We use no Charms our Selves, neither do we fear the Magick of the Uncircumcised. All our Confidence is in God, and the Protection of his Prophet: We go boldly to the Wars, whilst we fight in Defence, neither of Statues, nor Fictitious Reliques, but of the Volume repleniſh'd with Truth and Light, the Book brought down from Heaven by an Angel.

LETTER

LETTER XXVI.

To the Vizier Azem.

I AM now returned from Orleans, whither I went in Obedience to thy Appointment. And, not without Abundance of Pleasure to my self; it being the Time of Year, when all things conspire to make a Traveller pass his time away with Delight.

Yet, my Return was Melancholy, in Regard I could not accomplish what I aim'd at, nor be in a Capacity to render thee that Satisfaction thou requirest, either in buying the Jewels, or in establishing any Correspondence. Those who informed thee of the Germans inhabiting that City, were mistaken in their Character, they being only a Society, or Corporation of Students, and no ways concerned in Traffick or Merchandize.

They told thee right in saying, There were great Number of Strangers in Orleans: I think the Imperial City which commands the West cannot boast a greater Diversity of Languages, than are spoken daily in the Streets and Houses of Orleans. There are some, almost of all Nations, residing in that City.

Wouldst thou know the real Occasion of this mighty Conflux of Foreigners. It is, that they may study that which the Nazarenes call the Civil Law, which is there profess'd as in an Academy, erected for that Purpose.

by Philip the Fair; one of the Kings of France.

If thou knoweſt not the Meaning of the Civil Law, It is a Collection of the Ancient Roman Laws, drawn from above two Thouſand Books of their Scribes, by the Command of the Emperor Juſtinian, for a Standard of Equity in thoſe Corrupt Times, in that Univerſal Relaxation and Decline of Good Government.

This is the Attractive, which draws ſo many Strangers from all Parts of Europe, to that pleaſant City: Where, beſides the Opportunity of improving themſelves in the moſt Honourable Profeſſion among the Nazarenes, next to that of the Prieſthood; they enjoy a pure and ſerene Heaven, a fruitful and delicious Part of the Earth, and the Company of the moſt obliging and courteous People in all France.

'Tis for this Reaſon, the Germans, among other Nations, flock to Orleans; and, through the Favour of the French Kings, have obtained a Privilege beyond other Nations; that is, to incorporate themſelves into a Society of Students. Neither is there any ſuch Thing as Merchandize known among them.

If I have not anſwer'd thy Expectation, Supreme Prince of the Baſſa's, blame not Mahmut, but accuſe the Germans of Orleans, for not exchanging their Studies for Traffick; or rather, blame thoſe who preſumed to tell thee this far-fetch'd Fable. In finiſhing this Letter, I bow my Head to the Floor of my Chamber; and kiſs the Paper, which ſhall have have the Honour to be touch'd by thy Illuſtrious Hands.

LETTER XXVII.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

THOU haſt heard of the Aſſyrian, Scythian and Roman Heroines. Theſe were all Valiant Leaders of Armies, Women of Honour and Renown. Now I will inform thee of a Female, which France has brought upon the Stage of War.

According to the Orders which I receiv'd from the Vizier Azem, I took a Journey to Orleans laſt Moon: Where, on the Third Day after my Arrival, beholding a Solemn Proceſſion in the Streets of that Populous City, attended with ſome uncommon Ceremonies and Rejoycings, my Curioſity prompted me to enquire the Occaſion of it. Thou may'ſt imagine, I did not apply my ſelf for Information to the Multitude, who take up Things on the Common Credit of Fame, which does not always deliver the Truth. I addreſs'd my ſelf to thoſe that were acquainted with the Records of the Town: Who told me That this Solemnity was Yearly obſerv'd, on the Eight Eighth Day of the Fifth Moon, in Memory of their Deliverance from the Engliſh, who beſieged this City, and were beaten from before it by Joan d' Arc, a Maid of Lorrain, in the Reign of Charles I. This Virago, ſeem'd to be the Tutelar Angel of France: For, to her Valour and Conduct, that Monarch ow'd the Recovery of his Kingdom, almoſt loſt to the King of England; this being the laſt Place of Importance, which had not receiv'd Engliſh Garriſons. After ſhe had rais'd the Siege, ſhe purſu'd the Enemy, gave them ſeveral Battels, defeated them, took the Generals Captive, reduced all the Cities to their former Obedience, and never ſheath'd her Sword, till ſhe ſaw her Maſter ſolemnly Crown'd at Rhemes. Yet, at length ſhe herſelf was made a Priſoner by the Engliſh, and was publickly burnt for a Witch, at Rouen.

The Inhabitants of Orleans, have erected Brazen Statues in her Honour: They celebrate her Praiſes, and eſteem her, a Woman Divinely Inſpir'd, to ſave her Country. Yet the more Intelligent Sort ſay, That ſhe was neither Witch nor Propheteſs, but only a Maid of good Wit and Courage, whom ſome of the Princes of the Blood Royal, had inſtructed to act the Part of a Miſſionary from Heaven; That ſo by pretending Viſions and Revelations, ſhe might raiſe the Courage of the French, now almoſt diſpirited by their many Loſſes; and, whom Nothing leſs than a Miracle could perſwade to abide the Field againſt the Victorious Engliſh. This is certain, that ſhe diſtinguiſhed the King, though diſguiſed like a Peaſant, and in a Crowd of People: She went boldly up to him, and ſaluted him by his Title, to the Aſtoniſhment of thoſe that ſtood by. She ſent a Meſſenger to bring her a Sword of Antique Workmanſhip, that lay hid in a Tomb in one of their famous Moſques; (for, the Nazarenes of the Weſt, bury the Dead in their Temples.) This Action extremely enhanced her Reputation; in regard, none knew of this Sword but the King himſelf. She was therefore look'd upon as an Extraordinary Perſon; and the People could hardly be reſtrain'd from paying her Divine Honours.

When they were Encamped on a certain Plain of a vaſt Extent, where there was no Water to be found, ſo that the Army was ready to periſh through Thirſt; the King came to the Tent of this Propheteſs, to conſult her as an Oracle in the General Diſtreſs. She bid him be of good Courage, and follow her. They went out together to the Door of her Tent, where, at a little Diſtance, there grew a Knot of Flowers. The Admirable Maid ſtruck her Spear into the Ground amidſt the Flowers, and incontinently there ſprung forth a Fountain of Water, to which the whole Army repaired, to allay their Thirſt. They ſay, the Place is ſhown to this Day, with an Image of this Maid ſtanding in an Oratory cloſe by it; a Place of Refreſhment and Devotion for Travellers that paſs over thoſe barren Plains.

How-

However, whether it were Artifice, or that ſhe was endued with ſome Supernatural Gift; it had a marvellous Influence on the Soldiers who began to reaſſume Courage, and feared nothing under the Conduct of ſuch a General.

Twas Revenge, without Doubt, rather than Juſtice, that extorted that Cruel Sentence from the Engliſh, which put a Period to the Heroick Actions of this Illuſtrious Maid, whoſe Fame will live for ever.

It is recorded, That whilſt ſhe was bound faſt to the Stake with ſtrong Cords, they would have kindled the Fire upon her before ſhe had ſpoke to the Spectatare; but, that ſhe ſuddenly became looſned, and ſnatching a Lance from one of the Soldiers, ſhe drove the Guards before her: Then returning of her own Accord to the Stake, ſhe made her laſt Dying Speech, foretelling many Things to come, which afterwards prov'd true. And having made an End of ſpeaking, ſhe bid the Executioner, ſet fire to the Wood. Which he did according, and ſhe was burnt to Aſhes.

Certainly, every Nation may boaſt of ſome Female Warriour, that at one Time or other, has done remarkable Service to her Country. And, thou art not a Stranger to the Hiſtory of the Amazons, who excluded Men from their Society, yet became formidable to all the Regions round about them.

Adieu, Brave Commander of the Muſſulman Forces; and let the Memory of theſe Valiant Females, inſpire thee with freſh Ardours, when the Ottoman Empire is in Danger.

Paris, 1ſt. of the 6th. Moon,
of the Year 1647.

LETTER XXVIII.

To Dgnet Ogiou.

THou art the Man that muſt participate in all my Adventures. And, I ſhould be a Churle, in not letting thee ſhare with me, the Pleaſure I found in a late Journey to Orleans, one of the Preſidiary Towns of France. It was by the Order of the Vizir Azem, I undertook that Journey. Some body had informed Him, That this Town was full of Merchant-Travellers of ſeveral Nations, but eſpecially of Germany, who brought the choiceſt Jewels of the Eaſt, to vend in this Place at ordinary Rates. That Miniſter gave me Commands, to buy certain Stones; with Inſtructions to treat of another Affair, which it is not neceſſary for thee to know. I accordingly ſet out from Paris, the Third Day of the 5th. Moon; and, Eliachim the Jew (of whom thou haſt heard) bore me Company.

I need

I need not deſcribe to thee, the Country through which we paſs'd: It exactly reſembleth the Plains of St. Iſidore, not far from Palermo in Sicily. Thou and I, have Reaſon to remember that Place of our Captivity, carrying the Marks of our Maſter's Cruel Anger yet in our Bodies. Thoſe Plains, thou knoweſt, afford a very agreeable Proſpect; eſpecially at this Time of the Year, when the Verdure of the Trees, mixed with the Brightneſs of the Corn-fields, and the parti-coloured Meadows, tempt the Eye into a Controverſy of Pleaſure; a Man neither knowing well how to take it off, nor yet where to fix it, in ſuch an Orderly Confuſion and Medley of Charming Objects.

Such is the Province between Paris and Orleans; which has this Advantage of thoſe Sicilian Plains, That here all the way one rides, Innumerable Magnificent and Beautiful Palaces appear, ſhooting up their glittering Turrets above the lofty Groves, which environ thoſe Seats of Pleaſure. Indeed, this is one of the pureſt Airs, and the moſt fertile Soil in all the Kingdom; which invites the Nobles and Gentry, to reſide here during the Summer, and occaſions much Travelling on this Road.

About Mid-day, we came to a Town called Chaſtres, where we alighted to refreſh our ſelves. Travellers in theſe Weſtern Parts, are better accommodated with Proviſions, than they can be in Aſia, where they muſt carry their own Beds with them, and dreſs their own Victuals, or lie on the naked Floor fasting. This makes the Nazarenes, call the East Inhospitable. They consider not at the same Time, that 'tis the Niceness and Delicacy of the Mahometans, which occasions this Custom. For, the Eastern People, are fearful of defiling themselves, by eating Meat prepared by other Hands than their own, or those of their Servants: As also, to lie on a Bed, common to all Passengers.

But, these Infidels are like the Swine, to whom all Meat is Welcom, and every Ditch an Acceptable Bed. Here are Inns all along the Roads, whereinto when you enter, the Host provides you both Bed and all other Necessaries. A Man must venture to sleep on the same Pillow, where perhaps a Leper has lain the Night before, or some Person Infected with a worse Disease. The Host examines none, but harbours all alike, provided they have Money to pay him. And as for Victuals 'tis the Custom for all Travellers, to eat together at one Common Table, where several Dishes of Meat are served up, and every Man is free to eat what and how much he pleases, paying a stated Price for his Dinner.

Thus no sooner were we come into our Inn at Chastres, but the Host saluting us after the Manner of the Country, invited us to sit down at the Ordinary, (for so they call their Publick Dinner in an Inn.) We were not so scrupulous as to refuse his Offer, but followed him into the Chamber, where the Dinner was prepared. There were many Guests at the Table, and all busie in feeding themselves. We took such Seats as we found vacant, and without much Ceremony, fell to eating. The Jew trusted to the Indulgence of Moses, and I to that of Mahomet, for eating with the Uncircumcised, whose Meat is seldom free from the Pollutions of Blood. We knew, that neither God nor his Prophets required us to starve.

Dinner

There was Plenty of Wine, and that so delicious, as would have tempted an Hogia to taste it, without the Mufti's Dispensation, to avoid Singularity, I made a Shew of eating, as the Rest; but the greatest Part of my Repast, consisted in Bread, and some Fruits, with that exhilarating Juice of the Grape.

The honest Jew swore, 'twas a Banquet prepared by Cupid, to render him the most Miserable of all Men. For, just in the midst of our Mirth, came in a French Gentleman, with a Lady in his Hand, who placed themselves at the Table exactly opposite to us. I perceived evident Symptoms of some Disorder in Eliachim, who seem'd to read his Fate in that fair Creature's Face; yet had not Power to check his wandring Eyes, or guard 'em from Inevitable Wounds. He'd almost acted o'er the Story of the Ægyptian Wives, whom Joseph's Mistress had invited to behold his Beauty; they cut their Fingers for their Meat, whilst gazing on the Charming Youth: So poor Eliachim was all Confusion, turn'd to a Statue, whilſt he look'd on this enchanting Gorgon. He had forgot to eat or drink, till I began to rouze him from his Dream. I told him ſoftly in the Ear, this Lady was but the Younger Siſter of Ixion's Miſtreſs. This brought him to his Sence again, but could not reſtore his Peace. Prudence taught him, to diſſemble the violent Emotion of his Soul, and not to expoſe himſelf in ſuch a Company; but, Nothing could expel the Fatal Poyſon from his Breaſt.

When we had ſufficiently repoſed our ſelves, we bid adieu to the Inn; all joining company, and ſetting forward to Orleans. On the Road, both Eliachim and I, had many Opportunities of converſing with this Young Lady; ſuch Familiarity with Women, being allowed in France. We found her Wit ſurprizing as her Beauty; and, her Mien and Conduct, ſuch as gave Advantage to them both. In a Word, Eliachim was loſt amidſt ſo many Perfections.

When we came to our Inn at Night, and were in our Chamber together, he vented his Paſſion in theſe Words: Mahmut, I've paſs'd theſe Years hitherto, without any other Sentiments of Love, ſave thoſe which in General I owe to all our Race, and ſome more particular Regards of Friendſhip and Duty. But, ſince I ſaw this lovely Creature, methinks my Friends, and all that ought to be belov'd on Earth, is now contracted into her. 'Tis not her Snowy Skin, or Matchleſs Features, are of Force to move me; though they are ſuch,

by ſelf being Judge, as would have foil'd Apelles Art to imitate: but, 'tis a Luſtre which I can't expreſs! Surely, 'twas Lightning darted from her Eyes, thoſe fair Avenues of her brighter Soul! the ſubtle Flame, glanced through my Breaſt, and in a Moment ſcorch'd my Reaſon up! The lovely Baſilisk, ſhot Deaths in every Look: Thou ſaweſt how I ſate as one transformed; ſo lifeleſs and without motion was I, whilſt gazing on my Ruine! And, to this Hour, a Fatal Numbneſs ſpreads through all my Veins, as if I'd touch'd ſome dire Torpedo.

Thus went he raving on, till I interrupted him with Laughter and Raillery, endeavouring to cure him of this Love-ſick Humour, by ridiculing it. I told him my own Experience of this Fooliſh Paſſion, rehearſed my former Adventures with Daria, and how at length I got the Victory of this vain Fondeſs, by Abſence, and the Exerciſe of my Reaſon. But, all that I could ſay, made no Impreſſion on the ſtupid Lover. He grew but worſe, and ſo I left him to ſeek Repoſe from Sleep.

We came not to Orleans till the next Day, where we tarried not long, having no other Buſineſs, as it happen'd, but to ſee the Rareties of the Town, and inform our ſelves of thoſe things it is convenient for Travellers to know. After which, we returned to Paris; with the ſame Sentiments, I had at my firſt ſetting out from thence; but, it ſeems, the World was Metamorphoſed in poor Eliachim's

Opinion: To him the Trees had now loſt all their Greeneſs; the Flowers, and Graſs, and Corn look'd wither'd; the Birds ſung mournful Notes; the Winds blew hoarſe, unwelcome Sounds; and, every thing in Nature ſeemed to him to droop, becauſe Falanie was not there (ſo was the Fair One call'd) as Eliachim had learned of her, when we parted from Orleans.

In this Melancholy Condition, the poor Brain-ſick Jew has continued ever ſince. When his Cure will commence, I know not.

If thou yet retaineſt thy Native Liberty, and haſt not ſacrificed it to Unhappy Love, learn by his Misfortune to watch thy Senſes, which are the Firſt Traytors to the Soul. Adieu.

LETTER

LETTER XXIX.

To the Captain Baſſa.

THou that haſt had thy Education in Arſenals, and haſt led the reſt of thy Life in Ships of War, wilt be beſt able to Judge of the Propoſal, which a certain bold Sea-Captain made to Cardinal Mazarini not long ago.

It being the General Diſcourſe of this City, with what Inſult and Defiance Admiral Moroſini, with about Thirty Men of War, entred the Helleſpont, and brav'd the Dardanels: This Officer told the Cardinal, That if he would furniſh him with half that Number of Ships, he would engage to drive the Sultan out of his Seraglio, lay that Palace in the Duſt, and beat down the Towers of all the Moſques in Conſtantinople, or loſe his Life in the Attempt. To which the Cardinal replied: Monſieur, I believe 'tis poſſible, if you could finiſh your Work, before they would board your Men of War with a Hundred Gallies and Saiques full of Armed Men.

It is ſaid, that Cardinal Richlieu had ſuch a Project once; which made him propoſe the building of prodigious High Ships, whoſe outſides ſhould be ſtuck all over with ſharp Spikes, that ſhould render it Impoſſible for Gallies to board them.

By

By this thou may'ſt know, that ſuch an Attempt is not thought Impracticable by the Chriſtians. I wiſh it be not put in Effectual execution by them, when the Port may leaſt dream of it.

Chriſtina, Queen of Suedeland, has cauſed a moſt Magnificent Veſſel to be built, with Deſign to preſent it to Cardinal Mazarini. The Inner Work of the Cabin, is of Cedar, curiouſly overlaid with Flowers and other Imagery of Gold. The Extremity of the Stern, adorned with Windows, Statues and Galleries; the Wooden Work, all overlaid with the ſame Metal. The Roof of the Cabin, preſents the Story of Jaſon's Expedition to get the Golden Fleece, painted by the beſt Maſters in Suedeland. All the Furniture, ſpeaks the Royal Bounty of her that gives it. The Canon, are of the pureſt Braſs. The Reſt of the Tackle, ſuch as are fitteſt to weather the Winds and Waves; from which neither this Queen's Sovereignty in Suedeland, nor the Cardinal's Grandeur in France, could exempt either of them, were they expoſed to Sea.

There are thoſe who whiſper on this Occaſion, that the Queen of Suedeland has ſome Inclinations to the Roman Catholick Religion; That ſhe has had ſeveral Conferences with Monſieur Chanut, on that Subject, as alſo with his Prieſts; that her Reſident in Portugal, has openly embraced that Faith, not without the Queen's private Conſent and Approbation. It is not Material to us, what Religion ligion the Infidels profeſs, whilſt they aſſert Doctrines repugnant to the Divine Unity, and the Truth of the Sent of God. I behold, at this Time, an evident Sign of his Unity in the Heavens; it is the New Moon, juſt riſing from the Lower Hemiſphere. At the Sight of this Planet, the Meſſenger of God has commanded me to fall on my Face, and adore the Eternal.

Wherefore praying, that her Influences may prove propitious to thee, whilſt thou art on the Ocean, I bid thee adieu.

The End of the Second Book.

Writ by

A SPY at PARIS.

VOL. III.

BOOK III.

LETTER I.

To Bedredin, Superior of the Convent of Dervises, at Cogni in Natolia.

NOT more welcome are the Rich Perfumes of Arabia, to a Soul almost expiring through Grief and Melancholy, than is thy Letter to Mahmut, wherein is contain'd the Certificate of thy being yet on this Side the State of Invisibles.

viſibles. Methinks, all Nature flouriſhes, while thou art alive. And, I feel a Spirit within me, prompts me to preſage, that thy Death, like the fall of Leaves in Autumn, will prove the Harbinger of the World's Laſt Winter. Whilſt thou liveſt, thy Prayers and Merits, ſupport the drooping Elements: Which are now almoſt ready to fall, into their Primitive Chaos and Inactivity. The Angel of the Trumpet, in Contemplation of thy Vertue, delays to ſound the Grand Tremendous Blaſt; which, at an Inſtant, ſhall puff out the Light of Sun, Moon and Stars; and blow the Breath out of the Noſtrils of all the Living Generations. That Day, ſhall be a Day of Darkneſs, Horror and Silence, till the Hour of Tranſmigration comes: When, at the Second Blaſt, the Firmament ſhall rent aſunder, like the Opening of Curtains; this Old World ſhall fly away, like a Shadow, to the Right Hand and to the Left. Then ſhall Naked Souls hang hovering in the Empty Space, 'twixt Paradiſe and Hell. The Throne ſhall be plac'd, Judgment ſhall be given: And, to wind up the Myſteries of Fate, A New and Immortal World, ſhall at a Moment ſpring forth from the Womb of Eternity, and poſſeſs the Place of the Former.

I write not this to Inſtruct thee, Venerable Bedredin, who art a Mine of Knowledge; but, to ſatisfy thee, that tho' I live amongſt Infidels, yet I conſerve Inviolate the Faith of my Fathers, believing the Book brought down from the Eternal Archives. Thou feareſt, that that I ſhall turn Chriſtian, being accuſed by Some, of Levity in my Opinions; by Others, of Profaneneſs and Atheiſm; by All, of diſcovering too favourable an Inclination to the Nazarenes.

Suffer me, O Holy Preſident of the Servants of God, to purge my ſelf of theſe falſe Imputations, the Product of Envy and Malice. Permit me to lay at thy Sacred Feet, a Modeſt Apology for my Faith.

Let not that Deſcription of the Chriſtians Meſſias, which I ſent thee in my laſt Letter, create in thee an Opinion to my Diſadvantage; nor prevail on thee to think, I can ever ſwerve from the profound Attach I owe to the Sent of God. I Honour Jeſus, the Son of Mary; and ſo I do all his Brethren, the Prophets in Paradiſe: This I am taught in the Alcoran. Where is then my Crime? If I give Vertue its due Praiſe, even in the Infidels, am I therefore a Nazarene? If I ſpeak with Reverence and Modeſty of Chriſtian Princes, am not I therefore a Muſſulman? Or, does the Book of Glory teach us Arrogance? Surely, my Traducers will bluſh, when they ſhall conſider, that our Auguſt Emperors themſelves, (who are Sovereigns of All the Kings on Earth,) when they vouchſafe to write to Chriſtian Princes, they dictate their Letters in a Style, full of Affection and Regard. They give them Magnificent Titles at the Beginning; and, at the Concluſion, they wiſh them Encreaſe of Felicity, both Here and in Paradiſe. And, would it become become a Slave, to treat Crown'd Heads with leſs Reſpect, than does the Maſter of the Univerſe? If I have contracted Friendſhip with ſome of the Chriſtian Derviſes, it was to ſerve the Ends of the Sublime Port, and perform the Rites of Gratitude. I thought it no Crime, to receive a Kindneſs from any Man; or to return it, without examining his Religion. But perhaps they ſuſpect the Intimacies I had with Cardinal Richlieu, and ſtill have with his Succeſſor Mazarini. Reſt aſſured, O Holy Derviſe, That my Acceſs to theſe Princes of the Roman Church, is ſo far from being Criminal, that without it I never had been capable of penetrating into the Counſels of the Infidels, nor of doing any effectual Service to the Grand Signior. The Countenance which my Familiarity with theſe two Great Miniſters affords me, has all along facilitated my Deſigns: And, whilſt under their Umbrage, I am taken for a Zealous Chriſtian; I ſecretly lay a Foundation whereon, in due time, ſhall be built, even in the Heart of Chriſtendom, Triumphal Arches, for the Victorious Muſſulmans. 'Tis ſtrange, methinks, that after all this, I ſhould be ſuſpected! That notwithſtanding I have patiently endur'd Nine Years Confinement, to an Obſcure and Private Life; a Melancholy Baniſhment to a ſtrange Country; yea, to a City for which I have a Natural Averſion; a City the moſt Unclean, Noiſie and Vain in the whole Earth; to be ſhut up, for the ſake of avoiding Diſcovery, in a Chamber ſo Narrow, that Suſpicion it ſelf; nay, even Thought, the Mother of that Little Paſſion, would ſweat and be ſtifled, when once Circumſcrib'd within theſe Walls; and after all this, to be made a Priſoner of State, on Jealouſie of being a Mahometan: To abide that Puniſhment ſo many Moons, unmov'd, uncorrupted, and at length to be releaſed, to the Advantage of the Ottoman Intereſt; and yet, to be traduc'd at Home, for a Traytor to God, his Prophet, and my Sovereign, has ſurely ſomething in it of Inconſiſtent.

What is then my Crime? Or, why am I thus aſpers'd? Let my Slanderers hereafter be ſilent. Unleſs they will lay it to my Charge, That in ſome of my Letters, I have diſcover'd a Mind free from Superſtition; That I put a high Value on Reaſon, and have no low Eſteem, for ſome of the Ancient Philoſophers; That I endeavour to guard my Senſe, and will not ſuffer it to be muzzled with the Impoſitions of Ignorance and Prejudice; That I do not think it a Neceſſary Qualification of a Muſſulman, to purſue with Inexorable Hatred, all Men that differ from me in Opinion. In fine, that in all my Converſation, I ſtrive to comport my ſelf, as One who aſſerts the Unity of the Divine Eſſence, the Plurality of his Prophets, the Determinate Number of the Elect; and, who is reſolv'd and prepar'd, rather to die a Thouſand Deaths, than voluntarily to commit any Impiety againſt theſe Principles, or the Intereſt of the Grand Signior, who has a Right to command all Mankind. If

theſe be Crimes, I muſt own my ſelf Culpable: If not, let my Accuſers lay their Hand upon their Mouth. And continue thou, Sage Doctor of our Holy Law, to inſtruct me with thy Counſels, to aſſiſt me with thy Prayers, and to protect me with thy Friendſhip. Then ſhall Mahmut perſevere a True Believer, a Faithful Slave to the Oſman Emperor, and a Devout Admirer of thy Longevity and Vertue.

I ſhould fear this might be the laſt Letter I ſhould have the Honour to ſend thee, were I not convinced by ſome near Examples, that Old Age was not reſtrained to the Times before the Flood. Though thou haſt far outpaſs'd the ordinary Years of Men, yet there is at this Time, not far from Paris, a Man who has near doubled thy Age. He is an Hermit, living on a Hill, where all Things neceſſary for Human Suſtenance ſeem to be wanting. The walls of his Houſe are built of Mud, with his own Hands (a weak Defence againſt Wind and Rains.) His Bed is compoſed of Leaves of Trees. A Stone ſerves him for his Pillow. His Diet conſiſts of ſuch Herbs and Fruits, as that Mountain affords him. A Neighbouring Well, allays his Thirſt. He has dwelt in this Place, and in this manner Eighty Three Years, after he had Travelled moſt Parts of Europe and Aſia. Ask him by what means he preſerv'd his Life ſo long, he anſwers, By living free from Care, and by being Indifferent to all Things. He foretells Things to come with marvellous Succeſs, as has often been obſerv'd. Which makes the People eſteem him a Prophet.

The

The French tell me of another, who lived longer than he, being Three Hundred Sixty and One Years Old when he died. He was call'd, John of the Times, in Regard he liv'd from the Reign of Charles the Great, to that of the Emperor Conrade. And, being ask'd What Diet he uſed, his Anſwer was, Honey within, and Oil without.

This comforts me with the Hopes of ſeeing thee on Earth, tho' many Years hence: Since, no Man can exceed thee in Abſtinence, Sobriety, and the Calmneſs of thy Mind.

The Great Author of Life ſo grant, that if I may not enjoy this Felicity Here, yet I may not, by any enormous Crimes, merit to be excluded thy Society in Paradiſe.

Paris, 11th. of the 7th. Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER

LETTER H.

To Murat Baſſa.

THE French are puffed up, with the late Defeat they gave the Spaniſh Fleet in Sight of Naples. Their Joy would know no Bounds were it not curb'd by the Loſs of the Duke of Breze, who was ſlain by a Cannon Bullet in this Naval Combat.

The Young Prince of Conde, has been alſo forced to withdraw his Army from before Lerida; that Place being ever Fatal to the French. This has leſſen'd the Diſgrace, which the Count of Harcourt received laſt Campagne, in not being able to carry that Town, after Six Moons Siege.

But, the News from the Levant, has elated all the Franks beyond Meaſure: Yet, I hope the Relations that are ſcatter'd abroad on that Subject, are rather an Effect of their Wiſhes, than of any real Succeſs againſt the Invincible Oſmans.

It is reported, that there have been two Sea-Fights, between our Fleets and the Venetians; that in the Former, we loſt two Thouſand Men, Seven Galleys and a Baſſa; that in the Latter, the Venetians took Forty Galleys, Six Caramuſals, and Fifty Saiques, laden with Men and Ammunition for the Relief of our Army in Candy.

The

The Honour of this laſt Victory, is aſcribed to the Valour and Conduct of Bernard Moroſini, and General Grimani; Bernard ſucceeding his Brother Thomas Moroſini, who was kill'd, as they ſay, in the Firſt Battel.

The Chriſtians every where expreſs great Joy for theſe Victories. The open Streets are fill'd with Tables, cover'd with all manner of Dainties, at the Publick Coſt. They feaſt and revel Night and Day. The Bells ring continually, and Bonfires are made, to celebrate the Triumph of the Nazarenes. They preſage to themſelves, the Conqueſt of the Ottoman Empire, and Eternal Victories.

From Dalmatia, the Poſts bring daily News of our Loſſes and Diſgraces. It is known here, that the Caſtles of Xemonido Novigrade, Nadin, Carin, and all the Places of Strength which we had in our Poſſeſſion, except Cliſſa, are taken by the Venetians.

They laugh at our Siege of Sebenigo, where we loſt two thouſand Men, and at length were forced to leave our Camp to the Chriſtians; our General being frighted away by a few Women.

It ſeems Strange and Ominous to me, that thoſe Arms which have formerly cruſh'd the Greateſt Monarchies to Pieces, and have chang'd the Face of the whole Earth, ſhould now be foil'd by a few Deſperado's! I dare be thus far a Prophet, that either the Soldiers are diſguſted, which will produce a Revolution; or, the Mighty Empire of the Oſmans, Oſmans, is in its Decline; which God avert.

The Chriſtians (who are not ignorant of our Affairs, nor of the very Secrets of the Seragilo) by an Odd Kind of Charity, pray for the Long Life of Sultan Ibrahim: For, they ſay, our Armies muſt needs miſcarry during his Reign; moſt of the Officers being offended at his Licentious Life, and Cruel Actions. Beſides, they tax him with Profuſeneſs, in that he has not ſpared the Private-Treaſury of Gold, which, by the Frugality of his Predeceſſors, had been heaped together; and, which it was not counted lawful for them to touch, unleſs in the utmoſt Peril of the Empire. They ſay, that by the Additions which Sultan Amurat had made, this Treaſure was augmented to above Thirty Millions of Sequins: But, that our preſent Emperor has ſquander'd moſt of it away, on his Pleaſure. They compare him to Heliogabalus, the moſt Effeminate Prince that ever Reign'd: Praiſing at the ſame Time, the Magnanimity and Valour of Sultan Amurat; who, they ſay, was the Stouteſt Man on Earth. They highly applaud his Bravery at the Siege of Babylon, when he accepted the Challenge of the Perſian Soldier; and entring into a ſingle Combat with the Unhappy Redhead, at one Blow, with his Sabre, cleft him (though in Armour) to the Middle. In Memorial whereof, thou knoweſt, that Armour hangs to this Day in the Hazoda. In fine, they extoll extoll his Juſtice: Whereof he gave a remarkable Inſtance, in puniſhing a certain Hagia, who had cheated a Pilgrim of his Jewels: Thou remembreſt that Paſſage. And, the Stone-Mortar, wherein that Miſerable Wretch was pounded alive by his Own Sentence, is yet to be ſeen at the Gate of the Divan, a Monument of his Villainy, and the Sultan's Juſtice.

These things are not unknown in the Weſt: For, the Nazarenes have their Intelligences, in the Imperial City. Hence they derive Occaſions, to Cenſure or Praiſe the Actions of our Auguſt Emperors, who are Companions of the Sun, and Brothers of the Stars.

What I have ſaid, I truſt to thy Integrity: Whereof I have had Experience. Thoſe who degenerate from that Vertue, Souls may their find no more Reſt in the Other World, than a Frenchman's Hat has in This, which is always in Motion. Adieu.

Paris, 15th. of the 8th. Moon, of the Year, 1647.

LETTER III.

To Mahomet Techli, Baſſa of Bosna, at his Camp in Dalmatia.

THOU art a fit Man to lead the Muſſulman Armies, who durſt not hold up thy Head againſt a few Women? Perhaps thy Mother's Milk hangs yet on thy Chin; thou art wean'd from the Diſcipline of the Nurſery. Was the Strong Fortreſs of Sebenico of ſo ſmall a Price, that ſhould'ſt baſely decamp from before it, becauſe a few Females appear'd on the Walls? Is this the Way to aggrandize thy Maſter? What will the Chriſtians ſay to this Cowardice? Nay, What do they not ſay already? The News of that Siege had reach'd all Parts of Europe; the Nazarenes were big with Expectation of the Event. Now they know it, they laugh both at thee, and at all the Muſſulmans. Thou haſt brought a Diſgrace on the moſt Exalted Empire in the World.

What if thou did'ſt loſe two thouſand Men before the Walls of that Fort? Is that a ſufficient Juſtification of thy Raiſing the Siege? Our Glorious Sultans do not uſe to win Cities and Caſtles without Blood; neither do they ſpare to ſacrifice the beſt part of their Army to the Honour of their Arms; whilſt our Indefatigable Soldiers have mounted on Heaps of Slaughter'd Spahi's, and ſcal'd the Battlements of their Enemies. Whereas, thou wert afraid of a few Stones, that the Women hurl'd on thy Men from the Walls! Thou art more effeminate than Sardanapalus! It were fitter for thee, to handle the Diſtaff, and Spin for thy Bread, than to draw a Sword in the Field of Honour. It is a wonder thy own Soldiers do not abandon thee, being aſham'd to ſerve under ſo Weak a Commander.

I counſel thee, ſpeedily to recover thy loſt Reputation, by ſome notable Service. Let not Perils affright thee; but remember, that true Fortitude ſurmounts all Difficulties; and, that thou canſt not paſs into the Temple of Honour, but through that of Vertue. It is not my Part to project for thee: the whole Country is before thee. Thou knoweſt, or at leaſt oughteſt, to know, the Motions and Strength of thy Enemies. Do ſomething ſpeedily, that ſhall ſpeak thee Wiſe and Valiant. Thou hadſt better loſe thy Life ſo, than by a Bow-ſtring.

Take this Advice as a Mark of my Friendſhip; for, Mahmut uſes not ſo frankly to reprove thoſe, whom he eſteems his Enemies. Adieu.

Paris, 15th. of the 8th. Moon, of the Year, 1647.

LETTER IV.

To Achmet Baſſa.

NOT long ago arriv'd here a Courier from Suedeland, bringing Letters from Queen Chriſtina, and Monſieur Chanut, the French Reſident at Stockholme.

Among other Matters, they give an Account, That on the Twenty Seventh Day of the Seventh Moon, that Great Princeſs had like to have been ſtabb'd, in the Midſt of her Guards, ſurrounded with her Courtiers, before the Altar of her God; at an Hour, when all the Subjects of that Kingdom, were on their Knees, to render Heaven Propitious to Her and the Publick.

That Day, there was a Faſt proclaim'd through all Suedeland; and, he was eſteemed no Good Subject, who did not repair to the Publick Solemnities. The Queen, to give an Example, went at the Third Hour of the Day to the Moſque of her Palace, attended by the Great Officers of State, and a Numerous Train of the Nobility. When the Preacher (as in the Cuſtom) had made an End of ſpeaking, all that were preſent fell on their Knees, to perform the appointed Devotions. But, it being the Faſhion of the Nazarenes, to utter ſome ſecret preparative Oraiſons; the Men covered their Faces with their Hats, to be more recollected.

While

While all Eyes were thus veil'd, a certain Fellow ſnatching the Opportunity, ſteps from his Place; and, without making any great Noiſe, by large Strides, advances unſeen to the Rails which encloſe the Pavement, next to the Altar, where the Queen was on her Knees. But, in leaping over, he was perceived by a certain Nobleman; who immediately cryed out to the Guards, to ſtop the Aſſaſſin. They croſs'd their Partiſans; but the Villain, hurl'd them one againſt another with ſo great Violence, that while they were ſtriving to recover their entangled Weapons, he got quite through them. At which time the Queen alſo raiſing her ſelf up at the Noiſe, puſh'd the Captain of her Guards, who kneeled beſide her. He ſtarting from his Place, leap'd between the Queen and the Murderer, who was now within Two Paces of her. He ſeizes the Wretch; and, upon immediate Search, they found Two long ſharp pointed Knives about him, without Sheaths; One in his Boſom, the other in his Pocket. The Priſon being in the Caſtle or Palace of the Queen, under her very Apartment, ſhe was not willing he ſhould be carried thither; but ordered him, to be reconducted to his own Chamber, which was in the College of Stockholme; he being an Eccleſiaſtick of the ſaid College: Commanding alſo, a good Guard to be ſet over him; which was performed accordingly.

As ſoon as the Wretch ſaw himſelf in his Chamber, he ſaid aloud, That when he went out in the Morning, he little thought of ever returning again; having undertaken an Action, in doing of which he expected to loſe his Life.

They uſed all Diligence imaginable, in diſcovering the Authors of this intended Murder; but, could learn Nothing more, than that this Fellow was a Lunatick, whom at Certain Seaſons an Unaccountable Fury ſpurred on to many Extravagancies.

Yet ſome ſuſpect, that he was hired by the Lutheran Clergy to give this Execrable Blow; who were apprehenſive, that the Queen hearkening too much to the Inſinuations of her Tutor, who was a Calviniſt, would Innovate the Eſtabliſh'd Religion of the Country.

If this be a well grounded Suſpicion, it follows at the beſt, that Religion, which ought to correct the Morals of Men, and have an Influence in reſtraining their Exorbitant Paſſions, is become the Corrupter of their Manners, and the Fomenter of the moſt Enormous Crimes. But, this is common among the Chriſtians, who being divided into Innumerable Parties; diſtinguiſhed by as many ſeveral Names; yet each Sect is ſo ſure that their Way is the only Right Path to Salvation, that they ſpare for neither Murders, Sacrileges, nor Treaſons, to proſelyte the Reſt to their Opinion; being unwilling that any ſhould live, who are not of the ſame Mind with them.

The King of France, and the Queen-Regent, received the News of Queen Chriſtina's Delivery from this Deſigned Blow, with much Joy; the Intereſts of both Crowns being at this time cloſely intermingled.

I

I can inform thee of Nothing more Remarkable at preſent, ſave, That certain Letters are intercepted, which the Duke of Bavaria had written to the Duke of Wirtemberg, and the Elector of Cologne: The Contents of which diſcover, That the Duke of Bavaria is not far from a Reconciliation with the Emperor; and that, in the mean time, he only waits the Event of Things, to direct him in the Choice of his Party.

God confirm thee in thy Integrity, that thou may'ſt never waver or ſwerve from the Service and Duty thou oweſt the Grand Signior.

LETTER V.

To Cara Hali, a Phyſician at Conſtantinople.

THOU haſt heap'd many Favours on me; yet I have never had an Opportunity of making the leaſt Acknowledgment. Accept now a Small Preſent from Mahmut's Hands, who being not Maſter of Wealth, can make no Great Ones. I ſend thee neither Silver, Gold, nor Jewels, which the Inſatiable Avarice of Mortals, has violently torn from the Bowels of their Common Mother. Neither ſhalt thou receive from me, any of the more familiar Products of the Earth, ſuch as grow on her Surface. Expect no choice Fruits, or Wine, or Oil; nor any thing framed by the Art of Man, whether for Delight, or Uſe. What I ſend thee, is the Dew of Heaven, a certain Quinteſſence of the Elements, an Ætheral Spirit, firſt condens'd into a Vapour, then into a more liquid Subſtance, and afterwards congealed into a Gum. It is the celebrated Manna of Calabria.

Adonai the Jew, ſent it to me out of Italy, as a Rarity. I knew not whom ſo properly to oblige with this Preſent, as the Studious of Natural Things, Hali the Sage Phyſician, and my Friend.

The

The Philoſopher Averroes, our Countryman, has written much of this excellent Subſtance. He calls it, the Food of the Airy Angels. And ſays, the Young Ravens crying in their Neſts, are nouriſh'd by this Heavenly Diet, when the Old ones forſake them: And, that the Chamelions, ſeek no other Repaſt during their Lives, but the Inviſible Manna that every where floats in the Morning Air. He holds it poſſible, That a Man, after he has paſs'd his Great Climacter, may live without any other Suſtenance, ſave what he receives from this Heavenly Diſtillation; that he may thus prolong his Life, for the Space of Seven Years, which will complete the appointed Age of Mortals. Many of the ſublimely inſtructed among the Arabians, are of the ſame Opinion; ſo are not a few of the Hebrew Rabbi's: But, the Chriſtians, who are Gluttons, laugh at this Doctrine, as Ridiculous and Impracticable: Forgetting at the ſame time, what they read in their Bible (which they pretend is the Rule of their Faith) that the Iſraelties had Nothing elſe to feed on, for a conſiderable time, in the Deſart, when they were almoſt Eight Hundred Thouſand Souls, and the Greateſt Part of them in their full Strength, Men of Arms, and inur'd to the Toils of War.

Certainly, it were a deſirable Thing, that this Divine Largeſs, were diſtributed to all the Regions on Earth. But, God ſends his Bleſſings to whom, and when he pleaſes 'Tis he that directeth the Clouds, when they move through the Air, and reſt not till they arrive at barren and dry Places, where they pour forth their Water to refreſh the Earth, and render it fruitful. God! There is but One God, Lord of the Worlds! Theſe are Signs of his Unity to True Believers, but the Incredulous have hardened their Hearts.

It is recorded, That in former Times, the Ground whereon this Manna deſcended, belong'd to a certain Nobleman of the Country; who, covetous of the Unuſual Bleſſing, undertook to encloſe all that Land with a high Wall, to the End that ſo rare a Gift, might not be made Common to every one. But, as ſoon as the Workmen had begun to lay the Foundation of this Encloſure, the Manna ceas'd to fall and ſo continu'd, as long as they proceeded in that Envious work. Which, when the Lord of the Ground was made ſenſible of, he commanded the Workmen to deſiſt: Saying withal, The Almighty gives, and the Almighty takes away. Henceforward, I will not ſeek to reſtrain the Free Gift of Heaven. Upon which, the Manna deſcended daily as before, and ſo has continued to do ever ſince. Doubtleſs, this is a Sign of God's Omnipotence.

If thou wilt permit me to play the Philoſopher, I will tell thee my Opinion, why this Manna is ſeen rather in the Kingdom of Naples, than in any other Region of the Earth.

It is well known, that the Earth of this Country, abounds with Veins of Sulphur, which are diffuſed up and down through all Parts, Parts, and heat the Soil to an Extraordinary Degree. Hence it follows, that the Lower Region of the Air, in this Country, muſt needs acquire a greater Degree of Heat and Dryneſs alſo, being perpetually rarefied by the Fiery Atomi, which every where tranſpire through the Pores of the Earth, as from a Furnace.

This being ſo, it is not hard to conceive, that the Vapours which are exhal'd by the Sun into the Upper Region, in the Heat of a Summers Day, and there become impregnated by the Ætheral Spirit, (which remains pure and uncloath'd in thoſe ſerener Tracts, and conſequently, is apt to Incorporate with any proper Vegicle,) Naturally deſcend again in the Cool of the Night; but not meeting with a Congeneous Body of Vapours in the Lower Region, that Air being over-purify'd, and grown defecate, through the too near Neighbourhood of the Burning Soil; ſo that they cannot diffuſe themſelves through the Air, for want of a fit Medium, they conſiſting of Homogeneous Parts, and following the Natural Poſition of the Element, and the Laws of Gravity; contract themſelves into little Globular Forms the lower they deſcend, thus ſetling on the Leaves of Trees, on the Graſs and Herbs, on Stones, and any Part of the Earth, appearing like Grains of Tranſparent Gum.

Hence alſo I conceive, That the ſame Manna (which is Nothing elſe but an Æthereal Spirit, embodied in light and dulcid Vapours)

Vapours) abounds in the Air of moſt Countries, but remains inviſible, rarely ſo far condens'd, as to ſettle in a groſs Body on the Ground, becauſe the Air of thoſe Regions is not ſo rarify'd as is that of Calabria, having no ſuch Subterranean Fires to drink the Vapours up; but being moiſt and thick, the deſcending Manna, inſtead of contracting it ſelf into Globular Bodies, and through its Weight ſinking to the Earth, dilates it ſelf, and incorporates with the floating Vapours: Juſt as if you pour Drops of Water into a Veſſel full of the ſame Element, thoſe Drops do not ſink to the Bottom; but finding an Homogeneous Body, they mix with it, and are diſperſed every way; whereas, if there be nothing in the way to ſtop them, they immediately fall to the Ground.

But I ſhall tire thee with my Philoſophy, forgetting that I ſpeak to a Man conſummate in all Sciences. Adonai relates many remarkable Paſſages of this Country, too tedious for a Letter. I will only tell thee in ſhort, That the Kingdom of Naples is eſteemed one of the moſt Delectable Regions on Earth, the Trees flouriſhing Twice a Year, and the Soil abounding to Prodigality with Corn, Wine, Oil and Fruits, and all Things neceſſary for the Life of Man. Yet the Inhabitants have this Proverb common among them; The Kingdom of Naples, is a Paradiſe of Delights, but it is inhabited with Devils: So corrupted are the Manners of the People.

Adieu,

Adieu, Dear Hali, and think not Mahmut tedious in his Letters, who has no other way, at this diſtance, to converſe with his Friends.

Paris, 19th. of the 10*th.* Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER VI.

To Kerker Haſſan, Baſſa.

WHEN this Diſpatch ſhall come to thy Hands, be aſſured, that Mahmut thy Countryman, and Slave to the Slaves of the Grand Signior, wiſhes thee multiplicity of Happineſs. I have many Reaſons to honour thee, beſides the Natural Affection, which is, or ought to be, between thoſe who were born in the ſame Region. The many Favours thou haſt done me, have far exceeded the Obligation which ariſes from the Vicinity of our Birth: Though, that was ſo near, that a ſtrong Man would have meaſur'd the Diſtance with one Flight of an Arrow.

The Preſent of Kopha, for which I returned thee Thanks in my laſt, has wrought wonderful Effects on me, being a perfect Cure of the Melancholy, to which I was before ſubject. It has freed me from many Diſtempers; and,

and, I owe the present Ease and Cheerfulness I enjoy to this Generous Gift.

Methinks, while I am drinking this excellent Liquor, I am at Constantinople, conversing with my Friends. It revives in me the Genius of Asia; and so advantageously transforms the Idea's of things which I see, that the Crosses on the Tops of the Christian Temples, appear to me as Half-Moons; And, my Imagination Presents to me, Turbants instead of Hats, as Men walk along the Streets of Paris.

Doubtless, great is the Force of what we eat or drink, which has occasioned all Wise Lawgivers, among other Sanctions, to prescribe certain Rules of Diet: And, the Care of our Holy Prophet, has been exquisite in this Point, his Prohibitions, extending to all Unclean Meats and Drinks; since, they deprave the Constitutions of Men, and encline them to Vice. But, by his own Example, he recommended to us the Use of this Admirable Berry; Imposing a New Name on the Tree that bears it, when he called it, the Tree of Purification. Hence it is, that all the Mussulmans affect to partake of the Sanctify'd Benefit; in being the Universal Beverage, of the Osman Empire. Were the Virtues of it known in these Western Parts, it would match, if not supplant the Credit of their Wines: since it equally refreshes the Spirits, without Intoxicating the Brain.

I know not whether thou hast seen Festibali my Brother, since thy Return from Arabia.

Arabia: Or, whether thou haſt heard the News he brought with him out of the Eaſt. He has ſurvey'd the Indies, Tartary, China, Tunquin, Perſia, and other Regions, whoſe Names are hardly known in ſome Parts of the Ottoman Empire. Indeed, we have formerly had but an odd Idea of thoſe Remote Countries: But eſpecially China, has been hid from the greateſt Part of the Earth.

In my earlier Years, I have heard Men of Gravity, who would be taken for Knowing Perſons, ſay, That China was but a Tributary Province of the Tartars, a Contemptible Corner of Aſia, and ſo barren, as it could hardly afford Suſtenance for its Inhabitants; which is a Sign, it is well Peopl'd. Aſſuredly, our Fathers were ignorant of this Country; which, after the Perpetual Monarchy of the Oſmans, may be eſteemed the Second Empire on Earth.

My Brother ſays, it contains Sixteen Provinces, each as large as a Kingdom: And, that all together, they fill up a Tract of Ground as big as Europe, which, thou knoweſt, is one of the Four Quarters of the World: And, that this vaſt Dominion, contains above a Hundred Millions of Inhabitants.

The Emperor who Reigned, when Peſtelibali was there, was called Zunchin: A young Prince, not above Thirty Years of Age; in whoſe Veins, ran the Blood of Sixteen Emperors, his Progenitors.

In the Year 1640. Two Great Officers in his Army, having drawn to their Party an Innumerable numerable Company of the Soldiers, and being encouraged by ſome Grandees at the Court, made a Revolt. The Names of theſe Rebels were Lycungx and Changien. They ſoon became Maſters of Five Provinces: But, quarrelling about their Shares, Lycungx cauſed his Aſſociate to be poiſoned; and taking on himſelf the ſole Command of the Rebels, was proclaimed by them, Emperor of China. After which, he marched directly with his whole Forces againſt Pequin, a City where the Emperor kept his Court: Knowing that the Conqueſt of this Place, would ſecure to him, all the remaining Provinces of the Empire.

The Chineſe are reputed a moſt Ingenious People, excelling in all manner of Mechanick Inventions; and the boldeſt Architects in the World. They build Bridges from one Mountain to another, to ſhorten the Travellers Journey o'er the Plain between them; and, raiſe Towers almoſt up to the Clouds. Some of their Cities, are ſaid to be near Thirty Leagues in Compaſs, having Double Walls and Ditches. And, my Brother ſays, that Pequin, wants not much of this Extent: And, that the Palace of the Emperor, is near a League in Circuit, environ'd by Three Walls, and as many Moats; beſides Bulwarks, and other Fortifications. He adds, That this Mighty City and Palace, is guarded by an Hundred Thouſand Soldiers.

This Impregnable Place, the Rebels took by Stratagem, which was able to have reſiſted sisted all the Force of Asia. Lycungz held a Private Correspondence with several Grandees within the Town and Palace. By whose Connivence, he sent great Numbers of the Stoutest Men in his Army, disguized in the Habit of Merchants; who lodging themselves in divers Quarters of the City, on a Day appointed, suddenly appear'd in Arms; and surprizing the Guards who defended the Gates, slew them all, and opened the Gates to the Rebels.

Who can express the Confusion and Slaughter, that filled all Parts of the City with Mourning and Blood? The Barbarous Conqueror sacrificed all the Loyal and the Brave, to his Unpardonable Ambition; disarmed those who escaped the first Massacre; and having made himself Absolute Master of the City, lays a close Siege to the Imperial Palace.

The Emperor now finding that he was betrayed, and that it was too late to defend himself from the Cruel Persecution and Insult of the Traytors; takes Advantage of the short Resistance, which some of his Faithful Servants made, to consult his own Honour, with that of the Empress and his Daughter. He had above Three thousand Wives; for whom he could not provide in that Flood of Calamities; all his Care being employed, to prevent the last Triumph of his Enemies, in not suffering the Royal Blood to be shed by the profane Hands of those Villains. He entred into the Gardens of the Palace, accompanied panied onely by his Empress and Daughter, with Three Faithful Eunuchs. The Young Princess, (who was a Lady Educated in all the Chinese Learning) seeing the great Affliction of her Royal Parents, the Inevitable Ruine of their Family, and the Universal Desolation; fell on her Knees, and spoke to her Father, as follows:

My Lord,

'SInce it is the Will of the Immortal 'Gods, thus to extinguish the Lustre 'and Majesty of our Sublime Race, let 'their Decrees be fulfilled. But, let not 'me be a Spectator of my Parents Fall, 'or survive a Tragedy, at which the 'Earth it self must tremble. Have this 'Compassion on my tender Years, and 'let these Eyes be closed, before Death 'seal up Yours, from which mine bor-'rowed all their Light. Think not, be-'cause I am Young, I fear to die: I long 'to see our Kindred Gods, and represent 'the Fate of China, so as to provoke their 'speedy Vengeance. Surely, our Deify'd 'Ancestors, at my Complaint, would 'gather all the Thunder in the Heavens, 'and shower it down upon these Perjur'd 'and Ungrateful Traytors. Or else, they'd 'play the Chymists, and extract the most 'Envenom'd Influence of the Stars, and

'dart

'dart the Heavenly Poyson on the Rebels, 'as they lie before these Sacred Walls, 'and thus would put a Period to their 'Cursed Treason. Make no Delay, my 'Royal Father, but, try the Experiment; 'release me from these Chains, which 'hinder my Escape to Paradise: And, let 'me be the Herauld of such News, as 'ne'er before surpriz'd the Blest'd Above.

The Emperor mov'd with this Passionate Address of his Daughter, drew a Dagger from his Girdle, and therewith stabb'd her to the Heart. And then, struck with Remorse at so Unnatural a Deed, covered his Face with a Veil of Silk. Thus acting Agamemnon's-Part, when, to fulfil the Oracle, he Sacrific'd his Daughter Iphigenia.

After this, the Empress overwhelm'd with so many Sorrows, retired into a Grove, and Hang'd her self with a Silken Cord on a Tree. The Emperor seeing this Mournful Spectacle, was resolved no longer to delay his own Death. Wherefore, following her Example, he dispatch'd himself likewise by a String. But he first bit a Vein; and, with his Blood, writ the following Words:

'WWhat is there now desirable on Earth, 'after I am thus betray'd by my own Subjects? I accuse not the Inferior People: 'They are Innocent? 'Tis to the Mandarins,

'darins, I owe my ſudden Fall, with the 'Ruine of this Mighty Empire. Behold 'in me, the Royal Line extinct. I am the 'Laſt of Sixteen Emperors. I, that was 'Lord of ſo many Spacious Regions, 'Guardian of the Bedchamber of the Sun, 'ſole Monarch of the Orient, Lieutenant 'to the Gods of the Mines, Poſſeſſor of 'Infinite Treaſures, at whoſe Name a 'Hundred Millions of my Subjects touch'ed the Ground with their Foreheads; 'am now ready to be trampled under 'Foot, by the Baſeſt of my Slaves. But 'I will prevent my own Diſgrace, and 'carry this Majeſtick Soul Inviolate, to 'my renowned Fathers: VVhoſe Ven'geance join'd with that of all the Gods, 'ſhall fall on the Perfidious Mandarins, 'who have betrayed both Me and this 'exalted State to Ruine.

A Narrative of theſe Mournful Paſſages, was Printed in the Chineſe Language; ſuppoſed to be done, by the Order of the Emperor's Attendants, who follow'd him into the Garden, and were Witneſſes of what was ſaid and done. A Copy of which, my Brother procur'd to be tranſlated into Arabick, by a Merchant of our Nation, who underſtood the Chineſe Language, and reſided in Pequin.

In

In fine, my Brother says, That when he departed from China, he left the Tyrant Lyeungz in possession of the Emperor's Palace; where he found an Hundred Millions of Ingots in Gold and Silver, besides an Ineſtimable Treasury of Pearls and Precious Stones. All which Wealth, had been heap'd together, by the Frugality of the Chineſe Emperors.

By this thou may'ſt take an Eſtimate, of the Grandeur and Strength of this Formidable Monarchy, of which we have had ſuch Contemptible Notions. Neither ſhalt thou have Occaſion, to be ſurprized at the Monſtrous Riſe and Fortune of this Rebel, who in ſo ſhort a Time, was lifted to the Height of Humane Sovereignty; when thou conſidereſt that all Things are ſubject to Viciſſitude and Change.

That God, who eſtabliſhes whom he pleaſes on the Thrones of the Earth, and at the Determined Period of Empires, depoſes ſuch, as truſt to their Strength and Riches; defend our Sovereign from Treaſons, and from the Arrows that fly in Obſcurity.

LETTER

LETTER VII.

To Darnith Mehemet, Bassa.

WHAT Obligation have I, to be concerned for the Infidels? Or, what Interest in the Uncircumcised? Yet, Nature has tied all our Race, in some Common Bonds of affection; and Humanity teaches us, to rejoice at the Deliverance of the Oppressed.

The Kingdom of Naples, has long groaned under the Yoke of Spanish Tyranny. The Labour of the People, sufficed not to pay the Unreasonable Taxes, that were levied on them. They sweat Blood to become yet more Miserable; whilst their Cruel Masters, having fleec'd 'em to Nakedness, would use Advantage of their Poverty, to rivet their Chains yet deeper, and render their Servitude past Redemption.

The People were sensible of their Calamity, yet knew not how to shake off the Yoke. It had gall'd 'em to the Nerves and Sinews; their Strength was gone. Despair of Redress, had rendred 'em supine; and took from 'em, the very Power of meditating their Recovery. But Heaven, which protects the Oppressed, has raised up a Youth from among the Meanest of the People, to assert the Publick Liberty. A Fisherman, who has not seen Four and Twenty Winters, has undertaken taken to restore the Ancient Privileges of the Neapolitans. Who can penetrate into the Methods of Eternal Destiny, which makes Use of so Contemptible Instruments, to check the Power of the Greatest Monarchs?

This bold Youth, inspired with a Zeal for the Publick, ran one Day into the Streets, crying with a loud Voice, Long live the King of Spain, but let the Corrupt Officers perish. He had no other Weapon, save a Reed in his Hand; but was soon followed, by a Multitude of Boys and Young Men, with Clubs and Staves, who went along the Streets of that Populous City, repeating the Cry after him, Long live the King of Spain, but let the Corrupt Officers perish. At first, the Citizens laugh'd at the infant Tumult; but, in less than Two Hours, this Fisherman (whose Name was Masaniello) had enrolled above Two Thousand Boys.

The next Day his Numbers encreased, by the Accession of all sorts of Lewd and Idle Persons, Malecontents, Debtors, and such as were desirous of Novelty. Nay, some of the better Sort of Citizens, shut up their Shops, took Arms, and mingled with the Popular Insurrection; So that, ere Mid-day, there were above Ten thousand Men and Boys, marching along the Streets, and burning the Custom-House, with all their Books of Accompts, throughout the City.

When Masaniello beheld himself at the Head of so vast a Multitude, he thought it time to declare the Reason of his raising this Tumult.

Tumult. Wherefore, getting on an Eminent Place in one of the Markets, he speaks to his Followers to this Effect:

Rejoice, O ye Faithful People, and send up Acclamations to the God of Heaven, who Puts this Day put it into your Hearts and Hands to be your own Redeemers. As for me, my Spirit burneth within me to see the Publick Oppressed, and I set no Value on my Life, when I first began this Glorious Enterprize. One of the Princes threatned me with the Gallies, if I persisted; but, here are Thousands ye Miserable, ready to stand by and Secure him, if any Violence be offered him. Wherefore, Courage, my Friends, and Fear not, for the Cause is Glorious, and Heaven will Protect it. Let not the Name of Princes or Nobles Terrify you. They are the Men who Oppress you, and mock you with Pageants of Power, while you Groan under Misery and Poverty. Take up Arms, and the Justice of your Cause, which God has brought you together; let Nothing separate you till you have freed your Country, your Wives, and Children from perpetual Servitude. Chuse you a Leader, a Man of Courage and Resolution, who is willing to Sacrifice his Life for the Common Good, as for me, I have hitherto liv'd a Fisherman, and so I intend to die.

The

The first thing he did, after he was confirmed in this Authority, was, to set open the Prisons, and list the Prisoners under the Banner of the People. Then he divided this confused Army into Regiments and Companies; and sent forth a Proclamation throughout Naples, commanding all to take Arms, on pain of having their Houses burnt. So that in a little time, he had above Fifty thousand Armed Men at his Heels.

Thus accompanied, he marches directly toward the Viceroy's Palace, vested in Cloth of Silver, with a Naked Sword in his Hand. He was accompanied by a Cardinal, who undertook to be a Mediator between the Viceroy and the People. His Presence restrain'd the Multitude within some Bounds of Moderation; for they reverenc'd him, as the Father of the City. Yet they burnt above Sixty Palaces of the Nobles to the Ground with all their Furniture and Goods; and it was present Death for any one to rescue or purloin any thing from the Flames; so rigorously just was this New Law-giver, this Moses of the Neapolitans. It was in vain for the Viceroy, to oppose Force against so Formidable an Insurrection. He entertain'd the Young Fisherman with Ceremonies due to a Prince: And having concluded a Truce, gave him the Title of Chief Tribune of the Faithful People. This increased the Veneration the Citizens had already conceiv'd for Masaniello: So that in a Day or two more, he saw himself at the Head of an Hundred and fifty thousand Armed Men. He gave out all Orders for the Republick; publiſhed new Edicts; and, all Commiſſions, were iſſued in his Name. He procured the Gabels to be for ever aboliſh'd; reſtor'd the People to their Ancient Liberty: And, in Fine, was Murder'd by his own Followers.

Let me not ſeem an Advocate for Sedition when I tell thee, there was ſomething Brave and Heroick in the Actions of this Youth. So ſtrange a Revolution, in ſo ſhort a time, has ſcarce been heard of in the World: For a Beardleſs Slave, to raiſe himſelf in Six Days, to as Abſolute and Uncontroulable a Sovereignty, as the Greateſt Monarch on Earth enjoy'd; to be obeyed by an infinite Number of People, without the leaſt Heſitation or Demur, were it for Life or Death; and all this, without any Motive of Ambition or Intereſt, but only to aſſert the Publick Liberty; Is a convincing Argument of his Vertue; and ſhews, That Heaven approved his Enterprize. But then again, for him to loſe all this Power in Four Days more, to be Murder'd in Cold Blood by his own Party, by the People whoſe Cauſe he had ſo ſucceſsfully vindicated; this ſhews the Inſtability of Human Affairs; and, that there is nothing Permanent on this ſide the Moon.

I pray God to inſpire the Miniſters of the Sublime Port, to take ſuch Meaſures as may preſerve the Muſſulman Peace. Adieu.

Paris, 13th. of the 11th. Moon,
of the Year 1647.

LETTER VIII.

To Solyman, his Couſin, at Conſtantinople.

WHEN I clos'd up my Laſt, the Hour of the Poſt was near expir'd; and the Meſſenger who carries my Letters to him, haſtened my Diſpatch, preventing what I had farther to ſay to thee.

I am ſollicitous for thy Welfare, both as thou art a Muſſulman, and ſo near a Relation. Do not forfeit thoſe Titles, by degenerating from thy Kindred, and from all the Illuminated of God. Truth is compriz'd in a little Room; but, Error is Infinite. Thou makeſt a wrong Inference, from the Moderation and Charity of the True Believers, when thou concludeſt, That becauſe they believe, it ſhall go well with all Honeſt Men, let their Opinions and Ceremonies be what they will; therefore thou ſhalt be ſafe, in retrenching the Endleſs and Burdenſom Waſhings (as thou termeſt them) of the Muſſulmans, ſo long as thou leadeſt a Good Moral Life.

Art thou ſuch a Friend to Idleneſs and Impurity, that thou wilt by a moſt pitiful Sophiſtry, cheat thy ſelf of Salvation, rather than take the Pains to waſh thy ſelf after the Manner, and at the Times appointed by the Prophet of God, and practis'd by our Fathers, and all the Faithful throughout the World? If it be allow'd, that such as either out of Ignorance, or hindred by some other Invincible Cause, do not embrace our Holy Law, are not Circumcised, and repair not to the Assemblies of the Faithful, shall nevertheless enter into Paradise, provided they obey the Law of Nature Imprinted on their Hearts; does it follow therefore, that one who has been bred up in the Undefiled Faith, who has been Circumcised, and lifting up his Right Hand to Heaven has pronounc'd the Seven Mysterious Words, which cannot be repealed; does it follow, I say, that such an one, shall be regarded by God or his Prophet, any otherwise than as a Heretick or an Infidel, if he live not up exactly to the Graces that have been given him? No, assure thy self, if thou art in the Number of these, thou art an Apostate; thy Vertues are Vices, and all thy Good Works are an Abomination.

Remember the Piety and Magnanimous Zeal of Assan Hali, thy Grandfather; who, when he was taken Prisoner by the Cossacks, was entertained with extream Rigor and Severity. Nevertheless, a certain Jew in the City, who knew him, brought him every Day, by Permission of the Keeper, as much Water as would suffice to wash him, and to quench his Thirst. But, one Day, as he went with his accustomed Load, and was entring the Gate of the Prison; the Keeper, either either out of Malice or Wantoneſs, ſpilt moſt of the Water on the Ground, forbidding the Jew at the ſame time, to bring any more that Day.

The honeſt Hebrew, went in with the Remainder of the Water, and deliver'd it to the Priſoner; who, preſently prepared to waſh himſelf, after the accuſtomed Manner of the Muſſulmans. The Jew ſeeing that, told him, There was not Water enough to quench his Thirſt. And therewith, related to him what the Keeper had done. I ſee there is but a Little (reply'd the Vertuous Old Man) but, he that Drinks, or Eats, before he has Waſh'd himſelf, is guilty of defiling his Soul, and is not worthy to be numbred among the True Believers. Therefore, it is better for me to die for Thirſt, than violate the Law brought down from Heaven, and tranſgreſs the Traditions of my Fathers. Having ſaid this, he Waſh'd himſelf, being Reſign'd to Providence.

Couſin, deceive not thy ſelf with vain Opinions, nor ſuffer Hypocrites to ſeduce thee. Imitate the Adder, and ſtop thy Ears againſt the Crafty Inſinuations of Hereticks. It is reported of this little Serpent, That by Natural Inſtinct, being ſenſible when a Magician is about to utter words, which being heard will enſnare it, lays one Ear cloſe to the Ground, and with its Tails ſtops the other, to the End the Enchantment may have no Effect.

Admit not any Man to thy Converſation, who ſhall attempt to warp thee from the Simplicity of the Faith and Obedience, which thou oweſt to the Apoſtle of God. Without Water, there is no Purity on this Side the Grave. That Element, has a Force in it, of which thou art not aware. 'Tis the Third, in the Rank of Living Principles. 'Tis the Tabernacle of the Winds; The Seraglio of the Generative Spirit; The Stage of Wonders. In fine, it is the Purifier of every Thing that has Breath.

Thou knoweſt, that to ſerve the Neceſſities of the Prophet and his Army, Underſtanding and Speech was given to a Fountain in Arabia, which having promiſed to follow him to the Place of his Repoſe, made a Channel through the Deſart, and kept Pace with the Troops of the Faithful, till they came Medina Talnabi. That ſo, the Submiſſive to the Will of Heaven, might not want that Element, without which Life it ſelf would be a Burden and a Curſe.

And yet, thou ſpeakeſt contemptibly of Water as a very Indifferent Thing, whether we uſe it or not, any other ways than to quench our Thirſt. Thus, making no Difference, between the many Advantages we reap from that Element, and that Common Uſe to which the Beaſts put it. In how many Places of the Alcoran, does the Holy Prophet, record the Mercy of God, in giving us Water that is Freſh and not Salt? How does he celebrate his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, for directing recting the Clouds to barren and dry Places? Thou can'ſt not be ignorant, that it is one of the Encomiums of Paradiſe, that there are Gardens wherein flow many Rivers: And after all this, wilt thou deſpiſe ſo Holy and Bleſſed a Gift, without which, Earth and Heaven, Men and Angels, could not be completely happy?

Go learn then of the Indian Idolaters, who have never heard of the Book of Glory: Go learn of theſe Barbarians, to prize this Sanctify'd Creature. They travel many Hundreds of Leagues, to bath themſelves in the Waters of Ganges. With thoſe Incorruptible and All-purging Streams, the Brachmans fill certain Veſſels, and tranſport the Invaluable Liquor, to the utmoſt Parts of that Wide Empire. They travel on Foot, ſometimes Two thouſand Miles together, each Man with his Load of that precious Water, to ſupply the Wants of thoſe who live ſo remote from the River. So that a Bottle of it is many times ſold to the Princes and Nobles, for Two hundred Sequins, or Eight hundred Roupies: And yet, for all this, thoſe very Princes would not die with a ſafe Conſcience, had they not at leaſt once in their Lives made a Pilgrimage to this Renowned River, and bath'd themſelves in the Waves which blot out Sins.

O Couſin, let the Example of theſe Infidels make thee bluſh at thy Impiety, and excite thee to a diligent and indiſpenſible Practice of Cleaneſs: So ſhalt thou have a Sound Mind, in a Healthy Body: And the Angel of thy Nativity, will not ſhun thy Perſon. Adieu.

LETTER IX.

To the Kaimachmam.

THE Defeat of the Venetians and Morlacks in Boſna, has reached theſe Parts. That News is not unwelcome to Muhmut. But, I could wiſh our General had uſed his Victory with more Moderation. The Chriſtians term him Barbarian, Savage, Devil Incarnate; and load him with Execrations: For, having taken Priſoner the Captain of the Morlacks, he caus'd him to be Flea'd alive, and afterwards to be Impal'd. This Captain was an Eccleſiaſtick: They call him Stephano Sorich; and, in Honour of his Zeal and Fidelity, they entitle him, The Good Prieſt. They applaud his Magnanimity and Courage in Battel; and no leſs do they extoll his Conſtancy, during the Torments of ſo Cruel and Ignominious a Death. But, I tremble to think of the Blaſphemies and Curſes they utter againſt our Holy Prophet, and all the Muſſulmans! For, this Cruel Execution, tion, has ſcandaliz'd the Nazarener, and imbitter'd 'em even to Fury. Their Revenge is implacable: They would go to Hell themſelves, provided the True Faithful might be Damn'd for Company!

What will our Divine Law-giver ſay? Or, what Apology will our General make, when the Sent of God ſhall charge him, with driving ſo many thouſand Souls, into an Irreconcilable Hatred of the Undefiled Faith? For, they look not on this as the Action of a Private Man, but of one who repreſents the Perſon of our Auguſt Sovereign, the Great Protector of the Law brought down from Heaven. They ſuppoſe him to be honour'd with the particular Inſtructions of his Maſter: And therefore, they ſay, the Sultan has authoriz'd this Unheard of Cruelty; and, that our Religion countenances Tyranny, and the moſt Nefandous Method of ſhedding Innocent Blood.

I am no Advocate for Infidels; yet, ſuffer me to vindicate Nature, which is the Common Parent of us all. Suffer me to be Solicitous, for the Honour of our Holy Profeſſion, which is blemiſh'd by this Inhumane Murder. What Offence had this Unhappy Captain given, that deſerv'd ſo dire a Puniſhment? Was it, becauſe he fought valiantly, and perform'd Wonders in Defence of his Country? This is Nothing, but what becomes every Honeſt Man to do. And, had our General been truly Brave, he would have entertain'd his Priſoner, with a Reſpect due to his Merit.

Who was a more Inveterate Enemy of the Mussulmans, than the Renowned Iscbenderbeg, Prince of Albania? Who more Valiant or Successful, against the Ottoman Armies? It is Recorded of him, That he never shun'd a Battel, never fled from his Enemies, never shrunk from Perils, nor was ever wounded but once, in all his Life. And yet, he sustained a Continual War, from Two Successive Osman Emperors; defeated Seven Viziers, with their Forces; took all their Ammunition and Baggage; and, in several Combats, slew with his own Hands, above Two thousand Mahometans.

Our Fathers did not basely revenge themselves for all this, but cherish'd a Veneration for this Heroick Enemy, and honour'd the very Dust of such an extraordinary Person. For, after his Death, having conquer'd Albania, they sought out his Tomb, where they performed their Devotions, as at the Sepulcher of a Prophet. They open'd the Dormitory of the Defunct Warriour, and, with Religious Solemnity, took up his Bones, sharing the Honour'd Reliques among them; and, wrapping them up in Silk, wore them continually at their Breasts, esteeming them as Sacred Amulets against Misfortune.

Surely, our General would blush, at an Example of so great Vertue. But, perhaps he was incensed, because his Captive was a Priest: Mistaken Zeal might prompt him to this horrid Butchery. Thou, who art Justice it self, wilt not approve his Bloody Passion, Passion, when thou considerest, That the Priests of Jesus, are Men, as well as others; and, if they live in Error, the Fault is in their Education. However, many of them are Humble, Chast, Sober, and Lovers of Vertue. If there be others, whose Corrupt Lives have contradicted this Character, let the Crime and the Punishment rest on their Heads. It is not Reasonable, that the Innocent should suffer for the Faults of the Guilty. The Captain of the Morlacks, had the Reputation, of a Devout and Just Man, and a Stout Champion for his Country: Had he been taken for a Spy, or an Assassin, the Law of Arms would have adjudg'd him to Death. Yet such was the Clemency of Porsenna, King of the Hetrurians, that when Mutius Scevola, a Valiant Roman, came into his Camp, with design to Murder him, but by Mistake stabb'd one of the Captains, thinking it had been Porsenna; and to revenge that Miscarriage on himself, thrust his Hand into the Fire, till the Flesh was consum'd to the Bones: The King, astonish'd at his Undaunted Spirit, sent him away in Peace, raised the Siege of Rome, and entred into a strict Friendship with that Nation: Such Honour he bore to the Fortitude of his Enemy, and designed Murderer. But, the Captain of the Morlacks was not taken under these Circumstances: He lost his Liberty in the Heat of Battel, bravely Combating at the Head of his Army.

Would'st thou know the Grounds then of your General's Cruelty? It was purely for the Sake

Sake of a Jeſt. There went a Report, That when this Prieſt was born, his Body was all over raw; ſo that the Phyſicians were forc'd, by Art, to ſupply him with a Skin. Our Cruel General to ſport himſelf in the Poor Man's Miſery, commanded him to be Flea'd alive; uttering at the ſame time this Inhumane Sarcaſm; There was no Reaſon that he ſhould carry a Skin out of the World, who brought none in. This is atteſted by Two Gentlemen, who were made Priſoners with their Captain, heard theſe Words, ſaw him Executed, and afterwards made their Eſcape.

The Nazarenes Vow to Revenge this Unparallell'd Cruelty, on all the Muſſulmans that fall into their Hands, if this Butcher (as they term him) be ſuffer'd to go unpuniſh'd. I tell thee, ſuch Barbarous Actions, draw down the Vengeance of Heaven, on thoſe that commit them; and excite the very Beaſts of the Earth, to make War, and rid the World of ſuch Monſters.

Thou knoweſt what Uſe to make of this Intelligence: I will not pretend to Inſtruct the Second Miniſter in the Ottoman Empire.

Paris, 7th. of the 12th. Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER

LETTER X.

To the Mufti.

IF there be any Truth in what the Aſtro'o-gers tell us, That the Stars have Influence on the Governments of the Earth; One would think that Spain lies under ſome Malignant Aſpect.

The Fortune of that Kingdom, has for a long time run Retrograde. They have had nothing but Loſſes by Sea and Land. The Revolution; in Portugal, the Revolt of Catalonia and Rouſſillon, the Loſs of Ormus, in Perſia, and the Defection of Goa, with other Rich Towns of Traffick in the Indies, came one upon the Back of another.

Since which, there have been many Towns and Caſtles taken from the Spaniards in Flanders. The French made an Inſurrection in Palermo, breaking open the Priſons, and releaſing the Priſoners: And grew to ſuch a Head, that the Viceroy, fearing they would revenge the Tragedy of the Sicilian Veſpers; to pacifie the Multitude, was fore'd to Repeal the Edicts for Taxes, and Diſannul them for ever; and to paſs an Act of General Indemnity, both to the Rabble, and to the Priſoners whom they had freed.

This Tumultuous Spirit paſs'd from thence to the Kingdom of Naples; and there, like an Infection, ſoon ſpread it ſelf through all Parts, both both of City and Country: Two hundred thousand Men took up Arms, to vindicate the Privileges of the Neapolitans, under the Conduct of a Poor Young Fisherman. I have already transmitted to the Sublime Port, a Relation of this Formidable Sedition: Wherein, it may be thought, I have discovered too much Tenderness to the Infidels, and seem'd to Favour the Violences of a Faction. But, I hope thou wilt acquit me, when thou considerest, that these Governments of the Nazarenes, are not to be compared to the Sacred Ofman Empire, which is Establish'd by a Divine Right: It having been determined by the Angel, That he who should possess the Glorious Dormitory of the Sent of God, should be Entituled, The Sovereign of all the Kings in Earth. Therefore, it would be a Crime of the Highest Nature, to raise a Tumult or Sedition, within the Territories of our August Emperor, whose Dominion is confirm'd to him for ever, by a Patent from Heaven. But, the Case of the Nazarene Princes is different; who being professed Enemies to the Messenger of God, have no other Right to any thing, but what their Swords purchase. And therefore, when they prey upon others, and by Rapine and Spoil augment their Riches; it is no Wonder, if the Great Avenger of Crimes, stirs up some undaunted Spirits, to free their Country from Slavery and Ruine.

Those who are Curious, have remark'd many Observable Circumstances in this Revolution at Naples: As, That it was foretold by an

Astrologer,

Aſtrologer, a conſiderable Time before it happen'd, who pointed out the very Year wherein it ſhould come to paſs. The Extraordinary Eruptions alſo of Mount Veſuvius ſome Years ago, were eſteem'd as Preſages of ſome approaching Troubles in the State: For, it rained Aſhes on the City of Naples. I ſpoke of this Mountain, in one of my former Letters.

This reported alſo, That about the ſame Hour, wherein Maſamello, the Ringleader of the Seditious was Murder'd, there was ſeen a Man hovering in the Air, over the Principal Temple of Naples, with a Sword in his Hand, which he was putting up in his Scabbard: And, that a Voice was at the ſame time heard from on High, to utter theſe Words, His Labour is finiſh'd, give him Reſt.

This is certain, that whilſt he was at the Head of an Hundred Thouſand Men, Seven Aſſaſſines were hired by ſome of the Princes to ſhoot him; yet none of the Bullets could penetrate his Body, though Unarm'd, and only covered with his Fiſhing Rags: And, it was evident that theſe Bullets ſmote him in divers Places; his Garments being marked with them, and he ſtagger'd with the Force of the Blows.

Theſe are Extraordinary Occurrences, and would tempt one to believe, That this Young Fiſherman was the Inſtrument of Providence, and that Heaven protected both Him and his Cauſe.

'Tis

'Tis true indeed, it seem'd at last, as if he were abandon'd by that Divine Power, which had carried him through so Important an Enterprize, in that he was Slain by his own Soldiers. But, then it must be remembred, that this was not done, till his Work was finished, and he went beyond his Commission. Want of Sleep, the Multitude of Affairs, and much Wine, had impared his Reason, and rendred him Frantick; so that, his Actions were Insupportable, and his own Admirers grew weary of him. After his Death, his Head was cut off, and carried up and down the Streets on a Lance; and his Body was dragged through the Kennels. Yet the very next Day, the Multitude, to shew their own Ficklenels, took the Dead Body out of a Ditch, where they had laid it all Night: They Washed and Embalmed it; and having join'd the Head to it, carried it with great Pomp and Solemnity to the Principal Temple of Naples, attended with Drums and Trumpets, and above a Thousand Priests with Torches in their Hands. A Crown of Gold was put on his Head, and a Scepter in his Hand.

Thus the Neapolitans honoured that Beardless Youth, who in Ten Days time, had caused such a Revolution, as is scarce to be parallell'd. For, he was an Absolute Monarch, in Effect during that time. And of him it may be said, as it was once of an Emperour. That during his whole Reign, there was neither Spring, nor Autumn, nor Winter: For, his Royalty begun and ended, in the Seventh Moon.

By

By Letters from Nathan Ben Saddi, at Vienna, I perceive he is moleſted with Scruples about his Religion, being deſirous to build upon the ſureſt Foundation. I ſent him the beſt Advice I could, without making my ſelf a Hypocrite; which, thou knoweſt, is more offenſive to God, than an Open Sinner. I drew up an Abſtract of the Muſſulman Records; and preſented him with the Faithful Genealogy, from Iſmael, the Son of the Patriarch Ibrahim, down to our Holy Prophet. This I did, to rectifie an Old Inherent Error of the Jews, who boaſt, That only the Sons of Iſaac were True Believers. I endeavoured not to proſelyte him, by Sophiſtry and Artifice; but referred him, for better Satisfaction, to the Writings of the Ancients. I promiſed to furniſh him with Books of our Law, and the Comments of our Holy Doctors. This is impoſſible for me to perform, whilſt I am in this Place; unleſs thou, who art a Guide of thoſe who ſeek the Truth, vouchſafeſt to ſecond my Zeal. I addreſs to thee, Sovereign Prelate of the Faithful, in Behalf of a Deſcendent from the Younger Brother of Iſmael; in Behalf of one Circumciſed, but not in the Right Way. Favour him with thy Divine Inſtructions, and ſupply him with Treatiſes of Light and Reaſon. A ſeaſonable Application, may bring this Hebrew into the Number of the Muſſulmans; for, he is already diſguſted at the Synagogue.

But, if I have preſumed too far, in endeavouring to ſnatch a Soul from the Paws of

Tagot,

Tagot, correct me in thy Wisdom; for, I am but as an Infant before thee.

Paris, 15th. of the 1st. Moon, of the Year, 1648.

LETTER XI.

The Beginning of this Letter is wanting in the Italian Translation, the Original Paper being torn. . . . . . All Mens Hearts are filled with Joy, for this prosperous News, whilst I mourn for the Dishonour of Our Arms. Nothing but sad Tidings grate my Ears from those Parts, and more melancholy Presages possess my Soul. Methinks, I see thick Clouds gathering o'er the Imperial City. My Sleep is disturb'd with fearful Visions: I start in my Bed; and waking lay my Hand on my Sword, as if some Danger were at hand: I dream of Tumults and Disorders, Neighing of Horses, and Clashing of Arms in the Streets of Constantinople. I pray God avert the Omen.

It is reported here, That Ali, the Sangiac Bey of Lippa is taken Prisoner; and that his Son was tormented to Death before his Face, in a Manner peculiar to the Invention of their most Barbarous Tyrants: For, they caused sharp Thorns to be thrust between his Nails and his Flesh; which creates an intolerable Anguish; They laid him on a Bed of Iron Spikes, Spikes, and poured Melted Lead, Drop by Drop, on all Parts of his Flesh. Then they made a small Fire, and roasted him slowly to Death. If he chanced to groan, or make the least Complaint, in the midst of those grievous Tortures, they bid him remember the Good Priest Sorich, who set him an Example of Constancy and Courage; in that he never shed a Tear, or so much as sigh'd, when he was Flea'd alive.

Thou seest, that Revenge is sweet, even to those, who having receiv'd no Injury in their own Persons, yet are touched to the Quick, with the Violence that is done to another. This will appear in the Humour of the Italians, who prosecute their Enemies, with irreconcilable Hatred and Malice; whole Families being often engaged, in executing the Resentments of Two single Persons, who first began the Quarrel: But, much more forcible is this Passion in those, who have been notoriously hurt themselves. And, the Revenge of a certain Captain was Extravagant; who being informed, that his General had Debauch'd his Wife, took an Opportunity to single him out from all other Company, pretending to walk in the Fields. When he had him there alone, he clapt a Pistol to his Breast, threatning to kill him forthwith, if he moved Hand or Foot. Then he upbraided him with what he had done, in such Language, as convinced the General, his Life was in extreme Danger. Wherefore, he humbled himself, and confessed his Crime; begging begging of the Captain to ſpare his Life, and he would preferr him forthwith, to the beſt Office in the Army next his own. But, the furious Italian would not ſell his Honour ſo Cheap. He forced him to deny God, and utter many Blaſphemies, in Hopes of Saving his Life: And, when he had thus done, the Captain ſaid, Now my Revenge is complete, ſince I ſhall ſend thee Body and Soul to the Devil. With that he piſtoll'd him.

But, leaving theſe Infidels to their Diabolical Paſſions, I am concern'd at the Captivity of thy Brother; if it be true, which is related here, That he was taken in his Return from Canea to Conſtantinople. It will coſt the Baſſa of Algiers a Thouſand Crowns to ranſom him.

Adieu, Renarba. And if thou art deſirous to raiſe thy Self, take that Method which I have now propoſed to thee. God be propitious to thy Endeavours.

Paris, 4th. of the 2d. Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XII.

To the Venerable Muſti.

THou wilt ſay, the Neapolitans are a reſtleſs People, when thou ſhalt know, That there have been no leſs than Forty General ſurrections ſurrections in this Kingdom, ſince its firſt Separation from the Grecian Empire, whereof it was formerly a Member; and, that in the Space of Two Years they have had Five Kings, all of different Nations.

One would have thought, That after the Death of Maſanello, the Ringleader of the late Innovation, the Popular Heats would have ſlacken'd, and the People returned to their Duty; but, the paſſionate Deſire of Liberty, caus'd them to continue in Arms, till the Confirmation of their Privileges, ſhould come from the King of Spain.

In the mean Time, Don John of Auſtria who lay before the City with a Fleet of Fifty Galleons, play'd upon them inceſſantly with his Cannon by Sea; and, the Caſtles batter'd them by Land.

Cardinal Mazarini, who has the earlieſt Intelligence of Foreign Tranſactions, has had a Principal Hand in fomenting this Flame. For, as ſoon as the News of Maſanello's Death arriv'd here, he diſpatch'd away Couriers to Rome, with Inſtructions to the French Embaſſadour at that Court, requiring him, to uſe all poſſible Means, to cheriſh the Tumults in Naples, and not neglect ſo fair an Opportunity, of reducing that Kingdom under the Protection of France.

It will not appear ſtrange, That this great Genius, ſhould aim at the Conqueſt of Naples, when we conſider, That this Kingdom abounds in all Manner of Riches, to which its fortunate Situation contributes not a Little: For,

For, it lies in the moſt Temperate Part of the World. And, the Inhabitants are not Second to any People of Europe, in Martial Courage and Bravery. This is a Bait, which tempts the Cardinal; who is not ignorant, how valiantly the Anceſtors of the preſent Neapolitans, behav'd themſelves in the Wars of Ceſar and Pompey, and thoſe between the Romans and Carthaginians. Nor are they leſs Celebrated, for the ſtout Reſiſtance they made againſt the Huns, Goths, and Vandals. So that, this Kingdom, were it once brought under the French Dominion, would prove a Nurſery from whence this Monarch might draw many Thouſands of excellent Soldiers, to ſerve him in his Wars.

Beſides, it would be more commodious for him, to make Incurſions from hence into the Pope's Territories, if there ſhould ariſe any Difference between the two Courts; as there often do, about the Rights of the Gallican Church, the Franchiſes of the Embaſſadors, of this Crown in Rome, and other Privileges to which they pretend.

Therefore the French Embaſſador, according to the Inſtructions of Mazarini, ſent Commiſſioners to treat privately with the People of Naples, offering them Two Millions of Crowns, Twenty Gallions, with Eight and Fifty Gallies, and other Veſſels. They accepted the Propoſal, being weary of the Spaniſh Government, and deſirous of Novelty, Encourag'd alſo by what thoſe Commiſſioners repreſented to them concerning the Succeſs of the Engliſh, who by ſtanding on their Guard, and uſing that Power which God and Nature had given them, for the Defence of their Lives and Liberties, were now in a manner, become a Free People, having Aboliſh'd the Monarchy, and ſet up a Commonwealth: And this, they told them, was alſo done by Cardinal Mazarini's Counſels and Aſſiſtance. Now, all the Cry in Naples, was, Let France and the People of England flouriſh; and let the Faithful Neapolitans aſſert their own Liberty. So blind were theſe People, as not to conſider, That in putting themſelves under the Protection of the French, they did but exchange One Bondage for another; it being impoſſible for any Foreign Prince to keep this Kingdom, and pay all his Officers, Civil and Military, together with thoſe under their Commands, with much leſs Charge than the Revenues amount to. And, the French are as good at Inventing New Taxes, as any Court in Europe.

However, the Neapolitans were enchanted with the Thoughts of ſo much Gold, and other Aſſiſtance offer'd by the French Commiſſioners; and ſweeten'd with their fair Words, and glorious Promiſes. So that they immediately ſent Deputies, to entreat the Duke of Guiſe, who was then at Rome, to come and protect them, in taking on him the Chief Command of their Arms.

This Prince, thinking it a Generous Action, to Relieve the Oppreſſed: And, that at the ſame time, he ſhould do a conſiderable Service to the King of France, in rendring him Master of this Noble and Opulent Kingdom, went to Naples. Where, at first, he was receiv'd with Infinite Applause; was made their General; took an Oath of Fidelity to the People; did many notable Services; but was, in the end, Betray'd, and sent Prisoner to Spain.

If the Generosity, and brave Resolution of this Prince has acquired Commendation from some, in attempting to rescue these People from the Tyranny of their Governours; yet his Conduct is call'd in Question by others, who say, He discover'd but little Prudence in trusting himself to the Neapolitans, who had already sacrific'd Two of their Generals. (For, after the Death of Masanello, they chose another Captain, whom they call'd the Prince of Massa: This Prince falling under their Suspicion, was Beheaded by the Inconstant People.)

'Tis certain, that there is little Confidence to be put in the Multitude, whose Passions Ebb and Flow, and are more Tempestuous than the Sea. Yet a Brave and Generous Mind will shun no Dangers, to serve his Prince and his Country; for whom it is a Glorious Martyrdom to Die. There is no great Undertaking without Hazards; and he that is afraid to venture his Liberty and Life in a Good Cause, is not worthy to bear Arms. Had the Duke of Guize succeeded, his Conquest of Naples had made him Viceroy of one of the largest Kingdoms in Europe. It is said to be Five hundred Leagues in Circuit, containing Twelve ample ample Provinces: Twenty Archbiſhopricks: Biſhopricks, One hundred twenty ſeven: Thirty Caſtles: Barons, One thouſand four hundred: Earls, Fifty three: Forty Marquiſes: Thirty four Dukes; and Twenty Princes. The Inhabitants of this Kingdom, are ſaid to be above Two millions. The ordinary Revenues of the King, amount to Three millions of Crowns yearly, beſides the Voluntary Donatives which have been given by the Subjects of this State to their Kings, within the ſpace of Forty Years, amounting to Twenty Eight millions, and Six hundred thouſand Duckats. This Kingdom is water'd by a Hundred and fifty Rivers, beſides Ten Lakes ſtor'd with all manner of Fiſh; among which is one called Averno, over which if any Birds flie, they immediately drop down dead. The Ancient Pagans had ſtrange Opinions of this Lake, it being the place where they uſed to Sacrifice Men to the Infernal Gods. And, hard by, is the Cave of one of the Sybils.

There are Thirty high Mountains in this Country, of which Adonai relates many ſtrange and delightful Paſſages, (for 'tis from him I receiv'd this Account of the Kingdom.) I will not trouble thee with a Repetition of all that this Jew tells me, only One Thing is worthy of Remark.

He ſays, That the Bodies of the Three Young Hebrews, who were put into the burning Oven by the Babylonian Monarch, becauſe they would not adore his Idols, are preſerv'd in a Moſque on one of theſe Mountains.

And that on the said Hill, no Eggs, Flesh or Milk, will endure an Hour without Putrefaction, but presently breed an infinite Number of Worms. He speaks in the Praise of these Mountains, which are cloath'd with Vineyards, Gardens and Woods on the Top and Sides; and in their Bottoms, have very Rich Mines of Gold, Silver, Copper, Iron, Crystal, Alabaster, Adamant. In fine, Adonai, who has travell'd over all this Kingdom, calls it, The Fertilest Region of all Italy, which is esteem'd the Paradise of Europe.

Dost thou not think now, Venerable Guide of the Elect, that the Duke of Guize had Reason to prefer the Honour of Conquering so Renowned a Kingdom, to the Safety of his Person? Or wilt thou not rather conclude, That the Reduction of this Happy State would be an Expedition worthy of the Ottoman Arms? It is certain, That the Riches and Plenty of this Region, have tempted more Nations to Invade it, than any other Kingdom on Earth: It having been the Prize, at which no less than Five and twenty several Nations have aim'd.

Cardinal Mazarini is much troubled at the Duke of Guize's Captivity, and has offer'd great Sums of Money for his Ransom; but the King of Spain rejects all Proposals of that Nature. So that 'tis thought, the Cardinal will contrive some Way for the Duke's Escape; either by Bribing his Keepers, or by some secret Stratagem.

I am

I am not much concern'd for the Infidels; but, it would be no small Joy to hear, that some Care were taken, for the Redemption of Mahomet Celebee, who, thou knoweſt, has not deſerv'd ill of the Sublime Port. Adieu, Holy Patriarch, and forget not Mahmut in thy Addreſſes to Heaven.

LETTER XIII.

To Abdel Melec Muli Omar, Superintendent of the College of Sciences at Fez.

THOU, to whom the Iſſues of Paradiſe are Revealed, and the Road of the Angels when they come down and go up through the Seven Heavens? Thou that canſt marſhal the Hoaſt of the Stars, and underſtandeſt the Diſcipline of the Armies living and ſtrong, the Orders of the Potentates encamped in the Fields of Light, the Domeſtick Guards of the Throne Bleſſed for Ever; Tell me the Age of the World, and declare the Beginning of Time. Reſolve me, whether this Mighty Fabrick be but of Yeſterday, that is, of Five or Six Thouſand Years ſtanding, as the Jews and Christians say; or, whether the Years of its Duration, be not past a Calcule.

The Visions of thy Progenitor, the Lieutenant to the Sent of God, are extant in the Arabick Tongue. In them it is written, My Soul on a sudden, became as though it had Wings; a Spirit enter'd me, and a subtle Wind lifted me up to the Top of Mount Uriel, where I beheld Marvellous Things. I looked behind me, and saw the Ages that were past; and lo, they were without Number, or Beginning. I beheld the Four Seasons of the Year, ever returning at their accustomed Time, and the Sun forsook not his Course, for a Thousand Thousand Generations. I counted a Million of Ages, and yet there appeared not an Hour, wherein Darkness had possessed the Abyss of Matter, or wherein the endless Firmament was not Illuminated by the Moon and Stars. Woilst I considered these Things, a Liquor was given me to drink by an Unknown Hand, it was of the Colour of Amber; When I had tasted it, I felt a marvellous Force in my Body, and my Eyes were more piercing than an Eagles. Another Wind, more powerful than the former, blew out of a Cloud, and carried me up to an exceeding High Place, far above the tallest Mountains; There I trod in the soft Air, as on a Pavement of Marble. I was ravish'd at these Things; and the Exaltation of my State, made me forget my Morality. I beheld the Earth at a vast Distance under my Feet, as one That did not belong to it; it look'd like a shining Globe, not much unlike the Moon, but far bigger, bigger. All the Living Generations, which had ſucceſſively Inhabited the Earth from its Nativity, paſs'd by me; and they appeared in various Forms. Firſt came a Race of Centaurs, then of Satyrs, next of Angels, and laſt of Men. While I marvelled at theſe Things, a Voice reach'd my Ears, as from behind me ſaying, Theſe are the Four Ages of the World, and the Four Species of Beings, to whom I gave the Poſſeſſion of the Earth; but, for the Impiety of the Three former, I have exterminated them. And, when Men ſhall have compleated the Meaſure of their Sins, I will cauſe the Trumpet to ſound, and all Things ſhall retire into the Cave of Silence and Darkneſs. Having heard this, I found my ſelf in a moment on the Earth, which I had before ſeen afar off; then I knew that I had been in a Trance, &c.

I do not rehearſe this Viſion, to teach thee any new Thing, Venerable Preſident of the Southern Sages (for, I know, the Archives of thy College, are repleniſh'd with all Manner of excellent Treatiſes, and that thou art no Stranger, to the Writings of the Prophets) but, to crave thy Interpretation of ſo great a Myſtery, and to reaſon with thee about the World's Duration. My Satisfaction would be ſmall, in contemplating the various Beauties of the Univerſe, the Qualities of the Elements, the Natures of Living Things, the Virtues of Plants and Minerals, with the Force of the Heavenly Bodies, were I aſſur'd, That theſe Things were not always ſo; That thought would damp my greateſt Enjoyments, if I were convinc'd, That so many Splendors, Riches and Pleasures, as this Visible Frame affords, were not disclos'd for Millions of Ages, but lay hid in the Bosom of Eternity. Methinks, it is too low an Opinion of the Omnipotent Goodness, and looks, as if the Authors of it, suspected God of Envy: Who, when he might have made Infinite Myriads of Creatures happy, in these Visible Emanations of his Divinity, without either Beginning or Ending of Time; yet, according to their Doctrine, contented himself, to let onely a Determinate Number taste of his Munificence, for a few Centuries of Years. This is not suitable to the Character of that Infinite Being, the Eternal Source of all Perfections.

What then is meant by those Four Ages, and the Four Species of Beings, which were shew'd to the Exalted of God in that Holy Vision? Tell me, Great Light of Africk, Is it repugnant to Reason or Faith, to believe, That the Earth has been Inhabited from Eternity; since our Holy Doctors teach us, That it was peopl'd long before the Creation of Adam? No Mussulman, that has ever gone the Sacred Pilgrimage, but has visited Mount Araffa, where Adam first saw Eve his Wife. Where he has been instructed, in the History of that First Father of Mankind; and how that before his Time, the Earth was Inhabited by Angels, who being commanded to adore Adam, refus'd it, and were turn'd to Devils, being expell'd from the Earth. Thou knowest eſt moreover, that it is in the Sacred Traditions, That God gave to Adam a Wife, whoſe Name was Alileth; but that ſhe, being of the Race of theſe Devils, refus'd to Obey Adam: Whence it came to paſs, That they liv'd in continual Quarrels and Enmity, for the Space of Five hundred Years; till at length, Alileth flew up into the Air, and abandon'd her Husband. Of which, when Adam complained to God, he ſent three Mighty Angels in Purſuit of her, commanding them to tell her, That if ſhe would return to her Husband, it ſhould go well with her; but if ſhe would not, a Hundred of her Children ſhould die every Day. The Angels follow'd her, and overtook her on the Red-Sea; where they threatned to Drown her, unleſs ſhe would return to her Husband. But ſhe made Excuſes, and told them, She was created to deſtroy Young Children. Then the Angels laid Hands on her: When ſhe, to pacifie them, ſwore by the Bottom of Hell, That whenſoever the Names of them Three ſhould be written on any Schedule, that ſhe ſhould have no Power to hurt the Infants, they diſmiſs'd her. After this, God compaſſionating Adam's Solitude, gave him another Wife, call'd Eve.

This Tradition, confirms the Viſion of the Prophet; and we need not doubt, That the Earth was Inhabited before Adam's time: And if that be granted, why might it not be Peopled for Millions of Ages, as well as for the ſmalleſt Term that Ignorance or Error may aſſign to its Duration?

I have diſcourſed with ſeveral of the Jewiſh Rabbi's, and Chriſtian Doctors, on this Subject, Men of abſtruſe Learning, and ſublime Thoughts; yet I can find but a few, who are emancipated from the Prejudices of a Superſtitious Education. They have been, from their Infancy, prepoſſeſs'd with a falſe Notion of the Works of God; believing them to be Finite, both in Extent of Space and Time. They circumſcribe this Viſible World, within, I know not what Flaming Circle; and believe the Firſt Matter it ſelf, to be but Five Days Older than Adam, taking each of thoſe Days, for the ſpace of Four and twenty Hours, wherein the Sun finiſhes his Diurnal Circuit through the Heavens. They conſider not, that, according to their own Bible, there was Light and Darkneſs, and conſequently Day and Night, before the Sun was Created. But, how long thoſe Days and Nights were, is not determin'd by Moſes: Yet, in another part of their Bible, it is ſaid, That a Day with God, is a Thouſand Years; and a Thouſand Years, is a Day. So that, according to this Interpretation, Adam was not Created till above Five thouſand Years after the Beginning of the World: Yet, when I bring this Poſitive Place of their Own Scripture againſt the Nazarene Sages, they ſhuffle it off with empty Evaſions; and rather than believe the Indefinite Antiquity of the World, they contradict their own Sence and Reaſon, invalidate the Teſtimony of a Prophet, deny their Faith, and appear Unmask'd Infidels.

Both

Both they and the Jews, have corrupted the Truth with many Errors? and, we muſt ſeek farther, for the Original Science of Nature. The Illuminated of God, have always taught, That the Earth was Inhabited long before the Appearance of Adam. And, all the Eaſtern Sages, believe a Series of Generations, to have dwelt on this Globe, for Indeterminate Ages.

I have a Brother lately come from the Indies: He relates ſtrange Things of certain Books, which are only in the Hands of the Brachmans. They are written in a Language, which none underſtand but theſe Prieſts; yet a Language as Copious as any other, and taught in their Colleges by Rule. Theſe Books contain a Hiſtory of the World, which, they ſay, is above Thirty Millions of Years Old. They divide the Term of its Duration, into Four Ages; Three of which they ſay are already paſt, and a good Part of the Fourth. Now I would fain know, who wrote theſe Books; and, at what Time, and where this Language was ſpoken? They call it, the Holy Language; ſaying, that it was the Firſt ſpoken on Earth. It is ſtrange, that no Hiſtory, ſhould mention ſo Divine a Speech. We have the Chronology of the Latin and Greek; and can give an Account, when and where they were ſpoken, though they are now grown Obſolete, and no otherwiſe to be learn'd, but in the Schools and Academies. This argues the Antiquity of the Bramins Language and Books, in Regard, they fall not within any other Record save their own, which says, they are as Old as the World. For, if this Assertion were false, the Imposture would have been discover'd as soon as broach'd, and the Learned Sages of the East, would quickly have disprov'd so manifest a Lye. There seems to me something Extraordinary, in this Pretension of these Indian Philosophers, and I would gladly be convinc'd of the Truth. Methinks, it is an Illustrious Idea of the Divine Perfections, when one conceives all this Vast and Endless Concatenation of Beings, to flow from the Eternal Nature, as Rays from the Sun: And, that they can no more be seperated from it, than those Beams can from that Visible Fountain of Light. It will not be difficult then, to Interpret the History of Moses, by this Register of the Bramins, and reconcile the Six Days of the one, with the Four Ages of the other; since, a Day in the Divine Sence, may amount to Millions of Years, as well as to a Thousand. And, it will be more congruous and agreeable, to believe, that after the Birth of the First Matter, there elaps'd Many Ages, before it was wrought into such an Infinite Variety of Appearances, as we now behold; and that the Five Days which Moses computes, before the Production of Adam, might be some Millions of Years: In which Time, the Divine Architect gradually drew from the Abyss of Matter, the Sun, Moon, Stars, Plants and Animals; which may serve also to Illustrate, the Vision of thy Holy Ancestor, with which I begun this Discourse.

Adieu,

Adieu, Sublime Intelligence of the Torrid Zone, and favour Mahmut with a Tranſcript of thy Thoughts concerning theſe things. But if thy Silence ſhall condemn my Preſumptions and Importunity, I will wait for thy Anſwer, till the Platonick Year, when, according to the Doctrine of that Philoſopher, we ſhall all be alive again.

LETTER XIV.

To the Muſti.

IN a former Diſpatch to thy Sanctity, I have acquainted thee with the Inſurrections in Palermo, mentioning the Fear of the Viceroy, leſt the French in that Iſland ſhould then take their Opportunity, to revenge the Proverbial Cruelty of the Sicilian Veſpers. If thou art unacquainted with that Tragedy, I will inform thee in Brief.

About Three hundred and threeſcore Years ago, there Reign'd in Sicily, one of the Royal Blood of France; they call him, Charles of Anjou. He had French Garriſons in all the Cities of that Kingdom: But theſe Soldiers committed ſo many Inſolencies as rendred 'em Odious and Inſupportable to the Natives, who who therefore resolv'd to Exterminate them.

The French are very Licentious in thir Conquests; neither sparing Men in their Anger, nor Women in their Lust. They make no difference between the Noble and the Vulgar, but sacrifice all the Regards of Honour and Civility to their Impetuous Appetites.

They were guilty of innumerable Rapes and Violences in Sicily, among the meaner People; and sometimes, extended their Rudeness to Persons of the best Quality. It was common for them to affront both Virgins and Matrons as they went along the Streets, by thrusting their Hands under their Garments, on Pretence of Searching for hidden Arms. Among the rest, the Wife of a certain Lord in Palermo, going to pay her Devotions at the Temple, was seiz'd, by the Command of the Captain of the Guards, and strip'd Naked before all the Soldiers, in order to discover certain Treasonable Papers, which they suspected she carried about her: But finding none, she upbraided the Captain with Inhumanity, in offering so gross an Affront to a Lady of her Rank. He seeming to be sorry for the Indignity she had receiv'd, begged her Pardon; and retiring with his Soldiers out of the Room where she was, left her to put on her Apparel. In the mean while, he was enflamed with a furious Passion for this Lady, (she being very Beautiful;) and having sent the Soldiers away, he return'd to the Room where she was: He address'd her with much

Court-

Courtſhip; but finding that Ineffectual, he Forc'd her.

When this was made known to her Huſband, he burn'd with Deſire of Revenge: And ſtirring up all the Sicilian Nobles and People, it was privately agreed between them, that on a certain Feſtival, when the Bells ſhould toll to Even-Song, all the Sicilians ſhould take Arms, and Maſſacre the French throughout the Iſland. This Plot was carried ſo ſecretly, that before the French could get the leaſt Intimation of it, they were all murder'd on the Day appointed.

I forgot to acquaint thee in my laſt, with a Villany which was diſcover'd in the late Tumults of Naples. As they were marching up and down the Streets burning the Cuſtom-Houſes, and the Habitations of thoſe who had been concerned in gathering the Taxes, they entred the Houſe of a certain Notary, or Publick Scribe of that City, who had been repreſented to them, as a Promoter of thoſe Unreaſonable Impoſitions: They ſeized on the Man, and began to carry his Goods out into the Street, in order to be burnt: But as they were rummaging in an Apartment which was toward the Gardens, they heard a great Shrieking, as of Women affrighted: and perceiving the Voice to proceed from within a Wall in the Room where they were, they ſearch'd about for a Door to enter into that Place; but finding none, they broke through the Wall; where they found Two Women, with their Hair hanging down to their Ancles, and their Nails grown like the Talons of an Eagle. Enquiring of them how long they had been there, and on what Occasion, the Eldest of the Women made this Answer: The Master of this House, is my own Brother; who, when my Father died, was entrusted by him to pay me Six hundred Duckets, which he bequeathed me as a Legacy, for my Maintenance, my Husband being dead: But my Brother, instead of doing me this Justice, immur'd both me and my Daughter, whom you see here, between these Walls; where we have lived these Seventeen Years, being allowed by this cruel Man no other Food but Bread and Water.

The People, Incens'd above Measure at so barbarous a Cruelty, hang'd up the Notary, and gave all his Estate to this Widow and her Daughter. An Exemplary piece of Justice, performed by Mutineers, which could not have been done by the Law, the Crime not reaching his Life; though, in the Sence of all Men, he merited Death. This is another Argument that Destiny had a Hand in this Insurrection; and, that Masanello the Fisherman, was the Executioner of God.

I obey thee, Sovereign Prelate, with an Unconditional Devotion, and revere the Idea of thy Sanctity: Vouchsafe to pray for Mahmut, that whilst he Condemns the Barbarous Cruelties of the Nazarenes, he may not render himself Inexcusable, by doing any Injustice himself.

LET-

LETTER XV.

To the Kaimachmam.

THE Arabian Proverb says, There is more Danger to be fear'd from one of the Coreis, than from a Thousand Bobecks. Thou knoweſt, both theſe were Noble Families in Mecca, and Sworn Enemies of the Meſſenger of God: But, the Latter, as their Name imports, were too open in their Counſels, to do any conſiderable Execution againſt the Holy One: Whereas the Former, were always reſerved, and laying of Secret Trains.

Such is Cardinal Mazarini, the Hidden Enemy of the Ottoman Empire. There ſeems to be an Ambition in this Great Genius equal to that of his Predeceſſor Richlieu, who would be eſteemed the moſt Eminent among Men. Nothing will ſatisfie this Miniſter, leſs than a Subverſion of all the Monarchies on Earth, which appear Obſtacles of that Grandeur, to which he Deſigns to raiſe his Maſter. Yet he attempts not this by Open Force, knowing, that is impracticable: but, acts in the Dark, ſtriving to undermine thoſe States by Intrigue, which he cannot ſubdue by Arms. He has his Agents in all the Courts of Chriſtendom; and, thou needſt not ſtartle, if I tell thee there is Ground to ſuſpect, he is not without his Creatures at the Sublime Port. All Europe is ſenſible, that the Late Revolu- tions,

tions in Portugal and Catalonia, the Insurrections in Sicily and Naples, and the Rebellion of the English, Scots, and Irish are, in Part owing to the Policies of this Minister: And, I can tell thee more on that Subject, than is known to every one,

Osmin the Dwarf, who still retains his good Inclinations to the Sublime Port, finds an insuspected Access to all the Grandees, to whom the Smallness of his Bulk and Stature, affords no small Divertisement. Besides, they delight to pose him with Problems, in Regard, there is always something so lucky, besides the Wit in his Answers, as either creates Admiration or Laughter. But, their Mirth would quickly be changed into other Passions, were they sensible that their Little Buffoon, is no other than a Spy upon them. For, Osmin having so many Opportunities, lurks in Corners like a Spider, undiscovered, and unthought of: He Creeps into their Bedchambers and Cabinets, where he becomes privy to their greatest Secrets. If they should catch him in any of his Concealments, behind the Hangings, or under a Bed, 'twould only pass for a Frolick to give 'em Diversion; and he never wants for a Repartee or a Jest, to bring himself off.

I have taught him a Cypher, which he makes Use of, to transcribe any Letters, or other Papers of Moment; with Characters for Speedy Writing, which comprehend whole Sentences in a Dash or Two of the Pen.

'Tis but lately we have pitched on this Method; and the first attempt Osmin made, was in Cardinal Mazarini's Closet: Into which he slipt, under the Skirt of a Nobleman's Cloak, who just then went in to speak with the Cardinal. This active Dwarf, taking Advantage of the Nobleman's Approach to the Table, dextrously crept under the Carpets which cover'd it, reaching down to the Floor, where he lay unseen till the Cardinal was gone, and the Closet lock'd up.

During the time of their Conference, which was not very long, Osmin heard the Cardinal speak these words to the Lord: One of the Slaves of that Bassa, (said he,) is an Italian whom I formerly entertain'd in my Service, and One in whom I confide: He was taken by the Turks at Sea; and as soon as he was sold to this Grandee, he acquainted me in a Letter with his Condition, imploring my Assistance towards his Ransom. I promis'd to Redeem him, on the Conditions I have told you; and since that, he has not fail'd to perform them; his Master having accepted the Pistols, and entred into the Association: So that I hope, in a little time, to see that proud Tyrannical Race exterminated, the Tartars excluded from Succession, and the Empire divided by the Sword of Strangers. Ragotski is the only Obstacle; That Prince is wavering, and we cannot trust him. The Bassa of Aleppo, with those of Sidon, Damascus and Babylon, are ready to cover the Fields of Asia with their Armies. If things were as secure on the Side of Europe, the Blow should soon be given.

There

There pass'd some other Discourse between them, which Osmin could not distinguish, in regard they removed to the Window, and spoke low. But this was enough to rouze his Curiosity, and put him on a farther Inquisition.

As soon as the Room was void, by their Absence, he came forth from his Retirement, and fell to examining the Papers which lay on the Table, hoping to discover more of this Plot; but he was disappointed, and only met with a few Letters from his Agents in England: Wherein among other Matters, they gave the Cardinal an Account, That they had hunted the Lion into the Toils, past all Hope of an Escape. By which, I suppose, they meant the English King, whom the Rebels have confined to a certain Castle in their Possession. Osmin transcribed some of these Letters, and brought them to me: A Copy of one of them, I here send thee inclosed: 'Twas written from the Council of the Isle-Rebels. By which thou mayst see what a Share the Cardinal has, in Abetting these Traytors. Else, how could they Demand of him, The Performance of the Queen-Regent's Promise, to assist them with Money and Men!

There is one also Dated this present Year, and Subscribed my Monsieur Bellieure, the French Ambassador in England: But Osmin had not time to transcribe that, being prevented by the Cardinal's Return; which made the Dwarf snatch up his Tools, and abscond abscond under the Table. Yet, he remembred some of the Contents of that Letter, and told them me at his next Visit: The Ambassadour in that Letter, informs the Cardinal, of a certain German Prophet, who foretold, That there should be a great Revolution in the Government of England; and that One of the Mightiest of all the Eastern Princes, should be Deposed this Year, and Murdered by his Subjects (I pray Heaven, avert the Omen from the Seraglio.) He acquaints this Minister also, That he had succeeded in his Negotiation with the Officers of the Rebels Army. There were other obscure Passages in the Letter, which Osmin has forgot. But, these are sufficient to demonstrate, how busie the Cardinal is, and what a Hand he has in Foreign Affairs.

Another Opportunity, I hope, will bring to Light, more of this Minister's Secrets. Adieu.

Paris, 4th. of the 6th. Moon, of the Year, 1648.

LETTER

LETTER XV.

To Peſtelihali, his Brother.

THE oftner I peruſe the Journal of thy Travels, the more I am delighted with it. For it is evident, That the Countries through which thou haſt paſs'd, have been as ſo many Schools of Wiſdom to thee; Wherein thou haſt learn'd, even from Men's Vices, the way to Perfection; much more from their Vertues. Thou haſt found, that though Mens Natural Diſpoſitions differ, as do the Climates, which afford them Breath; yet they all agree in Common Frailties. There are alſo Vices peculiar to certain Countries; 'twere to be wiſhed, they could be match'd with as many National Vertues. But, Human Nature is a Rank Soil, more fertile in Weeds, than wholeſome Products. Yet there are Gardens as well as Deſarts: And thou haſt obſerved ſome Perſons, Illuſtrious for their Goodneſs, and the Noble Endowments of their Minds.

I am extreamly pleaſed with that rare Example of Generoſity, which thou relateſt of an Indian Merchant; who, not content to give Alms to all that ask'd him, or whom he knew to be Poor, ſought daily Occaſions to exerciſe his Charity, hunted out the indigent and Unfortunate: And, where-ever he diſcovered the Lineaments of Poverty in a Man's Face or trac'd the Footsteps of it in his Behaviour, he could not rest till he had relieved his Wants, and made him Happy, to his very Wishes. I tell thee, Poverty is a Hell upon Earth; and he that has this Curse, anticipates the Torments of the Damn'd. It eclipses the brightest Vertues, and is the very Sepulcher of brave Designs; depriving a Man of the Means to accomplish, what Nature has fitted him for, and stifling the Noblest Thoughts in their Embrio. How many Illustrious Souls may be said, to have been Dead among the Living, or buried alive in the Obscurity of their Condition, whose Perfections have rendred 'em the Darlings of Providence, and Companions of Angels; yet the insuperable Penury of all Things, has ranked them among the Castaways of the Earth, in the Eyes of Men? To such as these, our Divine Lawgiver commands us to extend our Charity, giving us certain Characters and Marks, by which we may distinguish them from the Crowd of the Unfortunate. And, I like the Indian's Bounty the better, in that he so exactly seems to comply with this Precept of the Alcoran, generously preventing the Requests of the Indigent, and by an Excess of Benignity, courting them to accept of Relief. In this he also verifies the Arabian Proverb, which says, He gives Double, who gives Unask'd.

Man's

Thou commendest the Industry of the Chinese, the Advances they have made in Arts and Sciences, which, thou concludest, is to

to be attributed to the Force of their Laws, which oblige the Son to follow his Father's Trade, throughout all Generations. In this I muſt diſſent; for, it ſeems rather a Curb, than a Spur to Ingenuity, to be confin'd to Employments, for which a Man may have an Averſion. The Son not ſeldom abhorring thoſe Things, wherein his Parents took Delight. Or, if not ſo, yet he may be caſt in a Finer Mold, have a more ſubtle Invention; and conſequently, be capable of making greater Improvements, in any Trade of his own Choice: Since, Delight ſets an Edge on the Mind, gives Vigor to the Body, and adds Wings to Buſineſs. Beſides, I do not think this to be ſo much thy own Remark, as the Inſinuation of ſome of that Country, who are the moſt Conceited People in the World; ever extolling their own Policy, Laws and Government; and impoſing them as a Pattern to all other Nations.

One Thing I grant, they boaſt of with a great Deal of Truth, that is, their Antiquity and unmixed Race. Though, ſince the Conqueſt the Tartars have made of that Country, they are like to undergo the Fate of other Nations, and Corrupt their Genealogies with the Blood of Strangers.

Thou cameſt away before that Conqueſt was begun, or perhaps, before 'twas talked of. And I can give thee, but a very Imperfect Account of it. All the Intelligence we have from that Kingdom of late, comes in fragments: For, the Ships which bring this ſhatter'd News, left China in an Uproar and Confuſion: Only they they assure us, That the Tartars had passed the Celebrated Wall, which divides them from China: That they entred and subdued the Northern Provinces, with an Army of Six hundred thousand Men: That very little Resistance was made against them, not even in Pequin it self, the Capital Seat of the Chinese Empire, which the Usurper Lycungzi had abandon'd to the Conquerors, carrying away with him all the Inestimable Treasures of the Palace, and retiring into one of the remote Provinces, was never heard of afterwards. Whence it was judg'd, That some of his own Party had murder'd him; partly, for the sake of his prodigious Wealth, which they shared among them; and partly to Revenge his Treason against the Emperor, and the Innumerable Calamities he had brought upon his Country.

Before these Merchants came away, the Cham of Tartary was Proclaimed in Pequin, and Crowned Emperor of China. They say, He was not above Thirteen Years Old at that time; which was in the 12th. Moon, of the Year 1644. And, that having sent for the Chief Nobility of Tartary to Pequin, he made Preparations to pursue his Conquests.

This is the best Account we yet have of the Affairs of that Empire: By which thou wilt easily be induced to be of my Opinion, That the Blood of the Chineses, will, in time, be mix'd with that of Strangers.

We

We must not seek for the Originals of any People, in the Country where they dwell. The most Renowned Kingdoms and Empires in the World, had their first Foundations laid by Vagabonds and Fugitives. Thou art not ignorant, how vast an Extent the Ancient Roman Empire had through Asia, Africk and Europe; yet that City, which was call'd the Mistress of Nations, the Governess of the Whole Earth, was first built by a handful of Banditi, People who lived by Pillage and Robbery, the Outlaws and Scum of Italy, assembled together from divers Parts, under the Conduct of Romulus and Rhemus. Neither had that City proved any better than a Sepulchre to them and their Designs, had they not, by a witty Stratagem, over-reach'd the Sabine Women, and so secured to themselves a Posterity, who should not only Defend, but Enlarge the Dominions of their Fathers: Yet these People, of so obscure and confused an Original, afterwards boasted of the Antiquity and noble Descent of their Families. No Name more Venerable in succeeding Ages, than that of a Roman.

To look no further than the Great and Formidable Empire of the Osmans, we shall find it took its first Rise from Colonies of Transplanted Scythians; so that he who would have the Genealogy of a Turk, must not look in the Registers of Greece, where they now live, but must carry his Search beyond the Mountain Caucasus, examine the Borders of Palus Mæotis, or hunt his Pedigree out in Chersonesus. What Revolutions have not happen'd in Asia and Africk, since the Assumption of the Messenger of God into Paradise? Where shall we now find any Remains of the Ancient Saracens, or Mamalukes? The Mighty Empire of the Ottomans has swallow'd up all. Thus, one Nation expells another; and, there is in general a Mixture of Foreign Blood, made by the Conversion of innumerable different Nations to the Mussulman Faith, that it is hard to know, Whether our Ancestors were Scythians or Persians, Jews or Grecians; Whether they were of the Mountains or the Valleys, of the Forests or the Plains.

In this I will except my Countrymen, the Arabians, and those who seem to approach nearest them in Manner of Life, the Tartars; the one dwelling in Tents, the other in Waggons; both in a moving Posture; both Happy in this, That they are not confin'd to the Rigors of a Cold Winter, nor the Scorching Heats of the Summer; but, change their Soil and Climate, as the Season of the Year varies: Thus ever securing to themselves in all Places, either a blooming flow'ry Spring, or a moderate and fruitful Autumn. These were never subdued, nor expelled those Regions wherein they take Delight, neither would they ever mix with Strangers. But, the Chinese would excell all the World in the Purity of their Unmix'd Blood, were it not for the Incursions of their Potent and Victorious Neighbours.

The French say, That these People had the Use of Guns and Printing, many Hundreds of Years before they were found out in Europe. But, the Germans claim the Honour of these Inventions to themselves.

Thou confirmest the Opinion of the Former, in telling me, thou hast seen some of the Cannon belonging to the City of Pequin, on which was engraven, in Chinese Characters, a Register of their Age, which was above Two Thousand Years.

I had a great Deal more to say, Dear Pastah, but the Post calls on me to hasten; Besides an extreme Dulness and Languishing of my Spirits, with which I have been persecuted, ever since this Moon first shewed her Crescent: Now she is in the Wane, and so I hope is my Malady. The Influence this Planet seems to have on me, may make thee conclude me a Lunatick: We are all so in one Degree or other. There are not more apparent Symptoms, That the Flux and Reflux of the Sea, owes its Original to the Neighbourhood and Motion of that Planet, than that our Constitutions vary, according to its Monthly Appearances.

He that Created the Moon, and the Constellations, not without Respect to Mankind, give us Wisdom which shall entitle us to a Dominion over the Stars.

LETTER

LETTER XVII.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

THE Duke of Chastillon arrived here 5 or 6 Days ago, from the Army in Flanders, bringing News of a Signal Victory, obtained by the Young Prince of Conde, on the Plains of Lens. This Battel was fought on the 20th. of the last Moon, the French having entirely routed the Spaniards, kill'd Three thousand of them on the spot, taken Six thousand Prisoners, with all their Artillery and Baggage. And, to Crown the Day, they have taken Lens also.

But, though Fortune thus favours their Arms Abroad, she has mixed Poyson with their Counsels at Home. All Things here seem to portend a Civil War: The Parliament thwart the Proceedings of the Court, taking on them the Power of the Ancient Spartan Ephori: They will be Comptrollers of the Regal Authority, suppressing the King's Edicts, calling his Expences to Account; and, pretending to reform the Court, they play the Pedagogues with their Sovereign. On the other side, Cardinal Mazarini, the Duke of Orleans, and other Grandees, do their utmost Endeavours, to dissolve the Meetings of this Senate. They persuade the Young King, That it is but a Precarious Reign, where the Sovereign must be curb'd by his Subjects: Thus they instill into his tender Years, those Maxims by which they would have him Rule, when he comes of Age.

There is a Man in the Parliament, whom they call Monsieur Brussels, one of their Great Counsellours, a bitter Enemy of Cardinal Mazarini, and therefore cry'd up by the People for a Patriot: He is of a furious Temper, and mean Abilities; yet his noisy Zeal for the Publick Liberty, has fastened to him the Vulgar: He is become the Ring leader of the Seditious.

This Man was seiz'd, as he returned from the Chief Temple, where Te Deum was sung Yesterday, for the late Victory in Flanders: And some are of Opinion, that 'twas this happy News which emboldned the Court to snatch from the People their Darling, their Idol, the Man from whose Courage they expect a Redress of all their Grievances. Indeed, one may say, it would seem safer for a Traveller in the Desarts of Arabia, to tear from a Lioness her Young One: For, the Heads of the Faction waited but for such an Opportunity, to set all in a Flame. And, the ill Success of the Court in this Action, shews, That it is dangerous to provoke the Multitude: For presently we were all in Confusion; the Burgesses in Arms, the Shops shut up, the Streets chained, and all the Avenues of the Palace barricado'd. The Rabble marched up and down the Streets, threatning Destruction to Cardinal Mazarini, and all his Party. The Parliament were forced to become the Messengers of the People, to carry their Petitions, or rather their Commands, to the Court; being threatned also, if they failed of Success: For, they protested unanimously, that they would not lay down their Arms, till the Imprison'd Counsellor was Released.

The

The Queen appear'd at first Inexorable, and sent these Senators away with Denial and Scoffs wishing them Joy of their New Honour, in being made the Porters of the Rabble. And the Young Monarch, incensed to see his Native Royalty thus Prophaned by his Subjects, bent his Brows; and casting a Look, divided betwixt Majesty and Disdain, on the Senators, uttered these words: Sirs! Shall it always be a Custom, thus to molest the Minority of your Kings? Or, Do you think Our tender Years incapable of the Common Sense of other Mortals, that you presume thus Insolently to Invade Our Right? Accuse not the Multitude, nor make them an Umbrage to your Sedition: I know the Authors of these Tumults, and shall find a time to make 'em feel the Weight of my Displeasure: Think not, that I wear this Sword only for Ornament [laying his Hand fiercely on the Hilt;] or that the Blood of my Renowned Ancestors, is grown degenerate, or turned to Lees within my Veins. Go tell your Factious Comrades, There sits this Day upon the Throne of France a King, who, though he's Young, yet has a Spirit and Memory which will out-last his Pupillage. With that he commanded them out of his Sight.

Yet notwithstanding this, the People threatned to bring their Darling away by Force, if he were not released in Two Hours.

There were above a Hundred thousand of them in Arms, and it might have proved a dangerous Insurrection. But, the Queen, at the Second return of the Senators, hearkning to the Advice of Mazarini, and the Duke of Orleans, and remembring the late dreadful Effects of Masanello's Tumult in Naples, releas'd the Prisoner; who was conducted Home last Night in Triumph, by an infinite Croud of People, who filled the Air with Shouts and Acclamations.

It is discourſed here, That the Prince of Conde will ſpeedily return to Paris: From whom, both the Court, and the Faction, promiſe themſelves new Grounds of Triumph.

During theſe Commotions, Mahmut fails not to act his Part, being at no ſmall Expence, to maintain a certain Number of Strangers, whoſe whole Dependance is on me: Theſe I inſtruct, to mix themſelves with the Rabble, to inſinuate into them hateful Notions of Cardinal Mazarini, and the Court. They buz up and down the City, like Flies in this hot Seaſon, and ſting the Multitude to Fury with their Stories. I ſpare no Coſt, to procure the Cardinal's Ruine: That pernicious Wit comes not ſhort of his Predeceſſor Richlieu, being as active in embroyling Foreign States; witneſs, the Revolutions of Portugal, Catalonia, England, and Naples; (in all which he had a principal Hand) and is ever projecting, how to aggrandize his Maſter. And, the Univerſal Succeſs of the French Arms in Germany, Flanders, Italy and Spain, has left him Nothing worth a Thought, but the Deſtruction of the Oſman Empire.

Eliachim brings me News every Hour, how my Myrmidons ſucceed; for he acts abroad in the Streets, while I keep my Chamber, during the Tumults; being of Demoſthenes's Mind, who, who, when the Athenians were in an Uproar, took Sanctuary in the Temple of Pallas, and prostrating himself before the Altar of the Goddess, uttered these Words, O Pallas, I fly to thee for Protection; defend me from Ignorance, Envy, and Inconstancy; for, I love not the Society of the Owl, the Dragon, and the People.

Yet, whether in my Chamber or Abroad, be assured, Illustrious Prefect of the Imperial City, that Mahmut divides his Time between the Vows he makes, and the Services he does for the Grand Signior.

Paris, 3d. of the 9th. Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XVIII.

To Achmet Beig.

THIS Court is now in Mourning, for the Death of Vladislaus, late King of Poland: Whilst the Politicians, are canvasing the next Election. Those who Side with the House of Austria, favour the Succession of Prince Charles, But the French, are for Casimir their former Prisoner.

The Duke of Bavaria, is also dead. They say he died of Grief, to see his Country expos'd to the Insults of a Victorious Enemy: For, all his Forces were intirely defeated.

The Prince of Conde, has taken Ipre in Flanders; and, the Arch-Duke of Austria, has rendred himself Master of Courtray, without drawing a Sword, or firing a Gun: The Mareschal de Ranzau, has made an unhappy Attempt, to surprize Ostend, a Sea-Town in Flanders. For, carrying his Forces by Water as soon as he had Landed his Men, a Tempest rose, and drove all his Ships out to Sea: So that, being encompassed by a numerous Army of his Enemies, and having no Way to escape, he and all his Troops were made Prisoners.

From the Sea we have Advice, that there has been a Combat, between the Duke of Richlieu, Commander of the Naval Forces sent to assist the Neapolitan Revolters, and

Don

Don John of Austria, Admiral of the Spaniſh Fleet on that Coaſt: But the Iſſue of the Battel is not yet known; though moſt People gueſs the Victory to be on the French Side, in regard Cardinal Mazarini had, by the Advice of an Indian Ship-Wright, cauſed all the French Ships to be plaſtered over with Allom, ſo that no Fire-Ships can hurt them. The Spaniards make great Uſe of theſe Fire-Ships in all their Sea-Fights, having learn'd, to their Coſt, from the Engliſh, what Damage theſe Veſſels do, when they formerly loſt their whole Armada, which they before termed Invincible, and with which they ſailed to Conquer that Iſland.

From Catalonia the Poſts bring News which pleaſes the Wives and Friends of the Soldiers in thoſe Parts: For, the Mareſchal de Schomberg has cut in pieces the Spaniſh Army, taken Tortoſa by Aſſault, where the Soldiers found a Booty of above Fifteen hundred thouſand Livres.

A Courier is come from Sueddland, who brings an Account of a late Formidable Conſpiracy in Ruſſia againſt the Life of the Czar. The greateſt part of the Moſcovite Grandees were concern'd in this Plot; deſigning to Change the Form of Government, and divide that Mighty Empire into ſeveral Principalities, whereof every one of the Conſpirators ſhould have a Share. And, that they ſhould be all ſubject to One Chief, who ſhould be Elected by the Reſt, after the Manner of Germany. To this Purpose, they had made a Private Treaty with the Tartars. Morosoph, the Prime Minister of State, and the Chancellor Nazari, were of the Conspiracy. Perhaps, thou wilt lament the Fate of the Latter, having receiv'd extraordinary Civilities from him, when thou wert at that Court.

Banasnoph, Son of the Patriarch of Mosco, revealed the Plot, with the Names of the Conspirators, to the Grand Duke: Who sent for them next Day to his Palace, under divers Pretences; where he commanded them all to be Kill'd, and their Bodies to be thrown to the Dogs in the Streets of that City.

The French report strange Things of Sultan Ibrahim: I wish all go well at the Sublime Port. If thou hast the same Desires, reveal them to none but thy Friend; for at some times, a Man's best Thoughts will be interpreted for Treason. Adieu.

LETTER

LETTER XIX.

To the Mufti.

THY Venerable Letters are come safe to my Hands, bringing Light and Consolation to the Faithful Exile. With profoundest Reverence, I kiss'd and unfolded the Papers, which contain the Sacred Instructions of the Vicar of God. I blessed my self, when I read the Charge of Royal Enormities, the exorbitant Passions of a Mussulman Emperour, and the Prophanation of the Throne founded on Justice. Thou hast prevented the Qualms of a too scrupulous Loyalty, by assuring me, That it is a Fundamental Maxim of our Law, That all Men in the World, without Respect of Birth or Quality, are obliged to appear before the Justice of God: And, That he who obeys not the Law, is no Mussulman: And, If the Emperor himself be in this Number, he ought to be Deposed forthwith.

This has abundantly satisfied my Conscience, coming from the Hands of him, from whose Sentence, there can be no Appeal on Earth. I shall therefore readily obey thy Orders; and, without Demur, put in Execution what thou hast commanded me.

Who

Who can blame the Juſt Indignation of Sultan Morat's Widow, who in defence of her Chaſtity, threatned to ſheath her Ponyard in the Breaſt of her Sovereign? But, incomparably more Eminent, was thy Daughter's Vertue, who not being able to reſiſt the Force of the Mighty Raviſher, after ſhe was polluted, would, like another Lucretia, have ſtabb'd her ſelf, had ſhe not been prevented by the Sultan. How has he ſully'd the Glory of the Oſman Race, by theſe Effeminate Vices: What an Indignity has he committed againſt our Holy Law? Againſt the Principal Patriarch of the Elect? Much more noble, was the Continence of the African Scipio, who, when at the Conqueſt of New Carthage, a Virgin of admirable Beauty, was choſen from among the Captives and preſented to him, would by no Means defile her, but reſtor'd her again without Blemiſh to her Parents, ſaying withal to thoſe that ſtood near him, Were I a Private Man, I would gratifie my Paſſion, by the Enjoyment of this lovely Maid; but, it becomes not the Leader of an Army, to give ſo bad an Example; nor a Conquerour, to yield his Heart to the Charms of his Captive.

But it ſeems, that Sultan Ibrahim was rather Ambitious of the Character of Auguſtus the Roman Emperour, of whom it is ſaid, That he never ſpared any Woman in his Luſts: but, if her caſt his Eye on a Beautiful Lady, though her Husband were of the firſt Quality in the Empire, he would immediately ſend his Officers, to bring her to him by fair Means or by Force.

The

The Philosopher Athenodorus, who was very intimate with this Monarch, took a pretty Method to reform this Vice in his Master. For when the Emperour one Day had sent a close Sedan or Chair for a certain Noble-Woman, of the House of the Camilli; the Philosopher fearing some Disaster might ensue, (for that Family was very Popular, and highly respected in Rome,) he goes before to the Ladies Palace, and acquainting her with it, she complain'd to her Husband of the Indignity was offer'd her. He boiling with Anger, threatned to stab the Messengers of the Emperour, when they came. But, the prudent Philosopher appeas'd them both, and only desir'd a Suit of the Ladies Apparel; which was granted him. He soon put it on, and hiding his Sword under his Robes, enter'd the Sedan, personating the Lady. The Messengers, who knew no other, carried him away to the Emperour. He heighten'd with Desire, made haft to open the Sedan himself. When Athenodorus suddenly drawing his Sword, leap'd forth upon him, saying, Thou wretch! Thou have been Murder'd; Wilt thou never quit the Vice, which is attended with so much Danger? Jealousie and Revenge might have substituted an Assassin thus disguis'd in my Room: But, I took Care of thy Life. Henceforth take Warning. The Emperor pleas'd with the Philosopher's Stratagem, gave him Ten Talents of Gold, thanking him for this seasonable Correction: And, from that time, began to restrain Unlawful Pleasures, applying himself to a Vertuous Life.

Thou

Thou seest, Holy Prelate, that by perusing the Histories of the Ancients, a Man may furnish himself with useful Examples, and proper Observations. I always keep by me Plutarch's Works, and those of Livy a Roman Historian; as also Tacitus, who has left the Annals of that Formidable Empire to Posterity. It were a desirable thing, that the Mussulman Scribes were employ'd in Translating such Records as these, into the Arabick or Turkish Languages: That so the True Faithful, who are Destin'd by God to Conquer the World, may not be ignorant of the Memorable Transactions of Former Ages. Some of our Sultans have been curious, to have Plutarch's Writings render'd in the Familiar Speech of the Ottomans. There are other Memoirs, not less worth the Labour. If it shall enter into thy Heart, to encourage so profitable a Work, the whole Empire of the Religion'd to God, will be indebted to thee. But, who am I, that presume to direct the Great Father of the Faithful? Thou art enlightned with all Knowledge and Wisdom! Peradventure, thou hast Reasons to divert thee from such an Enterprize, which I cannot comprehend. Therefore, I cover my Mouth with Dust, and Acquiesce.

As to the late Revolution, I am not to dispute the Will of my Superiours. However, I receive the News of that Tragedy with less Discontent, in Regard, Thou thy self, who art the Oracle of the Mussulmans, hast thought fit to Depose Sultan Ibrahim: Using herein, the Advice and Consent of his own Mother, and of Mahomet Bassa, with that of the Janizar Aga; who,

next

next to thy self, are Two the most Knowing Sages in the Empire.

What remains, but that I shall pray for the long Life of Sultan Mahomet? Desiring also, that Heaven may so direct his Counsels, that he may never do any thing to merit the Fate of his unhappy Father.

Paris, 13th. of the 11th. Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XX.

To Chiurgi Muhammel, Bassa.

AT length the Deputies of the Nazarene Princes at Munster, have concluded a Peace: They have been these Six Years debating about Trifles and Punctilio's, as is the Manner of the Christians, even in the most Important Affairs. This Treaty was Sign'd the 24th. of the last Moon; when all farther Hostilities ceas'd on all Sides, except on the Parts of France and Spain; whose Quarrel could by no means be adjusted, in this General Agreement of Christendom.

Thou hast by this time heard of the late Tumultes and Emotions in this City; the Disaffection between the Court and Parliament, with the Short Siege of Paris. Now things seem to be compos'd, and in a Calm: But, it may only prove a Truce, while both Parties take Breath, to rush upon each other with the greater Violence. The City is unmeasurably Rich and Populous, and can Arm an Hundred thousand Men at an Hour's Warning. The Parliament abets their Quarrel: this encourages them to vye with the Court: The Merchants live like Petty Kings; Abundance of Gold, fills them with Pride and Ambition. Whilst the Court, in the mean time, are Close and Reserv'd, projecting how to Destroy the Faction, and Assert the Regal Authority. The Queen-Regent is Resolute and Severe; yet suffers her self to be Mollify'd with the Milder Counsels of Cardinal Mazarine, and the Duke of Orleans.

In the Beginning of this Reign, I gave an Account to the Ministers of the Peace, of the Duke of Beaufort's Imprisonment in the Castle of the Wood of Vincennes, which is one of the King's Palaces: This Prince is now escap'd from his Confinement, and come into the City: The Frenchmen cry him up for a Patriot, and are resolv'd to protect him with their Lives and Fortunes.

If thou yet retainest thy Health and Vigor, thou art Happy. As for me, I feel continual Decays; yet am not troubled, perceiving at the same time, that I approach nearer to Immortality. Wherefore, I neither seek Restoratives, nor consule Physitian; but suffering my self to dissolve Gradually, I die with Pleasure, Pluming and preparing my self daily, as one ready to take Wing for a more Happy Region.

Paris, 24th. of the 12th. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER

LETTER XXI.

To Dgnet Oglou.

I AM not surpriz'd at the News of Sultan Ibrahim's being Depos'd and Strangled? 'Tis but what I have for a long time fear'd. These restless Janizaries, will ruin the Ottoman Empire. Neither am I startled to hear, that his Mother was accessary to his Fall; having a Double Motive, Ambition and Revenge, to induce her Consent. She always affected to Rule; and therefore, could not brook the Sultan's resolute Management of Affairs without following her Advice. Besides, she could not easily forget her Disgrace and Confinement, on the Account of the Armenian Lady's Death.

But I am astonish'd and vex'd to hear, That the Mufti should be concern'd in so Black a Tragedy. How shall we have the Confidence hereafter, to reproach the Christians, with their frequent Treasons and Murdring of their Kings; since it will be easie for them to retort, that the Supreme Patriarch of Our Law, has enter'd into the Secret of Rebels, Contriv'd the Death of his Sovereign, and caus'd him to be Depos'd and Strangled?

As for the Aga of the Janizaries, I suppose him rather over-aw'd into the Conspiracy, by the Forcible Reasons and Elegant Parole of the Mufti, than any ways Voluntarily engaging himself in Crimes, to which he seems to have no Inclination. Besides, he could not refuse to make one in the Party, after it had once been propos'd to him; unless he were resolv'd, to be the first Victim of their Jealousie, and be Murdred himself, to prevent the Discovery of the Rest. Yet, his Duty and Honor, ought to have superseded all other Considerations: And he should have chosen to Die in his Allegiance, rather than to live stain'd with so foul a Crime.

However it be, I cannot approve their Treason. For, whatever the Vices of the Sultan were; they had no Right to punish him. He was accountable to None but God: And, they invaded the Prerogative of Heaven, in Dethroning Him, whom the Divine Providence had invested with the Imperial Diadem.

Much less can I approve their Impiety, in Defaming him now he is dead. Neither can I in Conscience comply with the Injunctions of the Mufti; who has commanded me, in a Letter, to spread an Ill Character of Sultan Ibrahim, among the Christians, that so his own Proceedings may appear Just. 'Tis true, I owe Much to the Authority of this Sovereign Guide of the Believers; yet I must not, to pay this Debt, turn Bankrupt of my Reason: I owe Something to my Self, and to the Distinguishing Character of a Man. I promis'd him, indeed, to obey his Commands in this Point: But, he that has given me a Dispensation for all the Lyes and Perjuries I shall be guilty of in Paris, will, I hope, pardon me, if I turn my own Confessor, and Absolve my self, for not performing my Word to him in this Point.

I am

I am not often guilty of Aſperſing the Living, but I abhor to Injure the Dead; leſt I ſhould incur the Fate of him, who being at Enmity with a Famous Wraſtler, purſu'd him with Malice and Revenge, even in his Grave. For, envying the Honour that was due to this Wraſtler's Memory, in that his Statue was ſet up in a Publick Place, he went privately, one Night, with deſign to throw the Statue down: But, after he had ſpightfully Diſfigur'd it in ſeveral Parts with a Hammer, and was buſie in working its Overthrow; the Image, on a ſudden, fell on him, and cruſh'd him to Death: As if the Spirit of him whom it repreſented, had given it this Fall, to revenge the Malice of his Adverſary.

Certainly, the Ancients were not ignorant what they ſaid, when, among other Sage Counſels, they adviſ'd Mortals, Not to ſpeak Ill of the Dead, but to eſteem them Sacred, who are gone into the Immortal State. And Plato's Ring had this Motto on it; It is eaſier to provoke the Dead, than to pacifie them, when once provok'd. Intimating thereby, That the Souls of the Departed, are ſenſible of the Injuries that are done them by the Living.

Therefore I will ſhun Detraction, eſpecially of the Dead: And, if I cannot ſay much in Praiſe of Sultan Ibrahim's Vertues, let his Vices be buried with him in Eternal Oblivion.

I run no Hazards in writing thus frankly to thee, being aſſur'd of thy Fidelity. Beſides, Death (which is the worſt Puniſhment can be inflicted on me, for what I have ſaid, ſhould it be known) would not be bitter, when given by a Friend. Dear Gnat, Adieu.

be

LETTER XXII.

To Danecmar Kesrou, Kadilesquer of Romania.

WHEN I informed thee how the Scots had Sold their King to the English Rebels, it was easie to presage the Consequence, without a Revelation. When Sovereign Monarchs become the Merchandise of Factions, they commonly pay the Price with their own Blood: And there are few Examples of Princes that have been Imprison'd by their Subjects, and yet have escaped a Violent Death: For those who have once advanc'd so far in their Treason, as to seize the Person of their Sovereign, can never retire with Safety to themselves; or, at least, their Own Guilt makes them think so. The Consciousness of what they have already done, prompts them to proceed in their Wickedness; and, their Despair of saving their own Lives, makes them conclude it Necessary to take away his, whose Violated Majesty, they fear, will never pardon so Impudent an Essay of Treason.

But the Method which the English have taken to to Murther their King, has not a Precedent in History: These Infidels have outstrip'd all Former Traytors, in the Contrivance and Execution of their Regicide: They have even surpass'd Themselves, and their own First Designs.

It has been usual for Traytors, to take away the Life of a Depos'd Monarch Privately, by Poyson or Assassin, either in Respect to his Royal Blood, or to avoid the Possibility of a Rescue, from any of his Loyal Friends and Subjects. But, these Barbarians were resolved publickly to insult on Majesty, to brave the whole World in the Execution of their Villainy, and make a Pompous Conclusion of their Treasons. For, they Erected a New Divan, or Court of Judicature, composed of the most Infamous Traytors: There they formally Try'd their Sovereign, by a Law of their own making; Condemn'd him, as a Tyrant and a Traytor: And finally, caused his Head to be chopt off with an Axe, by an Executioner, before the Gates of his own Palace, in the sight of Thousands of his Subjects; that so they might appear, not so much to Kill their King, as to Destroy the Monarchy it self, and Triumph in its Ruin.

Hast thou, O Venerable Judge of the Faithful, ever Read or Heard of such a Daring Treason? All Europe startles at the Monstrous Fact. And Cardinal Mazarini himself, who carried on that Private Web of Factious Design in England, whose First Threads his Predecessor Richlieu had spun; yet expressed an Horror, at the News of this Tragedy. And, I look not on this to be an Artifice of Policy in him, to blind the World; but a real Discovery of his Sentiments. For he is too generous to approve so Barbarous a Proceeding, against a Sovereign Monarch, though his Enemy.

T'other Day he was heard to say, That in Revenge of the King's Murder, he would embarass the Counsels of the English Rebels, more than he had done those of their Sovereign.

This was not spoken so secretly, but Mahmut had Intelligence of it within an Hour: For, I have more Ears in Paris, than those in my Head, to hearken after the Intrigues of this Minister: And, it will be difficult for him hereafter, to speak, write or act any Thing; no, not even in his Private Closet, which will not be disclosed to me.

Yet, though I thus watch his Motions as an Enemy, and do my utmost, to render his Designs against the Ottoman Port, Ineffectual; I cannot in my Heart condemn this Minister, who all the while, acts but the Part of a Faithful Servant and an Able Statesman, in striving to aggrandize his Master.

His supporting also the Factions in England, and nourishing the Discontents of that Giddy-Headed People, were but the Result of his Zeal for his Country, and for the Church, whereof he is One of the Principal Pillars: It being Evident from his Grief at that King's Murder, That he bore no Malice against him, but only sought to humble him into Terms of Compliance with France.

When I say this, I suppose the Cardinal's Sorrow on that Account, to be free from Fiction.

But

But who knows, when the Actions of Stateſmen are Undiſguiz'd, and when not? For, I am well aſſur'd, that whilſt his Agents were buſie in Embroyling that Nation, he promiſed the Exil'd Engliſh Queen, to aſſiſt her Husband with Men and Mony againſt thoſe very Rebels, with whom he held a Private Correſpondence, and to whom his Coffers were really open.

Moſt of the European Stateſmen, are corrupted with the Maxims of a certain Famous Writer whom they call Matchiavel. This State-Caſuiſt has taught them, to boggle at no Crimes, which may advance the Ends they aim at; Every Thing, in his Opinion, being Honeſt, that is Succeſsful. Thus. Policy among the Nazarenes, is Degenerated into Sordid-Craft: And, that which was once defervedly eſteem'd a Vertue, neceſſary to the Governments of the World, is now turn'd into a Vice; of which the very Out-Laws, Free-Booters and Pirates, are aſham'd.

God, who ſuffer'd the Earth to be Inhabited by Angels, for an Infinite Number of Ages before he Created Adam, and then Expelling them Hence for their Wickedneſs, and turning them to Devils, gave this Globe for a Dwelling-Place to Men; grant, that the Enormous Crimes of Mortals, may not provoke Him to Exterminate our Human Race, and reſtore the Devils to their Ancient Habitations.

TO THE

READER.

EXPECT no more Commendations of our Arabian Author; or Apologies for any Thing that may seem liable to Censure in his Letters. There is no End of answering the Cavils of those, who to gain the Character of Criticks, will create Faults where they find none; and impute the very Oversights of the Press, to the Ignorance of the Author, rather than a Book shall escape free from Censure.

What is wanting in the Style, where it may be suppos'd to come short of the Original, must be laid to the Italians Charge, who undertook the First Version of so Remote a Language. For, the English Translator has endeavour'd to follow him, as close as the difference of Idioms will admit. And all the World knows, That the English Tongue is none of the most Copious and Significant. But, if this shall seem an Invidious Reflection, substituted in the Room of a Passable Excuse; the English Translator, in Honour both of the Foreign Copies, and his own Native Language (for he is a true English-Man both by Blood and Affection) is willing to take the Blame of all Defects on himself. Assuring you, That whatsoever Roughness or Want of Elegance; Whatsoever Carelessness of Expression is to be found in the English Translation, though it may be a Fault indeed, yet 'tis purely owing to the Candor of him who has committed it. Since, the Chief Reason of such Neglect is because he was loath the Reader should lose the Original Sense, for the sake of a Sweet Period, or a Delicate Cadence.

If in other Places he seems affected, as in retaining the Turkish or Arabick Words, where they might as well have been rendred English; this also was out of Respect to his Copy, where those Words are left, as, we may suppose, they were found in the Original Arabick.

This is address'd to such Gentlemen, as have procur'd the Italian Copies of these Letters. For, we are inform'd, That they are in the Hands of some English

Travellers,

Travellers, who had a Curiosity to compare the different Translations together.

However, to Evidence that this is not spoken in Partiality to our selves, but with Equal Regard to that Learned Foreigner, who first brought these Letters to Light; It will not be amiss to exhibit such Probable Reasons, as might induce him to leave Some Arabick Words untranslated rather than Others, though they had both the same Sense.

The best Method of clearing up this Point, will be by producing Instances, such as that, Page 53, at the Bottom: Where the Word [Vizirs] is retained by the English Translator, because it was not chang'd by the Italian. Doubtless, it had been as easie to say [The Seven Chief Spirits, Angels, Chancellors or Ministers Above] as [The Seven Vizirs.] But since the Italian Copy has not alter'd the Word [Vizirs] the English Translator thought fit to let it stand. And he conceives, 'tis proper enough in both Versions; because it better expresses he Thought of the Turkish Author, than any Italian or English Word can do, being a Title of Dignity peculiar to the Ottoman Empire: Where the Credulous People are made to believe, That their Monarchy, with all its Officers of State, is exactly Modell'd according to the Pattern of the Celestial Court and Kingdom. Therefore, it appears very Natural in a Turk, to call the Ministers of Heaven by the Title of Vizirs, Beglerbegs, Bassa's, or whatsoever other Appellatives are us'd by them, to express the Dignity of their Grandees on Earth. And who would go to spoil his Sense, for the sake of a Word?

Besides, not to let this Passage fall, without due Remarks; Is it not Common in our Bible to call God, [Lord of Lords?] And how can this be otherwise expressed in Arabick, but by the Title which is appropriated to the Principal Governours of Provinces, whom in their Language they call Beglerbegs? It is equally usual in Scripture, to style God [King of Kings] a Title frequently assum'd by the Eastern Monarchs. Nay, in our Common Discourse, here in England, it is Customary to give to God, the Title of [The King of Heaven.] And why may we not as well give to the Arch-Angels and Angels &c. the Titles which are ordinarily apply'd to the Princes and Nobles on Earth? But however, if this will not appear allowable in a Christian, yet no Man can wonder at a Turk, when he hears him use his Native Dialect, speaking of the Potentates Above. And if this be granted, I hope, neither the Italian will be blam'd for preserving the Peculiar Phrase of an Eastern Author; nor the English Translator be accus'd, for following so Polite a Pattern.

This Instance had not been press'd so far, but in Hopes that what is already said, may serve as a Plea for several other Examples of like Nature in this Volume: Where it is impossible for any European, to express the Full Meaning of an Oriental Author, without reserving some Words of his very Language. And in this, the Italian Translator is chiefly vindicated; from whose Copy, the English in such Cases, had no reason to swerve. And thus much may suffice to answer all Objections about the Style.

As to the Matter it self, it appears full of Instruction, in Historical, Moral and Political Affairs. Nor need any Man wonder, if he encounter some Passages which may be found in other Writers, both Gentile and Christian; since the Author of these Letters professes, That he has taken much Pains to peruse the Treatises of the Ancients, both whilst he ſtudy'd in the Academies, and during his Reſidence at Paris, he often frequented the Libraries in that City; whereof there is no Scarcity. He ſpent a great Deal of Time, in reading Modern as well as Ancient Authors. By which Means, he not only improv'd his Knowledge in the Univerſal Hiſtory of Former Time, but grew Familiar with the moſt Remarkable Occurrences in Europe, during theſe Later Centuries. So that in ſome of his Letters, one would ſwear, he had read Sabellius, Petrus Juſtinianus, Philip de Comines, and other European Writers. For, he ſeems to come very near them, in relating ſome Particular Stories. And it may be ſuppos'd, that he took this Advantage to oblige the Turkiſh Grandees to whom he writ, by inſerting in his Letters, ſuch Paſſages as they were wholly Strangers to.

There need no more be ſaid, but that you may expect another Volume of theſe Letters very ſpeedily. Farewell.

VOL. IV.

BOOK I.

LETTER I.

Mahmut the Arabian, and indefatigable Slave to the Grand Signior, to Mahomet, the Moſt Illuſtrious Vizir Azem, at the Port.

I Congratulate thy Aſcent to that Top of Honour, the Firſt Dignity in the Empire Ever Victorious. 'Tis thy Turn to be now Exalted in the Orb of Fortune: Let not this High Station make thee forget, That the Wheel is always in Motion. But conſider, That ſince the Advance thou haſt made, was not but by the Fall of thy Predeceſſor, thou haſt the leſs Reaſon to think thy own State ſecure.

I am no Fortune-Teller; nor would I be ſo rude, as to Prognoſticate Ill Luck to my Superiors. But, Men in Eminent Dignity, have Need of a Monitor: And, it is Recorded of a Great Monarch, That he Commanded One of his Pages, every Morning to ſalute him, when he firſt awaked, with theſe Words, Remember, O King, that thou art a Mortal.

Let this Example, Supream Miniſter, plead my Excuſe, and incline thee to pardon the Freedom which Mahmut takes; who by this, thou ſeeſt, is no Flatterer.

Certainly, all Sublunary Things, Ebb and Flow like the Waters. And, though Men may ſometimes enjoy a Spring-Tide of Felicity; yet Fate has Hidden Sluces, which in a Moment, ſhall convey the Mighty Torrent to ſome other Channel.

I my ſelf have in ſome Meaſure experienc'd this, who am but a Puny in Compariſon with thee. Yet Deſtiny and Chance, are allotted to the Little, as well as to the Great. The Worm encounters as many croſs Contingencies, in her humble reptile State, as does the Towring Eagle, in all her lofty Flights and Ranges, through the wide-ſtrech'd Air.

In my Infancy I was ſnatch'd from the Cradle, and from the Arms of my Mournful Mother: Mournful on Two Accounts, the Death of a Husband, and the Neceſſity of parting parting with her Child. Yet this Early Separation, turn'd to my Advantage, and her Comfort. The Sequel of my Good Fortune, invited her to forsake her Solitudes, and follow me to the Imperial City; were she exchang'd her Melancholy Widow-Hood, for the Society and Love of a Merry Greek: Whilst Fate had another Game to play with me; it being the Will of Heaven, that from the Delights of the Seraglio, and the Honour of serving the Greatest Sovereign in the World, I should fall into a Cruel Captivity, and be compelled Ignominiously to drudge for a Barbarous Infidel. Afterwards, I gain'd my Liberty, and apply'd my self to study in the Academies. I will not boast of the Proficiency I made: But, at my Return to Constantinople, thou knowest, my Superiours thought me capable, of doing the Port Service in this Place. Thus Providence sports with Mortals, and by an Unaccountable Clew of Discipline, leads them through the Mazes of this Life.

How I have discharged my Trust here, I dare Appeal to All; yet can please None. Every Man will be my Judge to give Sentence against me; and some, I believe, wou'd willingly be my Executioners: Which, at certain Times, carries me into so deep a Melancholy, that I even join with my Enemies, and condemn my self, though I know not for what. Surely, say I, so many perspicacious Men cannot be all in the Wrong, and I only in the Right: they must needs see some Faults in me, which I cannot discern in my ſelf: doubtleſs I'm Partial, and never chang'd the Order of Æſops Wallet. Then I reflect on theſe Thoughts, as the mere Product of Melancholy: For, after the ſtricteſt Examination of my Conduct, I find my ſelf Innocent of thoſe Things, whereof I'm accus'd. Yet, whilſt I am juſtifying my Integrity towards my Great Maſter, my Sadneſs returns again, and tells me, That without Doubt, I have ſome Ways offended God and his Prophet, who, for that Reaſon, ſuffer the Envious to perſecute me; and drive me into a more intimate and familiar Converſe with my ſelf, that ſo by making a frequent Scrutiny after the Cauſe of my Outward Misfortunes, I may diſcover the Secret Crimes, which I may have committed againſt Heaven, and which lie hid under my Inadvertence and Oblivion.

Then I'm fill'd with a Thouſand Scruples about my telling Lyes, and taking Falſe Oaths; though I'm diſpens'd with for all thoſe Immoralities, by the Sovereign Arbiter of the Law. In a Word, I know not ſometimes what to think. And, were it not, that my Agency in theſe Parts, meets with ſome Succeſs, I ſhould often conclude, That I either lie under ſome Curſe of God, or Charms of Men; That either Heaven or Hell, have a Peculiar Hand in afflicting me.

But all this may be only the Fumes of my own Diſtemper'd Spleen. And, the Indulgent Judge of Men, may paſs a Milder Sentence on me, than either I do my ſelf, or my my Fellow-Mortals. He is Tranſcendently Benign and Merciful: And, our Sins of Frailty appear in his Eyes, but as ſmall Atomes in the Rays of a Morning's Sun; which, though they be Innumerable, yet the leaſt Breath of Wind, blows them all out of Sight.

By what I have ſaid, 'tis apparent, that I have Regard both to thee and my ſelf: To thee, as the Supream Diſpoſer of Life and Death, under the Grand Signior; to my ſelf, as one cull'd out for a Victim by the Malicious, and lying at the Feet of thy Noble Nature, begging thy Protection. My Enemies are Induſtrious to ruin me, and lay hold on all Opportunities to accompliſh it. The Sentence which they could not procure from thy Predeceſſor, they may hope to draw from thee by their Falſe Informations. This makes me uſe Pre-Caution in my own Defence; hoping to foreſtal their Malice, by this Humble Addreſs.

Imitate thou the Divine Nature; and be not ſevere, in remarking the Peccadillo's and ſmall Delinquencies of thy Slave. If I turn Infidel or Traytor, I crave no Favour.

That Supreamly Merciful and Gracious, the Firſt and the Laſt of the World, and Lord of Paradiſe, heap on thee as many Bleſſings every day, as would employ my ſwifteſt Wiſhes a Thouſand Years; and grant, That thou mayſt find Admittance into the Place full of Rivers, whoſe Springs take their Riſe, from the Bottom of the Rock of Eternity.

LETTER II.

To the Kaimacham.

THE Troubles of this Kingdom, which a while ago ſeem'd to be compos'd, are now again broke out afreſh. The Private Grudges of Some, and the Ambition of others of the Nobility, have once more put all in Arms. This City is Block'd up by the Prince of Conde's Army, who has not been long return'd from Flanders. The King, the Queen, with Cardinal Mazarini, and the whole Court, are at St. Germains en Lay, whither they went by Night. This abrupt Departure, gave freſh Courage to the Seditious, and at the ſame time, furniſh'd them with new Matter of Accuſation againſt Cardinal Mazarini, who, they ſay, has ſtole away their Sovereign from them. The Parliament have declar'd him, an Enemy to the Government. They are levying Soldiers as faſt as they can; and Proviſions are laid in, as if they were to ſuſtain ſuſtain a long Siege. Several Princes and Grandees, are come over to the Citizens, having deſerted the Court; among whom, is the Prince of Conti, Brother to the Prince of Conde. Yet the Pariſians are diſtruſtful of him, and have Confin'd his Siſter, as a Hoſtage for his Fidelity; not knowing, that his Deſertion is Real, being occaſion'd by ſome Quarrel beeween him and his Elder Brother.

'Tis ſaid, That Cardinal Mazarini has taken a Reſolution to depart the Kingdom, that ſo he may avoid the Tempeſt that threattens him from all Hands.

The Queen has ſent Orders to the Colonels, that ſerve under Mareſchal Turenne in Germany, commanding them to abandon that General, who, they ſay, has declared for the Parliament, and ſent to offer them his Service.

On the other Side, the Citizens endeavour to ſtrengthen their Party, by ſending to all the Parliaments of France, to deſire their Conjunction, in eſpouſing the Quarrel of this of Paris.

The Companies which the Burghers of this City have rais'd, wear this Motto in their Enſigns, WE SEEK OUR KING.

In the mean while, the Arch-Duke of Auſtria keeps near the Frontiers of this Kingdom, with an Army of Twenty Thouſand Men; and ſends frequent Propoſals to the Parliament, in Order to a Peace.

Whilſt I was writing the laſt Word,

News was brought me, That Eliachim the Jew is ſeiz'd, and clapt in Priſon at St. Denis, which Place is in the King's Hands. I cannot learn the Reaſon of his Confinement, but am apt to ſuſpect 'tis on the Score of his late appearing among the Rabble of Paris, whereof I gave an Account in a Letter to the Aga of the Janizaries.

The Surprize I am in at this Unfortunate Accident, puts me upon a Thouſand Thoughts. I know not what Courſe to take for my own ſafety. If Eliachim's Papers ſhould be ſearch'd, Mahmut muſt be diſcover'd; and then, if I tarry in the City, I cannot eſcape a Priſon: For, tho' at this Juncture, one would think this Place, a ſufficient Protection from the Court; yet the Hatred they bear to the True Believers, and the Diſcovery of ſo Important a Commiſſion as mine would ſuperſede their Inteſtine Animoſities. I ſhould Infallibly be either deliver'd up to the Court, or ſent to the Baſtile. If I go out of the City, my Danger is yet greater; all the Paſſes of the Country, being narrowly watch'd, and ſtrongly guarded by the King's Soldiers. This made me at firſt, reſolve to deferr the Concluſion of this Letter to another Time, whilſt I provided for my own Safety; as thinking it impoſſible, to convey any Intelligence out of France undiſcover'd. But being inform'd of a Courier, that was juſt going from the Parliament, to the Arch-Duke of Auſtria; and fearing leſt I ſhould never have the Priviledge of Pen, Ink and Paper

Paper again, I have raviſh'd a few Moments, from that little Time I have left to ſhift for my ſelf, that ſo I might give thee Notice of this Accident.

I have written alſo to Nathan Ben Saddi at Vienna, to prevent any Diſpatches from him, till farther Order. Both theſe Letters I venture in the Hands of a faithful Meſſenger, who has cauſed them to be ſew'd up in the Heels of his Shoes, to prevent Diſcovery. He travels under the Protection of the Courier.

I have not a Minute left to ſay more, than that I am at this Inſtant parting from my Lodging; my Books and other Things being packt up, and Porters ready to carry 'em away. If I get ſafe out of the Houſe, I muſt change my Habit and Name; and ſo lay the Foundation of a New Concealment, till the Iſſue of this Adventure, ſhall direct me what to do.

Adieu, Illuſtrious Kaimacham, and expect to hear more in my Next; or, let my Silence convince thee, that Mahmut is no longer at Liberty.

Paris, 26th. of the 2d. Moon,
of the Year 1649.

LETTER III.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

IF thou haſt any Diſpatches coming for me, and it be yet in thy Power to ſtop them, uſe Wings in doing it: For, I fear, we are diſcover'd in this Place. Thy Brother Eliachim, is arreſted by the King's Orders. What is laid to his Charge, I know not for certain: Neither is it neceſſary for thee, to be inform'd in that Point. But, if his Confinement be owing to ſome Services he has lately done me, we are all loſt. His Papers will be ſearch'd, which muſt of Neceſſity betray our Secrets: And then, we have Nothing to expect, but the ſevereſt Execution of the Chriſtians Fury and Revenge. I am in no ſmall Confuſion at this Accident, having ſcarce Time to provide for my Concealment. Send no more to Paris, till thou receiveſt farther Advice. We are all in arms, this City being block'd up by the Queen's Troops; ſo that I know not well which way to ſhift for my ſelf, and eſcape a Thouſand Scrutinies, which they will every where make into the Affairs of a Stranger. But, that Fate which over-rules Humane Contingencies, will, I hope, reſcue me out of this Danger: To which I commend both thee and me; bidding thee Farewel, as

if

If I were never to write to thee again: For, ſo the Iſſue may prove.

Paris, 26th of the 2d. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER IV.

To Adonai, a Jew, at Venice.

I Have ſomething more Reſpite now, than when I wrote laſt to thy Brother Nathan at Vienna, to inform him of Eliachim's being made a Priſoner. I was in a greater Hurry at that Time, than the Ninth Sphere. All my Motions were ſwift. I went Backward and Forward, like the Planets: but had no Leiſure to ſtand ſtill, as they do ſometimes. In a Word, I have run over the whole Zodiack of Policy, to ſeek for a New Houſe; that wherein I Lodg'd, being like to prove too hot for me. At Length I have found one, wherein I hope to meet with no Malevolent Aſpects, but to remain, as before, in a Friendly Conjunction with the Moon; behind whoſe Splendors, I may lie cover'd, from the Inquiſitions of peering Mortals.

To ſpeak more intelligibly, I am for the preſent, remov'd to other Lodgings in this City, the better to ſhelter my ſelf from the Storm which ſeems to hang over my Head, ſince ſince Eliachim was ſeiz'd. Yeſterday, I wrote to the Kaimacham, and to Nathan Ben Saddi, to give them an Account of this Accident. This goes along with the ſame Meſſenger; for, I durſt not confide in the Poſts, during the Preſent Diſorders of this Kingdom.

I receiv'd a Letter from thee, wherein thou informeſt me, of an Attempt that has been lately made, to rob the Treaſury of Venice: Which, according to thy Deſcription is very Rich and Magnificent; not to be match'd in Europe. Perhaps, if thou hadſt ſeen the Wealth that is preſerv'd in the Church of St. Denis, a City not far from Paris, thou wouldſt be of another Mind. But neither of us can make proper Compariſons, having not ſeen both Places. The French extol the Latter, and ſay, it far exceeds that of Venice. But, they may ſpeak Partially; it being the Humour of all People, to magnify the Grandeur of their own Nation: And, the French come not ſhort of the Reſt of the World in Vain-Glory. However it be, it was a vaſt Attempt, and full of Infinite Difficulties and Perils, to Rob the Vaults of a Church, in the Heart of that Great and Populous City, where all the Riches of the Seigniory were Repoſited. It is an Argument of the Greatneſs of their Souls, who durſt undertake ſo hazardous an Enterprize.

But, this is not the Firſt Time the Venetians have been in Danger to loſe that Prodigious Maſs of Wealth. A Poor Grecian once found a Way, through Marble Barricado's under-Ground, Ground, to enter thoſe Golden Cells; from whence he carried away, to the Value of Twenty Hundred Thouſand Zechins in Jewels. But, making one of his Countrymen acquainted with it, the Villain betray'd him to the Doge, who cauſed him to be Hang'd.

That Commonwealth, has been all along very Happy in Diſcovery of Plots, and other Miſchiefs intended againſt Her. I know not whether thou haſt heard, of the Famous Conſpiracy of Tiepoli; who not content with the Life and Eſtate of a Private Gentleman, ſought to render himſelf Sovereign of Venice. And, to this End, inſinuated into the Affections of many Thouſands of the Citizens; whom he kept in conſtant Penſion for above Nine Years together, under the Notion of aſſiſting him, to revenge certain Injuries he had receiv'd from a Roman Gentleman. They were all to run with their Arms into the Streets, when they ſhould hear the Name Tiepoli utter'd aloud, and often repeated.

But, when the Day was come, whereon he was to put his Deſigns in Execution, and the Alarm was given in the Streets, an Old Woman made ſuch Haſte to look out at her Chamber-Window, to ſee what was the Occaſion of the Tumult, that ſhe threw down an Earthen Veſſel; which falling directly on the Head of Tiepoli, Kill'd him, and ſo put an End to the Rebellion. For which happy Accident, the Senate ſetled a Yearly Penſion of a Thouſand Zechins, on the Old Woman during her Life, and the ſame to be paid to her Heirs and Poſterity for ever.

Send me no Diſpatches, till thou haſt receiv'd another Letter from me, which will direct thee what to do.

Paris, 27th. of the 2d. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER V.

To Mahummed, Hadgia, Derviſe, Eremit, Inhabitant of the Prophetick Cave, in Arabia the Happy.

THE Franks (who are more ready to find Faults in others, than to amend their own) cenſure the Muſſulmans, for extending their Charity to Beaſts, Birds and Fiſhes. They laugh at the Alms we beſtow to feed Dogs, Cats and other Living Creatures; and ridicule the Tenderneſs of ſuch, as go into the Markets, and buy the Birds that are there ſold, on Purpoſe to reſtore them to their Native Liberty. They ſay, 'tis a ſufficient Demonſtration of Piety, to relieve the Neceſſities of Men; and, that it is but a Fruitleſs Hypocriſy, to ſhew Kindneſs to the Brutes, who, in their Opinion, have neither Souls nor Reaſon, and conſequently are Inſenſible of our Good Offices toward them.

Theſe

These are the Charges of Western Raillery, the Scoffs of the Obdurate, with which they load the Generous Orientals, the Hearts transfix'd with Universal Dove. What would they say, if they had heard of thy Heroick Piety, who not only affordest Protection and Relief to those Creatures whereof we have no Need, but even abstainest from the Flesh of all Animals, though the Prophet himself has indulg'd us the Use of some for our Necessary Food, and with out wich many plead, that we cannot sustain Life? Oh! excellent Man, born for the Reproof and Light of the Age, how is the Soul of our Great Law-giver, exhilarated, when he beholds thy Innocent and Unblemish'd Life? The Treasury of Heaven, is enrich'd with thy Good Works, the Fertile Harvest of Vertues, the First-Fruits of the Purity of thy Nature! From thy first Descent into that Holy Cave, the Angels who Register the Words of Men, never heard thee utter a Syllable that could be reprehended. Thy Thoughts ravish the Heart of God himself with Joy. The Universal Spirit full of Eyes, Watcher of the Universe, would fall Asleep, were it not Rowz'd by the strong Vibrations of thy sublime Soul. Thy Contemplations, are Themes for the College of those, who were Assistant in Forming of All Things. Were it not for such as thee, the Angel of the First Motion, would cease to Whirl the Globes of Light through the Heavens: The Orbs Above would grow Rusty, and all the Wheels and Springs of Nature, ture, would ſtand ſtill. Oh Elect Idea, before whoſe Purify'd Eſſence, the Sun himſelf appears full of Blemiſhes! Humane Wit cannot find thy Equal on Earth: Thou art the Impreſs on the SEAL OF THE PROPHETS, the Soul of the Soul of Mahomet!

In thus celebrating thy High Perfections; if I have offended thy Modeſty, thou haſt the Goodneſs to aſcribe it to the Exceſs of my Affection, which carries me beyond Human Regards. I would fain be an Imitator of thy Incorrupt Life. For, let the Chriſtians ſay what they pleaſe, I will ever eſteem Abſtinence a Divine Virtue. I have conſulted the Sages of Old, that I might learn what was the Practice of Former Times, whilſt Human Nature was yet in its Infancy, before the Manners of Men were Debauch'd. I have purſued the Select Writings of the Ancients, the Records of Truth, and void of Fables. And, believing that ſuch Memoirs will not be unwelcome to thee, I preſume to lay them at thy Feet, as a Mark of that Profound Veneration, I owe to the Tenant of the Darling of God.

Theſe Hiſtorians ſay, That the Firſt Inhabitants of the Earth, for above Two Thouſand Years, liv'd altogether on the Vegetable Products; of which they Offer'd the Firſt-Fruits to God: It being eſteem'd an Inexpiable Wickedneſs, to ſhed the Blood of any Animal, though it were in Sacrifice, much more to Eat of their Fleſh. To this End, they they relate the Firſt Slaughter of a Bull, to have been made at Athens, on this Occaſion. The Prieſt of the Town, whoſe Name was Diomus, as he was making the Accuſtomed Oblation of Fruits on an Altar in the Open Field, (for, as yet they had no Temples) a Bull came running from the Herd, which was grazing hard by, and eat of the Conſecrated Herbage. Upon which Diomus the Prieſt, mov'd with Zeal at the Reputed Sacrilege, and ſnatching a Sword from one of thoſe that were preſent, kill'd the Bull. But, when his Paſſion was over, and he conſidered, what a heinous Crime he had committed; fearing alſo the Rage of the People, he perſuaded them, That a God had appear'd to him, and commanded him to Offer that Bull in Sacrifice, by Burning his Fleſh with Fire on the Altar, as an Atonement for his devouring the Conſecrated Fruits. The Devout Multitude, acquieſc'd to the Words of their Prieſt, as to an Oracle. And, the Bull being flea'd and Fire laid on the Altar, they all aſſiſted at the New Sacrifice. From which Time, the Cuſtom was Yearly obſerv'd among the Athenians, to Sacrifice a Bull. And by them, this Method of Religious Cruelty was taught not only to all Greece, but to the Reſt of the World. In proceſs of Time, a certain Prieſt, in the Midſt of his Bloody Sacrifice, taking up a Piece of the Broiled Fleſh which had fall'n from the Altar on the Ground, and burning his Fingers therewith, ſuddenly clapt them to his Mouth, to mitigate the Pain. But when,

When he had once taſted the Sweetneſs of the Fat, not only long'd for more of it, but gave a Piece to his Aſſiſtant, and he to others: Who all pleaſed with the new-found Dainties, fell to Eating of Fleſh greedily. And hence this Species of Gluttony, was taught to other Mortals. Neither is it Material, what the Hebrew Doctors object againſt theſe Teſtimonies, when they introduce the Son of Adam, Sacrificing Living Creatures, in the Infancy of the World; ſince, thou knoweſt, many Errors are Inſerted in the Written Law, from whence they take this Story.

They ſay alſo, That the Firſt Goat that fell by the Hands of Men, was killed in Revenge for the Injuries it had done the Owner of a Vineyard, in browſing on his Vines; ſuch an Impious Deed, having never been heard of before.

This is certain, . That the Egyptians, the Wiſeſt and moſt Ancient People in the World, having receiv'd from the Firſt Inhabitants of the Earth a Tradition, forbidding Men To Kill any Living Creature; to give the greater Force to this Primitive Law of Nature, they Form'd the Images of their Gods, in the Similitude of Beaſts: That ſo the Vulgar, ſtruck with Reverence at the Sacred Symbols, might learn to abſtain from Killing, or ſo much as Hurting the Dumb Animals; under whoſe Forms, they Repreſented whatſoever among them was eſteemed Adorable.

Yet, leſt any in his Life-Time, ſhould by Accident, or otherwiſe, have tranſgreſs'd the Law of Abſtinence, they uſed a kind of Expiation for the Dead, after this Manner. The Prieſts took the Bowels out of the Belly of the Deceaſed, and putting them in an Earthen Veſſel, they held it towards the Sun; and calling Witneſſes, they made the following Speech, in Behalf of the Dead: "O thou "Sun, whoſe Empire is Univerſal, and all ye "Other Powers, who give Life to Men, re- "ceive me into the Society of the Immortal "Gods. For, ſo long as I lived in this World, "I Religiouſly perſevered in the Worſhip of "thoſe Deities, which were made known to "me by my Anceſtors. I always Honour'd my "Parents, who begat my Body. I never Kill'd "any Man or Beaſt, nor have been Guilty "of any Black Crime. But, if whilſt I liv'd "I have treſpaſs'd, in Taſting any of thoſe "Things which are Forbidden; it was not my "Sin, but the Fault of theſe Entrals, which "are here ſeparated from the reſt of my Body. And having ſaid this, they caſt the Veſſel into the River, on the Banks of which, the Ceremony was perform'd; Embalming the Reſt of the Body, as Pure and free from Sin.

Law

After the ſame Manner, the Perſian Magi, or Wiſe Men, practiſed Abſtinence. And, to imprint in their Diſciples, a Tenderneſs and Friendſhip toward the Beaſts, they called them, according to their different Stations, either Lyons, Hyæna's, Crows, Eagles, Hawks, &c. And, their Garments were Painted all over, with the Various Figures of Animals;

Animals; thereby inſinuating, the Doctrine of the Soul's Tranſmigration; and inculcating this Myſtery, That the Spirit of Man, enters ſucceſſively into all Sorts of Bodies: Which, thou knoweſt, is not remote from the Faith of True Believers.

It would not be amiſs, as a Teſtimony of the Practice of the Ancients, to inſert a Memorable Addreſs, which the Reformed Prieſts of Crete, were wont to make before the Altar of Jupiter. " O Divine Governour of the Hundred Cities, we have led a Holy Life, from " the Time that we were Initiated in thy " Myſteries, and forſook the Nocturnal Rites, " and Bloody Feaſts of Bacchus: We are now " Purified, and Cloth our ſelves in White " Veſtments, the Emblems of our Innocence: " We ſhun the Society of Polluted Mortals; " neither approach we to the Sepulchres " of the Dead, nor Taſte of the Fleſh of " any Thing, which has been endued with " Life.

Such alſo was of Old, and to this Day is, the Abſtinence of the Indians; among whom the Brachmans perform the Office of Prieſthood. Theſe, the Ancient Grecians called Gymnoſophiſts. They are all of one Race, neither will they admit a Stranger into their Order. They live for the moſt Part near to Ganges, or ſome other River, for the Sake of their frequent Purifications. Their Diet conſiſts, of Milk Curdl'd with ſowre Herbs. They feed alſo on Apples, Rice, and other Fruits of the Earth; eſteeming it the Height Height of Impiery, to taſte of any Thing that has Life. They live in little Hutts or Cottages, every one by himſelf, avoiding Company and Diſcourſe; employing all their Time in Contemplation, and the Service of the Temple. They eſteem this Life, but a Neceſſary Diſpenſation of Nature, which they Voluntarily undergo as a Penance; ardently thirſting, after the Diſſolution of their Bodies; and firmly believing, That the Soul by Death, is releaſed from its Priſon, and launches forth into Immenſe Liberty and Happineſs. Therefore they are always chearfully diſpoſed to Die, bewailing thoſe that are Alive, and Celebrating the Funerals of the Dead, with joyful Solemnities and Triumphs. Among their Good Works, it is accounted an Act of great Reputation and Vertue, to build Hoſpitals for Beaſts as well as Men: And, in every City, there are great Numbers of ſuch, as ſpend all their Life, in tending on Sick and Wounded Animals, or ſuch as have no Suſtenance elſewhere. And, this is no Novel Inſtitution, but deliver'd down to them by Tradition, from Immemorable Ages.

The Precepts alſo of Triptolemus and Draco, the moſt Ancient Lawgivers of the Athenians, are a Teſtimony of the Innocence and Sincerity of the Firſt Age: For, they comprehended all the whole Syſtem of Piety and Vertue, in Practiſing theſe few Rules:

"Let it be an Eternal Sanction to the Athenians, To Adore the Immortal Gods:
"To Reverence the Departed Heroes; to "Celebrate

"Celebrate their Praiſes with Songs, and the "Firſt-Fruits of the Earth; To Honour "their Parents; and neither to Kill Man or "Beaſt.

I could relate to thee, Examples of Abſtinence in the Ancient Lacedæmonians, Spartans, Jews, and almoſt all Nations of the Eaſt: Nor are there wanting ſome Teſtimonies of it, in theſe Weſtern Parts. This Kingdom of France, was in Old Times Inſtructed by a Kind of Prophets or Philoſophers, whom they call'd Druids; who took up their Uſual Reſidence under Oaks. Theſe taught, the Tranſmigration of Souls; and therefore, preſcrib'd Abſtinence from Fleſh; and ſhew'd to Men, the Method of Worſhipping God with the Firſt-Fruits of the Earth. From hence they ſail'd over into Britain, and planted themſelves in that Iſland, propagating the ſame Doctrines; and were reverenc'd by the People as Sacred Oracles.

By all which it is Evident, That the tender Regard which the True Faithful have for the Brutes, is no Innovation, or ſingular Caprice of Superſtition, but the Primitive Practice of the Ancients, the Univerſal Tradition of the Whole Earth. Nay, the Eaſtern Chriſtians, for the moſt Part, live an Abſtemious Life; ſuch as the Grecians, Armenians, Georgians, Mingrelians, and others that are ſcatter'd up and down in divers Parts of Aſia. Theſe following the Examples and Traditions of the Apoſtles and Primitive Fathers of their Churches, either taſte not at all, or very ſparingly, ringly, the Fleſh of Beaſts, Birds and Fiſhes. But, the Nazarenes of the Weſt, boaſt of I know not what Liberty they have, to Eat, without Scruple, of all Things; having the Diſpenſation of the Roman Mufti, whom they call the Vicar of God. Hence it is, that theſe Religious Libertines, are not afraid to gorge themſelves, even with the Blood of Slaughter'd Beaſts, which their own Law forbids 'em to taſte. And they prop themſelves up in their Impiety, by ſaying, That the Pope has Power, to Change the Traditions and Ordinances of the Apoſtles, and even of Jeſus the Meſſiah himſelf. Hence proceeds their Deriſion of thoſe, who ſhew any Tenderneſs to the Brutes; for, they are harden'd in their Gluttonous Cruelty, and are but one Remove, from the moſt Salvage Cannibals.

But thou, Holy Man of God, pity theſe Infidels, and pray that Mahmut, may be a ſincere Diſciple of thy Purity.

LETTER VI.

To the Kaimacham.

I Am return'd to my former Lodging again, the Caſe of Eliachim, being not ſo bad as my Fears. The Occaſion of his Confinement, were certain Words he ſpoke againſt the Proceedings of Cardinal Mazarini and the Court, in Company of ſuch as were Officious to oblige that Miniſter. This was done at St. Denis, not far from Paris; where they immediately cauſed him to be taken into Cuſtody by the King's Guards, who quarter'd in that Town. It has coſt him a conſiderable Sum of Mony, to purchaſe his Liberty; which he now enjoys, as before. I had other Thoughts, when I firſt heard the News of his being ſeized; and that it was, for ſome Seditious Expreſſions: For then I call'd to Mind, how he had Acted laſt Year by my Order, during the Tumults of Paris; and concluded, That ſome Unlucky Accident had now betray'd him. Which if it were ſo, would infallibly bring me into the ſame Danger. This made me ſo ſuddenly change my Habitation, and put a ſtop to the Diſpatches of the Sublime Port. I thought no Caution too much, to preſerve the Affairs of my Commiſſion Indemnified; and, that it were better to offend in being too Wary, than too Secure. If I have taken wrong Meaſures Meaſures in thus abſconding, 'tis for want of fuller Inſtruction from my Superiors. I wiſh they would honour me with Particular Rules, in Caſe of ſuch Emergences: Then I ſhould ſteer my Courſe, without running the Hazard of Rocks and Sands. I have often deſir'd to know, whether, if I were diſcover'd, I ſhould own my ſelf an Agent for the Grand Signior. But none of the Miniſters have vouchſafed to direct me in this Point: Whereby, I may commit an irreparable Miſtake, if ſuch a Thing ſhould happen.

Adonai the Jew, informs me of an Attempt lately made to rob the Treaſury of Venice; which, according to his Deſcription, is very Rich and Magnificent. He ſays, there are Twelve Crowns of pure Gold, and an equal Number of Breaſt-plates of the ſame Metal, ſet with all ſorts of precious Stones of Ineſtimable Value: A Hundred Veſſels of Agat: Threeſcore Services for the Altar, all of pure Gold, enrich'd with Diamonds, Sapphires, Emralds, and other Stones of Price. There is alſo an Unicorn's Horn, above the Purchaſe of Money. There are Fourteen Unpoliſh'd Pearls, as large as a Man's Fiſt. The Ducal Cap, is valued at a Hundred Thouſand Zechins: With many other Rareties and Coſtly Ornaments, too tedious to be inſerted in a Letter.

Certainly, ſo much Wealth, was never deſtin'd to fall into the Hands of Little Private Thieves: It is a Booty, fit for Kings and great Generals, the Licens'd Banditi of the Earth. So many Glittering Jewels, would tempt the Honesty of an Angel: And, he would be glad to adorn the Apartments of his Heaven, with these Radiant Drops of the Sun which he sees on Earth.

I have met with some pretty Relations of the Boldness of Robbers, but none that ever match'd the Bravery of this Enterprize; which was no less, than to Rob one of the most Potent States in the World, of her Chiefest Treasure.

He wanted not for Impudence, who, when the Emperour Charles V. was removing his Court, and all the Officers were busy in packing up the Good, enter'd the Chamber where the Emperour was; and having made his Obeisance, fell roundly to pulling down the rich Hangings of Tissue, which by the Help of his Confederates] he carried away, with Abundance of Plate: No body ever suspecting, but that he was one of the Emperour's Servants, till the Person came, whose Office it was to remove those Goods, and then the other was known to be a Thief.

I have heard of a Spaniard, who, on a Great Festival, when the Priests had finish'd the Service of the Altar, and were retir'd to their Lodgings, went very boldly and took the Golden Vessels off the Altar, and carry'd them away under his Cloak, as though he had been the Steward of that Church, no Body suspecting any other.

I kiss the Hem of thy Vest, Illustrious Kaimachan, and pray, that thou may'st monopolize polize the Choiceſt Bleſſings of Heaven, and have thy Share of the Riches of the Earth, without Danger of loſing them to Great or Small Thieves.

Paris, 16th of the 3d. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER VII.

To Nathan Ben Sadi, a Jew at Vienna.

NOW thou may'ſt continue thy Diſcourſes as before. Our Fears are vaniſh'd: Elizabeth is reſcu'd, and all Things are in Safety. Thou haſt no Reaſon to tax me with Timorouſneſs, in ſo abruptly forſaking my Habitation, on the bare Foreſight of far-fetch'd Poſſibilities; when thou ſhalt conſider, that there is no arming againſt Contingencies in the Moment they arrive, and that he who truſts all Things to Chance, makes a Lottery of his Life, wherein for One Happy Event, he ſhall meet with Ten Unlucky Ones. To what Uſe ſerves that Apprehenſive Faculty, which Nature has poſted as the Corps du Guard of our Lives and Fortunes, allowing it the Senſes for Scouts and Sentinels? To what End, I ſay, ſerves this Watchful Faculty, but to take the Alarm at doubtful Emergencies; to rouze our Caution, that so we may make Provision, and be in a Posture of Defence, against whatsoever may happen?

News came, that Eliachim was seiz'd, for Seditious Words against the Government. I was conscious, that both he and I, had been Guilty of more than bare Words in that Kind. Therefore, what had happen'd to him, I look'd upon as due to my self also; and, that my Confinement would soon follow, if I took not speedy Care to prevent it, by seasonably absconding. This was the Reason of my sudden Departure, which cannot justly be ascrib'd to Cowardise, since 'twas the Effect of Common Prudence.

Now I'm return'd to my Old Lodging again, where the Joy they are in for the Birth of a Son, will not give them Leisure to reflect on my Affairs. So that I am receiv'd by my Host, without the least Jealousie or suspicious Animadversions. Brim-full of Mirth and Jovial Thoughts, the Good Man Compliments me, and proclaims his better Fortune. Invites me to sit down with his Friends, and partake of the Gifts of Ceres and Bacchus. This thou knowest, is the Custom of the whole Earth, at the Birth of Mortals. They make merry over one, that is born to the same Miseries as themselves; who, the first Moment he draws the Breath of Life, is enrolled in the Register of Death; and from the Womb, makes swift and direct Advances to the Grave.

However, I sat down with the Rest, to comply

comply with the exhilarated Humour of my Host. I eat, I drank, and ſeem'd Merry with the Company. Yet, at the ſame Time, I could not but nauſeate my Entertainment, and diſdain the extravagant Profuſion of Spirit, which appear'd in every one of this vain Aſſembly. They all talk'd eagerly; and, one Man's Words, drown'd thoſe of another: Whilſt an Univerſal Laughter, confounded the Senſe of all. Then I prais'd in my ſelf, the Modeſty and Order obſerv'd in our Eaſtern Banquets and Feaſts, where no uncomely Geſtures or Actions, eſcape the well-natur'd Gueſts; no loud talking or braying like Aſſes, but every one ſtrives to ſuppreſs the Motions and Appearances of a too forward and indulgent Mirth, and contain themſelves within the Bounds of a decent and civil Reſerve. Such were the Feaſts inſtituted by Lycurgus, among the Ancient Lacedæmonians; where, ſuch as were Friends and Acquaintance, met together and refreſh'd themſelves, without Riot and Luxury. They convers'd together interchangeably, after the Manner of Philoſophers, or Men of the Law: Diſcourſing ſoberly either of Natural Things, or Civil Affairs: Mixing facerious and witty Jeſts, with their more ſerious Talk, without Clamour, Scurrility or giving any Offence. But theſe Weſtern People, think themſelves not Merry till they are Drunk, nor Witty unleſs they be Rude. They play a Thouſand Wanton Tricks, like Apes; and the greateſt Buffoon is the beſt Company.

Wherefore, ſick to ſee Men ſo much degenerate from themſelves, I made my Excuſes, and retir'd to my Chamber, where I preſently ſet Pen to Paper, to give thee an Account of my Return.

If thou continueſt thy former Reſolution, of following the Dictates of Reaſon, in Matters of Religion, thou wilt quickly find, that thy Rabbi's have taught thee to believe in Fables, which accord neither with Reaſon, nor Common Sence. Follow the beſt Guide, and be Happy.

LETTER VIII.

To Adonai, a Jew at Venice.

THY Pen is now free again: Write as ſoon and as often as thou wilt; our Fears are diſſipated, and all goes well. If thou canſt inform me of any more Remarkable Paſſages and Adventures, ſpare not to oblige me with frequent Letters. And to encourage thee, I will relate to thee a Story, which is Recorded in the Hiſtories of Naples.

In former Times, there was a Statue of Marble, ſtanding on the Top of a Mountain in Apulia, with this Inſcription on the Head, which was of Braſs, ON MAY-DAY AT SUN-

SUN-RISING, I SHALL HAVE A HEAD OF GOLD. No Man in all those Parts could be found, who was able to unriddle this Mysterious Expression; and therefore, it was not regarded for many Ages. But at length, in the Reign of a certain Prince, there was a Saracen, who having seen and consider'd the Statue, with the Inscription, propos'd to explain it for a certain Reward. The Prince hearing of this, and being greedy of the Novelty, sent for the Saracen; and bargain'd with him for a Thousand Crowns, to unfold this Riddle. He waited till May-Day came, and watching the Image that Morning Early, he observ'd the Place where the Head cast its Shadow just as the Sun rose. There he order'd certain Men to dig: Which when they had done, and were got pretty deep in the Earth, they encounter'd a Prodigious Treasure of Silver, Gold, and Jewels. With which the Prince was so well satisfy'd, that he doubl'd the Saracens Reward, and sent him Home into his own Country, laden with rich presents. Doubtless, there is much Wealth bury'd by Men in the Earth. For, in Former Times, they were of Opinion, That if they should die suddainly, in the Wars or otherwise, such Riches as they had hidden in the Earth, would serve them in the Other World. And this is the Practice of the Indians to this Day; as my Brother informs me, who has been among them.

Strange Blindness! that Men should think the Immortal Soul, needed the Assistance of Silver, Gold, or any Material Subſtance, after ſhe her ſelf is diveſted of the Body, and become a Naked Spirit.

Let thou and I have a Nobler Idea of our Selves, than to phancy we ſhall be in Want of the Glittering Droſs, in that Inviſible State, whither we are all haſtening. There are no Mony Changers in that World of Spirits. If thou haſt Superfluity, hide it not in the Earth, but give it to the Poor, and thou ſhalt receive it again, transform'd into a Subſtance more refin'd and radiant than the Stars.

Paris, 16th. of the 3d. Moon,
of the Year 1649.

LETTER IX.

To the Reis Effendi, Chief Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

THE Inteſtine Quarrels of the French, ſeem to be like thoſe of Lovers; whoſe Cholerick Intervals, ſerve but to give a new Edge to the Returns of their Affection. As if One of theſe Paſſions, was made to whet the Other, and make it more ſprightly: Or, as if Love would grow dull and feculent, were it not ſometimes rowz'd and fermented by Anger.

But,

But, I believe, there is a greater Myſtery in the Reconciliation between the French Court and the Parliament of Paris. Some Ends of Policy, have haſten'd both Parties to clap up a Peace, while the ſecret Rancor remains unpurg'd.

Perhaps the Union of ſo many Princes and Nobles with the Parliament, might incline the Queen to milder Counſels than her own Spaniſh Genius. Beſides, the Conjunction of the other Parliaments of the Kingdom, the Revolt of Normandy, Gaſcoigne and Provence, with many Eminent Cities, were very prevailing Motives. But, that which was of greateſt Force, was the want of Money and Men to carry on the War, which could not be rais'd without vaſt Difficulty, during theſe Publick Alienations.

Whatever were the Inducements, a Peace was concluded about the latter End of the Third Moon, at a Place call'd Ruel, not far from Paris, where the King has a Houſe of Pleaſure, ſeated in the Midſt of a little Paradiſe. In one of my Letters to the Kaimacham, I formerly deſcrib'd the King's Houſe and Garden, at St. German en Lay. This is but a little Choſe or Bower in Compariſon of that Stately Palace. Yet what is wanting in the Grandeur of the Fabrick, is ſupply'd in its elegant Contrivance, and the Richneſs of its Ornaments. And, as for the Garden, it comes not far ſhort of the other; there being in it all Manner of Curious Water-works, Groves, Solitudes, Fountains, Statues, and whatſoe-ver the Ingenuity of these Western Artists could ſuggeſt, as proper to render this Place agreeable to the Melancholy Humour of the late Queen-Mother, Mary de Medicis, to whom it belong'd during her Life.

When you enter this delicious Eden, your Eyes and Ears are preſently deceiv'd by the Counterfeit Notes and Motions of all kinds of Birds, which perpetually Sing, as the Water tunes their Throats. A little farther, you ſee ſeveral old Gentile Statues, adorning Two Fountains: And, among the reſt, a Crocodile, big as the Life; who by the Harmony he makes, ſeems to have a Conſort of Muſick in his Belly, as Regular and Sweet, as that of the Italian Society at Conſtantinople, which thou haſt often heard.

As we depart from this, full of Complacency and Admiration at the Exquiſite Imitation of Nature in theſe Contrivances, we fall inſenſibly into a Place exactly like what the Poets deſcribe when they ſpeak of Elyſium: It is a Grove, the Tops of whoſe Trees are ſo thick interwoven, that the Sun appears no otherwiſe through them, than as if he were behind a Cloud or in an Eclipſe. So that the Darkneſs of this Place and ſolemn Murmur the Winds make on high among the Tops of the Trees, fills it with a Kind of Sacred Horror. Which has often made me think this Wilderneſs, ſomething like that which Hiſtorians deſcribe, when they ſpeak of the Avenues to the Temple of Jupiter Ammon in Ægypt. For, in the very Center of this Grove, ſtands ſtands the Houſe. A Place, one would think fitter for a Convent than a Prince's Court. At beſt, it appears but like a Royal Hermitage, a Cell conſecrated to Kingly Melancholy.

I could not forbear making this Digreſſion, when I mention'd Ruel to be the Place where the Peace was concluded, between the Court and the Parliament. This Encomium, is a Tribute which I ow'd, for the Satisfaction and Pleaſure I have often receiv'd in this Retirement. Beſides, I thought an Idea of ſuch a Garden, would not be unwelcome to thee, who art a Lover of Solitude.

The Coadjutor of Paris, who is an Archbiſhop, is highly affronted, that this Peace was concluded without him, who had a chief Hand in beginning the War. He labours to inflame the People again, and reduce all to the old Confuſion, being an irreconcilable Enemy of Cardinal Mazarini. So that we expect another Inſurrection in a ſhort time: For the French cannot be long Idle.

Happy Miniſter, I leave thee under the Wings of that Spirit which guards the Elect, and bid thee Farewel.

Paris, 15th of the 4th. Maon, of the Year 1649.

LET-

LETTER X.

To Dgnet Oglou.

SHall I tell thee, I mourn for the Death of our Friend Egry Boinou, whom thou ſayeſt, a Fever ſnatch'd from us the Firſt Day of the Moon Regib? That Fever, it ſeems, was the Effect of his Continual and exceſſive Grief for the Loſs of his Eyes; ſo that we may ſay, he has been dying ever ſince the Hour that Fatal Sentence was put in Execution. And, ſhall we grudge our Friend a Releaſe from ſo lingring a Death? At beſt, it was but the Winter of Life, wrapt up in Clouds and Darkneſs: Now like the Serpent, he has caſt his Slough, lifts up his Head with new Vigour, ſports himſelf in the Meadows of Paradiſe, and baſks in the Warmth of an Eternal Spring.

'Twill not therefore be a Mark of our Affection to him, but only a Diſcovery of our Self-love, to condole the Occaſion of His Happineſs, becauſe it has leſſen'd Ours, by robbing us of his beloved Company and Friendſhip. Beſides, we know not, but that he may ſtill continue to be our Friend, even in that Inviſible State; and either manage our Intereſts Above, or at leaſt protect us from Dangers here Below. We are ignorant of the Laws and Conſtitutions of that King-

dom of Spirits; and, for ought we know, the Souls of Juſt Men after Death, may become the Tutelar Genii, or Guardian Angels of their Surviving Friends and Relations. Let it be how it will, doubtleſs Egry is Immortal and Happy; and, 'twill be Envy in us, to repine at it. Rather let us congratulate the Time of his Deceaſe, as the Day of his Nativity; and leave Mourning, to the Crowd of Mortals, who do a Thouſand Things, without ever thinking what they are about. They tread in the Steps of their Fathers, never examining, whether they be Right or Wrong: Cuſtom and Education have almoſt baniſh'd Reaſon from the Earth. Is it not a pleaſant Spectacle, to ſee the Kindred of an Old Rich Miſer (for whoſe Death they had long waited, like Harpies for their Prey) now flock about his Lifeleſs Carcaſe, howling out a Thouſand forc'd Lamentations; whilſt in the mean Time, their Blood dances in their Veins for Joy? Yet however, this carries a Shew of Civiliz'd Manners, and is better than the Barbarous Cuſtom of the Scythians and Maſſagetes, who when their Old Men grew Uſeleſs or Troubleſom, were wont to Sacrifice them, and make a Banquet with their Fleſh; or the Thebarenes, who threw their Aged Friends alive down Precipices. Theſe were Salvages: But, much more ſo were the Hircanians and Bactrians, who caſt their Aged Parents yet living, to be devour'd by Dogs. Which Inhumanity when Staſanor, the Deputy of Alexander the Great, endeavour'd vour'd to ſuppreſs, they had like to have Depos'd him from the Government: So prevalent is the Force of a Received Cuſtom, on the Minds of the Unthinking Herd.

Let thou and I therefore, not ſupinely take up with Common Practices; but, like Men of Reaſon, let us adjuſt the Laſt Offices we owe to our Friend, whilſt we pour forth ſome Devout Oraiſons for the Health of his Soul, without diſturbing his and our own Repoſe, with fruitleſs Lamentations. And, ſince we are bereaved of his Society on Earth, let us prepare to follow him, and render our ſelves agreeable Company at our next Rendezvous in Heaven.

It was an Unjuſtifiable Rigour in Sultan Ibrahim, to deprive him of his Eyes, becauſe he had only caſt 'em unhappily on one of the Sultana's, as ſhe enter'd the Garden. This Jealouſy, is the peculiar Vice of the Eaſt. Yet they are more ſevere in Perſia, where 'tis preſent Death, to be within Two Leagues of the King's Women, when they travel the Road. But, I never knew, that Eunuchs were thus puniſh'd. Or, is there ſuch a Difference between a White and a Black Eunuch, That the One deſerves to loſe his Eyes for beholding that by Chance, which the Other is honourably rewarded for having Acceſs to, and ſeldom being out of their Sight?

This was the worſt Puniſhment that Zeleucus, the Law-Giver of the Locrians, impos'd on them that were Actually caught in Adultery. Which puts me in Mind of a Notable table Instance of this Man's Justice: For, when his own Son, was accus'd, and prov'd Guilty of this Crime; at once to shew the Tenderness of a Father, and the Incorruptible Severity of a Judge, he first caus'd One of his own Eyes to be put out, and then One of his Sons: Thus taking on himself, Half the Penalty; that so, the Law might be satisfy'd in the Whole, and yet his Son not be Totally depriv'd of his Sight.

Thou telleſt me no News of our Armies, nor what Alterations have been made amongſt the Miniſters of the Port, ſince the Death of Sultan Ibrahim. We have various Reports here; and ſome ſay, that the New Vizir Azem will be no long-liv'd Man. I deſire thee, to write often to me, and ſend me what Intelligence thou can'ſt.

Let nothing ſlip the Knot, which has faſten'd us ſo many Years together, in an entire Friendſhip: But, let us carry that Magnet with us to our Graves; that, at what Diſtance ſoever we may be buried, our Souls may, by the Force of that Attractive, find one another out, and converſe together, in that Region of Silence and Shadows.

Paris, 9th. of the 5th. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER

LETTER XI.

To the Captain Bassa.

I Know not where this Letter will find thee; on the Shore, or at Sea. If thou art in the Watry Wilderness, I have no Art to trace thee. There are no certain Roads in that Inconstant Element. It is a mighty Plain, without Path or Track. And though there be certain Stages in it, yet thy Arrival at them, is tim'd at the Pleasure of the Winds and Waves, which will not obey even the Orders thou hast received from the Grand Signior, Lord of the Four Seas. Perhaps, thou art in pursuit of some Venetian Ships, or other Christian Vessels, the Corsairs of the Mediterranean. Or, thou mayst be Careening thy Fleet, in the securer Retreats of the Archipelago. Thou may'st be within a Minute of a Wreck, or just entring a Harbour. Wherever thou art, may Heaven preserve thee from the Dangers, which always threaten such, as trust their Lives to a Piece of Wood. For, there will be great Need of thee, if our Intelligence be true in these Parts.

It is reported here, That the Georgian Circassians, Mingrelians, and other People who Border on the Black Sea, and Obey not the Law brought down from Heaven, are entred into a League against the Blessed Port, and have covered those Seas with a Mighty Fleet; while while the Prince of Georgia, ruſhes down from his Mountains, with an Army of Forty Thouſand Armenians, Perſians, and Borderers of Mount Caucaſus: That the Former have taken a Thouſand of our Trading Saicks, and are advanc'd as far as the Ferry of the Bull, which thou knoweſt, is but Six Hours Sail from the Imperial City: That the Latter, have made Incurſions into the Territories of the Grand Seignior; put all to the Sword who reſiſted 'em, as they march'd along; burnt and laid waſte the Country: And, that all the Greeks and Armenians, flock to them, threatning an Univerſal Defection from the Ottoman Empire.

As to the Truth of theſe Reports, I can aſcertain Nothing; but am inclin'd to believe, the Coſſacks are troubleſome at Sea, and that they may have drawn ſome of their Neighbours into a League, thoſe Pilfering Nations, who live by Rapine and Spoil, on both Elements. Our ſmall Veſſels trading on the Black Sea, full of Riches and empty of Arms, muſt needs be a Temptation to thoſe Pirates, who are the moſt dextrous at a Robbery, and the boldeſt Fellows in the World. The Merchants of theſe Parts, who have had ſome Traffick at Caffa, and other Towns on the Banks of the Black Sea, give a frightful Deſcription of thoſe Tempeſtuous Waters, and no Good Character of the People that Border on them. The Coſſacks, they ſay, are Valiant and Mercenary; the Circaſſians Hardy and Bold; the Mingrelians Sly and Crafty; and and the Georgians, of an Aſtral Complexion, capable of all Vertues and Vices. The Firſt ſeldom act, unleſs encourag'd by the King of Poland, or the Czar of Moſcovy; and then they are content with their Pay, and the Lawful Plunder of War. The Second are never Idle, when there is hope of Prey, whether they fight their own Cauſe, or are employ'd by others; and fear neither Hunger, Cold, nor any other Extremity, for the Sake of a Prize. The Third are Good at a Stratagem, and would ſteal a Man's Teeth out of his Gums, if he be not wary; Great Cowards, yet deſperate in their own Defence, when they ſee no Medium between Fighting and Death. As for the Fourth, they ſeem to be a kind of Mungrels, a Medly Race, whoſe Character is compounded of the Other Three.

They are Stout and Witty, Dext'rous at a Cheat, and no Bunglers at an Ingenious Theft; Great Liars; full of Compliments and External Civilities, but Perfidious and Implacable in their Revenges.

Yet, after all, I cannot believe the Prince of this Country, who is a Tributary to the King of Perſia, would venture his Government at Two ſuch deſperate Stakes, by breaking the Peace, concluded by his Sovereign with the Grand Seignior, and ſo drawing upon himſelf the Vengeance of them both. Therefore, he is either ſecretly abetted by that Monarch, or elſe the News is falſe.

Wouldſt

Wouldst thou know, how this Country came to be Subject to the Crown of Persia? It was Conquer'd by Ismael Sophi, to whom the Persian Historians, in Flattery, give the Epithet of Great. He was the First of that Name, and of the Persian Kings, that refus'd to obey the Orthodoxe Successors of the Sent of God. This Prince, was Valiant in the Field; and no Coward at Wine, if we may believe one of his Courtiers, who wrote Memoirs of his Life. He records Sixteen Battles, wherein he always got the Victory; and Twice that Number of Royal Debauches, when he shew'd the Strength of his Brain, in the Company of Foreign Ambassadors; with whom he would always Carouse, before they departed his Court, that he might sound the Depth of their Instructions; for, none were able to cope with him, at the Juice of the Grape. And he always esteem'd that Liquor, a Friend to Truth.

If he suspected his Ministers of State, or any of the Governors of Provinces, he us'd to invite them to a Banquet; where, in the Midst of his Drinking, he unravell'd their Secret Inclinations and Counsels; being the most dextrous at picking the Locks of a Man's Heart, of any one living. They never went Alive from his Presence, if by one false Step in their Carriage, though it were but a Word too passionate, or a Look less composed to Resignation, he could discover or frame to himself the Grounds of a just Jealousy. It being ever his Maxim, That Credulity, Credulity, was the only Vice, could ruin a Happy Prince. He had another Saying alſo, That Perſia was Fertile of Men, but Barren of Faithful Officers.

I cannot admire theſe Cruel Strains of Policy. Yet Kings have Reaſons for their Actions and Words, which we cannot comprehend. The Philoſophers ſay, That Wine was given Us by the Gods, to mitigate our Cares; and, for a Time, to make Us Equal to their Divinities, in the free Enjoyment of Our Selves. And, though as a Muſſulman, I am not bound to ſubſcribe to the Principles of Pagans; yet as a Man, Partaker of Fleſh and Blood, I think he doubly miſ-uſes that Liquor, who perverts it to the Ends of Cruelty.

But, this Monarch had other Thoughts, when by the Aſſiſtance of the Georgian Forces, having ſubdu'd the Regions Bordering on the Caſpian Sea, at that Time in the Hands of the Ottomans, he invited the King of Georgia to his Tent, under pretence of a Feſtival Joy for their Mutual Succeſs. The Unwary Prince, truſting to his own Merit, and the Faith of his Neighbour, ventures himſelf with a ſmall Guard to the Camp of Iſhmael. The Perſian entertain'd him, with all the Outward Demonſtrations of Affection and Gratitude, for his repeated Aids: But, in the End of the Feaſt, taking Exceptions at ſome Words the King of Georgia ſpoke, in Praiſe of his own Soldiers, he commanded his Eunuchs to ſeize on him, and carry him to the Tent of the Unfortunate (ſo they call'd call'd the Pavilion, or Cage of the Grandees fallen into Disgrace.] Then he gave swift Orders, for the Georgian Soldiers to be Manacled. And having thus done, he bestow'd the Government of Georgia on one Luarzab; on Condition, that he and his Successors, would embrace the Faith of Hali, and pay Tribute to the Crown of Persia.

From this Luarzab, has the Government of Georgia descended, not in a Line of Blood, but at the Pleasure of the Persian Kings, to him who now holds it, Shanvois-Can; Who, I believe, has more Wit, than to hazard his Possessions, for the Sake of a Chimæra.

In this roving from my first Point, thou canst not blame me, since thou thy self act'st by the Rules of Navigation, which vary according to the Byass of the Needle. Thou followest one Magnet, and I another: Yet, let us both meet in the Center of Duty, we owe the Grand Seignior.

LETTER XII.

To Cara Hali, Phyſician to the Grand Signior.

THOU wilt ſay, 'tis an unmannerly Way of Congratulating thy New Advance, to begin my Addreſs with Complaints. Yet, Friendſhip overlooks Punctilio's. 'Tis not the firſt Time, I have treſpaſs'd on thy Generous Temper. I am indiſpos'd, and cannot act the Courtier, though I am raviſh'd to hear the News. It is ſome Support to my Languiſhing Spirits, that whilſt I am crumbling and dwindling away into the Little Principles of which I was made, thou my Friend art growing in the Bulk of Mortal Greatneſs, in the Favour of our Glorious Sultan.

However, I cannot but ſuſpect the pretended Kindneſs of him who rais'd thee, I mean the New Vizir. Neither haſt thou much Reaſon, to take this ſuddain Reconciliation for any other, than a Maſque of his Old Malice. He cannot forget the Quarrel between thy Father and him, on the Account of Dara Meſeck, the Lieutenant General of the Janizaries; when the brave Old Cheik, put a Stop to the deſigned Revenge of this Inhumane Upſtart.

Aſſure

Aſſure thy ſelf, that he who has made his Steps, to the Grandeur he now poſſeſſes, o'er the Neck of his Maſter, will not ſpare any from whoſe Wit or Power he may fear a Shock. And, he knows both thy Experience and Intereſt too great, not to miſtruſt the Son of his Enemy.

Beſides, the eminent Command thy Brother has over the Spahi's, muſt needs be an Additional Caution to the Man, whoſe Name ſounds no where ſo ſweetly, as in the Chamber of the Janizaries.

Thou art ſenſible, that the newly reviv'd Animoſity, between theſe Military Orders, threatens a Calamity to the Ottoman Empire, which cannot be diverted, without a Sacrifice on one ſide or other. And, ſince the Spahi's have engag'd ſo many Potent Baſſa's in their Quarrels; who can expect to fall, but the Mighty Favourite of the Infantry?

He knows this very well; and, to prevent his own Ruin, he reſolves on Thine and thy Brother's: Thine, under the Maſque of Friendſhip, till by his Wheadle, he has drawn thy Brother to Conſtantinople; where he will not fail to be ſtrangled, that ſo a Creature of the Vizir, may be promoted in his Room. And, what will become of thee after this, I leave to thy own Judgment.

Perhaps, thou wilt deſpiſe the Advice of a Sick Man, and impute my Fears to an Exceſs of Melancholy; from which Diſtemper, thou knoweſt, I am ſeldom free. But, I tell thee, my Reaſon labours under no Hypocondriack Diſorders, Diſorders, though my Body may. I am no Enthuſiaſt, when I counſel my Friend to avoid an Apparent Danger. However, if thou thinkeſt it needleſs for me to buſy my ſelf in ſuch Caſes, I have done. But I ſhall never ceaſe to pray for thy Proſperity, as often as I comply with the Law, in Kiſſing the Floor Five Times a-Day, and Repeating the appointed Oraiſons of Faith.

Methinks, when I write to thee now, my Pen is at a loſs. I am puzzl'd for a Style ſuitable to thy New Honour, and our Old Friendſhip.

But, if I take too much Liberty, aſcribe it to the Sincerity of my Affection, which knows not how to be reſerv'd or ſtrange to a Perſon, whom once I could call my Other ſelf: For, no Wider is the Diſtance between Friends.

LETTER

LETTER XIII.

To Chiurgi Muhamet, Baſſa.

I Know not, whether what I am going to relate, will be News to thee, or to any of the Miniſters Reſiding at the Sublime Port. However 'tis ſo to me; and I am commanded, to conceal nothing of Moment that comes to my Ears.

Mahomet, Eldeſt Son of Achmet, the Dey of Tunis, is now at Rome, having embraced the Chriſtian Religion. People relate variouſly, the Motives that induced him to his Change. Some ſay, 'twas Intereſt; he having held a private Correſpondence with the Viceroy of Sicily, who promiſed him, in the King of Spain's Name, to make him Lord of ſeveral large Territories in the Weſt-Indies.

Others ſay, 'twas Diſcontent at his Father's Government, and Auſtere Carriage towards him; the Old Man, having forced him to marry the Baſſa of Tripoli's Daughter againſt his Inclination.

But the greateſt Part, aſcribe this Change in Religion, to the Force of his Conſcience; which, they ſay, was convinced by a Miracle, of the Truth of the Chriſtian Faith. For, as they relate, being once at Sea in a Veſſel, wherein were many Chriſtians, and a Dreadful Tempeſt ariſing, the Mariners, who were all Muſſulmans, ſeeing the Havock that the Winds and Waves had made of the Ship-Tackle, gave over all for loſt; and fainting under ſo much Labour, Watching and Terrour as they had undergone, lay down, and let the Ship drive where-ever the Storm would carry her. But, there being a Chriſtian Prieſt aboard, Eſteemed a very Holy and Blameleſs Man, he excited the Chriſtians, to appeaſe the Wrath of God by ſome extraordinary Acts of Devotion. Then they all made a ſolemn Proceſſion on the Decks of the Ship, the Prieſt carrying before them, that which they call the Sacrament, Imploring the Mercy of God, and often calling on Jeſus and Mary. When behold, as the Prieſt ſtood aloft on the Poop, reading aloud Part of the Goſpel, the Storm Suddenly ceas'd, the Clouds were diſpers'd, the Air grew Serene and Calm, and the Veſſel got ſafe into Harbour. Upon this, they ſay, Mahomet, when he came aſhore, took that Prieſt along with him, deſiring to be inſtructed in the Chriſtian Belief; making a Vow alſo, That he would renounce the Law of the Muſſelmans, and embrace that of Jeſus.

This is what ſuch, as are Zealous for the Honour of the Chriſtian Faith, relate concerning this Prince's Converſion. However it be, it is certain, That he privately made his Eſcape from Tunis by Sea, and bent his Courſe directly for Sicily; where, in a few Days he landed, and was receiv'd by the Vice-Roy, according to the Dignity of a Prince. A while after, he was baptized by an Arch-Biſhop, who who gave him the Name of Don Philippo, by which he is called in all Places.

They ſay, he was a little ſcandaliz'd at firſt, when he ſaw with what Freedom, the Sicilian Women appeared abroad in the Streets, and convers'd with Men; but, that afterwards, he took a great Delight in their Company, eſpecially thoſe that could ſing well, or play on any Inſtrument of Muſick, to which he is much addicted. And therefore he chuſes to frequent thoſe Temples, where their Service is perform'd with Variety of excellent Muſick, as it is in all great Cities. And for ought we know, the Character which the Chriſtian Prieſt gave him, of this Harmonious Manner of Worſhipping God, might have no ſmall Influence, on a Man naturally affected with that Science. Certainly Muſick has a mighty Force on our Affections; and, it is a Proverb here in the Weſt, That he who does not love Muſick, has no Soul. One of the Ancient Philoſophers, defined the Soul it ſelf, to be an Harmony. And another, was ſo ſenſible of the various Effects of this Science, in raiſing Different Paſſions in Men, that he left it as an Aphoriſm, Such as the Muſick is, ſuch are the People of a Commonwealth. Whence, it was the Great Care of ſuch, as took upon them to form the Manners of Youth, That no Tunes ſhould be played in their Hearing, which Naturally provoked to Levity and Wantonneſs; but Grave and Martial Strains, ſuch as prompted Heroick Thoughts, and diſpoſed them to Vertue. The Italians, are great Maſters of this Science; and the Airs which they compoſe for their Church-Service, are very deep and raviſhing. VVhich cauſes their New Proſelyte, Don Philippo, to paſs his Time very attentively, during the Celebration of their High-Maſs, and their Even-Song. They report, That he will turn Jeſuit.

He went from Sicily, loaded with Gifts and Preſents, and came to Rome, the Seat of the Chriſtians Chief Mufti, whom they call the Pope. He is much honoured and careſſed by the Holy Father, and all the Cardinals, who have told him ſo many fair Things of the Nazarene Faith, and ſhew'd him ſo many Sacred Reliques of Antiquity, that he thinks himſelf already within the Verge of Heaven, and that Rome is no other, than the Suburbs of Paradiſe. There is ſomething very charming and ſweet, in the Converſation of the Chriſtian Prelates, if they be Men of Learning, as moſt generally they are. And, 'tis no wonder that ſuch Polite Company, ſhould prevail much on the flexible Temper of a young Prince, who is as a Pilgrim in a ſtrange Country, where he can hear Nothing, but perpetual Eulogies of the Chriſtian Religion; nor ſee any Thing, but Objects, which ſerve only to confirm in his Mind, a Venerable Idea of that Faith he has embraced. Beſides, they ſay, he is fallen deeply in Love with a young Roman Lady. So that there is no Hope of reſcuing him from the Power of ſo many Enchantments.

Therefore,

Therefore, giving him over as loſt, let us pray the Omnipotent, to eſtabliſh Us in his Truth; that neither Intereſt, Paſſion, nor an Erroneous Conſcience, may ever be able to make us ſwerve from the Law written in Heaven; but, that we may adhere to God and his Prophet, with a Thouſand Souls.

LETTER XIV.

To Sala, Tircheni Emin, Superintendent of the Royal Arſenel at Conſtantinople.

WE are all alarm'd here, with the News of I know not what boiſterous Adventures of the Coſſacks, and their Neighbours, that poſſeſs the Ancient Kingdom of Colchis. Had I not a firm Faith in the Alcoran, 'twould fill me with Panick Fears. But, no Attempts can prevail, againſt the Men fighting under the Shadow of the Prophet. He deſcended with a Conſummate Authority, from the Monarch who commands all Things. The Mandate of Heaven, will diſperſe the Infidels. The Seven Vizirs Above, were Witneſſes to the Words, whoſe Eccho's caus'd Thuder, when the Prophet retir'd from the Steps of the Throne. Had not Moſes given him warning (who remembred the Noiſe in the Mount) the Apoſtle had loſt his Addreſs, and been confounded before the Angels. But, encourag'd with the Whiſper of the Man with Horns, he made no Default in his Conge: And, with little Loſs of Time, arriv'd to the Ninth Sphere, where he proclaim'd the Neſiarum; and, all the Inhabitants of that Orb, reſorted to the Banner which he had in his Hands. The Prophet told 'em, 'Twas only for a Tryal of their Fidelity. They made Obeiſance, and retir'd. From that Place, he made no Scruple, but that the Elect in Heaven and Earth, would obey the Divine Patent. He finiſh'd his Deſcent Triumphantly, and pitch'd his Feet on Mount Uriel. Thoſe that believe Hali, ſay 'Twas on the Top of the Ragged Rock. But let Hereticks alone in their Infidelity. Be it where he pleaſed God, he ſpoke the Words that ſhall ne'er be Revers'd when he diſplay'd the Heavenly Silk, and ſaid, Whoever takes up Arms againſt this Banner, ſhall be reputed an Infidel; He ſhall be exterminated from the Earth.

I often think on theſe Paſſages in the Holy Memoirs, the Collections of the Life full of Wonders. Then I comfort my ſelf with this Thought, That if all the Uncircumcis'd in the World, ſhould enter into a Combination, they would not ſucceed againſt the Men, fighting under the Commiſſion with the Seal.

I have

I have ſent a Letter to the Baſſa of the Sea, acquainting him with the News of this Expedition of the Coſſacks. Since which I am informed, that theſe People are Headed by a famous Pirate in thoſe Parts, a Man of a daring Spirit, and capable of the boldeſt Undertakings. The French Merchants, who have traded in the Black Sea, give him a high Character; and portend great Injuries to the Ottoman Empire, from the Succeſs of his Arms: For, they ſay, he is a Good Captain, both by Sea and Land. I have heard ſeveral different Stories of his Birth and Education: But, this I am going to relate, comes from the beſt Hands, and ſeems moſt probable.

His Name is Pachicour, a Circaſſian by Birth, but bred up in a Sea Town of the Ukrain, near the Mouth of the Neiſter. He left his Native Country, at the Age of Twelve Years, out of a Deſire to ſee Foreign Parts; Embarking himſelf, unknown to his Parents, in a Veſſel of Podolia, which then was ready to ſet ſail from Bala-Clug. He carry'd with him a ſmall Sum of Mony, which he had purloyn'd from his Father, and ſerv'd as a Fund of his future Fortune: For, arriving at a certain Town in Podolia, he frequented the Keys, and offer'd his Service to ſeveral Merchants; one of which, obſerving in his Face the Marks of a Promiſing Genius, entertain'd him in his Houſe. He liv'd with him Seven Years, and perform'd his Office ſo well, that he made him his Factor to Conſtantinople.

Pachicour diſcharg'd his Truſt there, with much Profit to his Maſter, and Honour to himſelf. So that at his Return, ſeveral Merchants entruſted him with their Goods; and ſent him to trade at Caffa, and other Towns on the Black Sea. His Judgment and Reputation encreaſing with his Years, he became in Time Famous in all the Trading Towns. And, ſuch was his Credit in the Ukrain, that all the Merchants put their Veſſels and Goods into his Hands: So that he ſail'd many Times with a Fleet of Twenty Ships, having the Diſpoſal of all the Goods, committed to his Management. He grew ſo rich in Time by his Dealings, that he was able to drive a Conſiderable Trade for himſelf. And then it was, he began to lay the Foundation of a Deſign, which he has ſince executed. His Genius was too Active, always to confin'd to this ſlow Way of growing Great: Therefore he was reſolv'd at one Blow, to raiſe his Fortune to the Pitch he aim'd at. He was the only Broker, Banquier and Merchant, where-ever he came.

It was no difficult Thing for a Man of ſo vaſt a Credit, to raiſe an extraordinary Stock; and Pachicour could eaſily ſilence the Alarms of Conſcience. There happen'd alſo a Juncture, very proper for his Deſign. For, while he was at Iſgaou, a Port of Circaſſia, Day and Night projecting how to exalt himſelf, a War broke out between his Countrymen and the Mingrelians. The Latter appear'd with a Navy at Sea, which alarm'd all the Maritime time Parts of Circaſſia. Pachicour whoſe Invention was always buſie, took a Hint from this, to accompliſh his Plot. Expedition was his chiefeſt Game. Therefore he ſpeedily made the utmoſt Uſe of his Credit, among the Podolian Merchants, and other Foreigners reſiding at Iſgaou. And, when he had amaſs'd together prodigious Sums of Gold, for which he only gave them Bills of Exchange, he privately ſends away this huge Treaſure, with all his Jewels, Tiſſues, and other Rich Merchandiſe, to his Fathers Houſe, who liv'd not many Leagues from this Town.

Within Two Days after this, the Mingrelian Fleet made a Deſcent at Iſgaou, ſack'd it, carry'd away Two Thouſand Captives, and went to their Veſſels again.

Pachicour, who knew how to make an Advantage of this Opportunity, privately fled after his Wealth, as ſoon as the Mingrelian Fleet appear'd before the Place. And it happen'd, that moſt of his Creditors were made Slaves, and tranſported to Mingrelia. He had no Need to take any farther Care, but how to ſecure his Riches from his Pilfering Neighbours: For, the Circaſſians, are all Profeſs'd Thieves. He therefore makes haſte to his Father; and having gratified him for his Trouble, he in a ſhort Time purchas'd Four Men of War, with which he ſets up for a Pirate, infeſting thoſe Seas, and Robbing all the Merchants, except thoſe who had formerly entruſted him. His Bounty and Valour, charm'd all that ſerv'd him, And, his Fame ſpreading with his wonderful Succeſs, many Circaſſians put out th Sea, and join'd with him: So that in a little Time, he made no ſmall Figure in the Kingdom of Neptune. Seeing himſelf Commander of a Powerful Navy, he found out quickly the Mingrelian Fleet, and engaging with them, got a Glorious Victory.

Soon after, a Peace was concluded, and Pachicour was declar'd Admiral of all the Circaſſian Sea-Forces: To whom the Mingrelians were oblig'd by Treaty to join theirs, and to obey Pachicour's Orders. In a little Time, this fortunate General became ſo famous, that the Coſſacks ſent to him an Agent, and enter'd into a League; furniſh'd out Three Hundred Veſſels, and join'd the Circaſſian and Mingrelian Fleets.

This is the Bottom of the New Expedition, which makes ſo loud a Noiſe in theſe Parts.

Thou who art Maſter of the Arſenal, wilt know what Meaſures are fitteſt to be taken, againſt this bold Infidel, if he perſiſts to break the Peace of the moſt Serene Empire. Yet, though he is an Enemy, let us not envy him the Praiſes, that are due to his Wit and Courage. He ſeems to ſurpaſs the Sneaking Thieves of his own Nation; and undertakes Nothing but Sovereign Cheats, and Noble Thefts, ſuch as would paſs for Vertuous Actions, in a Man of a Higher Birth.

Ida

I do not plead for Robbery, nor take the Part of an Infidel; but, if I had Time to tell thee, ſome Heroick Paſſages of this Pirate, thou wouldſt ſay, he is worthy of a Generous and Favourable Uſage, ſhould he become a Captive. In another Letter, I will oblige thee with a Relation, which will not be unwelcome to a Man, who gives not Sentence with the Vulgar. I had more to ſay on another Subject, but I am interrupted. Pardon the Effect of my Duty to the Grand Signior.

LETTER XV.

To Melec Amet, Baſſa.

THere is News arrived here lately, of the Murther of the Engliſh Embaſſador at the Hagne. His Name was Doriſlaus. He was ſent by the New Governours in England, to make an Alliance with the States of Holland, and to ſatisfie them in Reference to their late Proceedings againſt their Sovereign. 'Tis ſaid, his Negotiation would have had but little Succeſs, in Regard the Prince of Orange, who is Preſident or Chief over the States, and who married the Daughter of the Engliſh

King

King, takes to Heart the untimely Death of his Father-in-Law, and cannot be reconciled to his Murderers. Yet, 'tis to be thought, that Princes are no farther touch'd with one anothers Misfortunes, than concerns their Intereſt.

However, on the 3d. Day of the 5th. Moon, ſome Scots enter'd into the Lodgings of the Embaſſador, and having diſpatch'd him with ſeveral Wounds, made their Eſcape. It is not certainly known, who ſet theſe Aſſaſſins at Work. People deſcant variouſly, as their Affections byaſs them. Some reflect on it, as a Judgment Juſtly inflicted by God, though by an Unjuſt Act of Men, on one who had been a Notorious Promoter of his Sovereign's Death. Others cenſure it, as a moſt Impious Sacrilege, in Regard the Perſons of Embaſſadors, are by the Law of Nations, eſteem'd Sacred and Inviolable; and, the Injuries which they ſuffer, are interpreted, not only as done to their Maſters who ſend them, but to all Mankind: As if Human Nature it ſelf were wrong'd, in the Perſons of Publick Miniſters.

Indeed, there is no Method of eſtabliſhing or conſerving Friendſhips and Alliances between different Nations, if their Agents be not ſecured with an Immunity from Affronts and Violences.

The French relate a pretty Paſſage of one of their Kings, who before he came to the Crown, being Duke of Orleans, had receiv'd very ill Uſage in his Travels from a certain Italian Lord, call'd the Baron of Benevento. After this Prince was poſſeſs'd of the King- dom,

dom, the ſame Italian Lord was ſent Embaſſador from the Viceroy of Naples, to congratulate his Acceſſion to the Throne of his Anceſtors. Some French Courtiers, who had been Witneſſes of the Injuries this Lord had formerly done to their Maſter, now perſwaded the King to Revenge himſelf, by cauſing ſome groſs Indignities to be done him, whilſt he had him in his Power. To whom the Wiſe Monarch reply'd, It becomes not the King of France, to revenge on the Embaſſador of Naples, the Injuries which the Duke of Orleans receiv'd from the Baron of Benevento.

'Tis ſaid, the Engliſh Nation have demanded Satisfaction of the Hollanders, for the Murder of their Embaſſador; but were anſwer'd, That they themſelves, ought firſt to Expiate the Murther of their King.

The Scots have Revolted from the New Government in England, and are yet in Suſpence, Whether they ſhall ſet up the Son of the Late King, or Form themſelves into an Independent Republick. The Iriſh are ſtedfaſt to the Intereſts of the Crown. And many Iſlands in America, ſubject to the Kings of England, have now deny'd all Obedience to the New Engliſh Government, which ſeems to tend towards a Democracy.

There is much talk of one Cromwel, the General of the Engliſh Forces in Ireland. This Man from a Private and Obſcure Eſtate, is aſcended to the Dignity of a General, having purchas'd this Command, by his Conduct and Valour. The French extol him, for the Greateſt Soldier of this Age: And, if Fame be true, he is no leſs Stateſman.

for

As a Mark of the Reſpect I owe thee, thou wilt receive with this Letter, a Piſtol of Curious Workmanſhip, which being once charg'd, will deliver Six Bullets, one after another. If thou accepteſt this ſmall Preſent, it will be an Argument of thy Friendſhip.

LETTER XVI.

To the Venerable Mufti.

I Have often wondred at the Lethargy, wherein the Nazarenes ſeem to be drown'd. They forget what they read in their own Bibles; They there encounter with Expreſſions, which ſavour of the Eaſt. Every Page of the Written Law, reliſhes of the Dialect which is Pure and Lively; though the Tranſlators have cropt the Flower of the Senſe. I have read their Bible in Greek, Latin, and French; but none of theſe Languages, expreſs to the Life the Original Hebrew: Nor can it be expected. It is impoſſible to ſcrew up the Dull Phraſes of Europe, to the Significant Idioms of Aſia. We may as well expect Dates to ſpring from a Reed. And for that Reaſon, it is forbidden.

forbidden the True faithful, to Tranſlate the Volume of Light from the Original Arabick: Which is no other, than Hebrew in its Ancient Purity.

This is the Language of thoſe, who dwell above the Seventh Orb. 'Tis the Dialect, wherein God converſes with the Pages of his Divine Seraglio: Wherein all the Records of the Celeſtial Empire are writ. And when he iſſues out Orders to the Miniſters and Baſſa's of Heaven, Haſmariel the Secretary of the Immortal Divan, uſes no other Character or Speech, but that which is peculiar on Earth, to the Sons of Iſmael, the Inhabitants of the Region on the Eaſt of the Red Sea. In fine, this is the Language, wherein the Omnipotent thought fit to diſcover his Pleaſure to Mortals.

Believe Mahmut, when he tells thee with profound Submiſſion, that he has taken ſome Pains to pry into thoſe Languages, which have been the Channels of Divine Knowledge. I have been peculiarly ambitious, to ſtudy the Anatomy of Oriental Words: And it would be no Hyperbole to ſay, I have learn'd to diſſect even the very Syllables: Wherein the various placing of Points and Letters, alters the Senſe, or at leaſt makes it Ambiguous. So Significant and Myſterious, are Our Sacred Characters.

I ſpeak not this in Peeviſhneſs, or to vindicate my ſelf, from the Contempt which Ichingi Cap' Oglani has put upon me. I have no Emulation in that Point. Nor can any little

little Spur of Pedantick Ambition, make me forward to contend with a Man, whose whole Talent consists, in knowing and remembring other Mens Works; as if he had studied at Athens, only for this End, to learn the facetious Art, of turning his Brains into a Catalogue of Books: But I reflect on the Learned among the Nazarenes, who are chiefly to blame, having the Custody of the Book delivered to 'em from the Jews. And among them, the Translators of that Volume, are past Excuse; for, they have deflow'd the Original, and robb'd the Virgin Language, of its Beauty and Honour: Whilst the rest are Witnesses, and silent Abettors of the Rape, in concealing the Indignity has been done to the Letters Form'd by the Finger of God, and full of Divine Mysteries.

In thus accusing the Christian Interpreters of the Bible, I do not patronize the Critical Whimsies of the Jewish Caballists. They are exploded by all Men of Sense. Yet there is a Medium, between the Excess of that affected Niceness, which has rendred the one Ridiculous, and of that study'd Carelessness, to which the Obscurity of the Other is owing. As the Hebrews, by pressing the Letters too close, have squeez'd out Divine Chimera's; so the Christians, in using too slack a Hand, have scarce gain'd a gross Draught of Common Humane Sense, leaving the Genuine Elixir of the Writer's Meaning behind.

I will not lay much to the Charge of the Translators, employ'd by Ptolomy Philadelphus, phus, King of Ægypt. These were no Christians; nor yet in the Number of those, who Adored the Celestial Bodies and Elements: Nor did any of them, pay their Devotions at the same Altar with that Ægyptian Monarch, who was a Worshipper of the God Serapis: But they were Jews, Seventy, or Two more in Number, as the Tradition goes. And, being every one Commanded severally to Translate those Manuscripts, which the Jews esteem'd the Oracles of God, without conversing with, or seeing each other; 'tis said, their Versions all agreed to a Syllable.

This is the Story of the Jews, and seems to be Credited by the Christians: Yet some have found many Errors and Incongruities, in that Celebrated Copy. And, 'tis easie for an Impartial Eye, especially in the Head of an Oriental, to spy many more.

But the Latin, which they call the Vulgar Translation, is full of Mistakes. And the Pretended Saint who made it, should have gone farther than Palestine, for his Intelligence in Ancient Hebrew. His Name (if I mistake not) was Hieronymus. He pass'd many Years, in a Cell near the suppos'd Tomb of the Christians Messiah, in the Holy Land: Where, they say, he was Inspir'd with the Knowledge of Hebrew; and from thence, ventur'd upon a Translation of the Old Testament.

Thou wilt not expect a Certificate of these Things from Mahmut, who only tells thee what he has read in Christian Authors, whom they call the Historians of their Church.

But,

But, I can aſſure thee, 'twas no Spirit of the Eaſt, aſſiſted this Eccleſiaſtick in his Verſion. For, he comes far ſhort of rightly rendring the Lofty Hyperboles, Appoſite Similitudes, Elegant Figures, and other Ornaments of Speech, peculiar to the Writings of thoſe, who firſt ſee the Riſing Sun. Such are all thoſe, penn'd in the Eaſt: From which we muſt not exclude the Manuſcripts of Moſes, and the Reſt of the Hebrew Prophets, Poets, Hiſtorians and Philoſophers. Of theſe does the Old Teſtament conſiſt; except one Book, writ by my Countryman Job, who Five Times foil'd the Devil, in ſo many ſet Combats before God.

What ſhall I ſay then, of the Tranſlations that have been made of their Bible in other Languages, not ſo Copious and Significant as the Latin?

Since the Diviſion aroſe, between the Roman-Catholicks and Proteſtants, their Bible has been taught to ſpeak the Dialect of all or moſt Nations in Europe. Yet, ſuch is the Unhappineſs of the Franks, that they more they tamper with the Language of Great Purity, the worſe they ſucceed. Which has occaſion'd ſome Learned Men, as I am inform'd, to mark above a Thouſand Faults, in the Laſt French Verſion of that Myſterious Book.

What Room will they leave for the Cenſures of the Muſſulmans, if the Chriſtians themſelves are thus Critical, upon the Grand Patent of their Salvation?

It would be an endleſs Task, to recount all all the Errors that may be diſcern'd in the Various Traductſ of the Bible, by any Man that has Convers'd in the Eaſt. Neither will I entrench on thy Patience, to gain the Character of a Critick.

Permit me to glance only on the Pſalter, or the Odes of Sultan David. How flat and dull are the Meaſures of the Chriſtian Tranſlators? How low have they ſunk the Senſe of that Royal Poet? He never begun to warble forth any of thoſe Divine Songs, till firſt inſpired by a Seraph, whom he had lur'd down from Paradiſe, by the Melody of his Harp. That Seraph, was Maſter of the Muſick Above, as the Hebrew Doctors teach. Every Time David play'd on his Inſtrument, Ariel (for ſo was the Spirit call'd) made his Deſcent, and ſung with a Grace which cannot be expreſs'd. The Docile Poet, ſoon learn'd both his Notes and Words. Seven Hundred Times, David touch'd his Harmonious Strings, and ſo often the Angel ſtood by him with the Book of the Quire. He taught him Seven Hundred Sonnets, that are Chanted by the Lovers in Paradiſe. But the Devil ſtole 'em from the King, whilſt he was gazing on another Man's Wife, bathing her ſelf in an adjoining Garden.

Yet there are above a Hundred Hymns remaining, which David compos'd by Memory out of the Former. But, ſome Sects among the Chriſtians, have turn'd 'em to the Ballads of the Vulgar.

So have they dealt by that ſurpaſſing Poem of Solyman, taught him by the Ethereal Tutor ter of his Father. For Ariel was enamour'd of One of the Virgins of Paradiſe, at the ſame Time, that Solomon enjoy'd Pharaoh's Daughter, and had newly built for her a Seraglio of Cedar. The Heavenly Lover therefore, to accommodate himſelf to the Paſſion of the Mortal, taught him One of the Paſtorals of Eden, a Song peculiar to his Own Amour.

But the Nazarenes, have turn'd it to a Dry and Inſignificant Allegory, by their Gloſſes: Putting an Affront alſe upon Rhetorick and Poetry, in Wording their Tranſlation.

If I ſhould go on, and number the Miſtakes they have made in the Writings of the Prophets, and other Books of the Old Teſtament, though it were but in this General Manner, I ſhould tire thee out: But to recount the Particulars, would be a Thirteenth Task for Hercules.

Yet after all theſe Defaults of the Learned, neither they nor the Ignorant can be excus'd from Wilful Blindneſs, in ſhutting their Eyes againſt the Twilight, which appears in the Worſt Tranſlation, and is ſufficient to direct any Man to the Eaſt, where Wiſdom ſhines in her Perfect Splendor.

There are Expreſſions all over the Scriptures, which point to the Laws, Cuſtoms, Habits, Diet and Manner of Life, us'd in the Regions, Firſt Viſited by the Morning-Sun. Theſe are the ſame Now, as they were of Old. And the Muſſulmans of this Age, obſerve no other Rule of Life, but what was practis'd by the Patriarch Ibrahim, above Three Thouſand ſand Years ago, and by all the Faithful of thoſe Times. Our Marriages, Circumciſions, Funerals, Prayers, Waſhings, and all other Ceremonies, of Religion or Civility, are the ſame Now as Then. There is nothing added or diminiſhed, ſave the Faith and Obedience we owe to Mahomet. the Ambaſſador of God, and to the Volume put into his Hands by Gabriel, Prince of the Divine Meſſengers.

Our very Habits, and the Manner of our Building; our Salutations, and whole Addreſs, are the ſame at this Day, as the Scripture tells us, were in Uſe in thoſe Ages next after the Flood, among the Patriarchs and Prophets, and among all the True Believers, the Poſterity of Ibrahim: Eſpecially the Deſcendants by the Right Line, the Stem of Iſmael, the Eldeſt Son of him, who entertair'd Three Angels at Once in his Tent.

Yet the Infidels will not conſider it: But perſuade themſelves, they are the Only Children of the Faithful Ibrahim; pretending to practiſe, in I know not what Figurative Senſe, the Life we lead in truth: Cheating themſelves with Empty Symbols, while we enjoy the Subſtance.

But thou, Great Succeſſor of Ibrahim and the Prophets, vouchſafe to pray for Mahmut, That whilſt his Duty to the Grand Signior obliges him to dwell here in the Weſt, and to converſe with none but Infidels, he may ſtill retain the Faith of the Eaſt, the Devotion of an Iſmaelite, and the Purity of a True Believer. Still crying in his Heart, even in the

Temples

Temples of the Infidels; There is but One God, and Mahomet his Meſſenger.

LETTER XVII.

To the Chiaus Baſſa.

THE Peace agreed on laſt Year, between the Germans and Suedes, is not yet fully eſtabliſh'd and confirm'd, There has been a Ceſſation of Arms ſince that Time. And now the Duke Amalfe, on the Emperor's Side, the Duke of Vandort for the King of France, and he of Erskin for the Crown of Suedeland, are met at Norimbergh, to conclude a Final Ratification of the Articles.

During this Conſult, the Suediſh Army are permitted by the Emperour's Agreement, to Quarter up and down in Seven Circles of the Empire, and not to be diſcharg'd, till all their Arrears are paid at the Coſt of the Germans. 'Tis ſaid, it will amount to Three Millions of Sequins. This War has laſted near Thirty Years; in which, above Three Hundred Thouſand Men have loſt their Lives.

As to the Engliſh Affairs, the prevailing Party there have declar'd that Ancient Kingdom to be a Free State, and the Monarchy is

Aboliſh'd

Aboliſh'd by a Publick Act. Nevertheleſs, after Charles was beheaded, his Eldeſt Son was Proclaim'd King, both in England and Ireland, by ſome of the Nobles and Gentry, that were Friends to that Royal Family. And in Ireland, a certain great Duke appear'd at the Head of a Numerous Army, in Behalf of the Young King's Intereſt, having layd Siege to the Metropolis of that Kingdom; which, with one other Town, were the only ſtrong Holds, that reſiſted the King's Party. But in the 8th. Moon, the Army which the Engliſh States had newly ſent over to that Iſland, engag'd with the Forces of this Duke, entirely routed them, killing Two Thouſand Men on the Spot, and taking many Thouſand Priſoners, with all their Ammunition and Baggage. This being ſeconded with other Victories, in a ſhort Time, reduc'd that Kingdom, under the Obedience of the Engliſh States.

In the mean Time, I hear no pleaſing News from the Levant. Veſſels daily arrive in the Havens of France, who confirm each other's Relations, of a Dreadful Naval Combat, between our Fleet and that of the Venetians; wherein they ſay, we have loſt Seventy Two Gallies, Threeſcore Merchant-Veſſels, and Eighteen Ships of War: That in this Fight, Six Thouſand Five Hundred Muſſulmans have loſt their Lives, and near Ten Thouſand were taken Priſoners.

I tell thee, theſe are great Breaches in the Navy, which, belonging to the Lord of the Sea and Land, has aſſum'd to it ſelf the Epithet of INVINCIBLE. Theſe are Blemiſhes in the Enſigns of high Renown; Reproaches to the Empire, which we believe is to ſubdue All Nations. I reflect not on the Courage, or Conduct, of the Captain Baſſa. Neither am I willing to help forward the Ruin of a Man, who cannot expect to be honour'd with a Veſt, a Sword, or any other Marks of the Sultan's Favour for his Service in this Sea-Campagne. I am Naturally compaſſionate. 'Tis not in my Praiſe I ſpeak it; for, I believe this Tenderneſs, to be rather a Vice of my Conſtitution, than to have any Rank in the Morals, much leſs to be of Kin to the Family of Vertues. I pity a Man falling into Diſgrace, on whom the Weather of the Seraglio changes, from which he muſt expect Nothing but Clouds and Storms. Thoſe Tempeſts will prove more Fatal to him, than any that ever toſs'd his Fleet on the Ruffled Ocean. In all probability, he will ſuffer a Shipwrack of his Fortune, if not of his Life. Therefore, 'tis with extream Regret, I muſt ſay that which may haſten his Fall.

But I am commanded, not to conceal any Intelligence that relates to the Intereſt of the Sublime Port; nor to ſpare the Son of my Mother, if I know him Guilty of Criminal Practices.

All that I have to lay to the Charge of the Baſſa of the Sea, is, a Private Correſpondence which he holds with Cardinal Mazarini. This I diſcover'd by the Aſſiſtance of a Dwarf, whom I have often mention'd in my

my Letters to the Grandees of the Port. I need not repeat to thee, what I have ſaid already to them, of the Birth, Education and Genius of Oſmin, (for, ſo is the little Spark call'd) nor of the Method I have put him upon, to wind himſelf into the Secrets of the Publick Miniſters. Only thou mayſt report to the Divan, That this diminutive Man, continues to purſue his Advantages of Acceſs to the Cloſets of the French Miniſters, whereof I gave an Account laſt Year, in a Letter to Chiurgi Mahammet Baſſa.

Thou may'ſt aſſure them alſo, that when he was Yeſterday in the Chamber of Cardinal Mazarini, he caſt his Eye on a Letter, which lay open on the Table; whilſt the Cardinal was in earneſt Diſcourſe, with an Extraordinary Courier from Rome. He had not Opportunity to read more than the Superſcription, and a Line or two of the Matter; which contain'd theſe Words:

The Mild Commander, The humble Shadow of the Bright Star of the Sea, Bilal Captain Baſſa,

To the moſt Illuſtrious Prince of the Kingdom of the Meſſiah, Eminent among the High Lords of Holy Honour, the Sublime Directors of the People of Jeſus, Aſſiſtant to the Chair of Sovereign Dignity, the Seat of the Roman Caliph, Julio Mazarini, Cardinal, and our Friend.

May whoſe later Days, encreaſe in Happineſs.

THY affectionate Letter and Preſents, were deliver'd ſafe to me, as I lay at Anchor with the Fleet under my Command, not far from the Iſland of Chios. And as a Mark of my acknowledgment, and good Will to thee, and all the Nazarenes; I embrae'd in my Arms, the Noble Captain, Signior Antonio Maratelli, who had the Honour to be truſted with this Negotiation. I immediately diſrob'd my ſelf, and caus'd that brave Italian, thy Meſſenger, to be veſted with my own Garment, as a Pledge of ———

Before Oſmin cou'd read farther, the Cardinal approach'd the Table, and took up the Letter, letting fall ſome Words to the Courier, by which the Dwarf was confirmed in his Suſpicion of the Baſſa's Perfidiouſneſs, and that this Letter newly came from him. He poſted immediately to give me an Account of this Paſſage; believing it to be, as it is, of great Import. For, he has a ſingular Regard for the Family. which firſt exterminated the Grecks from Conſtantinople.

Thou know'ſt what Uſe to make of this Intelligence. I am not Cruelly inclin'd, but I muſt do my Duty. The Reſt I refer to thy Prudence.

I will

I will only advertiſe thee of One farther Remark of Oſmin; who by comparing what he has ſeen now, with a Diſcourſe he once before over-heard between Mazarini and a French Nobleman, whilſt he lay under the Cardinal's Table, (which I have inſerted in one of my Letters) concludes, That the Baſſa there mention'd by the Cardinal, was this ſame Bilal Baſſa, who was at the Inſtance of the Janizaries, made Baſſa of the Sea.

I could not without making my ſelf an Accomplice, conceal ſo foul an Ingratitude to the Grand Signior, and ſo Villanous a Treaſon againſt the Empire, which holds the Firſt Rank, among all the Dominions on Earth.

LETTER XVIII.

To Cara Hali, Phyſician to the Grand Signior.

WE have had a violent hot Summer in theſe Parts, with much Thunder and Lightning; which has done conſiderable Damage to the Farmers, in burning their Hay and Corn in their Granaries. Complaints arrive here daily from all the Provinces, That Heaven has conſum'd their Harveſts.

This the Court-Party interpret, as a Judgment on them for their Rebellions; cauſing it to be induſtriouſly ſpread about in all Companies, That Heaven is Angry with the Inhabitants of Guyenne, Bourdeaux, and other Provinces, for taking up Arms this Year againſt their Sovereign. I know not how far this Cenſure is Juſtifiable: But 'tis obſerv'd, That the People of theſe Rebellious Provinces, have received more Apparent and Irreparable Injuries by the Lightning, than thoſe of other Parts. Several Members of the Parliament of Aix, were found dead in their Beds, after a Tempeſtuous Night of Lightning. And, next Day, the Roof of the Houſe where they Aſſembled, fell down and kill'd ſeveral.

In the Great Church of Bourdeaux, as they were Celebrating their Maſs, a Ball of Fire broke in from behind the Altar, ſmote down ſeveral ſeveral Images, and filling the Church with an Intolerable Stink, flew out at a Window, without doing any farther Harm. And a great Bank of Money, rais'd by this City to pay their Souldiers, was all melted down by Lightning, to the Aſtoniſhment of thoſe who ſaw it; for, it was done in the Day-Time, the Grandees of Bourdeaux being preſent. It would be endleſs, to recount all the Miſchiefs that have been done in thoſe Parts. We had no great Harm here, ſave that almoſt all the Wine in the City, was turn'd to a Kind of Vinegar in one Night. Which the Philoſophers attribute to the Peculiar Energy of Lightning; which plays the Chymiſt with this Liquor, and in a Moment ſeparates and drinks up its Vital Spirits, leaving only a Mortuum Caput behind.

The Seaſon has been ſo hot during the Dog-Days, that the Air it ſelf ſeem'd Combuſtible; and the very Winds, from whence we look'd for Refreſhment, were like the Breath of a Stove: All Things ſeem'd ready to take Fire, as if the Elements waited for the Grand Conflagration. Heat was the Cry every where. Men's Bodies were ſcalded with Internal Flames; the Shade of Trees afforded no Relief; the Fountains could not allay their Thirſt. All Nature ſeem'd to be in a Fever, ready to expire.

Now thoſe Fervors are abated, and we begin to have Froſty Mornings. The Nitrous Air, reſtores Mens Appetites. Abundance of Rain, has new-moulded the gaping parch'd

Earth, and produc'd a Second Spring. The Husbandman comforts himſelf with the Hopes of Another Crop of Hay, to repair the Loſs of the Former, which the Lightning robb'd him of. In the mean Time, the Winds are very buſie, in diſrobing the Trees, and ſcattering not only their Leaves, but alſo the Fruit that is not gather'd, on the Ground; whereby a Banquet is prepar'd for the Hogs in every Orchard, who claim as much Right to feed on what lies on the Common Table, as their Owners. And 'tis no Unpleaſant Muſick, to hear a Herd of Swine, ſet their Teeth at Work on the Wind-fallen Apples. At leaſt, this Spectacle and Noiſe, is delightful to me, who have been without Appetite theſe Three Moons, and but juſt begin to recover my Stomach. I often ride out of Paris, on Purpoſe to take the Country Air, where my Bread taſtes more ſavourly than in the City. There appears ſomething ſo Harmleſs and Innocent in the Faces and Behaviour of the Ruſticks, as Effectually relieves my Melancholy. I cannot diſcern in them, any Signatures of Court-Craft and Villany. Their Converſation, chears my Spirits. I love to hear them talk of their Rural Affairs. My Eye follows the Ploughmen with Envy. Then I could wiſh it had been my Lot, to have been bred up in ſome homely Cottage, where I might have tended Oxen, Sheep or Aſſes; all which, Act Regularly according to their Nature: Whereas,

he

he that is the Servant of Princes, is compell'd to do many Things contrary to his Reaſon; which is the greateſt Unhappineſs can befall a Man. How ſweet is the Sleep of the Husbandman by Night, and how void is his Mind of imbittering Cares by Day? He riſes with the Lark, and is as chearful as that pretty Bird, ſaluting Aurora with a Song or a Leſſon on his Pipe. He ſnuffs up the wholſom and fragant Dew of the Morning, as he walks over the Lands. He beholds with Admiration and Pleaſure, the Gilded Clouds and Tops of Mountains, when the Sun comes forth of his Bed-Chamber in the Eaſt. He ſpurs himſelf on to his daily Labour by the Example of that Active Planet, following his Work with Content and Joy. His Food is Pleaſant both in his Mouth and his Belly; he feels no after-Pangs through Satiety; but well refreſh'd and nouriſh'd with his Homely Diet, he lies down with the Lamb, and ſleeps in Peace, never dreaming of State-Intrigues, or the Plots of the Mighty. Thus he paſſes his Life, in a Circle of Delights.

Tell me, Dear Hali, are not theſe proper Objects of Envy, to a Man in my Circumſtances? Or, canſt thou blame Mahmut, who has neither Health of Body, nor Peace of Mind, for wiſhing himſelf in a Condition, which would entitle him to both? I am entangled in a Thouſand Snares: My Employment is a Perfect Riddle. I muſt ſay and unſay the ſame Things, as often as Occaſion requires. I muſt tell an Hundred Lyes, ſwear and forſwear my ſelf every Hour, if the Intereſt of the Grand Signior be at Stake. I muſt be a Mahometan Chriſtian, Jew or any Thing that will ſerve a Turn; Diſſemble with God and Man, Blaſpheme the Prophets, Curſe the True Believers, and my ſelf too, rather than baulk the Cauſe I am engag'd in. And yet, all this while they will perſwade me, I am a good Man, and ſhall go to Paradiſe. As if the Mufti's Diſpenſations, were available to cancel the Expreſs, Poſitive Law of God! Do they think to amuſe me with ſuch Umbrages, and ſend me muzzl'd to Hell with my Eyes open? I tell thee, I have a Conſcience, and ſuch a Conſcience, as will not let me be at Reſt in this Manner of Life. It were better to die, than to live ſtain'd with ſo many Prevarications. I know not what to do, amidſt ſo many Terrors: I feel my Body decay apace, and haſtening towards its Diſſolution; What will become of me, if I ſhould die under the Burthen of ſo many Sins? What Anſwer ſhall I be able to make, to the Two Inquiſitors of the Grave, the Angels who ſhall Examine me, Who is my God? and, Who is my Prophet? and, What is my Faith? The Darkneſs of that Region of Shadows, will not be ſufficient to hide my Bluſhes, and the Confuſion I ſhall be in at ſo preſſing a Tryal.

All my Comfort is, that I have yet Friends left, to whom I may freely vent my Thoughts, and ask their Counſel.

If

If thou haſt any Remains of that Friendſhip that has been between us, weigh my Caſe throughly, and tell me, Whether I am not loſt for Ever, without a Change of Life? Flatter me not, neither uſe the Artifices of Civility, in Palliating my Crimes. But, ſearch my Wounds, and give me thy Advice without a Veil; and Mahmut ſhall eſteem thee, the Phyſician of his Soul.

LETTER XIX.

To Kenan Baſſa, Chief Treaſurer to his Highneſs at Conſtantinople.

IF I have not addreſſed to thee before, attribute it to my Ignoranee of thy Quality and Perſon. As ſoon as I heard of thy Advancement to this Important Truſt, I reſolved to ſalute thee, as becomes a Slave in my Poſt, and to wiſh thee all the Happineſs thou canſt deſire. Yet, when I congratulate thy Riſe, remember, I do but welcome thee to a Precipice, a meer Pinnacle of Fortune, where thou haſt no Reaſon to expect ſecure Footing. The Blaſt of an Envious Mouth, will make thee totter. Thou breatheſt in an Element, full of Tempeſts. The ſly Practices of a Ri- val, may undermine thee; or, the more open Frowns of thy Sovereign, may caſt thee down. Thou art ever liable to the Malice of the Vulgar, and not a little in Danger of thy own Weakneſs, the Inſeparable Companion of Humanity. If thou ſhouldeſt once look with Diſdain on thoſe that are beneath thee, the vaſt Diſtance and Height of the Proſpect, may make thee Giddy. Therefore, it will be good for thee, to have thy Eyes always fixt on thy ſelf. That will prove the beſt Chart, by which to ſteer thy Courſe, through the Rocks and Sands, which on all Hands threaten the Life of a Courtier. It will not be amiſs alſo, to place before thee, the Examples of Wiſe Men, thy Predeceſſors. There is a greater Force in theſe, than in the beſt Counſels; becauſe, Matter of Fact, leaves no Room for Diſtruſt: Whereas, Men are naturally jealous of thoſe who pretend to inſtruct them. We are all fond of our own Reaſon and Judgment; and are apt to ſuſpect him of ſome Deſign, who ſeeks to perſwade us, though to our Good. Beſides, there is a Species of Pride, a Punctilio of Honour in Mortals, which will hardly permit us to yield our ſelves in a Condition, to need anothers Advice: Whence comes the Arabian Proverb, which ſays, A Man profits more by the Sight of an Idiot, than by the Orations of the Learned. We all love to make our own Experiments, and ſooner truſt any Senſe than our Ears. Therefore, the Lacedemonians cauſed their Slaves to be made drunk in the Preſence of their Children; that from from the Squalidneſs of the Spectacle, they might conceive a Hatred againſt that Vice, which by all the Inſtructions in the World, they would never learn to abhor.

The Crimes of ſome in thy Station, have more of Sobriety in them, but leſs Honeſty. Wonder not at the Expreſſion, nor accuſe me of Impudence. I reflect only on the Wicked: Number not thy ſelf among them.

Thou knoweſt, it has been an Ancient Cuſtom for our renowned Emperors, to divert themſelves at certain Times, with the Sight of their Ineſtimable Treaſury. I an no Stranger to the Ceremonies uſed at ſuch Times. One would think it impoſſible, amidſt ſo much Caution, that the Grand Signior ſhould be defrauded of the leaſt part of his Wealth. I do not ſpeak of the Chamber of Arms, or thoſe others which makes up the Imperial Wardrobe. The Bulk and Weight of thoſe Rich Velvet Broccades, and other Furniture of Gold and Silver, diſcourages the Theft. But who can number the Robberies that have been committed among the Jewels, and Invaluable Rarities of the Myſterious Cloſet? It has been found eaſie to conceal and tranſport from thence, whole Beds of Diamonds and Chains of Pearl, undiſcovered, I will not ſay unſuſpected, at the Times when Anackdar-Agaſi gives Three Knocks, on the Cabinet of the Keys.

Theſe are Hours of Munificence and Royal Bounty, when the Auguſt Lord of the Mines, is pleas'd to gratifie his Slaves with Gifts, and make make them ſenſible they ſerve Him, who commands this Upper World, and that Underneath.

No Prince can diſcommend this Domeſtick Sport of our Sovereign, when he makes his Pages ſcramble for Diamonds and Rubies; ſince it gives him a Taſte of his own Humanity. Nothing being more agreeable, in Caſes on this ſide of Amorous Jealouſy, than to let others partake of our Pleaſures. And, 'tis the peculiar Delight of Kings, ſometimes to lay aſide their State and Grandeur, to be familiar with their Attendants; making them their Companions, or at leaſt, their Proxies in many Enjoyments.

But, 'tis pity this Favour ſhould be abuſed, as it has been in the Inſtance I mention'd. Thou art no Stranger to the Records of the Haſna, which tell us, That when Gelep Chiaus-Baſſa, was made Chief Treaſurer in the Reign of Sultan Muſtapha, the Lucre of the Glittering Jewels had tempted him to defraud his Maſter, to the Value of Five Hundred Thouſand Sequins. Which, upon the Information of Three Pages, and a diligent Search, were found in his Trunks.

It has been whiſper'd alſo, That few have enjoyed that Office, who have not purloyn'd Something from the Imperial Coffers. They ſay, 'tis an Hereditary Theft, deliver'd by Tradition from one to another. Every Haſnadarbaſſi being advanc'd to that Honour, by the Recommendation of his Predeceſſor, for the Service he has done him in conniving at theſe Practices, which cannot be hid from any of the Sixty who Guard the Royal Wealth.

Thou canſt not blame me, for putting thee in Mind of theſe Things; in Regard I am commanded, to write with all Freedom to the Sublime Miniſters, whatever concerns the Intereſt of Our Great Maſter.

I have no more to ſay, but to deſire thee, in tranſmitting what Money is appointed for me, to be Timely and Punctual; to ſend Dupſicates by different Poſts, that if one ſhould miſcarry, I may not be at a Loſs: For, there is no Credit for a Muſſulman in Paris. Eliachim would ſupply me with what may ſuffice a Dervich; but, it belongs to thee to take Care, that I want not what is requiſite for an Agent of the Grand Signior.

LETTER

LETTER XX.

To Peſtelihali, his Brother.

I Unwillingly Concluded my laſt Letter, before I had vented half my Thoughts on thoſe Oriental Subjects, ſo full of Inſtruction and Pleaſure. Thy Journal is become my Pocket-Companion. I carry it with me to the Gardens, and Solitudes, and even to the Libraries, and Churches: To which Laſt, I am obliged to go ſometimes, That I may avoid Suſpicion.

The Chriſtians, when they enter the moſt Delightful Gardens of Paris, ſpend their Time, and weary themſelves, in walking forward and backward. They will meaſure ſeveral Leagues, in Traverſing one Alley: Which vain Cuſtom, thou knoweſt, is contrary to the Practice of the Eaſtern People, who love to ſolace themſelves, in ſitting ſtill under the cool Shades, and feeding their Eyes with the Grateful Verdure of Trees, their Noſes with the fragrant Smell of Herbs and Flowers, and their Ears with the pretty Melody of the Birds: All which, ſerve as Helps to their Contemplation.

After this Manner, I many Times paſs away ſome Hours in the Gardens of this City, whereof there are great Plenty. And, when I am cloy'd with the forementioned Pleaſures, then I take out thy Journal, and fall to Reading;

ing; which winds up my Thoughts afreſh, like a Watch that is down: Nay, it opens new Sources of Contemplation, and ſerves as a Miraculous Taliſman, to bring China, India and all the Eaſt, into the Place where I am; ſo Lively and Natural, are thy Diſcourſes of thoſe Parts.

When I am in the Churches, it ſerves me inſtead of a Prayer Book: And, whilſt Others are babbling over they know not what, or, at leaſt, they care not what; I offer up to God the Firſt-Fruit of my Reaſon and Knowledge, which he has given me to diſtinguiſh me from all Sorts of Beaſts, whether in Humane Shape, or not.

When I go to the Libraries, I compare thy Journal with the Writings of Others who treat of the ſame Matters; and find, that thou agreeſt with ſome, correcteſt the Miſtakes of others, and in all, ſheweſt a Genius elevated above all others of the Common Hiſtorians and Travellers, who ſeek rather to amuſe the Reader with uncouth Stories and Adventures, than to Inſtruct him with what is really Uſeful and Profitable.

Thus thy Journal, is become the Companion of my Solitudes, the Object of my Studies, and the Help to my Devotions Abroad; and, it is no leſs, the Diverſion of my Retirement and Melancholy at Home. I am a great Admirer of Antiquity: And therefore an old Craggy Rock, o'r-grown with Moſs, and full of gaping Chaſms, is a more agreeable Sight to me, than the Flow'ry Meadows or Verdant Verdant Groves; becauſe the Former, looks like a Relique of the Primitive Chaos; whereas, I know the Latter, to be only the Product of the Laſt Spring. 'Tis for this Reaſon, thy Narrative affords me ſo vaſt a Delight, becauſe it treats of the moſt Ancient Kingdoms and Governments in the World: And is not ſtuffed, with Chimæra's and Fables, as moſt Relations of thoſe Countries are; but, gives a ſincere and true Account of whatever is Conſiderable, without touching on Impertinencies.

But, above all, I am delighted with that Part, which relates thy Travels in China: That Country, being of ſo vaſt an Extent, ſo Rich, ſo Populous; the People ſo Induſtrious, Learned and Politick (beſides the Antiquity of their Empire, which cannot in that Point be matched by any Government under the Heavens;) that the Exact Knowledge of theſe Things, ſeems to me of greater Moment, than any other Diſcoveries whatſoever.

What thou ſayeſt of the Chineſe Letters and Words, ſhews, that thou haſt made ſome Inſpection into that Language. And, thy Remarks on the long Succeſſion and Series of their Kings, is an Argument, That thou art no Stranger to their Chronology, which takes in many Thouſands of Years before Noah's Flood. Thou art very exact in enumerating their Publick Tribunals and Courts of Juſtice; as alſo, in deſcribing ſome Remarkable Bridges, Temples, Palaces, and other Structures:

Structures: Which ſerves to give the Reader a true Idea, of the Magnificence and Grandeur of the Chineſe Emperors; and of the Ingenuity of the People, who ſeem to excel all others in Arts and Sciences. In a Word, it is evident, That thou didſt not paſs thy Time with thy Arms folded, whilſt thou wert in that Kingdom. And, I know not how better to expreſs the Eſteem I have for thee, on the Account of the Pains thou haſt taken, to Inform both thy ſelf and me in Matters of ſo great Importance, than by giving thee an Account of what Progreſs the Tartars have made in the Conqueſt of that Empire, ſince thy Return to Conſtantinople. In my Laſt, I acquainted thee with the Coronation of the Tartar-King at Pekin. Since which, Other Veſſels are arriv'd from thoſe Parts, which bring an Account, that the Young Tartarian Conquerour, ſoon puſhed forward his Victories. And marching with an Army into Corea, (which Kingdom, thou knoweſt, borders on China) the King of that Country, made his Submiſſions; and entring into a League with Zunchi, held his Crown in Fee of that Victorious Emperour.

Afterwards, he haſtened to ſubdue the Provinces which remained Unconquered. His Method in accompliſhing this great Work, was by ſwift Marches, like another Alexander the Great; and by laying Siege to the Principal City of a Province, which he never failed, either to take by Force, or compelled to ſurrender, that ſo they might eſcape Famine.

mine. And when this was done, he took Poſſeſſion, both of it and the whole Province, ſummoning the Cities of Leſſer Note to ſurrender; which they ſeldom refuſed, after they had beheld the Fate of the Firſt. Thus in a little time, he became Maſter of all that ſpacious Empire.

The Fame of his Succeſs, quickly brought Innumerable Tartars out of their Native Country, to follow the Fortune of their Emperour. To theſe he gave the Chief Offices of his Army, and continued the Chineſes in the Adminiſtration of Civil Affairs. And, as a Token of their Subjection, he commanded all the Chineſes, to cut their Hair ſhort, and to cloath themſelves after the Faſhion of the Tartars.

They give a High Character of this Young Prince, who amidſt ſo many Succeſſes and Triumphs, diſcovers not the leaſt vain Glory, but contains himſelf within the Bounds of a vertuous Moderation, aſcribes all to the Decrees of Deſtiny, and, is not in the leaſt puffed up, with any of his Glorious Actions; which is an Argument, of a Spirit truly Heroick. And yet, this Prince is an Idolater, as are all the Tartars of that Nation; or rather, they are Men of no Religion, which makes their Morals the more admirable. For, according to the Relation of thoſe who came laſt from China, the Tartars are a very Temperate and Continent People, abhorring thoſe Vices, which are but too common in other Parts of the World, and from which the True

Believers

Believers themſelves are not Free. They are Rigorouſly Juſt alſo, and puniſh all Manner of Fraud and Deceit, with Immediate Death. As for their Conduct and Courage in the Wars, there is no Nation ſurpaſſes them, Few are their Equals. They are Paſſionate Lovers of an Active Life, ſpending moſt of their Time on Horſe-back, either in Hunting Wild Beaſts, or fighting with their Enemies. And their Horſes are the beſt and moſt Courageous in the World. There is Nothing the Tartars ſo much deſpiſe, as the Sedentary Life of Students and Learned Men; accounting them, the Burden of a Commonwealth, lazy Drones, fit only to be ſold for Slaves. But Men of Service and Merit in the Wars, they have in great Eſteem; never failing, to reward ſuch with Dignities and Commands, proportionable to their Deſerts and Capacities. Nay, ſuch is the Martial Genius of this Nation, That the very Women Ride to the Wars with the Men, and perform Exploits above what is expected from that ſoft and delicate Sex. Both Men and Women, are habituated from their Infancy, to live in Tents or Waggons, there being very few Cities in all Tartary. There they are inur'd to Hunger, Cold, Thirſt, and all the Methods of a Frugal and Hardy Life. This is that, which renders them Excellent Soldiers, and a Terrour to all the Nations round about them. This is that, which ſo ſoon Reduced all China to their Obedience; the Chineſes, among all their Vertues and Accompliſhments, being the moſt

Effeminate

Effeminate People on Earth. This no doubt, thou haſt obſerved.

Brother, I adviſe thee, to go to Kerker Haſſan, Baſſa, our Countryman, and preſent to him theſe Obſervations on the Tartars; which thou mayſt eaſily do, by tranſcribing what is for thy turn, out of this Letter. He Inherits his Father's Genius; who, thou knoweſt, was one of the Greateſt Hunters in all Arabia, and had a Character, not much different from what I have here given thee of the Tartars. That Baſſa, will take great Delight in theſe Memoirs, and will think himſelf obliged, to make thee ſome proper Acknowledgment. He is Generous and Great, and it lies in his Power to promote thee. I have writ to him already, and have given him an Encomium of thy Ability. I will ſecond it with another Letter, in Anſwer to one I lately receiv'd from him, wherein he deſires a farther Account of China. I will inform him therefore, of ſeveral Paſſages out of thy Journal. He, no doubt, to make a farther Tryal of thy Knowledge, will ask thee ſeveral Queſtions, relating to theſe Matters. So ſhalt thou have a fair Opportunity, of rendering thy ſelf Conſpicuous, and of gaining his Eſteem. Follow my Advice; take Time by the Fore-lock, and the Event ſhall prove Happy.

LETTER

LETTER XXI.

To Kerker Haſſan, Baſſa.

I Received thy Commands, and am proud of the Honour thou haſt done me, in requiring the ſmalleſt Service at my Hands; eſpecially, one of this Nature: Which is an Argument, that my Former Relation of China, was acceptable to thee. This I account my Honour and Happineſs, that I have a Brother, who has made ſuch Conſiderable Improvements in his Travels: For, 'tis to him, I owe the Knowledge I have of that Country, and the other Parts of the Eaſt. As for my Couſin Iſouf, he would never vouchſafe to ſend me a Syllable, relating to his Travels, though he had rambled throughout all Aſia.

I deſired this Favour of him in ſeveral Letters, but have received no Anſwer; ſo that I know not, whether he be Dead or Alive. My Friends are very backward in writing to me: And, unleſs it be ſome of the Miniſters of State, who ſometimes honour me with a Diſpatch, though very rarely, I hardly receive a Letter from my familiar Friends and Relations in Twenty Moons. Which makes me conclude, that Abſence of ſo long a Date, has quite blotted me out of their Minds.

As to what thou deſireſt farther to know concerning China, my Brother ſays, That

Empire

Empire contains 4400 wall'd Towns and Cities; 3000 Caſtles and Towers of Defence on the Frontiers, wherein are always Garriſoned a Million of Soldiers, who are relieved at due Times, by others of equal Number. There are a Million alſo conſtantly kept in Pay, to guard the Governours of Provinces, Embaſſadors, and other Officers of State. The Emperour of China, maintaining Five Hundred Thouſand Horſe, to attend his Perſon. All this is, in Time of Peace. But, upon any Revolt or Invaſion, the Forces are Innumerable. There are in China 331 Bridges, Remarkable for their Strength and Magnificence, beyond all others in the World; 2099 Mountains; Lakes and Medicinal Fountains 1472; 1159 Triumphal Arches and other Monuments, erected in Honour of Valiant and Learned Men; 272 Libraries, abounding with all Manner of Excellent Books. Temples 300000, and as many Prieſts, beſides the Convents of their Religious. They reverence 3036 Male-Saints, and 208 Female. All which have Temples dedicated to their Honour, beſides thoſe which are conſecrated to the Sun, Moon, and Stars, Fire, Air, Earth and Water, and to the Heavens which comprehend All, and to the Celeſtial Gods who rule All, and to the Supreme God, Creator of the Worlds. In theſe Temples, they celebrate the Praiſes of their Gods and Heroes, with Muſick and Songs, Incenſe and Sacrifices; believing, that all Things which are conſpicuous for the Excellency of their Nature, or from which which Mankind receives any General or Extraordinary Benefit, ought to be worſhipped with Divine Honours. In this, they differ not from the Ancient Pagans of Greece and Rome, who had almoſt as many Gods and Goddeſſes, as there were ſeveral Creatures in the World; ſo that there was no Beginning nor Ending of their Superſtitions: And, the moſt Learned, and Contemplative of their Prieſts, found the Ceremonies of their Religion, to be an Inextricable Labyrinth, where they were often loſt. Certainly, happy are the Faithful Muſſulmans, who Adore but One God, the Fountain of the Univerſe, without entangling themſelves, in the Abſurdities of Infidels.

The Chineſes, are great Admirers of Themſelves, and their Own Nation; believing, that no People can ſtand in Competition with them, for Learning, Wiſdom and Riches. They have a very contemptible Idea of all other Countries, with their Inhabitants; Eſteeming them, either as Idiots, or Monſters.

This Conceitedneſs, is owing to their Ignorance of the Reſt of the World; for, they ſeldom or never, travel beyond the Limits of their own Empire.

I could ſay a great Deal more of this People; but, it will be better for thee, to hear it from my Brother, who has been there, and can give thee ample Satisfaction in all Things, relating to that Empire. I have wrote to him, to go and kiſs the Duſt before thy Feet. If thou makeſt Tryal of his Abilities, thou wilt wilt find him improved by his Travels, a Man fit for Buſineſs, and one in whom thou may'ſt confide; Which is a Vertue, never enough to be prized in theſe corrupt Times.

In theſe Things however, mingle thy own Diſcretion, with the Kindneſs of a Country-Man, and the Affection of a Friend.

Paris, the 8th. of the 11th. Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER XXII.

To Cornezan, Baſſa.

WEre Ovid alive, the Events of this Year, wou'd afford him Matter for New Fictions. He would either tell us, that the Goddeſs of Love had ſet a Spell upon Mars, and charm'd him into Good Nature; or, that he had drank ſo large a Draught of Nepenthe, as had made him forget his Old Trade, of embroiling Mortals in Wars. However it be, Hymen ſeems to have the greateſt Share in this Year's Actions. For, inſtead of Battels and Sieges, the Nazarene Princes have been engaged in Encounters of a Softer Character, the Gentle Affairs of Love and Marriage.

In the Firſt Moon, the New King of Poland, whom they call John Caſimir, Married the Widow of his Deceaſed Brother. In the Ninth Ninth, the Prince of Hanault, Eſpous'd the Duke of Holſtein's Daughter. And the laſt Moon was Remarkable for Two Matches; One of the King of Spain with Anna Maria, the German Emperor's Daughter; the Other, of the Duke of Mantua, with Iſabella Clara of Auſtria.

Theſe are all bruſhing forward in the Crowd of the Living; they are buſy in augmenting the Generations of Men: Whilſt others of as High Blood, are gone to encreaſe the Number of the Dead; being enroll'd amongſt the Ghoſts, and made Denizons in the Region of Shadows.

The Empreſs of Germany, died in the Fifth Moon. The Duke of Braganza, in the Ninth. The Dutcheſs of Modena, in the Eighth. And a certain German Prince, whoſe Name I have forgot, died in the Moon of October. Beſides theſe, Death has alſo Arreſted Oſſalinski, the Great Chancellor of Poland; Wrangel, General of the Swediſh Army; Frederick, the German Embaſſador at Rome; Ferdinand, Elector of Cologne; and the Vice-Roy of Bohemia, who was by his Enemies thrown out of a Window and had his Brains daſh'd out. So that tho' Mars may have ſeem'd to lie Dormant this Year, yet his Companion in Miſchief, Old Saturn, has been very Active, as the Aſtrologers ſay, who attribute all Events, to the Influx of the Stars. Some are alſo of Opinion, that the Eclipſes of the Sun and Moon this Year, were Preſages of the Death of theſe Great Perſons. They might as well plead,

That the Daily Riſing and Setting of thoſe Luminaries, Portended all the Tragical Events that happen'd on Earth; ſince it is not more Natural for them, to continue Unalterably Moving from Eaſt to Weſt, than it is for them to be Obſcur'd, at certain determin'd Stations, in their Journey, by Interpoſitions which happen of Courſe.

We are Strangers to the Chronologies of the Chineſe and Indian Gentiles. Neither can any good Account be now given, of the Ancient Egyptian and Aſſyrian Records. They run many Ages back, beyond the Common Epocha, of the Beginning of the World.

But the whole Syſtem of Known Hiſtory, relates but Two Extraordinary or Preternatural Changes in the Courſe of the Sun, during theſe Six Thouſand Years.

One, when that Luminary ſtood ſtill in the Time of Jehoſhua, General of the Iſraelites, to ſerve the Ends of Deſtiny, and prolong the Light of the Day to a double Proportion, till the Oppoſite Army was quite deſtroy'd, and not one of the Uncircumcis'd could eſcape the Swords of the Victorious Sons of Jacob.

That Day prov'd a long Night to their Antipodes. They turn'd themſelves in their Beds, when they had out-ſlept the Uſual Hours of Night, and ſaid in their Hearts, Surely the Sun is fall'n aſleep, or is Banqueting with the Gods of the Sea. Perhaps Thetis detains him in her Embraces, whilſt the Tritons faſten his Slumbers with their ſofteſt Muſick: Or Neptune

regales in the Palaces of the Diep. Thus the Diſconſolate Nations argu'd in their Chambers. They were alarm'd with Fears of Unknown Events.

Such as dwelt on the Borders of the Earth, and were accuſtom'd to mark the conſtant Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea, admir'd the Delay of the Uſual Tides, and ask'd, What was become of the Moon? for, that Planet alſo ſtood ſtill with the Sun.

The Light of their Souls was Eclips'd, and their Reaſon labour'd under a greater Darkneſs than that which troubl'd their Eyes. They were Ignorant of the VVorks of God; and knew not, that the Celeſtial Orbs ſtood ſtill at the Command of the Spirit which formed them, even at the VVord of the Prophet Inſpir'd from Above.

So in the Days of Hezekiah, King of the Jews, the Sun went back in his Circuit, and all the Frame of Heaven was Retrograde, to confirm the Prophet's Good News, when he told the ſick King, That Fate had Prolong'd his Life for Fifteen Years. This was in the Days of Merodach Baladan, the King of Babylon, who ſent Ambaſſadors to congratulate Hezekiah's Miraculous Recovery.

Beſides theſe, nothing has happen'd to the Sun, or any of the Heavenly Bodies, beyond the Ordinary Courſe of Nature. A Man may as well Prognoſticate from Cloudy Weather, the Calamities of Emperours and Meaner Men, as from the Eclipſes of the Sun and Moon: Since the One as well as the Other, obſcures the Light of thoſe Heavenly Bodies : And the Former, quite hides them from Us; which is the greater Eclipſe of the Two.

Let us pray Heaven, to grant us the continual Uſe of our Senſes, and not to Eclipſe the Light of our Reaſon ; and we need fear no Diſaſters, from the Common Appearances of Nature.

VOL. IV.

BOOK I.

LETTER I.

To Mahammed Eremit, Inhabitant of the Prophetick Cave, in Arabia the Happy.

PArdon my Importunity, if I this once trouble thee with an Addreſs of Scruples, begging thy Counſel in the Affairs of my Soul. I ſeem to my ſelf as a Traveller loſt in a Wilderneſs of Doubts and Uncertainties, without Guide or Conduct. Not that I queſtion the Truth of our Holy Re- ligion, or miſtruſt the Authority of the Sent of God. Certainly, I revere the Book of Glory, whoſe Sacred Verſicles, are tranſcribed on my Heart. But, there is wanting to every Man, a particular Conduct in the Intricacies of this Life. I have not the Art of applying the General Precepts of the Law, to my Own Perſonal Occaſions and Neceſſities. Infinite Difficulties ariſe from my daily Affairs. My Converſation with Infidels, and the Duty I owe my Great Maſter, entangle my Conſcience. I am embaraſſed on all Hands; and whilſt I ſtudy to conſerve Purity, I find my ſelf ſtill defiled.

I am no Heretick, nor in the Number of thoſe who are Predeſtinated to be Damn'd, for the Injurious Love they bear to Hali; Injurious, I ſay, becauſe it derogates from the Honour they owe to Omar, Oſman and Ebubecker, the True Succeſſors of the Apoſtle of God.

As I firmly believe the Alcoran, ſo I give an entire Faith to the Book of Aſſonah, or the Agreement of the Wiſe, with the Writings of the Four Principal Imaums, Haniff, Schaſi, Melechi and Hambeli. And I am reſigned to the Sentence of the Mufti, as our Fathers were of Old, to the Oraculous Determinations of the Babylonian Califfs. I Curſe the Kyzilbaſchi with as much Devotion, as I pray for the Health and Felicity of True Believers. I ſpit at the Naming of them, who deny the Chapter of the Covering, and the Verſicles brought down by the Squire of Gabriel, in Honour of the Prophet's Wife. I never lifted up my Hand againſt any who deſcended from the Divine Meſſenger. And if in my Paſſion, I have ever Curs'd a Muſſulman, I took of the Duſt under his Feet, and laid it on my Lips, before the Shadow of the Sun had advanced a Hairs-breadth; and ſo I hindred the ſwift Recorder of our Words, from Regiſtring the Imprecation. For, that Duſt, I believe, has Power to blot out the Memorials, of our Evil Words and Works.

Honour

When I meet a Santone, or one of thoſe Divinely Mad, I put in practice the Leſſon of Orchanes; and honouring the Holy Frantick, I fall down and Adore Vertue, in that Contemptible Diſguiſe.

I neglect none of the Purifications, Commanded by Our Holy Lawgiver; but rather add thoſe, that we Arabians have received by Tradition from our Fathers, the Sons of Iſmael: Yet, I hope, in Caſe of Neglect, ſome Indulgence is allowable to a Muſſulman, in a Country of Infidels. I uſe the VVaſhing of Abdeſt at all Times in my Chamber, where no Curious Eye can obſerve my Cleanlineſs; or Suſpicious Apprehenſion draw Concluſions of my being a Mahometan. But I cannot thus practiſe the VVaſhing of Taharet; there being not ſuch Conveniences for that Purpoſe in Paris, as in Conſtantinople. Yet, I am careful to ſupply this Want, by other Methods of Purity; otherwiſe, I ſhould be an Abomination to my ſelf. There is no Neceſſity, that I ſhould frequent the Bath, who never touched a Woman: Yet, I often go into the River, taking a Boat with me for that End, and cauſing my ſelf to be rowed half a League from the City, wherein a little Bay or Creek, I waſh my whole Body, that I may do ſomething beyond the Obligations of the Law, to expiate the Involuntary Breaches of my Duty. Yet, after all this, I cannot call my ſelf Clean.

I Pray at the Appointed Hours; Or, at leaſt, if the Affairs of my Commiſſion hinder me from complying with the Law, as to the exact Times of the Day, I atone for that neglect, by Watching the greateſt Part of the Night. And, to the Oraiſons appointed by Authority, I add Supernumerary Prayers of my own, to evidence the Sincerity of my Devotion.

I Faſt, and give Alms, according to my Ability. I beſtow much Time, in Reading and Meditating on the Alcoran. In a word, I do all that my Reaſon tells me is Neceſſary, to render me a good Muſſulman; and yet, I have no Peace in my Mind. Methinks, I ſee our Holy Prophet furrowing his Brows at me and darting angry Looks from his Paradiſe. He ſeems to reproach me with Uncleanneſs and Infidelity. By Day my Imagination troubles me; and at Night, I am Terrify'd with Fearful Dreams. Which makes me conclude, That notwithſtanding all my Obedience to the Law, and the ſtricteſt Care I take to acquit my ſelf a True Believer, yet I am far ſhort of my Aim; and therefore, I number my ſelf with thoſe, with whom God is diſpleaſed.

It

It is impoſſible to expreſs the Horror, which this Thought creates in me. I am overwhelmed ſometimes with Melancholy and Deſpair. And, becauſe I am forc'd to keep my Grief to my ſelf, without having the Privilege of Venting it to a Boſom Friend, it is ready to burſt my Heart.

This is my Condition at Certain Seaſons; which I eſteem as bad, or worſe, than thoſe who are Doom'd to Aaraf. For as they cannot enjoy the Felicities of Paradiſe, ſo they are ſecured from the Torments of the Damn'd: Whereas, for ought I know, my Portion may be in Hell. Wilt thou know how I redreſs this Evil Temper of Mind, and what Method I take to cure my Melancholy? Receive it not as Flattery, when I tell thee, Thou art my Phyſician, and the Idea of thy Innocent Life, my Medicine. When I have rowl'd over Ten Thouſand Thoughts, which afford me no Eaſe or Relief, no ſooner do I fix my Contemplation on the Solitary of Mount Uriel, but a ſudden Beam of Light and Comfort, glances through my Soul. I promiſe my ſelf greater Satisfaction from thy Advice, than from all the Imaums and Moliahs of the Empire.

Tell me therefore, O Holy and Pious Eremit, how I ſhall diſſipate theſe Miſts of Grief and Sadneſs, which envelop my Mind, and threaten to ſuffocate my Intellect.

If in this Darkneſs and Confuſion, I ſhould apply my ſelf to the Diſciples of Alhazan for Inſtruction, they will puzzle me with Intricate Niceties, about the Eſſence and Unity of God: Whereas, I am too much troubled already, with diſtracting Speculations. I ſeek not to dive into that which is Incomprehenſible, but to be inſtructed in the Plain and Intelligible Way to to Happineſs. What imports it, whether God be Good by his Goodneſs, or by his Eſſence? This is, to throw Metaphyſical Duſt in my Eyes, and ſo leave me in a worſe Condition than they found me.

No better Light, muſt I expect from the Momſconderan: For, if they are ſtrict Obſervers of the Law, ſo am I, where the Precepts are applicable to my Condition and Circumſtances. But, I want a Direction in many Emergencies, for which the Alcoran ſeems to have made no Proviſion, but leaves every Man, to the Conduct of his own Prudence. And, I muſt confeſs, I dare not truſt mine, in all Caſes of this Nature. Beſides, inſtead of Interpreting to me in a plain Style the Statutes of the Law, they will Confound me with High and Unintelligible Notions of the Divine Attributes, which are ſufficient to dazle the Intellect of the Brighteſt Seraphim. And, if they could once perſwade me to be zealous for their Speculations, I might in Time turn ſuch another Religious Fool, as was one of their Followers, the Poet Namiſi, who being wrapt in his profound Speculations of the Divine Unity, and hearing an Imaam pronounce the Sacred Sentence, God is One, gave him the Lye, and told him, That he multiply'd the Divinity, in aſſigning it any Attribute, though it were only that which expreſſed his Unity. For which Impudent Aſſertion, he was ſea'd alive.

In as bad a Condition ſhould I be, if I ask'd the Adviſe of the Muſerin, thoſe Infidels in Maſquerade, who under the Diſguiſe of Muſſulmans, deny the Being of a God, aſſert all Things to come by Chance, and live without Hope or Faith of Another Life. For, if this were true, that there were no Reward or Puniſhment of Good or Bad Works, I would either ſoon make my Way to Earthly Happineſs, by not boggling at any Vice that would conduce to that End; Or, if I fail'd in that Attempt, I would not tamely wait for a Martyrdom from Men, but bravely rid my ſelf of a Life, which was attended with nothing but Miſery.

Almoſt as bad as theſe, are the Hairet, thoſe Mahometan Scepticks, who dare not truſt their own Reaſon, but are ever Wavering and Irreſolute. If I ſhould ſeek for Inſtruction at their Hands, they would anſwer me, God knows beſt what I ought to do, and ſo leave me in the ſame Suſpence as I was before.

Much worſe are the Guiid, thoſe Moroſe Interpreters of the Law of Mercy, who damn a Man irrecoverably to Hell, for committing one Mortal Sin. This is enough to drive all Mankind to Deſpair.

Indeed the Morals of the Sabin pleaſe me, who ſeem to be perfect Mahometan Stoicks, aſcribing all Events to Deſtiny, and the Influence of the Stars. I could willingly embrace the the Advice of Philoſophers, who appear ſo void of Paſſion; but I could never join with them, in Adoring the Sun, Moon and Conſtellations of Heaven, becauſe the Alcoran has expreſly forbidden it. And, were there no ſuch Prohibition, my own Reaſon would convince me, that I ought as well to Adore the Fire for warming me and ſerving my other Neceſſities, or the Water for quenching my Thirſt and Purifying me, or my own Hands for feeding me, as to pay theſe Divine Honours to the Celeſtial Bodies; ſince the one, as well as the other, Act according to their Nature.

In a Word, of all the Innumerable Sects, into which the Muſſulman Empire is divided, I cannot expect entire Satisfaction from any; for, if they appear Orthodox in ſome Tenets, in others they are manifeſtly Heretical. Yet, I cannot but ſet a higher Value on ſome, than Others, as their Doctrines and Practices approach nearer to Reaſon and Truth. For, I am not yet ſuch an Academick, as to ask that Mock-Queſtion, What is Truth?

Doubtleſs, our Fathers knew it, and the Meſſenger of God was ſent to divulge it on Earth. But, if Ignorance, Superſtition and Error have baniſhed it from Courts and Cities, let us ſeek it in the Deſarts. Perhaps we may find this Wanderer among the Rocks and Woods; or, 'tis poſſible ſhe has ſheltered herſelf in ſome Den or Cave, as hoping for greater Favour from the Wild Beaſts, than from the Society of Men.

If

If Truth be no where to be found Entire, but has divided her ſelf among the Different Religions and Sects in the World, then, rather than miſs of this Divine Jewel, I will ſearch for it in Fragments; and whatſoever is Rational and Pious in any Sect, I will embrace, without concerning my ſelf in their Follies and Vices.

After all, the Munaſihi ſeem to me, the only Orthodox and Illumined of God, who declining the private By-Ways of Schiſmaticks, walk in the High Road of Priſtine Juſtice and Piety, following the Steps of the Ancients, and obeying the Traditions which know no Origin. Among theſe, thou appeareſt as another Pythagoras; confirming them by thy Example in an Innocent Life; enduring the utmoſt Severities of Abſtinence, rather than be Guilty of ſhedding the Blood of thoſe Creatures, which the Great Lord of All Things Created, to enjoy the Herbage of the Field, and to partake of the Common Bleſſings of Nature, as well as We.

To thee therefore I have Recourſe, as to an Oracle. Tell me, O Sacred Sylvian, am I not obliged to obey the Inſpirations of my Nature, or Better Genius, which tells me, 'Tis a Butcherly and Inhuman Life, to feed on ſlaughtered Animals? Did not all thoſe who aim'd at Perfection among the Primitive Diſciples of the Prophet, abſtain from Murdering the Brutes? 'Tis true, the Meſſenger of God, did not poſitively enjoin Abſtinence from Fleſh; yet he recommended it, as a Divine Counſel.

And,

And, thoſe to whom he indulged the Liberty of Eating it, he ty'd up to certain Conditions. Do not all the Religious Orders Preach up Abſtinence, both in their Sermons and Lives? I make no longer Doubt, but the Corruption of Manners, and Voluptuouſneſs of Men, are the Cauſes, that this Ancient Sobriety is now diſus'd and ſlighted. My own Experience confirms me in this Opinion, who have often attempted to live in Abſtinence; but, by the Force of a Voracious Appetite, ſuffered my ſelf to be carri'd back to my old Intemperance.

Yet, in Eating Fleſh, I have been preciſely careful, to obſerve the Prohibitions of our Holy Prophet, ſo long as it was in my Power. I never Knowingly taſted of Blood, nor of any Thing ſtrangled or knocked down. But, it is Impoſſible for me to aſſure my ſelf of this; or that all the Fleſh I Eat, was killed, in Pronouncing that Tremendous Name which gave it Life. Neither could I Once eſcape a Neceſſity, of Eating Swine's Fleſh.

But, I abominate my ſelf for this Involuntary Crime. And, to obviate the like Temptation for the Future, I will taſte of Nothing, that has Breath'd the Common Air; being inclined to believe the Metempſychoſis: Which, if it be true, I wiſh for no greater Happineſs, than that in my next Change, my Soul may paſs into the Body of the Camel, which ſhall carry thee to Mecha.

Paris, the 14th. of the 1ſt. Moon, of the Year 1650.

LETTER II.

To Minezim Aluph, Baſſa.

MY Intelligence from the Imperial Port, ſometimes arrives late; either through the Neglect of Kiſir Dramelec, to whom that Care is committed, or through the Badneſs of the Roads, which many Times are Impaſſable. Beſides the frequent Stops and Interceptions of the Poſts, in this Time of War. Which is the Reaſon, I do not always hear of the Alterations at the Seraglio, and the Changes that are made in the Governments of the Shining Empire, till many Moons are paſs'd. Who is exalted, or who made Manſoul, are Things to which Mahmut is for a Time a great Stranger.

Therefore, thou haſt no Reaſon to be offended, that I am thus late in ſending to thee my Congratulatory Addreſs. But reſt confident, that I wiſh thee increaſe of Happineſs, like the Sprouting of the Palm.

As a Mark of my Duty and Affection, I ſhall now acquaint thee with News, which though it may ſeem of ſmall Import to the Divan, yet has ſtartl'd all Europe.

It is the Impriſonment of Three of the French Princes; not thoſe of the Ordinary Rank, but Branches of the Royal Stem, whoſe Names are not unknown in the Seraglio, the Reſidence of Fame. They are, the Princes of

Conde

Conde and Conti, Brothers, and the Duke of Longueville, Husband to their Sister. They are the Principal Subjects in this Nation; all Three, having the Majestick Blood of the Kings of France, running in their Veins.

They owe their Confinement to Cardinal Mazarini, or rather to their own Inartificial Conduct. The Prince of Conde, is a Passionate Man; and has never learn'd, how to conceal his Resentments. When he first return'd from the Battel of Lens in Flanders, whereof I formerly gave an Account, the Insurrection in Paris began. The Prince, block'd up the City, and promis'd the Cardinal (against whom alone all this Storm was rais'd), that he wou'd either bring him back in Triumph to Paris, or die in the Attempt. He perform'd his Word; and the Cardinal rode through the Streets of Paris, in the same Coach with the King, Queen, and all the Royal Blood after the Siege was rais'd, and a Peace concluded. And the Prince, when he alighted out of the Coach, addres'd himself thus to the Cardinal: Now, Sir, I esteem my self the happiest Man in the World, in that I have been able to perform my Engagement, in bringing your Eminence back to Paris; and that by my Presence, the Hatred which the Multitude have for your Person, was repress'd whilst you pass'd through the Streets.

This touch'd the Cardinal. And indeed the Queen, with all the Rest, were sensible, that the Prince had too far over-shot himself, in this last Expression. However, the Cardinal reply'd in a Kind of Modeſty, not wholly void of Choler and Diſdain; Sir, You have not only oblig'd me to that Heighth, but have done the Kingdom ſo conſiderable a ſervice in this Action, That I fear, neither Their Majeſties nor my ſelf, ſhall be ever in a State, to make you anſwerable Compenſation.

Cardinal

Thoſe who ſtood by, and heard theſe interchangeable Diſcourſes, were apt to interpret the Firſt for a Reproach, and the Second as a Menace. Since it is not unuſual for Great Men, to over-value the Services they do their King and Country; and for Princes, when they cannot duly reward an Eminent Performance, to turn their Gratitude into Hatred.

This is certain, that the Prince of Conde has preſum'd much, on the Merit of his late Services; and, it was not eaſie for the Queen or the Cardinal, to invent ſuch Acknowledgments as he expected. For he imagin'd, they ought to deny him Nothing, who had ſo often hazarded his Life for their Intereſt.

It was on this Ground, he thought he had a Right to interpoſe in a Marriage, which Mazarini deſign'd to make between one of his Nieces, and the Duke of Mercœur.

This Duke is of a Family, which has been a long Time at Variance with that of the Prince of Conde: And therefore, the Prince was jealous leſt the Cardinal, by the intended Match, ſhould fortifie his Intereſt among the Prince's Enemies; and ſo be in a Condition, not to want his Protection; the only Thing he was ambitious of. For, cou'd he have once reduc'd duc'd the Cardinal to this Neceſſity, he himſelf had been abſolute Maſter at Court. Therefore, he oppos'd the Match, with all Vigor and Induſtry. This netled the Cardinal. He complains to the Queen, of the Prince's Unkindneſs. She intercedes, and uſes her utmoſt Endeavours, to reconcile the Prince to this Marriage. But his Brother, the Duke of Longueville, had ſo poſſeſs'd the Prince with a Jealouſie of the Cardinal's Proceedings, that no Arguments cou'd prevail on him, or overcome his fix'd Averſion for Mazarini's deſigned Alliance with the Houſe of Vendoſme (ſo they call the Family, from whence the Duke of Mercœur is ſprung.) He rails at the Cardinal, and lampoons him in all Companies. This begets ill Blood in the Supreme Miniſter of State, who ſecretly reſolves the Prince's Ruin.

In this, his Policy and Malice, exceeded the petty Revenges of the Prince; who being of a frank, open Heart, contented himſelf with Railleries, and Satyrical Expreſſions, whilſt the Cardinal conceal'd his Anger, under the Maſque of extraordinary Civilities; returning all the Contempts of the Prince, with a Reſpect, which ſeem'd to ſpeak much Affection and Devoir.

He has been a long time tampering with a Faction, which goes by the Name of the Frondeurs. Theſe were his Enemies, not ſo much in Hatred of his Perſo, as out of a Zeal to ſerve their Country, which they imagin'd, was oppreſs'd under the Conduct of this Miniſter.

Theſe

These he has lately gain'd over to his Party, by repreſenting to them the Prince of Conde, as the Author of all thoſe Evils, which they aſcrib'd to himſelf: Whilſt at the ſame Time, he perſuaded the Prince, that they had ſome Deſign againſt his Perſon. Thus he artificially blinded both Parties, and engag'd them in mutual Revenges; privately animating the Frondeurs againſt the Prince, and provoking the Prince, to ſeek the Ruin of the Frondeurs. By this Trap, the Prince was inveigl'd to conſent, and give Orders for his own Impriſonment, whilſt he was made to believe, the Arreſt was deſigned againſt his Enemies; and the People were ſatisfy'd, ſince they were perſuaded, the Faction of the Frondeurs had a Hand in the Plot.

The 18th. of the laſt Moon, the Three Princes were taken into Cuſtody, and ſent to a Place, they call the Caſtle of the Wood of Vinciennes, ſome Leagues from Paris. The ſame Day, the Queen ſent for the Dutcheſs of Longueville to come to her; but, the wary Dutcheſs, wou'd not put her ſelf into a Cage. She immediately fled in Diſguiſe, to a Sea-Town belonging to her Husband.

'Tis ſaid, the Prince of Conde had Notice given him, of his Deſign'd Impriſonment; but that he wou'd not eſcape, projecting to himſelf ſome greater Advantages, from the Diſcontents of the People (who now behold him as a Patriot) than from a Clandeſtine, or Fugitive Liberty. This is certain, his Coach broke on the Road, between Paris and Vinciennes; and and 'tis thought, his Friends might eaſily have reſcu'd him: For, this Accident, occaſion'd a Stop of Six Hours in their Journey; Time enough to have rais'd a Thouſand Men to his Relief, being only guarded by Sixteen Cavaliers. But it ſeems, he courts the Cardinal's Perſecution, that he may have deeper Grounds for Revenge. I know not, whether his Policy is juſtifiable, or no: But if I were in his Circumſtances, I ſhou'd hardly take this Method to gratify my Reſentments; which in all Probability I ſhou'd not be in a Condition to accompliſh, till the Greek Calends, that is, Never.

LETTER III.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

THE Devotees among the Franks, talk much of the Jubilee that is to be Celebrated this Year at Rome. They enrich their Phancies, with the Hopes of I know not what Spiritual Treaſure, which the Roman Mufti or Pontiff, will diſtribute among the Pilgrims that reſort to Rome, during this Holy Year.

This,

This, as I am told, is Celebrated in Imitation of the Sabbatical Year, formerly obſerved by the Jews, when they poſſeſs'd the Holy Land. The Hebrew Writers, ſuch as Joſephus and others, call That alſo the Year of Jubilee. Their Cabbaliſts, like the Pythagoreans, pretended to derive Great Myſteries from certain Numbers: And the Number Seven, was had in particular Veneration by the Hebrews: Therefore they kept every Seventh Day, Week and Year, Holy. In the Seventh Year it was not Lawful to till the Ground, plant Vineyards, or ſow any Seed. And when Seven Times Seven Years were expired, the Year of Jubilee was proclaim'd, being always the Fiftieth. They proclaim'd it by Trumpets, throughout the whole Country of Paleſtine, in the Forty Ninth Year. And the Muezins cry'd in the Gates of their Cities and Synagogues, at the Beginning of the Jubilee: "Let every Man return this Year to his Own "Poſſeſſion and Tribe, whether he be a Slave "or Free. He that has ſold his Houſes or "Lands, if he was not before able to redeem "them, let him this Year take Poſſeſſion of "his Inheritance. He that is become another "Man's Slave, and neither himſelf nor his "Friends can redeem him, let him this Year "be diſmiſs'd, and ſent home to the Family "to which he belongs; for, henceforth he is "Free, by the Indulgence of the Law. Let no "Man ſow the Ground, nor gather the Fruits "that grow of themſelves this Year. But, let "the Earth as well as its Inhabitants, enjoy Li"berty

" berty and Reſt; for, this is the Year of Grace " and Divine Bounty.

After this manner was the Hebrew Jubilee Proclaim'd, and Obſerv'd. And, they ſay, from thence aroſe the Cuſtom amongſt the Chriſtians, who, in many Things, may be ſtyl'd the Jews Apes. But others ſay, that the preſent Roman Jubilee, is deriv'd from the Secular Games, Celebrated by their Pagan Anceſtors; In Regard, This was renew'd every Hundred Years at firſt, even as thoſe Games were. Whence it was, that the Cryer in thoſe Days, at the Indiction of the Secular Games, ſaid, " Come to the Plays which no Man Li- " ving has yet ſeen, nor ſhall ever ſee again. For, Man's Life being Generally ſo Short, they thought it improbable, that any Mortal ſhould live to ſee this Solemnity repeated.

The Modern Jubilee, was firſt Publiſh'd by Boniface IX. Biſhop of Rome, in the Year 1300 of the Chriſtians Hegyra. At which Time, he promis'd Full and Entire Remiſſion of Sins, to all who ſhould reſort in Pilgrimage to Rome that Year. After him, it was Celebrated every Hundred Year, according to his Inſtitution, till the Days of Clement VI. Who, at the Inſtance of the Roman Citizens, reduc'd it to every Fiftieth Year. Then Urban VI. another Pope, reduc'd it to the Thirty Third Year. And laſt of all, Paul II. contracted the Interval to Five and Twenty Years. Which Space of Time, has been obſerv'd by all his Succeſſors to this Day.

If

If thou wouldſt know the Reaſon, why they have thus alter'd the Periods; It is for Profit. For, in the Year of Jubilee, there is a vaſt Conflux of People, from all Parts of Europe: Who bring a far greater Treaſure into the Roman Coffers, than they carry away from that City. Though the Pope, 'tis ſaid, is very Liberal of that which they call the Treaſure of the Church: Which is a certain Fund of Merits, and Superabundant Graces, left by the Meſſiah and his Saints, in the Cuſtody of this Prelate, to ſupply the Defects and Infirmities of Sinful Men. And they believe, 'tis only in his Power, to diſpoſe of this Heavenly Wealth to whom he pleaſes. They talk alſo of Indulgencies and Pardons, whereby the Holy Father can redeem Men from all Sin, and the Puniſhments that are due to it. And this Wonderful Prerogative, they ſay, does not only benefit the Living, but extends even to the Souls Departed; whom the Pope, according to their Perſuaſion, can free from the Torments of Purgatory, and at his Pleaſure admit into the Gates of Paradiſe.

We that are Muſſulmans, cannot declaim againſt the Doctrine of Praying for the Dead, ſince it is practis'd by all the Faithful. Neither have we reaſon to inveigh againſt Indulgencies, or Releaſes from Penance. But that the Power of granting and diſpenſing theſe Favours, ſhould be only repoſited in the Chriſtian Mufti, will not accord with the Faith of a True Believer. We know who ſwore by the Hoofs of his Swift and Faithful Elborach, Elborach, which in One Night carry'd him a Journey of Six Moons, that from thenceforth the Key of Aaraf, or the Place of Priſons, was committed to him. Doubtleſs, the Omnipotent can transfer his Commiſſions, when and to whom he pleaſes. If he once gave this Authority, of Remitting Sins, to the Meſſiah, and Peter his Lieutenant, does it follow, that all Peter's Succeſſors, the Califfs of Rome, have retain'd this Privilege? There have been many Good Men in that Seat, and not a Few Wicked: Some Prophets, and ſome Magicians: A Catalegue interſpers'd with Saints, Martyrs, Butchers and Devils.

But 'tis evident, they forfeited their Authority, when they declin'd from the Truth, from the unblamable Profeſſion of the Divine Unity, and reſiſted the Meſſenger of Heaven, ſent to correct their Errors, reform their Vices, and reduce Mankind to One Law of Purity and Light.

I write not Partially, nor am I imbitter'd againſt the Patriarch of the Romans. He is a Man like others, ſubject to the Will of Deſtiny. The Babylonian Califfs and thoſe of Ægypt, Succeſſively enjoy'd the ſame Power, tranſmitted to them from the Prophet, who ſeal'd up all the Former Diſpenſations. Yet in Time, through their Sins, they forfeited their Authority, together with their Empire, when the Bright Oſmans Conquer'd All Things. Then was the Prophetick Office tranſlated to our Mufti, the Guide of thoſe who poſſeſs the Sepulchre of Mahomet. To him all the World ought ought to have Recourſe for Solution of their Doubts, Direction in their Lives, Abſolution from their Sins, and for the Paſſport of Immortality, the Feſta requir'd of all that enter the Gates of Paradiſe.

But all Mortals, are Naturally tenacious of whatſoever advances their Honour and Intereſt. Kings hug Empty Titles, that yield them no Profit. And the Roman Biſhops, are unwilling to acknowledge themſelves diveſted of the Privileges, which were once annex'd to that Chair of Peter. They ſhew the Keys, the Symbols of a Power, which they have loſt. And the Credulous Nazarenes believe, that Heaven and Hell are Open'd and Shut at their Pleaſure. On the Eve of the Meſſiah's Nativity, the Preſent Pope Knoc'd Three Times with a Golden Hammer, at the Gates of the Principal Moſque in Rome. Which were then Open'd, to ſignifie the enſuing Year of Jubilee; when the Chriſtians are perſuaded. that Heaven is open to all that viſit Rome, in this Holy Time.

I wiſh thee a Life of many Jubilee's.

Paris, 9th. of the 3d. Moon,
of the Year 1650.

LETTER IV.

To the Flower of High Dignity, the Moſt Magnificent Vizir Azem.

WHEN I firſt heard the News of the Troubles that have been at Conſtantiniple, the Depoſition of Mahomet, the late Vizir Azem, and the Advancement of the Janizar-Aga to that Dignity, I imagin'd it had been Caſſim Hali. But, it ſeems, that Brave Old Soldier, is elevated to a more Lofty Station: He has enter'd the Immortal Poſſeſſions, being tranſlated to an High Seat: For, I underſtand, he has his Reſt in Paradiſe. On that Hero, be the Mercies of the Supremely Indulgent: Whilſt I turn my ſelf to thee, his late Succeſſor in that Military Honour, but now the Lieutenant of the Shadow of God. I touch the Earth Thrice with my Forehead, when I ſalute thee, Great Prince of the Vizirs, in Token of my Humility and Reverence; and, in Remembrance of my Original: That I, who am but the Product of Duſt, a meer Worm, may not commit an Indecency, when I addreſs to the Bright Image of our Auguſt Emperour, who is the Type of the Sun.

In ſpeaking to Perſons of thy Immenſe Power, I ſtrive equally to ſhun Flattery, and Diſreſpect; endeavouring to deport my ſelf with with an Even Courſe, between thoſe Two Extremes, as Mariners ſteer between Scylla and Charybdis. Theſe are dangerous Places in the Sicilian Seas.

All Europe Celebrates thy Praiſes, and Extols thy Juſtice, for releaſing the Ambaſſador of Venice, Impriſon'd in the 4*th* Moon of this Year. They ſay ſince thy Aſſumption to this Important Truſt, the Ottoman Port is Reform'd, and grown more Civiliz'd: (For, the Franks eſteem all the Followers, of the Prophet, who could neither Write nor Read, as Barbairas.)

Here is much Talk, about the Defeat given to Our Forces in Hungary. The French ſpare for no Encomium's on the Baſſa of Buda, who fought Valiantly, till his Legs were ſhot off; and then caus'd himſelf to be carry'd up and down through the Army, to encourage his Soldiers. Neither do they diminiſh the Glory that is due to his Son, who receiv'd his Death, in defending his Father, at what Time the Old Captain was taken Priſoner.

But they blame the Conduct of him who Beſieg'd the Fort of Cliſſa, in Regard he undertook it in the Wrong Seaſon of the Year. The Defect of a General's Judgment in ſuch Caſes, is many Times Fatal to an Army. The French are the beſt in the World, at ſpying Advantages, and the moſt dextrous in making Uſe of them. Moſt of their Campagnes, are ſpent in their Trenches, or in light Skirmiſhes; ſeldom hazarding a Battel, unleſs leſs on ſome unequal Terms, to their own Intereſt; and then they never let ſlip the Opportunity. This commends their Policy, but is no great Argument of their Courage: For, true Valour never regards Dangers.

Adonai the Jew, ſends me Word, That the Venetians are put in great Hopes, of accommodating their Affairs with the Myſterious Divan, ſince the Releaſe of their Bailo: Yet, both they and all the Nazarenes, reſent highly the Strangling of his Interpreter.

They underſtand not the Meaſures of the Sublime Port, full of Wiſdom and Juſtice; and, that by the Terror of ſuch Examples, the Miniſters of the Righteous Throne, ſeek to prevent future Wickedneſs.

In theſe Weſtern Courts, a little Gold, or a great Friend, ſhall eaſily palliate and procure a Pardon for the Greateſt Crimes. Their Proceſſes here, are ſlow in the Execution of Juſtice: Being Strangers to the Impetuous Orders, and ſwift Performance practis'd in the Eaſt. Beſides, this Interpreter ſported himſelf to Death, by the Licentiouſneſs of his Tongue. He delighted to play upon Majeſty, and with an Inſolent Laſciviouſneſs of Speech, to deceive Him, whoſe high, ſublime and remote Intellect, uſes no other Expreſſions of his Wrath, but the Hands of his Mutes. It does not become the Emperor of the World, to be profuſe in Words, as the Chriſtian Princes are, who take great Pains to ſatisfie their Vaſſals, of the Juſtice of their Proceedings. They cannot Condemn the VVicked without a Formal Proceſs, wherein various VVits ſhew their Skill in canvaſſing the Cauſe, which, upon ſincere Evidence, may be decided in Two Words. This is the Maſquerade of Chriſtian Juſtice, a mere Trap for Gold, the Secret of the Weſtern Lawyers, who enrich themſelves, at the Price of other Mens Folly, and to the Diſgrace of the Monarch, who there pretends to Command.

Should thoſe Men of Law ſee this Letter, and know who wrote it, how would they not Circumciſe and Flay the minuteſt Daſh of my Pen, to find Arguments of Revenge againſt a Muſſulman?

All Men are full of themſelves, and their Own Principles: And the Nazarenes of the Weſt, are ſo brimming with them, that there is no Room left for Inſtruction of Amendment. Like the Chineſes, they boaſt of their own Science and Wiſdom, reputing all the Reſt of the VVorld Ignorant and Blind.

They are ſo Narrow in their Tenets, ſo Dogmatical in their Deciſions, and ſo conceited of All, that it is difficult for a Man who has convers'd in a freer Air, to frame himſelf to their Rules.

By what I have ſaid, thou may'ſt determine, That it is no Eaſie Task for an Arabian Native, bred in the Seraglio, to conform himſelf adroit, to the Humours and Faſhions of France. Yet, I curb all the Natural Propenſions of my Birth, Blood and Education, as much as in me lies, that I may ſerve the Grand Signior. I am Incognito in all Reſpects, ſave thoſe wherein I cannot be hid. And I would change my Maſque a Hundred Times over, rather than fail of my Ends.

What can I ſay more to him, who only values a Slave for his Deeds?

I turn not my Back on thee, Sublime Idea of Abſolute Power: but, retiring after the moſt Reſpectful Manner of the Eaſt, I make a Thouſand Obeiſances, till the Antiport has cover'd me from thy Illuſtrious Preſence.

LETTER

LETTER V.

To Sedrec Al' Girawn, Chief Page of the Treaſury.

THOU wilt have Reaſon to wonder at a Man pretending Acquaintance with thee, whom thou canſt not remember to have ſeen. 'Tis from my Brother Peſtelihali, thy former Maſter, I received the News of thy late Preferment, who art thy ſelf but Early in Years. Yet no Time is Unſeaſonable, to a Man Mature in Vertue and Wiſdom.

I knew thee an Infant, in the Arms of thy Mother, the Widow of an Arabian Souldier, who ſerved my Brother in the Wars of Perſia. There appeared then, ſuch Evident Symptoms of thy future Wit and Dexterity, as prompted thy Father's Captain, to take thee into his Protection and Care; and thy Mother by her Charms, ſoon found a Way to his Boſom.

I write not theſe Things to Reproach thee with the Meanneſs of thy Birth. Thy Merits equal thee with thoſe who are born of Nobles. It is not the Cuſtom of the Eaſt, to prefer Men for their Parentage, or becauſe they can ſhew the Duſty Statues of their Anceſtors. This is the peculiar Overſight of the Infidels, to give that Honour to Names, and Men of a Noiſy Deſcent, which is only due to Vertue. There are Families in Rome at this Day, who boaſt of their Pedigrees and that they ſpring from the Renowned Hero's, that are Recorded in the Hiſtories of that Empire. But, they Glory in their Shame; ſince they are quite degenerated from the brave Qualities, which ennobled their Progenitors; and by their ſordid Actions, are become a daily Subject for the Deſcants of Paſquil. This is an Image in a certain publick Place in Rome, to which in the Night-Time, they affix the Libels which they dare not own: A kind of dumb Satyr, on the Vices of the Grandees; not ſparing even the Chief Mufti of the Chriſtians, if he is Guilty of any Follies, which merit to come within the Verge of a Lampoon.

It was no Contemptible Jeſt, which was in this manner put upon the preſent Pope, and one of his Nephews, at the latter End of the laſt Year. It ſeems, the Good Old Father had advanced this Spark, from a poor Ignorant Tayler, to the Dignity of a Roman Baron; beſtowing on him Offices, which brought him a Revenue, ſufficient to maintain his Title and Port. All the Ancient Nobility, were diſguſted at this: And ſome arch Wag was ſet at Work, to ridicule the Pope's Conduct, and the New Baron's Honour. Wherefore, on the Day which the Nazarenes Celebrate, with Great Solemnity, for the Birth Day of Jeſus the Son of Mary; Early in the Morning, the forementioned Image, Paſquil, was obſerved to be Apparell'd all in Rags, and a very naſty Habit with with a Schedule of Paper in his Hand, wherein was writ, How now Paſquil; what! all in Rags on a Chriſtmas-Day? (for, ſo they call the Nativity of their Meſſias.) And Underneath was Inſcribed this Anſwer: Alas, I cannot help it; for my TAYLOR is become a LORD.

Yet, notwithſtanding the Obſcurity of this Man's Birth, and the Meanneſs of his Former Trade, he became an Eminent Stateſman, after the Pope had exalted him to that Dignity; and lived with an Unblemiſhed Reputation, whilſt he ſaw all or moſt of the Ancient Nobility, Paſquill'd every Day, for their Effeminate Vices.

By what I have ſaid, thou may'ſt be aſſured, that I have not the Leſs Eſteem for thee, becauſe thou waſt not the Son of a Baſſa; ſince, had thy Father liv'd, his Fortune and Courage might have promoted him to that Honovr, or a Command equal to it; and thou thy ſelf art in a fair Way, to ſupply ſome Future Vacancy, in thoſe Great Charges of the Empire.

I have no News at preſent to ſend thee, ſave that the Three French Princes, of whoſe Impriſonment I gave an Account to Minezim Aluph, are removed by Cardinal Mazarini's Order, from the Caſtle of Vincienues, to a Sea-Town called Havre de Grace, for fear they ſhould be reſcued by Marſhal Turenne, who is much Devoted to their Intereſt. The Princeſs of Conde, is retired to Bourdeaux, a City at this Time in Arms againſt the King, having alſo with her the Young Duke of Enguien, her Son.

The Marſhal de la Meilleray, is gone with his Army to beſiege this Place; and, 'tis ſaid, the King will ſoon Follow with the Whole Court. All Things ſeem to portend another Relapſe of this State, into the Old Diſorders.

But this is not of ſo near a Concern to us that are Muſſulmans, as the Quarrels that I hear are broach'd between the Janizaries and Spahi's. They ſay, the whole Ottoman Empire, is warp'd this Way and that Way, into Contrary Factions; and that the Seraglio it ſelf, is full of different Cabals, on the Account of theſe Military Orders. It afflicts me with extreme Grief, to receive Nothing but ſad News from the Port, which is, or at leaſt ought to be, a Fountain of Joy to the Whole Earth. I pray Heaven avert the Omen; for it looks with an Ill Preſage, when the Champions of the Divine Unity, are thus divided againſt themſelves.

If thou wilt take my Advice, enter not thy ſelf into the Secret of either Party; but poiſing thy Affections with Prudence, ſtand Neuter to all Things, but the Grand Signior's Intereſt. In that be as Zealous as thou canſt. As for the Reſt, wait the Decrees of Deſtiny,

LETTER VI.

To the Kaimacham.

GRaphul Eben Shahenſhah, the Arabian Philoſopher has ſaid it, and every Mans Experience confirms it, That no Humane Care can prevent the Accompliſhment of what Heaven has Decreed. There are certain Moments of our Lives, wherein Fate delights to mock our Wit and Prudence, to baffle our ſtricteſt Caution, and ridicule all our Conduct; That we may learn the Leſſon of Reſignation, and not truſt too much to our ſelves.

When I firſt ſaluted the Light of this Morning Sun, my Spirits were Serene and Joyful: No melancholy Dreams, had left their Black Impreſſions on my Mind; no ſadning Thoughts poſſeſs'd my Soul: I awak'd cheerful and ſprightly as the Lark. After I had Ador'd the Omnipotent, and perform'd my Accuſtom'd Holy Things, I began to reflect on my own Happineſs, in that I had ſo many Years ſerv'd the Sublime Port, in this Station, full of Difficulties and Perils, yet by no Miſfortune, had ever betray'd the leaſt ſecret of my Commiſſion. It pleas'd me to think, I ſtill paſs'd for Titus of Moldavia, among the French, who are the moſt apprehenſive People in the World; and even in the Opinion of Cardinal Mazarini, who, like Janus, has more more Eyes than Two. I Embrac'd my ſelf (if I may ſo ſpeak) in the Conceit of my Good Succeſs; concluding, I was born under Fortunate Stars, and that no Diſaſter could ever hurt me.

But I took wrong meaſures of the Ways of Deſtiny, which are as Untraceable as the Minds. For before Mid-Day, my Sun was Eclipſed; the Air of my Soul ruffl'd with Storms, and all my Joy turn'd to Mourning and Sadneſs.

Wilt thou know the Occaſion of my Grief? It was this. In the Year 1645, according to the Style of the Nazarenes, I received ſome particular Inſtructions from the then Vizir Azem, putting me in Mind of the Hazards I run in this Poſt, and giving me ſtrict Charge, to beſtow all my Letters in a ſecure Place, whether the Tranſcripts of thoſe I write to the Miniſters of the Port, (for I always retain'd a Copy of the Original) or the Diſpatches I receive from thence.

That Miniſter was afraid, leſt I might ſome Time or other be diſcover'd; and conſequently, that my Chamber would be ſearch'd. Therefore obeying his Hint, I immediately carry'd all my Writings to Eliachim the Jew; knowing his Houſe to be free from any Jealouſy of the State, and that the moſt Important Secrets in the World, might be there an Age unreveal'd.

The Letters of my Writing, were enclos'd in One Box, and thoſe which I received from the Invincible Port, in Another. And this was

was my Conſtant Cuſtom from that Time: As oft as I writ to the Miniſters of the Divan, or had perus'd the Diſpatches which came from them, I diſpos'd of both in their proper Places, leaving all to the Care of Eliachim.

But, neither his Caution nor mine, were ſufficient to prevent the Reſolves of Heaven. It was determin'd Above, That we ſhould loſe ſome of theſe Papers. Eliachim came to me to Day, before the Hour of Ulanamiſi, all in Paſſion, aſtoniſh'd, raving and ſtaring like a Mad-Man. As ſoon as he enter'd my Chamber, he tore his Inner Veſt, which was of Crimſon Silk, fring'd round with Gold; and cry'd, We are undone, betray'd and ruin'd!

I preſently thought of my Writings; and ask'd him, Whether they were ſafe. In a Word, he told me he had loſt the Box, which contain'd the Letters ſent from the Miniſters of the Port to me, and that his Slave a Negro, whom he kept in his Houſe, was miſſing. Thou mayſt imagine, Sage Miniſter, that this News put me into no ſmall Confuſion. I preſently ſuſpected, that this Villain of a Negro, had got the Writings, and was gone to Cardinal Mazarini with 'em: But then recollecting with Cooler Thoughts, That this African underſtood not Arabick, in which Language alone Eliachim and I us'd to converſe; and, that conſequently, he never could know our Affairs, or read the Letters, which might tempt him to ſuch a Treaſon, I was at a Loſs what to think of it: Neither am I better ſatisfy'd now, though I have ruminated on it theſe Twelve Hours. Only I think, if Cardinal Mazarini has theſe Papers in his Cuſtody, he would have given Orders before this Time, to ſeize the ſuppoſed Titus of Moldavia. For, ſome of theſe Letters take Notice of my having aſſumed that Name. But I cannot perceive any Attempt has been made in that Kind, or that any Body has been to enquire for me at my Lodging. For, I ſet Spies to obſerve, as ſoon as I departed thence with Eliachim, which was about Noon. We are now together in a Friend's Houſe, where we ſhall continue till we hear farther of this Event. As yet we are in the Dark, and full of Fears: But Time, which brings all Things to Light, will convince us, what we have to truſt to.

In the mean while, there is little News, ſave a Diſcourſe of a certain Convention at Norembergh, and the Great Jubilee which is Celebrated at Rome; where, they ſay, the Chriſtians Chief Mufti, the Week before their Beiram, or Eaſter, waſh'd the Feet of Twelve Pilgrims; and that Cardinal Ludoviſio, entertain'd Nine Thouſand of theſe Devotees at once, with a very Magnificent Feaſt. They ſay alſo, That the Pope will get this Year Two Millions of Sequins, by the Reſort of Pilgrims to that City.

The King of Denmark's Reſident at this Court, has received a Letter, which Certifies him, that his Maſter has declar'd Prince Chriſtian his Son, Succeſſor in the Throne.

They

They talk alſo, of a Marriage lately Solemniz'd between Charles, a German Count, and Charlotte, Siſter to the Lantgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel.

But that which moſt takes up Mens Ears, and employs their Tongues and Thoughts, are the Civil Wars of this Kingdom; which is all in a Flame, by Occaſion of the Impriſonment of the Prince of Conde, and his Brothers. The Citizens of Paris are very jocund, at the repeated News of the King's ill Succeſs: For, they wiſh not well to his Arms, whilſt employed againſt the Malecontents.

Illuſtrious Old Grandee, I wiſh thee the Years of Neſtor, and thoſe Calculated by Full Moons of Proſperity. But I pray Heaven avert from thee, ſome of his Moments; wherein, they ſay, he was tormented with the Gout, as I am at this Inſtant. It is a Pain hardly to be ſupported.

LETTER

LETTER VII.

To the ſame.

BY the God whom I Adore, and by his Shadow, I ſwear, There is no Diſloyalty in Mahmut: Yet his Life is full of Temptations and Perils. The Box of Letters I mention'd in my Laſt, is irrecoverably gone, and laid up in the Bowels of the Earth; if we may believe the Confeſſion of a Man, every Angle of whoſe Heart, has been ſearch'd with exquiſite Torments, even to Death.

Eliachim's Slave, the Negro whom I ſpoke of, miſtook that Box, for one very like it, out of which he had often ſeen his Maſter take Jewels: For, this is the particular Merchandiſe of that Jew. And the Weight of each was not ſo Unequal, as to rectify his Error. Lucre tempted him, and the deſire of Liberty. Whilſt the Darkneſs (for he committed the Villany before Sun-riſing) and his own Guilty Fears, conſpir'd to baffle his intended Theft. The Boxes ſtood together (ſo Careful was Eliachim of the Sublime Secrets, as not to venture 'em in a Place leſs ſecure, than that of his Jewels) and the Villain haſty to be gone, and confounded for want of Light, took up that wherein were the Writings, inſtead of his deſign'd Prey, the Jewels. He went directly into the Fields, purpoſing to bury this ſuppos'd Treaſure in the Earth, in ſome private Place, where he might take it forth at Diſcretion. But firſt opening the Box, to ſupply himſelf with ſuch Stones as he thought would be unqueſtionable Pawns for Mony, to anſwer his preſent Neceſſities, that ſo he might the better provide for his Concealment; he was aſtoniſh'd, and his Heart became like Lead, when he found Nothing but Papers, full of Characters, to which he was wholly a Stranger. A Thouſand Reſolutions preſented themſelves to him, in that Agony of his Mind, and he knew not which to fix on. Sometimes he thought to carry the Box back again as he found it; and ſince his Deſign had been thus ſtrangely baulked, to Content himſelf till another Opportunity. But then he conſider'd, 'twas too late to return before his Maſter would miſs both his Slave and Box; for the Sun was now far advanced in our Hemiſphere, and Eliachim is an early Riſer. In a Word, therefore he thought it the ſafeſt Way, to bury it in the Ground, as he firſt intended had it been the Box of Jewels, and ſo ſhift for himſelf. Propoſing to himſelf this Advantage, in hiding the Papers in a ſecure Place, That if they were of Value, he might at any Time make Compoſition with his Maſter, by diſcovering where they were.

All that I have here related, is drawn from his own Mouth in the midſt of Tortures. For Eliachim ſoon heard of his Fugitive Negro, who was ſeiz'd on the Rode to Lyons by ſome Correſpondents of this Jew. Who having having Intelligence of it, took Horſe immediately, and went to the Place. He did not think it ſafe to make a publick Buſineſs of it, or to arraign him before the appointed Judges of the Country; But relying on the Juſtice of his Cauſe, and the Right of a Maſter, he privately put him to Tortures of divers Kinds, in a Houſe where he cou'd command any Thing.

The ſtout African, at firſt deny'd that he had medl'd with any Box; ſaying, he eſcap'd purely for the Sake of Liberty. But when a Succeſſion of divers Torments had quite overthrown his Conſtancy, he confeſſed all that I have already related. Eliachim ſtill ſuſpecting worſe, and that he only fram'd this as a plauſible Story to be freed from, or at leaſt to reſpite the Pains he ſuffered, caus'd ſharp Thorns to be thruſt under the Nails of his Fingers and Toes; believing, that the Extremity of ſo ſenſible a Pain, wou'd extort the true Secret from him. But he cou'd get Nothing elſe from the poor excruciated Negro, though now almoſt ready to expire, than that he had hid the Box under-Ground in a certain Corner of a Field, out of the City: To which he knew not how to direct Eliachim, but promis'd to ſhew it him if he wou'd carry him alive to Paris.

This was no hard Task to perform, in the Opinion of the Jew; it being but a Days-Journey to this City, from the Place where they then were. But he was deceived in his Hopes; and now all the Applications and Cordials they cou'd uſe, came too late: For, that very Night, the Negro breath'd out his Soul.

However,

However, when Eliachim came to Paris, he follow'd the Directions of his dead Slave as well as he cou'd, in ſearching every Corner of the Fields on that Side of the City, where this Black had been ſeen to go out. But all to no Purpoſe. He cou'd find nothing; nor have we any Hopes, ever to ſee that Box again. Yet I have many Qualms of Fear, leſt ſome Time or other it ſhould come to Light, to our Diſadvantage and Ruin.

I deſire thy Inſtructions, Sage Governour of the Capital City, how I ſhall deport my ſelf, if it be my Lot to be diſcover'd. As to the Remaining Box, which has in it the Tranſcripts of my own Diſpatches, I have taken it Home to my Lodging. Believing it will be as ſafe here, as in the Houſe of Eliachim; ſince that faithful Jew, is no more exempted from Contingencies, than my ſelf: And I have no Servant to betray me.

This Kingdom abounds at preſent, in Treaſons and Rebellions. The French ſpare not to maſſacre one another, for the Sake of a Paſſion: While the Spaniards make their Advantages of theſe Inteſtine Feuds. For, under Pretence of aſſiſting the Princes of the Blood, they get Footing in Picardy, from whence it will not be eaſy to expel them. Leopold, Arch-Duke of Auſtria, is at the Head of the Spaniſh Army; and has taken ſeveral Towns, belonging to the French King.

When the Quarrels of theſe Infidels will end, I am not ſollicitous; my Thoughts being ever taken up, in the Service which I owe to the Empire of True Believers. I can-

I cannot bid thee Adieu, Illuſtrious Kaimacham, till I have aſſur'd thee, I am macerated with Zeal for the Grand Signior.

Paris, 23d of the 9th. Moon,
of the Year 1650.

LETTER VIII.

To Solyman Kuſlir Aga, Prince of the Black Eunuchs.

AFter I had perus'd thy Diſpatch, wherewith thou haſt honoured the Slave Mahmut; as I was full of Joy for the continued Demonſtrations of thy Friendſhip and Protection, ſo my Breaſt conceiv'd an Indignation at the Affront, which has been offer'd to the Sublime Port by the Cham of the Tartars, in preſuming to demand the Tutelage of our Auguſt Emperor. It is an Indignity to the Miniſters of Supreme Juſtice and Honour, Lights of the Imperial Divan, to whom is committed the Cognizance of all Human Events; The Illuſtrious Vizirs, who manage the Affairs of the Mighty and Invincible Sultan Mahomet, whoſe Throne may God fortify, till the Moon ſhall no more appear in the Heavens.

Thoſe People have been ever thirſty of Rule, and 'tis number'd among the Vertues of their Anceſtors, that they enlarg'd their Dominions by by the keen Edge of their Swords. But in all the Regiſters and Archives of the Empire, it has not been found, that any of that Nation challeng'd a Right to Govern our Sultans though during their Minority. It is ſufficient, That they ſhall have the Honour (according to the Ancient Capitulations) to ſucceed in the Throne of the Oſman Princes, if ever that Sacred Line ſhou'd be extinct. Which God avert, till the Final Conſummation.

It is a Wonder, they demanded not alſo his Royal Brothers, the other Sons of Sultan Ibrahim; that ſo they might at one Blow, cut off the whole Oſman Race, and take Poſſeſſion of the Vacant Throne.

I have not heard any Thing theſe many Moons, what is become of thoſe High-born Infants; whether they are alive, or ſacrific'd to the Jealouſie of the Sultan, as has been the Cuſtom. Here are various flying Reports concerning them. Some ſay, that thou haſt convey'd away Sultan Achmet, and that he is privately Educated in the Houſe of a certain Georgian. The Bleſſing of Mahomet be upon thee, and refreſh thy Heart, if thou haſt taken this Care to preſerve the Life of an Oſman Prince, which is more precious than a Hundred Thouſand of Common Birth.

As for Solyman and the Reſt of that Sublime Race, the French give 'em over for loſt; And I cannot contradict 'em, for want of true Intelligence. Beſides, I have Reaſon to fear it is too true: In Regard it has been the cruel Practice of all, or moſt of our late Emperors, either either to ſlaughter their Brethren as ſoon as they aſcend the Throne, or to put 'em to a more lingring Death and Martyrdom in a Priſon.

'Tis true indeed, our preſent Sovereign is not yet arriv'd to thoſe Years, wherein Children commonly loſe their Native Innocence. I believe, he ſuſpects none of his Brethren, nor harbours any unkind Thoughts againſt their Lives. Yet Cruelty may be inſinuated into his Tender Years, by the Artifices of his Mother; eſpecially againſt thoſe of his Father's Blood, that did not alſo partake of hers. For Sultan Ibrahim, thou know'ſt, had Children by other Women, beſide the Sultana Valede.

The Malteſes think they have one of theſe Royal Infants in their Poſſeſſion: Thou know-eſt the whole Story of thy Predeceſſor's Voyage toward Egypt with his Beautiful Slave and her Son, whom theſe Infidels honour as the Off-ſpring of the Grand Signior. Thou art not Ignorant alſo, that this Infant, with his Mother were Baniſh'd, out of Jealouſie; by the Order of Her who bore in her Womb Sultan Mahomet, our Glorious Sovereign. The Remembrance of which makes me tremble, for the Sake of the Young Princes, if there be any yet remaining alive. It is in thy Power to certify me, and in doing ſo thou wilt rid me of much Anxiety.

I am but a Slave of the Slaves who ſerve the Grand Signior; and it is not decent for me to deſcant on the Actions of our moſt Abſolute Monarch, whoſe Will is not to be controul'd.

But

But I am ſtill a Man, and have ſome Share of Humanity and Reaſon. Thou alſo art my particular Friend, and wilt permit me to diſcourſe with Freedom. Was it not a Bloody Feaſt, to which our King's Great Grandfather, Mahomet III. invited Nineteen of his Brethren, on the Day of his Inauguration? Was it not a cruel Act, to cauſe thoſe Royal Gueſts, in whoſe Veins ran the Blood of his Own Father, to be ſtrangled, before they departed from his Table? No leſs Inhuman was it of Mahomet, the late Vizir Azem, to guide the Hand of this our Preſent Sovereign, when but Six Years Old, and incapable of knowing what he did, to ſign a Warrant for the Execution of his Father. Well may the Nazarenes call us Barbarians, when they contemplate the Empire of the Muſſulmans, ſupported by ſuch Unnatural Methods.

Thou that haſt the Superlative Honour, of being the Immediate Guardian of our Young Emperour, wilt pardon the Liberty I take. Aſcribe all to the Force of my Zeal and Loyalty. Thou art Valiant and Wiſe. Protect thy Charge, as the Chryſtal of thine Eyes, which thou wilt not ſuffer to be hurt by the Duſt of the Streets.

Paris, 14th, of the 10th. Moon,
of the Year 1650.

LETTER

LETTER IX.

To Gnet Oglou.

NOtwithſtanding all my Philoſophy, I have not Command enough of my Paſſion, to conceal it from thee, who haſt always been the Partaker of my Unequal Fortunes. What ever Magnanimity of Spirit I pretended to formerly in my Sickneſs, 'tis at preſent overcome by the Deſire of Eaſe. At that Time, I remember, ſome Stoical Conſiderations made me induſtriouſly hide from thee the tormenting Pains I felt. I endeavoured to diſguiſe my Sufferings, and to paint my Miſery in ſuch Colours, that it could hardly be diſtinguiſhed from Happineſs. But now I have not Courage enough, to hide from thee my Fears and Apprehenſions: And all Seneca's Morals, are too little to hinder me, from complaining of the Uncertainty that we daily experience in Human Affairs. This is a Theme ſo Popular, that were not my particular Misfortunes very preſſing, 'twould make me ſick to ſay any Thing on a Subject, that has been in every Man's mouth, ſince the Time that our Firſt Father appear'd among the Trees. Therefore thou may'ſt be aſſured, I am not going about to make a Declamation, or play the Orator; to expatiate and make large Deſcants, on the Inſtability of all Things. What I have to ſay, referrs to my ſelf, and no body elſe, ſave ſave to thoſe who are the Occaſion of my Melancholy.

In the 10th. Moon of the laſt Year, I ſent a Letter to Kenan Baſſa, the New Haſnadar-Baſſy. I have a Copy of it by me, as I always retain of whatever Diſpatches I ſend to the Sublime Port, whether to the Publick Miniſters, or my Private Friends.

I have perus'd this Letter ſeveral Times within theſe Eight and Forty Hours, and can find no juſt Ground of Offence, which that Grandee cou'd take thereat: Unleſs he was angry with me, for deſiring him to be careful in tranſmitting my Money. As for the Reſt, I only obey'd the particular Inſtructions, I receiv'd from Mahomet the late Vizir Azem: Who commanded me not to ſpare the Greateſt Miniſter of the Port, if I had reaſon either to counſel or to reprehend him. For, ſaid he in his Letter, To this End art thou plac'd at ſuch a Diſtance, that beſides the Service thou doſt our Sovereign in diſcloſing the Secrets of the Infidels, thou mayſt alſo be free to write, whatever thou thinkeſt will conduce to his Intereſt, without ſtanding in Fear of the Revenge of the Grandees. Theſe were the very Words, of the Prime Miniſter of the Ottoman Empire.

Now I only told him of ſome Miſcarriages in his Predeceſſors, warning him to be wary in his Station. Either he was offended at this Freedom I took, or becauſe I preſum'd to adviſe him how to order my Bills. Be it which it will, I have a ſevere Reprimand from the Reis Effendi, whom I have the greateſt Reaſon in the World, to eſteem my Friend.

It wou'd never have vex'd me, had he wrote plainly, and not diſguiſed his Sentiments. But all was obſcure, ſaving One blunt Expreſſion, which convinc'd me, That the real Ground of all this Anger was my Letter to Kenan, wherein I deſir'd his Care as to my Money.

Can that Miniſter blame me, for being apprehenſive of Want in a Foreign Country, a Region of Infidels, where I have no other Commerce, but with Courtiers and Strangers; where if I ſhould be in the leaſt ſuſpected, they wou'd preſently put me in Priſon, which wou'd hazard a Diſcovery of the Sublime Secrets? Does he not know, That Money commands all Things; and that the Greateſt Potentates, obey the Power of Gold? It cannot be imagin'd, but that a Man in my Poſt, has a Thouſand preſſing Occaſions for Money, which 'tis troubleſom to expreſs. And I have had very wrong Notions of my Employment, if I deſerve on this Account, to be reprov'd and threatn'd with ſuch Politick Circumlocutions: For, the Secretary charges me, with Unwillingneſs to continue in the Service of the Ever Happy Port: As if he thought my Fidelity were corrupted, or that I had an Inclination to the Nazarene Intereſt.

I tell thee, my Gnet, Perfidy I ever abhorr'd. This appears to me, the moſt terrible and odious of all Vices. I cou'd bear the Guilt and Reproach of a great many Crimes, which have leſs of Malice in their Conſtitution. I am not aſhamed of many Venial Frailties, which which I daily commit, though the Law is ſevere againſt them. But, cou'd any Man accuſe me of Wilful Treachery, and Ingratitude, I wou'd pray inſtantly, That the Luminaries of Heaven might be extinguiſh'd, and that no Terrene Subſtance, might henceforth have in it the leaſt Potential Light: That ſo I might neither be capable of ſeeing my ſelf, or of being expos'd to the Eyes of Others. And the better to eſcape the Confuſion, which wou'd attend that Horrid Guilt, I would not only avoid Human Society, but if it were poſſible, I wou'd run away from my ſelf.

After all this, methinks ſuch a Temper need not be ſuſpected, as averſe from the Intereſt, to which he has ſo ſolemnly ſworn.

I wou'd not have troubled thee with the News of any other Affliction; but, to be ſuſpected of what I never was Guilty of, and to be menac'd in dark Myſterious Terms, not by an Enemy, but by my Friend, and one who has in his Keeping the Immortal Records of my Zeal and Integrity; This cuts me to the Heart. And I had no other Way to eaſe my ſelf, but by venting my Anguiſh to thee.

If any of the Miniſters will charge me with Weakneſs, or want of Ability to act in this Station, I ſhould have no Reaſon to repine: Since none of them can think ſo meanly of Mahmut, as he does of himſelf. I boaſt of Nothing, but a Loyalty to my Truſt, incapable of being corrupted.

But I forget that I am a Muſſulman, and therefore ought to be reſig'd to the Will of Heaven in all Things, without Complaint or Murmur. Beſides I am infinitely oblig'd, in many Regards, to the Reis Effendi; and therefore, he may be allow'd to take his own Advantages. Perhaps his Reproofs may be Juſt, and 'tis my own Peeviſhneſs that hinders me from diſcerning it. However, I cou'd wiſh he wou'd henceforth expreſs his Reſentments with leſs Obſcurity, and not give me Grounds to apprehend the Loſs of his Friendſhip.

For, where I once love, I hate a Change. And if thou beeſt of the ſame Mind, We Two ſhall continue our Friendſhip, to the Other Side of the Grave.

LETTER

LETTER X.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

IF thou wilt permit me to learn Something from Husbandmen, They ſay, 'tis not profitable to plow the Fields whoſe barren Glebe brings forth Nothing but Briars and Thorns. Such are the Grounds of Paſſion and Anger among Friends. Let 'em lie Fallow for ever. Perhaps, thou wilt call it Preſumption in me, to challenge ſuch a Relation between us. Or, if thou owneſt the Title of a Friend, thou wilt claim a Right to reprove me. Be it how it will, Reproofs make the beſt Impreſſion, when they are given with Mildneſs and Moderation. Eſpecially they ought not to be founded on a Miſtake, or falſe Apprehenſion. For they appear like Arrows diſcharg'd in the Dark, which being ſhot at Random, may by giving an undeſerved Wound, make an Enemy of a Friend, or at leaſt render a Friend ſuſpected to be an Enemy.

But I tell thee, I will not blow up the Embers of a Fire, whoſe Flame is extinguiſh'd long ago, and whereof by this Time, I hope, there remains not the leaſt Smoak. I never lov'd to add Fuel in ſuch Caſes: Otherwiſe had I return'd an Anſwer to thy angry Letter, in the Heat of my Reſentments, I might have play'd the Incendiary: For I had both Matter enough, and Paſſion ſufficient, to ventilate the already kindled Sparks. And, of this, I know thou art ſenſible.

Well! to make the beſt Conſtruction of it: The Haſnadarbaſſy was affronted, I believe, at the Freedom I took in adviſing him; not knowing that I had Poſitive Orders to do ſo, even to the Firſt Miniſter of State, if I ſaw Occaſion. And to vent his Choler, he miſrepreſented the Buſineſs to thee, hoping by thy Means, to awe me into a fawning Acknowledgment of my ſuppoſed Crime. If this was thy Intention in writing that ſharp Letter, I ſmile at his Miſtake; but am ſorry for thine, becauſe I eſteem thee my Friend. 'Twas but an Overſight in you both; and ſo let it paſs.

Thy Friendſhip I court, and refuſe not his, nor that of any Officer of the Seraglio. I honor all the Baſſa's and Miniſters of the Imperial Port: I ſhew to every one the Reſpect that is due to his Quality: But I am commanded to write with Freedom to all, and not to ſpeak, as if I had the Bearded Head of a Barly-Stalk on my Tongue, which is apt to ſlip down a Man's Throat, and threatens to choak him that ſpeaks whilſt it is in his Mouth. This Charge I firſt receiv'd from the late Vizir Azem, Mahomet, and it has been ſince renew'd with freſh Inſtructions from others of Great Authority. They all tell me with much Aſſurance, That one chief End of my being plac'd here is, that being out of the Limits of the Ottoman Empire, yet holding a conſtant Intelligence, I may freely and withou Fear, reprove the Vices and encourage the Virtues of the Greateſt Governors and Princes among the Muſſulmans. Nay, I am threat'ned with Puniſhment and the Sultan's Diſpleaſure, if I neglect any Opportunity of this Nature, or appear Partial and Timorous in my Reprehenſions.

For, it ſeems, this is judged the moſt ready and effectual Method, to reform the Corruptions that are crept into Court, Camp and City: Since every Man is oblig'd to communicate the Letters which he receives from me: And they are all Regiſtred by thy Care: Whereby the Grandees are compell'd, either to live within the Limits of Juſtice, and their Duty, or elſe to be the Diſcoverers of their own Faults: Which will unvoidably bring them into Diſgrace, if not the Loſs of their Liberty and Lives; or at leaſt put them to the Expence of coſtly Preſents, to make their Atonement. And thou knoweſt, ſome Men would almoſt as willingly part with their Lives, as their Money, which is their God.

After all this, I hope thou wilt not be diſpleaſed, if I perform my Duty. It is not for me to be frighted with Menaces, or ſoftned with Bribes. My Integrity is Proof againſt the Pride of the one, and Baſeneſs of the other. Yet I have great eſteem for the Treaſurer and thee, with other Miniſters who are my Friends. I could, to ſerve ſuch, freely hazard my Liberty, Fortune and any Thing but my Honour, which I value at a far higher Rate than my Life.

Thou may'ſt Regiſter it for a Truth, That an Engliſh Embaſſador was in the 6th. Moon of this Year, murder'd by Villains in his Chamber at Madrid, the Capital City of Spain. There has been alſo a Great Battle fought in Scotland, between the Army of that Nation, who maintain their King's Intereſt, and the Forces of the New Engliſh Common-wealth; wherein the Latter obtain'd a Signal Victory, having kill'd Three Thouſand on the Spot, taken Nine Thouſand Priſoners, Fifteen Thouſand Arms, Two Hundred Enſigns, and all their Cannon and Baggage. Theſe are Proſperous Beginnings of that Republick, and redound much to the Honour of the Engliſh General, Oliver, whom every Body extols for a Gallant Man. And I can aſſure thee, theſe Weſtern Nations are not barren of Hero's.

Principal Scribe of the Muſſulmans, I wiſh thy Heart may be a Tranſcript of the Beſt Copies.

LETTER

LETTER XI.

To Solyman Aga, Principal Chamberlain of the Womens Apartments in the Seraglio.

THeſe Tartars, of whom I ſpake to thee in my laſt, are a ſtrange Sort of People in their Manner of Life. But we muſt not cenſure 'em, becauſe we are of Kin. I ſpeak not of my ſelf: For, though I am an Arab, yet the greateſt part of thoſe who ſerve in the Armies of the Grand Signior, are deſcended from the Crims. I mean, the Spahi's and Timariots. Thou know'ſt the Originals of theſe Military Orders, and that they are more Honourable than the Janizaries; who being Strangers by Blood, are brought up to the Lure of the Seraglio. They know neither Father nor Mother, (I ſpeak of the Tributary Youths) nor have they any Partial Fondneſs for their Native Country. They are Educated in a perfect Reſignation to the Grand Signior, and his Chief Miniſters: Yet often diſobey both, and not ſeldom put 'em in Hazard of their Lives. How many Vizirs, have been ſacrificed to a cunning Janizar-Aga; who to prevent his own Ruin, has tempted thoſe under his Command to Mutiny, and accept of no Atonement for their pretended Grievances, leſs than the Life of the Firſt Deputy. The Rigid Fate of Sultan Oſman, Uncle to our preſent Sovereign, will not be forgot by thoſe who love the Ottoman Family better than theſe Baſtard Hectors. Shall the Empire of True Believers, be ruin'd by the Renagades? Beſides, their Diſcipline is extreamly corrupted; they marry, and follow Mechanick Trades, repugnant to the Auſtere Manners of the Primitive Guards, who were wholly attentive to Martial Exerciſes.

Were this to come to the Hands of a Janizary, he would curſe me to the Pains which have neither Medium nor End. Yet I had once a Friend of that Order, Caſſim Haly, the Chief Aga, a brave Man, and of the ſame Sentiments as my ſelf. He ſought to reform that Diſorderly Militia, but was oppos'd by the Wiſe Men in Power. He wou'd freely have ſacrific'd his own Grandeur and Intereſt, for the Good of the Muſſulman Empire; but was over-aw'd by thoſe, who had no other Intereſt, but in its Ruin.

Thou know'ſt who I mean: Neither am I a Stranger to the Heroick Bravery of the Faithful Solyman, when he bearded the Boſtangi Aga on that Account. That Gardiner was of the Faction, being the Son of a Janizary, and train'd up in all the Practices of the Seditious. It makes me aſham'd, when I hear the Infidels upbraid the Wiſeſt of the Wiſe, the Supreme Monarch on Earth with Folly, for permitting this Inſolent and Mutinous Soldiery to continue in tthe Empire. And I tremble to think, That one Time or other, the Renown'd Off-spring of Ertogriel, will owe its Ruin and Cataſtrophe, to theſe Diſloyal Vipers, whom it cheriſhes in the Seraglio.

Much more aſſur'd is the French King, of his Guards of Switzers; whoſe Fidelity was never ſtain'd, with the leaſt Infamous Brand of Perfidiouſneſs, in taking up Arms againſt their Maſter whoſe Bread they eat. Theſe are Mercenary Soldiers, who travel out of their Native Country, to ſerve Foreign Princes; and will ſhed the laſt drop of their Blood, rather than betray their Truſt. Therefore they are admitted into the Palaces, and nigh the Bed-Chambers of the Pope and the King of France, with full Confidence of their Valour and Integrity.

As for their Country, it is barren and poor, conſiſting chiefly of Rocks and Deſarts: Which occaſions the Youth, who are generally very ſtrong and hardy, to ſeek their Subſiſtence Abroad, by ſerving in the Guards and Armies of Neighbouring Monarchs and States.

Some Regiments of the Switzers, now ſerve in the Wars of Candy, under the Standard of Venice.

There are Veſſels arriv'd lately in ſome of the French Harbours, which bring News of the Ill Succeſs of our Arms in the Siege of Candia, the Chief City of that Iſland. They talk, as if above Two Thouſand Muſſulmans were blown up in the Ninth Moon; and that Chuſaein Baſſa, diſcourag'd by this Loſs and with the Inconveniences of the approaching Winter, was forc'd to raiſe the Siege, in the Moon of October.

The French magnify the Valour of the Knights of Malta, who ſignaliz'd themſelves by many brave Actions, during this Siege. And if all be true, that is related of theſe Chriſtian Champions, we cannot in common Juſtice deny 'em their due Character, and number ſome of them at leaſt among the Hero's.

Otherwiſe, we ſhou'd come ſhort of theſe Weſtern Nazarenes in Generoſity, who with no leſs honourable Expreſſions, extol the repeated Courage, and invincible Conſtancy of the Illuſtrious Chuſaein, and the Alacrity of all the Muſſulman Soldiers, in the Service of our Great Maſter.

Yet they cannot forbear reflecting on the Cowardice of the Janizaries; who after that fatal Blow, had they ſtoutly maintain'd their other Poſts, that brave Baſſa wou'd not ſo ſoon have quitted the Siege of this Important Place.

As for other News, I have little to acquaint thee with, ſave a ſeeming Calm at preſent in this Kingdom of France, which has for the greateſt Part of the Year, been haraſs'd with Civil Diſcords and Slaughters. Bourdeaux, the Chief City, which held out againſt the King, is now reduc'd to Obedience, the pacify'd Monarch retired, and an Appearance of Peace.

The Queen of Sueden, we hear, was ſolemnly Crowned in the Tenth Moon of the laſt Year,

Year, having declar'd for her Succeſſor, Caro-lus Guſtavus, Prince-Palatine, and her Cou-ſin.

In the ſame Moon, died the Prince of O-range; and ſoon after, the Count d' Avaux, a French-Grandee, and Miniſter of State.

In the mean Time, I rejoyce to hear, that my old Friends are alive and Flouriſhing; and, that the Knot is not looſened, which was tyed in our Youth. May it continue firm, to the Day of the Earthquake, and to a Term Unlimited.

Paris, the 29th. of the 1ſt. Moon,
of the Year 1651.

LETER XII.

To Kiſur Dramelec, Secretary of the Nazarene Affairs at the Port.

IN the Name of God and his Prophet, what Occaſion hadſt thou to ſend me ſuch an an-gry Letter; Thou that art thy ſelf but a Slave, as I am, to the Slaves of him, whoſe Throne is above the Flight of the Eagle! Doſt thou think to frighten Mahmut into a ſordid Com-pliance with thy Ambition, whom Nothing can terrify, ſo long as he preſerves himſelf free from any Stain of Diſloyalty? I tell thee, adviſe thee, to forbear threatning. It is a Reflection on thy Prudence, to menace a Man who has no other Reſentments of thy Paſſion, than to own himſelf oblig'd to thee, for ſo open a Diſcovery of it. Would'ſt have the very Spleen of my Humour? I ſmile at thee. Thou haſt made me as Jocund as Democritus. If thou know'ſt not who I mean; He was a pleaſant ſort of a Philoſopher, to whom all Human Actions, were Objects of Mirth. There was another whining Sage, that perpetually wept. The moſt Comical Paſſages, and ſuch as mov'd all Men to Laughter, drew Floods of Tears from his Eyes. His Name was Heraclitus. It is hard to determine, which of theſe Two was in the Right. But I think I am not much in the Wrong, to be a little pleaſant with thee. Perhaps, it may put thee into a better Humour. However, I would not have thee be diſpleas'd with thy ſelf, for being of ſo peeviſh a Diſpoſition. 'Tis obſerv'd, That Paſſionate Men are always beſt Natur'd, and free from ſecret Malice. Choler is as neceſſary as our Blood. Without the Latter, we cou'd not live; and if we were void of the Former, our Lives wou'd be as Unactive, as that of Snails and Oyſters. We ſhou'd be abſolute Drones.

I'm

Hippocrates, the famous Phyſician, ſays This Complexion is the moſt Noble of all the Four, transforming Men to Heroes, and refining our Earthly Mold, to a Conſtitution like that of the Immortal Gods; whoſe Bodies, according to the Poets, conſiſt wholly of an Ethereal Flame. There-

I'm another Achilles, Invulnerable all over, ſave the Soles of my Feet, which are the Emblems of our moſt tender Affections. There thou may'ſt wound me, with the ſoft Arrows of pretended Friendſhip. But if once thou appeareſt, with the Naked Face of an Enemy, I'm preſently on my Guard.

Thou accuſeſt me of many Crimes, whereof I was never Guilty, loadeſt me with a Thouſand undeſerved Reproaches, and all to vent thy Choler: Threatning me with Revenge, becauſe I once excus'd the Lateneſs of my Addreſs to Minezim Aluph Baſſa, then newly Veſted by our Munificent Sultan, by laying the Blame on the Badneſs of the Ways, or the Inſolence of Soldiers by whom the Poſts are often intercepted in Time of War: or, in Fine, on thy Neglect in not ſupplying me with more early Intelligence. Wherein 'tis eaſy to diſcern, That thou wert the laſt I wou'd accuſe to that Miniſter, though thou wert Principally in the Fault. For I was afterwards inform'd, that the Poſts were neither retarded by any Impaſſable Roads, or ſtopp'd by the Orders of Military Men, but arriv'd here at their accuſtom'd Seaſons. Wherefore thou haſt no Reaſon to be offended at me, unleſs it be for the Shortneſs of my Accuſation, and that it was defective in Malice.

Thou wouldſt take it ill, if in my own Defence I ſhould complain to the Vizir Azem, of thy frequent Neglects in this Kind. But I ſcorn to vindicate my ſelf, at the Price of another Man's Diſgrace and Peril. Only I adviſe

Therefore be not diſcouraged, neither repine at a Temper, which ranks thee among thoſe, to whom Sacrifices are made. On the other Side, take it not amiſs from Mahmut, if he tells thee, he has not Devotion enough, to become thy Voluntary Victim.

Yet if I cannot be ſo obſequious as to throw my ſelf away, by acknowledging Crimes wherein I was never concerned, and for which I have a Natural Abhorrence; reſt ſatisfy'd at leaſt, That I will ſerve thee as far as I can, without entrenching on the Duty I owe to the Grand Signior. And be aſſured, I will do thee no Harm, ſo long as thou obſerveſt that Rule.

In fine, I adviſe thee to order thy Steps like a Man that is walking in the Bogs of Egypt, where if he obſerve the Track of thoſe who have gone before him, he may be ſafe; but if his Foot ſlips, he Sinks in the Mire. Such is the Life of Courtiers.

LETTER

LETTER XIII.

To Minezim Aluph, Baſſa.

IN the Beginning of the laſt Year I ſent thee a Diſpatch, wherein I acquainted thee with the Impriſonment of Three Princes of the Royal Blood of France. Now thou ſhalt receive the News of their Liberty.

They were releas'd by an Order from the King, on the 13th Day of this Moon, and arriv'd in this City on the 16th, which was Yeſterday, attended by a numerous Cavalcade, conſiſting of ſome Princes, divers of the Nobility and Gentry, and one wou'd think, of Half the Citizens of Paris. Even thoſe who triumph'd laſt Year, and made Bonfires for their Confinement; Yeſterday throng'd out of the City, to welcome them Home with Acclamations of Joy, and to congratulate their Releaſe. So fickle and inconſtant a Thing is the Multitude, driven hither and thither, with every Artificial Declaration of Stateſmen or Pretence of Faction.

But there were divers Princes and Noblemen, who from the Firſt Hour of their being ſeiz'd, reſolv'd not to leave a Stone unturn'd to procure their Freedom. The Grandees that were their Friends, retir'd to their Governments, and rais'd Rebellions in the Provinces. All the Kingdom was haraſs'd with Civil Wars. The Parliaments decreed againſt the

the Court: And there wanted not Cabals of Seditious Courtiers, even in the Palace of the King, to undermine the Royal Authority; which the Cardinal Miniſter thought to eſtabliſh, by the Impriſonment of the Princes. In all Places, the King's Intereſt ran Retrograde.

Thou wilt not wonder at this when thou ſhalt know, that the Princes of France are not Slaves to the King, like the Baſſa's of the moſt Serene Empire, who owe all their Greatneſs, to the ſole Favour of our Munificent Sultans. Theſe Princes enjoy all that and more by Inheritance, which our Grandees acquire only by their Merits, and the Smiles of their Sovereign. Hence it is, that their Intereſt is riveted in the Hearts of the People, who revere the Blood Royal, in whatſoever Channel it runs.

Therefore thinking Men blame the Cardinal's Conduct in this Affair; ſaying, There was neither Juſtice nor Policy in it. Indeed, if a Man's Wit is to be meaſur'd by the Succeſs of his Contrivances, the Cenſure of theſe People is true. For the Cardinal ſeems to have made a Trap for himſelf.

Aſſoon as he perceiv'd the King was prevail'd on by the Importunity of his Uncle, the Duke of Orleans, and the Parliament of Paris, to releaſe the Princes, and that they had at the ſame Time earneſtly begg'd of him, that this Miniſter might be remov'd from the Court; he ſuddenly pack'd up his Moveables, and with-drew privately towards the Place, where the Princes ces were Confin'd: Hoping, that though he had loſt his Firſt Point, yet he might make an indifferent After-Game, by going in Perſon to the Royal Priſoners, and aſſuring them, 'twas to him they ow'd their Releaſe; ſince it was in his Power to carry 'em away with him, as alſo thoſe who brought 'em the King's Mandate. For, he travell'd not without a conſiderable Guard.

'Tis ſaid, the Princes receiv'd him with ſeeming Compliments and Addreſſes of Civility; promiſing their Friendſhip to the Cardinal, now a Voluntary Exile, and in a worſe Condition than themſelves.

It is very ſtrange that ſo great a Miniſter, who inherited all that Abſolute Power, which his Predeceſſor Richlieu had at this Court, ſhould thus on a Sudden abandon his Fortune. But it is thought, he is not gone to pick Straws.

However, he has by this timely Flight, avoided the Diſpleaſure of ſeeing himſelf compell'd to depart by an Arreſt of Parliament, which was publiſhed within Two Days after he was gone; commanding him to depart the Kingdom, within Fifteen Days.

The Wiſe Miniſter, foreſaw this Diſgrace approaching, and therefore thought it more becoming his Honour, to depart of his own Accord: Having ſtill the Advantage, to reproach the State with Ingratitude, in that they have reduced to ſuch Streights, the Man by whoſe Auſpicions Conduct, France had been elevated to an Extraordinary Grandeur in Europe.

By

By this thou mayſt comprehend, Illuſtrious Baſſa, that there is no Stability in Human Greatneſs; but that the Wheels of a Courtier's Life, run through Unequal Tracks, often ſticking in the Mire of the Valley, and not ſeldom threatning to overthrow a Man, and caſt him Headlong from the Precipice of a Mountain. Againſt theſe Inconſtant Turns of Fortune, I adviſe thee to be arm'd with Moderation; ſince no Man can avoid his Deſtiny.

Paris, 14th. of the 3d. Moon,
of the Year, 1651.

LETTER XIV.

To Iſouf, his Kinſman at Fez.

I Am glad to hear thou art alive. Thy Letter came in a good Hour; for I bear a true Affection to thoſe of my Blood, and have been particularly anxious for thee theſe many Years. The Sun has Nine Times meaſur'd the Twelve Signs of the Zodiack, ſince I receiv'd thy laſt Letter before this, or heard any News of thee. It ſeems, thou haſt travell'd a great Part of the Earth, during that Time.

'Twas kindly done of thee, to remember thy Sick Uncle's Requeſt, when thou wert at Aleppo, in making Oblations for his Health

to Sheigh Boubac, the Santone; and distributing Corban to the Poor, in Honour of Syntana Fissa.

Thou hast sent me a large and satisfactory Account of thy Observations in Asia: Yet I am sorry, thou hadst not Time to penetrate into the Religon and Secrets of the Indian Bramins. I am more ambitious, to pry into the Wisdom and Learning of those Philosophers, than into any other Species of Knowledge whatsoever. Methinks, 'tis pity the Records of so vast an Antiquity, shou'd be conceal'd from the Rest of the World, and only known to those Happy Priests. I protest, 'tis impossible for me to think of it without Envy. But perhaps, it is the Will of Heaven, to lock up those Mysteries in the Remotest Provinces of the East, as a Reward of their Constancy, in adhering to the Traditions of their Fathers, which know no Origin; and as a Reproach to all other Nations, who in Matters of Religion, have been Mutable as the Winds.

I have convers'd with several Jesuits and others, who have been in the Indies; but they seem to relate all things Partially, out of a Natural Aversion for the Manners of the East: And I knew not how to disprove'em till my Brother Pesteltihali undeceived me. He has also visited those Parts, and resided a considerable Time in China. It is a difficult Thing for a Traveller, to keep himself within the Bounds of Truth in his Relations; but, I believe, he has not exceeded. Thy Journal touches but lightly the Indian Affairs, not ha-having Leiſure, as thou telleſt me, to obſerve much. However, thou haſt made Amends in thy Relations of Perſia, Tartary, and the Land of the Curds.

I depend much on thy Promiſe of ſending me a Journal of thy Travels in Africk. To that Quarter of the World, I am much a Stranger; not having met with any Authentick Relation, of the Regions in the South.

It ſeems, thou haſt been in Æthiopia, Libya, Egypt; and, in Fine, all over the Torrid Zone.

Hiſtorians tell Wonderful Things of theſe Parts. Herodotus mentions a Sort of People in Africk, whoſe Bodies were more Venomous than Serpents. Theſe affronted once at the Winds, for driving the Sands of Libya into their Country, and filling up all their Wells and Streams, enter'd into a War againſt the Kingdom of Æolus; but the South Wind met 'em in their March, and bury'd 'em under Mountains of Duſt.

I do not repreſent this to thee as a Truth, tho' related by that Learn'd Grecian. Thou may'ſt repute it for a Fable, as I do. But let this Paſſage be a Hint, that I expect from thee none but ſolid Remarks.

It wou'd pleaſe me to be aſſur'd of one Thing, which perhaps thou haſt heard of when thou waſt in Barbary. Very credible Authors report, that when the Phœnicians were expell'd by the Iſraelites, and driven into this Corner of Africk, they ſet up Two Pillars of Marble, whereon they Engrav'd theſe Words,

as a Laſting Monument of their Expulſion, WE ARE A REMNANT OF THOSE, WHO FLED FROM THE FACE OF JOSUA, THE ROBBER, THE SON OF NUN.

The Firſt Invention of Ships, is by ſome aſcrib'd to theſe People, whom Neceſſity taught to ſeek Reſt on the Unquiet Ocean; ſince the more Turbulent Sons of Jacob, wou'd not permit them to enjoy any Repoſe on the Land, having haraſs'd 'em from one Place to another, till at length they drove 'em to the very Borders of the Earth. But, thou know'ſt, the Chineſes pretend to the Uſe of Ships, many Thouſand Years before this Depredation of the Iſraelites. Every Nation aims to be eſteem'd the moſt Ancient. And when there was formerly a Diſpute between the Egyptians and Scythians on this Point, it was adjuſted in Favour of the Latter; but the Chronologies of the Chineſe and Indians, far exceed all others in the World. For they ſeem to out-ſtrip Time it ſelf in Antiquity; at leaſt, they tranſcend the Common Date of the World's Creation.

I have heard a Traveller aſſert, That as he was journeying through the Deſarts of Lybia, he diſcover'd an Altar of Stone, with this Inſcription on it, in Grecian Characters, I POLYSTRATUS OF ATHENS, HAVE CONSECRATED THIS ALTAR, TO ALL THAT IS GOOD IN HEAVEN; AND IF THAT ALL BE BUT ONE, AS SOME SAY,

MAY

MAY THAT ONE ACCEPT MY VOWS.

I desire thee to inform me, Whether thou hast ever seen or heard of such an Altar, when thou wert in those Parts. You Travellers, must expect this Kind of Trouble from your Friends. Every Body is Naturally Inquisitive, and Desirous of Knowledge.

'Twill be acceptable also, to send me an Abstract of the Present State of Fez. I should be glad to hear of the Health of Abdel Melec Muli Omar, the Superiour of the Magnificent College in that City, built by Al' Habu Ennor, King of the Country. They say, it cost him Two Hundred and Forty Thousand Sequins.

'Tis added, That in Fez there is a Mosque near Half a League in Circuit: In which are as many Gates, as there be Days in the Revolution of a Moon. And that the Number of the Pillars which support it, is equal to the Year of the Hegira wherein it was Founded: being encompass'd also, by Seventeen High Minarets; besides Innumerable Domes and Terasses. Having also 900 Lamps burning in it by Night, and 300 Windows to let in the Light of the Day. The Revenue of this famous Mosque, is said to be 36500 Sequins a Year. They relate many other things of Fez, and the Provinces belonging to it. Of all which, I desire thee to send me a Distinct Account.

I had almost forgot one Passage, which have read in the Ancients, concerning a certain tain ſubtle African, whoſe Name was Pſaphon. This Man had train'd up a Parrot, to repeat very frequently theſe Words, Pſaphon is a Great God. When the Bird had perfectly learn'd his Leſſon, he let it looſe; which being accuſtom'd to a Domeſtick Life in a Cage, fled not preſently to the Fields, but perch'd on the Temple of the Town, where it was heard by the People, to utter the aforeſaid Sentence aloud, and very often. They, Ignorant of the Quality of Parrots, and led with Native Superſtition, eſteem'd it an Oracle from Heaven. Wherefore immediately flocking to the Houſe of Pſaphon, they offer'd Sacrifice to him, and in all Reſpects treated him as a Divinity.

Whether this Story be true or no, 'tis certain, Idolatry had no better Foundation, than Artifice and Lyes: Unleſs we ſhall conclude with the Poet, That Fear made the Firſt Gods in the World. Couſin, let there be a frequent Intercourſe between us. It will be profitable to thee and me.

LETTER XV.

To Kerker Haſſan, Baſſa.

'TIS a Cuſtom in the Court of Rome, that every Nation of the Weſt, has a Protector among the Cardinals there, who are Princes of the Roman Church. Such I eſteem thee, in the moſt Exalted Court of the Eaſt.

Arabia gave thee thy firſt Breath: But thy own Merits have lifted thee up to the Dignity of a Baſſa, a Prince of the Ottoman Empire, whoſe Limits far exceed thoſe of Modern, or even of Ancient Rome.

'Tis from hence, our Countrymen addreſs to thee, as to their Patron; uſing thy Power and Meditation with the Grand Signior, in all their Neceſſities.

Among the Reſt, wonder not that the humbleſt of thy Slaves, Mahmut, the Son of thy Father's Neighbour, falls at thy Feet, in a Time of great Diſtreſs; in the Agonies of his Spirit, the Hazard of his Fortune, and Peril of his Honour, which he values more than his Life.

I complain not of the many repeated Abuſes and Contempts I have received from ſome in the Seraglio, to whom it belongs not, to meddle with Things out of their Sphere, much leſs to diſcourage the Faithful Agents and Miſſioners of the Grand Signior. Yet the Perſecutions I have felt from their Hands, are ſuch as wou'd drive another Man leſs patient of Injuries, either to Revenge or Deſpair. They

They have vilify'd all my Conduct in this Station; reproach'd my beſt Actions, with the odious Characters of Imprudence and Diſloyalty; and miſrepreſented the ſmalleſt Peccadillo's (for which alſo, I have the Mufti's Diſpenſation) under the Ignominious Title of Infidelity and Atheiſm. In a Word, they thirſt after my Blood: Nothing will ſatisfy their greedy Malice, but my Life.

I never was afraid to die, ſince I perfectly underſtood what it is to live. Nor can I be fond of protecting my Breath, when my Great Maſter ſhall pleaſe to call for a Surrender of it, for whoſe Service only it was given me. But it would render the Scene of my Death Tragical, and ſtrew my Paſſage into the Other World with Thorns, to be ſent out of This, under the Notion of a Traytor, who have acted my Part, without a real Blemiſh.

Ikingi, that Learn'd Tutor of the Royal Pages, was the firſt that broach'd this Enmity againſt me; (for I have forgot the Prevarication of Shaſhim Iſtham, the Black Eunuch, ſince the Time he acknowledg'd his Fault with much Candor and Ingenuity.) 'Twas that Athenian Sophiſt, who debauch'd the Integrity of my Couſin Solyman; and perſwaded the Unwary Youth, to enter into a Conſpiracy againſt his Uncle. But I reprehended my Kinſman's Folly in one Letter; and his Anſwer, though late, convinc'd me, That he was not guilty of Malice, ſo much as of Raſhneſs and Credulity. I was extreamly oblig'd to the Kaimacham, for his Be-nignity and Friendſhip in this Affair. The good old Miniſter had a real Kindneſs for me, and took no ſmall Pains to penetrate into the Cauſes of my Couſin's eager Paſſion, and Malice againſt me. At length he found it to be only the Practices of Ikingi, who took Advantage of Solyman's Temper, equally Loyal and Flexible; inſinuated into his Youthful Mind, Monſtrous Idea's of me; and, in fine ſet him a railing at me with a fierce kind of Liberty, where-ever he came. The wiſe Baſſa ſoon open'd my Kinſman's Eyes; brought him to his Senſe; and the Iſſue of all was, that Solyman writ me a Letter of Apology.

But ſince this, the Maſter of the Pages has laid new Trains for me, and drawn a great many more to his Party. He has corrupted Muſtapha Guir, an Eunuch, and Page to the Old Queen; with whom I once held a Correſpondence, and, as I thought had contracted a Familiarity and Friendſhip. But, it ſeems, it was only an Appearance, without Reality. I could give thee a long Liſt of thoſe, whom this Academick has taught to ſlander Mahmut: But I will not appear ſo Revengeful. Beſides, this is not the only Grievance of which I complain.

Shall I remonſtrate to thee, moſt Excellent and Serene Baſſa, the true Cauſe of my Uneaſineſs? I am weary of living among Infidels. Favour me with thy Aſſiſtance and Interceſſion, that I may have leave to retire from this Place, and vindicate my ſelf before the Face Faces of my Enemies. And having had that Honour, rendring alſo a juſt Account of the Affairs wherewith I am entruſted, I may viſit my Native Country, and ſpend the Reſidue of my Days in Arabia, the Scene of all our Prophet's Great Actions, the Place where I firſt drew my Breath. I languiſh for the Aromatick Air of Admoim, the Cryſtal Fountains, and Cooler Shades of that Happy Province. I long to ſee the Groves which encompaſs the Village of my Nativity, the Turrets of thy Father's Houſe, and the Moſque of Haſen the Prophet. For, tho' I took no Notice of theſe Things in my Infancy; yet having once ſeen 'em in my riper Years, when I were able to make more laſting Reflections, I ſhall never forget theſe delightful Objects, ſo long as I live.

If this be an Infirmity, pardon it, Illuſtrious Arab, ſince it is Natural to all Men. Thou thy ſelf, haſt enjoy'd the Pleaſure of reviſiting that ſweet Region: Pity Mahmut, who burns with Deſire to taſte the ſame.

Or, if this ſhall be thought too great an Indulgence, to the poor Exil'd Mahmut; yet it will be eaſie for thee, who art a Favourite, to obtain of the Grand Signior, that I may at leaſt be recall'd from this Employment, and ſome body elſe ſubſtituted in my Place. There are thoſe among my Enemies, who are Ambitious of the Fatigue; and Ikingi, my Old Friend, would exchange all the Honours he is poſſeſs'd of in the Seraglio, for this Obſcure, yet Hazardous Poſt. 'Tis Pity but ſuch a Man's Thirſt of Perils, ſhould be gratify'd.

But if after all that I have ſaid, my Superiours ſhall think it expedient to continue me here, I am reſign'd: Only deſiring, that from henceforth my Slanderers may be ſuſpected, as Men ill affected to the Sublime Port, for traducing a Man that has waded through a Thouſand Difficulties, Temptations and Perils; and ſerv'd the Ottoman Empire in this Station, fourteen Years, without making a falſe Step, or Tranſgreſſing the leaſt Point of his Inſtructions.

I hear that Chuſaein Baſſa, is made Vizir Azem. The French have a very great Opinion of his Valour. They are generally Impartial Criticks in Martial Affairs, ſcorning to deny a Brave Enemy his Due Character.

We are at preſent barren of other News, ſave a New Arreſt of Parliament againſt Cardinal Mazarini, and all his Kindred and Creatures; whereby they are declared Enemies to the State, and charg'd with a long Catalogue of Crimes, whereof perhaps they were never Guilty.

Here are alſo ſome flying Reports of the Cardinal's Death: who, they ſay, has poyſon'd himſelf for Grief of his ill Succeſs in this Court. But I eſteem this, only as the Froth of his Enemies Malice, who really wiſh him Dead; and, to diſcourage his Friends, give it out that he is ſo.

Serene

Serene Baſſa, I commit my Affairs to thy Protection, beſeeching thee, to do the Office of a Countryman and a Friend, to the betray'd for God.

LETTER XVI.

To Chuſain Baſſa, the Magnanimous Vizir Azem, and Invincible General of the Ottoman Forces in Candia.

I Am not much above Forty Three Years Old, yet have ſeen Great Changes in the World, mighty Revolutions in Kingdoms and States, and the Death of many Sovereign Monarchs, Illuſtrious Generals, and Wiſe Statesmen. Doubtleſs, all Sublunary Things, are ſubject to Viciſſitude. There appears Nothing Conſtant and Setled, but the Heavens and Stars. They indeed perſevere in their Immutable Courſes, never change their Orbs, nor ſtart from their Eternal Poſts. The Sun riſes and ſets at his accuſtom'd Hours, and the Moon exactly obſerves the determin'd Periods of her Encreaſe and Wane: Theſe vary only, as the Seaſons of the Year, with Exquiſite Regularity, and Conſtant Returns.

But here below, there is an Univerſal Tranſmigration and Metempſychoſis of States, and Forms of Things : A Perpetual Flux and Reflux of Human Events. Men die hourly, and others are hourly born to ſupply their Places. One Age treads cloſe upon the Heels of another. And we who live at preſent, as we walk in the Steps of our Fathers, ſo ſhall we follow them down to the Grave, where our Fleſh by a new Metamorphoſis, ſhall be turn'd into the Bodies of Worms, Inſects and Serpents : And what ſhall become of our Souls, is Uncertain.

I was born in the Reign of Sultan Achmet, from whom our preſent Sovereign is the Sixth Emperour, that has aſcended the Glorious Throne of the Ottomans. May God grant him a Long Life, and a Series of Years bleſs'd with Continual Health, and Victory over his Enemies. I pray Heaven alſo, to perpetuate thy New Office, to the laſt Period of the Sultan's Life ; and in wiſhing this, I ſay all that can be expected.

But when I reflect on the frequent and bloody Tragedies, that have been acted in the Seraglio ſince I can remember, and the many Sacrifices that have been made of Sultans, Vizirs, Baſſa's, and Principal Miniſters of State, beſides the Maſſacres and Butcheries of meaner Perſons ; It makes me melancholy, amidſt the Joys I conceive for thy late Exaltation; and fills me with Fears, leſt my good Wiſhes to the Grand Signior and Thee, who art his Right Hand, ſhou'd by

ſome ſiniſter Decree of Fate, be almoſt as ſoon diſannull'd as pronounc'd. I pray Heaven avert my melancholy Preſages.

The Death of the Old Queen (the News of which is lately arriv'd at this Court) does but revive and encreaſe my Apprehenſion, of Greater Tragedies to come: Becauſe one Act of Cruelty, ſtill propagates another. Revenge is Prolifick, and Miſchief is never at a Stand. 'Tis true indeed, as it is not decent to inſult o'er the Aſhes of Illuſtrious Perſons; ſo neither has a Loyal Muſſulman, any great Reaſon to mourn for the Fall of a Woman, by whoſe Connivance her Royal Son, and our late Great Maſter, Sultan Ibrahim, fell a Sacrifice to the Mufti's Indignation. 'Twas an Unnatural Part in a Mother: And we may ſay, the Divine Juſtice has overtaken her, in making her Grandſon ſign the Warrant for her Death, with the Conſent of that very Mufti, at whoſe Inſtigation ſhe had conſented to the Murder of his Father.

Yet after all, may not ſhe have left behind her a Party in the Seraglio, or at leaſt in the State, who will ſtudy to revenge her Fall; or, however, do ſome Miſchief to prevent their own? Let me not ſeem to contradict my own Arguments; and whilſt I plead againſt Revenge and Cruelty, appear an Advocate for thoſe Inhuman Paſſions. I do not mention the ſurviving Creatures of this Unhappy Queen, to excite in thee, falſe Sentiments of Juſtice, ſuſpicious Chimæra's of a poſſible Conſpiracy, and ſo ſtimulate thee to puniſh them by Anticipation, for Crimes of which perhaps they never will be Guilty. I rather ſuggeſt theſe Things, that after ſo many Tragedies in the Royal Family, a Stop may be now put to future Miſchiefs; leſt, whilſt Men purſue a particular and ſelf-Intereſs'd Revenge, the Contagion ſhou'd ſpread, and Cruelty become Univerſal, and Infinite.

Let it ſuffice, that no leſs than Three of our Sultans, have been Depos'd and Strangl'd within theſe Thirty Years: Not to mention the Deluge of Royal Blood, that has overflow'd the Private Chambers of the Seraglio, the Priſons of the Ottoman Princes Brothers, or Sons to the Emperours formerly Reigning.

Theſe were Barbarous Cures of untimely Jealouſies; and it is Pity that ſuch Royal Maſſacres, ſhou'd ever be repeated again. Why ſhou'd the Poſterity of Ottoman, be in this Regard the only Unfortunate Princes on Earth? Were it not much more Noble, and equally Wiſe, to take the Meaſures of Æthiopian Policy, where, to prevent Sedition and Diſcords about Succeſſion, the Princes of the Blood are confin'd indeed, but to a very Pleaſing Liberty: Whilſt they have Palaces, Parks and large Fields at Command; are ſerv'd by a Princely Train, and deny'd no Lawful Pleaſures, within the Pale of their Reſtraint: For there is an exceeding high Mountain in the Country, the Top of which is very Spacious, containing large Tracts of Ground, many beautiful Seraglio's, furniſh'd with whatſoever can contribute to the Enjoyment of theſe Princes, or at leaſt to compenſate for their Want of greater Liberty. This Mountain is environ'd with a high and ſtrong Wall, having but one Entrance, and that guarded by Soldiers; ſo that no Man can go in or out, who has not the Emperor's Warrant, or at leaſt a Permiſſion from the Prime Miniſter of State: For he, upon the Death of the Emperor, immediately calls a Council of the Supreme Officers, who from among theſe Impriſon'd Princes, chuſe him whom they think moſt worthy to ſucceed. The reſt, who never felt the Appetite to Reign (for they are carry'd to this Place in their Infancy, and kept in perpetual Ignorance of State-Affairs) paſs away their Time without Envy, or repining at the Exaltation of their Brother, Addicting themſelves wholly to the Innocent Delights of that Rural Life, or to the Study of Books, whereof they have great Plenty in their Libraries, and thoſe altogether treating of Matters of Divine or Natural Speculation. Whereby, though they know nothing of State-Artifices, and Intrigues of Courts, yet they become able Philoſophers, and vers'd in all the Liberal Sciences.

Wou'd to God our Ottoman Princes (I mean the Younger Brothers) had but half this Liberty, granted them. Then the Infidels wou'd have no reaſon to call the Exalted Port, a Neſt of Vulturs.

But we muſt not find Fault with the Actions of our Sovereigns, though they tend to the Scandal and Ruine of the Muſſulman Empire. Yet I know to whom I write theſe Things; having often heard thee declaim againſt gainſt this Barbarous Cuſtom, of ſhutting up the Royal Off-Spring in a Dungeon, without Light or Comfort during their Lives; which many Times are alſo Cruelly ſhorten'd, by the Hands of the Executioner.

But, turning our Eyes from the Tragedies of the Eaſt, let us fix 'em on the Affairs of the Nazarenes in the Weſt.

The chief Diſcourſe at preſent is, about a Marriage lately ſolemniz'd between the Emperour of Germany, and the Dutcheſs of Mantua. She is his Third Wife ſucceſſively; for Polygamy is not allow'd, even to the Sovereigns, in theſe Parts, where the Prieſts bear all the Sway.

The Poſts from Sueden inform us, of the Death of General Torſtenſon, of whoſe Exploits in Germany thou haſt often heard. That Empire is very Unfortunate, ſpending its Time and Vitals in Unprofitable Aſſemblies and Conſults, whilſt her Active Enemies take whole Provinces from her with Eaſe: But this need not grieve Us.

Great Atlas of the Muſſulman Empire, I wiſh thee the Continence of Scipio, the Fortune of Alexander, and the Temperance of Cato; who when he was marching through the Sands of Libya with his Army, all ready to expire with Thirſt, and one of his Soldiers brought him his Helmet full of Water, as a rare Preſent in that General Diſtreſs, gratify'd the Soldier for his Gift, but ſpilt the Water on the Ground, ſaying, That ſince there was not enough to ſatisfy the whole Army, he wou'd wou'd not taſte a Drop; and that he was Unworthy to be a General, who wou'd not endure as much Hardſhip as the meaneſt Soldier.

Paris, 26th. of the 5th. Moon, of the Year 1651.

LETTER XVII.

To Naſſuff, Baſſa of Natolia.

PRaiſe be to God, Lord of the Seven Heavens, and of all that is within their Circumference: Theſe Weſtern Nazarenes, are always a quarrelling. They are reſolved to do their Parts towards the fulfilling the Muſſulman Predictions, and thoſe of their own Prophets. It makes me ſmile, to ſee theſe Infidels employing their Arms againſt each other, contending about Petty Rights and Poſſeſſions, whilſt they neglect the General Conſervation and Defence of Chriſtendom, from the Impetuous Torrents of our Invincible Armies.

The Elector of Brandenburgh, is enter'd into the Dutchy of Mons with conſiderable Forces, pretending to adjuſt, I know not what Differences, between thoſe whom they call Catholicks and Proteſtants.

'Twould be too tedious for a Letter, to run back to the Firſt Original of this War, and and trace it down from above a Hundred Years ago to the preſent Time. Beſides, 'tis of no Import to a Muſſulman, to hear a long Story of the Marriages, Deaths, Heirs, and Law-Diſputes of theſe Petty Infidel Princes. Yet, that thou may'ſt know ſomething of it, I will relate the whole Buſineſs as briefly as I can.

In the Year 1546. William Duke of Mons, Juliers and Cleves, marry'd Mary the Daughter of Ferdinand I. Emperour of Germany, and by this Match obtain'd of the Emperour (whom they call Cæſar, as they did the Ancient Emperours of Rome, whoſe Succeſſor he pretends to be) ſome Privileges, touching the Succeſſion of his Children, and their Right to his Dominions; and particularly, that this vaſt Eſtate ſhould not be Divided, but reſt in the entire Poſſeſſion of One Heir-Male, or in Default of that, it ſhould deſcend to the next Female, which, as I am told, is a Cuſtom in Germany; that ſo the Grandezza and Authority of Princely Families, may be ſupported.

I will not trouble thee with the particulars, which would take up a Volume. But in ſhort, it appears, that notwithſtanding all the ſtrict Proviſion that was, or could be made; this great Eſtate, after it had remain'd Sixty Years United, was at Length Divided between Two Princes, both claiming an Equal Right to the Whole; yet to prevent Wars, and Effuſion of Blood, each was contented with Half. Theſe were Wolf- gang, Duke of Newburgh; and Erneſt, Marqueſs of Brandenburgh. In whoſe Families, the Parted Succeſſion has continued to this Day.

The Occaſion of the preſent Quarrel, is their Difference of Religion; the Duke of Newburgh being a Catholick, and he of Brandenburgh a Proteſtant. It ſeems, the Brandenburghers had formerly made Inrodes on thoſe of Mons and Juliers, carrying away Captive their Prieſts and Derviſes from their Altars and Convents, and detaining them in Servitude, for many Years, contrary to certain Articles that had been drawn up between 'em. They alſo uſed them with great Cruelty, and committed a Thouſand Inſolences on the Roman Imaums, where-ever they got 'em in their Power.

Thus their Affairs continu'd, till the late Agreement at Munſter. Since which Time, the Duke of Newburgh endeavoured to free his Subjects from their former Calamities, and reſtore things to their Ancient State.

The Elector of Brandenburgh, making this an Occaſion of War, has now invaded the Dominions of the ſaid Duke. He is not gone in Perſon, but has ſent a good Soldier, whom they call Otho Sparr, with Four Thouſand Men to begin the Campaign; who, 'tis ſaid, will be follow'd by a greater Army.

But before he took the Field, the Elector of Brandenburgh had an Interview and Conference with the Duke of Saxony about this Affair, who is alſo a Proteſtant: So that 'tis thought, thought, no ſmall Diſturbance will ariſe in the Empire. All Joy and Peace to True Believers!

He of Brandenburgh, has caus'd a Declaration to be ſpread abroad full of Specious Pretences, that ſo his Conqueſts may be the more eaſy. He talks of nothing, but reſtoring the People of Juliers and Mons to their Ancient Liberties and Rights, both in Civil and Religious Matters; promiſing the faireſt Things in the World, to thoſe that obey him, and receives his Armies with Friendſhip: On the other ſide, threatning to treat thoſe who reſiſt him, with the utmoſt Severity that is due to Traytors and Rebels. And all this, for the Sake of Two or Three Inſignificant Ceremonies and Opinions, wherein they differ; mere Trifles, Litteral Whimſies, the Sport of their Doctors, the Spawn of wanton and Luxuriant Brains. For, no greater was the Original Difference between the Lutherans, and thoſe of the Roman Church. One will be ſav'd by the Strength of his Phancy, which he calls Faith, without doing any Good Work toward it: The Other toils all his Life-Time to merit Heaven, and thinks he can never do enough to obtain his End. He wears out the Pavement of Churches, and makes the Skin of his Knees like that of a Camel, with perpetual Kneeling, and Praying to Images and Pictures. And after all, they may be both damned, for ought I know, for their Ill Lives. They tear and devour one another like wild Beaſts, and think to gain Paradiſe by their Unnatural Zeal.

The

The Duke of Newburgh has publiſh'd a Manifeſto againſt the Proceedings of Brandenburgh, and ſollicited the Duke of Lorrain's Aid, as alſo that of Leopold, Arch-Duke of Auſtria. What will be the Iſſue, no Man knows; but oft-times, a ſmall Spark kindles great Fires: And it is not impoſſible, that this little Feud, may ſet the whole Empire in a Flame.

Mighty Baſſa, I pray Heaven bleſs thee with Peace, Health, and thy due Revenue. If theſe be not enough to make thee Happy, I wiſh thee an Encreaſe of Honours, and all the Glorious Fatigues which Mortals court as their Way to Bliſs.

LETTER XVIII.

To Uſeph Baſſa.

SUſpect me not: I have an equal Eſteem for thee, as I have for the other Baſſa's and Miniſters of the Divan. But I find it difficult to pleaſe any. They are Captious, and every one wou'd have all my Letters addreſs'd to himſelf: As if I were plac'd here to ſerve Particular Intereſts, and not the Publick. However, I cannot but acknowledge the tacit Honour they do me, in being ſo covetous of poor Mahmut's Correſpondence. I wiſh I were in a Condition to be more Partial: Then I wou'd quickly make thee and ſome others ſenſible, which are the Perſons, for whom I have a peculiar Regard.

But as the Caſe is at preſent, I muſt obſerve the Inſtructions I have receiv'd; and, by Turns write to all.

Wherein, if I fail of Arithmetical Proportions, I will make Amends by the Rules of Geometry: If I write but ſeldom to ſome, I deſire that the Length of my Letters, and Solidity of the Matter, may be accepted as a proper Supplement.

But thou haſt no Reaſon to complain on this Score, unleſs it be of thy ſelf for travelling into Remote Countries, whether I knew not how to follow thee with Letters, or any other.

other Way. Beſides, the former Friendſhip that has been between us, is a ſufficient Counterſcarp againſt all Suſpicion of Neglect on my Part, who am a Thouſand Times obliged to thee for ſo many repeated Favors. For the ſake of God therefore, and All that is Good, wound my Heart no more with theſe Undeſerv'd Reproaches: But believe ſtedfaſtly, that Mahmut can never be ungrateful and falſe.

Thy Letter is a Miſcellany of Friendly Complaints and Compliments. Thou giveſt me a Character, to which I do not pretend. 'Tis true, indeed, and I thank God and my Good Stars for it, that I was not born Blind, Deaf or Dumb. Nature gave me my Senſes free from any Manifeſt Defect; and I have an Indifferent good Memory. When I was Young, I had an Inclination to read Books; and Fortune has ſince favour'd me, with many Opportunities for that Purpoſe. But I found the moſt profitable Study to be, that of MY SELF, to which all the Laborious Pains of the Schools and Academies, ſerve only as a certain Gradation and Diſcipline. Nay, without theſe a Man may attain all the Knowledge that is Neceſſary to the Accompliſhment of his Nature; for ſo did the Firſt Philoſophers, before Books or Letters were extant. If thou wilt be perfectly Wiſe, read the ALCORAN, and the UNIVERSE; After that, peruſe THY SELF. Thou wilt find, Matter of Wonder and Improvement in Each;

Each; but moſt of all, in the Laſt: For Man is a Medley of all Things.

Were this Leſſon well learn'd and practis'd in the Court of France, there wou'd not be ſo many little Quarrels among theſe Infidels; or at leaſt, ſuch Petty Originals, wou'd not produce ſo many Fatal Conſequences.

From the Firſt Time the Prince of Conde with his Brothers, were releas'd from their Impriſonment (whereof I have given an Account to Mirezim Aluph) there appear'd much Coldneſs in the Queens Reception of 'em, and their Addreſſes to her. On both ſides they were at a Loſs, how to behave themſelves: For, all their Civilities were forc'd. 'Tis true, there was a Splendid Umbrage of Reconciliation; but it ſoon vaniſh'd. Their ſuppreſs'd Paſſions, diſcover'd themſelves by Degrees, and at length broke out into open Enmity.

The Queen appear'd full of Condeſcenſion and Favors: But Young Conde, is as full of his Merits and brave Exploits; remembring what Services, he has done to this Crown. Beſides, he is not void of Suſpicion and Jealouſie, leſt all thoſe Exceſſes of Royal Kindneſs are ſtrain'd, only to render him more ſecure, and ſo intrap him a ſecond Time with greater Advantage. The Horror of his Firſt Impriſonment, is yet fix'd in his Mind; from whence it will not be eaſie to efface it. Three Principal Servants of the Queen, were Baniſh'd, to remove his Fears: For, he imagin'd them to be Inſtruments of Correſpondence dence between the Queen and his old Enemy, Cardinal Mazarini. Yet ſhe publiſh'd a Declaration, ſignifying, That the Cardinal ſhould be for ever Baniſh'd, not only from the Court, but from the Kingdom.

And this Moon, the King being come of Age, invited the Prince to the Ceremonies uſual on ſuch Occaſions: Which Conde apprehended as a Snare, and ſo fled out of Paris.

The Event of theſe Emergencies, is yet in the Secret Pages of Deſtiny: But in all Likelyhood, a Civil War will follow. People are whiſpering, caballing and making Parties on both Sides. All the Powder in Paris, is engroſſed and gone; but no body knows by whom. Some ſay, the Prince is poſted into Flanders; others report, that he is retir'd to his own Government, there to raiſe an Army. The moſt knowing averr, That were-ever he is, he has Two Hundred Thouſand Sequins in Bank, to give Life to his New Deſigns, let them be what they will.

Think not this News of ſmall Importance, Serene Baſſa: But when thou heareſt of the Civil Wars among Chriſtians, eſpecially in the Realm of France, the Firſt, and moſt Victorious Empire of the Weſt, look on thy Right Hand and on thy Left; for our Holy Prophet, or his Herald, is near at Hand.

LETTER XIX.

To Solyman, his Couſin, at Conſtantinople.

THou ſeeſt, what thy Libertiniſm has brought on thee. For my Part, I am Sick in reading thy Letter, full of Melancholy, and the worſt Kind of Enthuſiaſm.

Hadſt thou follow'd my Advice, or if that be contemn'd, hadſt thou but obey'd the Precepts of thy Father, an honeſt Man, and one that went down to the Grave in Peace, thou woul'dſt have Liv'd as happily as other Men; but now thou art over whelm'd with Hypochondriack Vapours, and Dreams of a ſickly Brain. I counſel thee, to purge thy ſelf with Hellebor; for thou haſt more Need of that, than of Books. In all my Life, I never heard ſuch Religious Nonſenſe from a Muſſulman, as thy laſt Letter is ſtuff'd with.

I have not Patience to make Repetitions, or anſwer every particular Whimſie of thine. But in God's Name, what makes thee fright thy ſelf with ſuch a Wrong Notion of Hell? It is a Common Maxim in Nature, That Nothing Violent, is Permanent. Either therefore, the Pains of the Damn'd are not Infinitely Intenſe, or elſe they are not Eternal in their Duration. Thou wilt ſay, The Alcoran if ſelf aſſerts the Eternity of thoſe Torments.

ments. But doſt thou underſtand the Figurative Manner of Speech us'd in that Divine Book, and in all our Eaſtern Writings? Is it not common to call a very High Mountain, the Mountain of God? As if all the Mountains and Valleys of the Earth, were not equally his. So, to expreſs an Uncertain Length of Time, 'tis Cuſtomary to uſe the Epithet [Eternal.] Thus, we in ordinary Converſation ſay in Arabia, I love You Eternally, I will ſerve You, fight for You, &c. Eternally; and the ſame of the Contrary Paſſions: And yet we all know, we ſhall live but a few Years.

But, granting that the Alcoran ſpeaks in a Literal Senſe; it does not follow, That thoſe Pains are without Intervals of Reſt. We read of the Tree Zacon, which grows in the Center of Hell: But who will interpret, what is underſtood by this Plant?

Couſin, make uſe of thy Reaſon; and practiſe the beſt Things. As for our Condition after this Life, trouble not thy ſelf; for no Man knows, what will become of him when he goes Hence. However, we cannot believe, the Supremely Merciful Delights in Cruelty.

There is a Path, which the Eagle has not winged, nor the Serpent trac'd, though 'tis obvious to both. But their own Raſhneſs blinds them, and they cannot diſcern the Way of the Wiſe. There are Men of towring Speculations, and others very Crafty; yet neither one or'tother, can grope out the Direct Road to Bliſs. If I may adviſe thee, let Nature ture be thy Guide. Do nothing, but what Humanity prompts thee to: 'Tis this alone, diſtinguiſhes thee from other Animals. Honour the Memory of thy deceas'd Parents, love thy Friends, and be generous to thy Enemies: Do Juſtice to all Men: Obſerve the Puriſications and Prayers preſcrib'd by the Law: But give no Credit to the Fables of Infidels. It is common here among the Chriſtians, to paint Hell with Horrid Flames, and Devils flying up and down with red-hot Prongs, to toſs the Damn'd from Fire to Fire. And their Preachers make long and direful Harangues, on the ſame Subject: When all the while, neither they nor we know, What or Where Hell is, or after what Manner the Wicked ſhall be Chaſtis'd.

Only the Illuminated of God have this Standard of Truth; That both our Pains and Pleaſures after this Life, ſhall be Exactly proportion'd to our Vertues and Vices. There is no Malice or Injuſtice, in the Good Creator of All Things.

Couſin, once again, let thy Senſes be awake, and ſuffer not thy Reaſon to dream of Things, which have no Exiſtence. For aſſuredly, God is the moſt Impartial Judge of the Univerſe.

LETTER XX.

To Endel Al' Zadi Jaaf, Begler-beg of Dierbekir.

I Have not the Honour to know thee in Perſon; but have heard of thy Fame. So Mortals are unacquainted with the Secrets of the Fixed Stars; yet we obſerve their Luſtre and Rank, and the Figure they make in thoſe Remote Worlds.

Thy Exploits among the Curds and Georgians, are not unknown in theſe Parts. The Franks that travel in the Eaſt, have tranſported hither ſuch a Character of thy Magnanimous Actions, as makes all Men of Honour in Love with thee: And I have conceiv'd a particular Veneration for thy Vertues. May God encreaſe them with thy Hours, and grant thee a Monopoly of Bliſs.

Thou art plac'd in an Eminent Seat, and may'ſt with Reaſon be call'd Lord of Lords, as thy Title imports; for thou art Poſſeſſor of the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, if we may give Credit to the Tradition of the Ancients. They tell us, that for a Time Adam dwelt there, with his Second Wife; and that the particular Place of his Abode was an Iſland, encompaſs'd with the Rivers Euphrates, Tygris, Piſon, and Gihon. From whence it was call'd Meſopotamia by the Greeks; which ſignifies. A Region environ'd with Rivers.

All the VVeſt of Aſia, have a profound Reſpect for this Country. And the Jews relate ſtrange Stories of a Tree in Dierbekir, which grew Five Hundred Miles high, in the Days of Adam; which they ſay, was cut down by an Angel, leſt Man ſhould climb to Heaven by it before his Time. For, it ſeems, Ambition was a Vice, early as our Nature; and Adam was no ſooner ſenſible that he was a Man, but he aſpir'd to be a God, or ſomething like One: So great a Charm there is in Honour and Authority.

They ſay alſo, that Abraham was born in this Region. However, 'tis certain, if there be any Certainty in Records and Hiſtories, that he reſided there a conſiderable Time. But thou knoweſt beſt, what Traditions thy Subjects have of theſe Things.

The Chineſe and Indians laugh at all this, as a Romance of Later Date, than their Chronicles; which make thoſe Extremities of the Eaſt, to be the Stage of the firſt Mortals. Inſtead of Adam and Eve, or Alileth, they aſſert the Names of the Original Parents of Mankind, to be Panzon and Panzona: Whoſe Off-ſpring, they ſay, continu'd Ten Millions of Years; but at length, were all deſtroy'd from the Earth, by a Tempeſt from Heaven. After whom, they tell us, God created Lontizam, a Man with Two Horns, each as big and tall as a Tree in that Country, which they call the Plant of God, being the Largeſt and Firſt of all Vegetables. This Man's

Horns

Horns being Prolifick, according to their Tradition; out of the Right, ſprang a Thouſand Men every Day for a Hundred Years; and as many Women out of the Left, in the ſame Space. From whom deſcended all Mortals of both Sexes to this Day; tho' we are much diminiſh'd in Bulk, through the General Decay of Human Nature. For, theſe People affirm, That the Firſt Race of Men, were all Gyants: But that through Intemperance and other Vices, their Off-ſpring ſhrunk by degrees into ſmaller Dimenſions, till at Length they arriv'd at the preſent Stature, and appear'd like Pigmies in Compariſon of the Primitive Sons of Lontizam. In Confirmation of this the Indians ſhew to Travellers, ſome of their Temples hewn out of vaſt Rocks, with the Images of thoſe Giganeick Men, who they ſay were employ'd in the Work. Theſe they honour, as Hero's or Demi-Gods.

I do not relate this for Truth, but only to divert thee, in repreſenting the different Opinions of Men. God only knows, how to ſeparate the Truth from Falſhood in Hiſtories.

But to return to Dierbekir: This Country is Famous for the Tower of Babel, built by Nimrod and his Followers; at what Time, the Languages were confounded, as Moſes relates. 'Tis Remarkable alſo, for the Battel fought between the Parthians and Romans at Harran, and for the Death of Caracalla, the Son of Severus, Emperour of Rome, who was Murdered by Macrinus, the Roman General. Theſe Emperours were all call'd Cæſars, as the Kings of Egypt were call'd Pharaoh's and Ptolomies. It ſeems, the Word Cæſar, was firſt apply'd to Julius the Roman Dictator, for that his Mother dying under the Pains which were to give him Life, her Belly was ript up, and he drawn forth from her Womb by the Hands of a Surgeon. In Memory of which, he and all his Succeſſors were call'd Cæſars; that Word ſignifying [drawn forth by Violence] But, whatſoever the Manner of his Birth was, this is Certain, that he and Forty of his Succeſſors, were hurri'd out of the World, by untimely Death: For, they either laid Violent Hands on themſelves, or were Murder'd by Traytors.

If thou woud'ſt have any News out of theſe Parts, the Chief Diſcourſe at Preſent is, of a great Victory obtain'd by the Polanders againſt the Coſſacks and Tartars. And I cou'd with this were all: But the Nazarenes are continually made joyful, with the Succeſs of the Venetians againſt the Arms of the Invincible Empire. They beat us by Sea, and baffle all our Attemps by Land. We have not got an Inch of Ground in Candia, during the laſt Campaigne, but loſt many Thouſands of Men, and brought the Name of the Sublime Port and Victorious Muſſulmans, into Contempt and Scorn. Where the Fault lies, God knows. 'Tis too Melancholy a Theme, to inſiſt on Particulars.

Don

Don Juan of Auſtria, has alſo beſieged Barcelona by Sea and Land.

Several Arreſts of Parliament, are here publiſh'd againſt the Prince of Conde and his Adherents; and, 'tis reported, the King will recall Cardinal Mazarini from his Baniſhment.

Illuſtrious Prince and Governour of a Happy Region, I beg thy favourable Conſtruction of this Addreſs. And thus in Reverence I deſiſt, full of Dutiful and affectionate Vows for thy Proſperity.

BOOK III.

LETTER I.

To Abdel Melech Muli Omar, Preſident of the College of Sciences at Fez.

THou haſt formerly received a Letter from me, wherein I mentioned the Tenets of a certain French Philoſopher who maintains, That the Earth moves like the Reſt of the Planets, and the Sun ſtands ſtill, being the Center of this our World: For he aſſerts, that there are Many.

The Name of this Sage is Des Cartes, Renowned throughout the World for his Learning and Knowledge. He lays as a Baſis of all his Philoſophy, this ſhort Poſition and Inference, I THINK, THEREFORE I AM. In this alone he is Dogmatical, allowing a Lawful Scepticiſm, in all the Uncertain Deductions which may be drawn from it.

Pardon me, Oraculous Sage, if I expoſe before thee my Infirmities. I am Naturally diſtruſtful of all Things. This Temper puts me upon Perpetual Thinking. And that very Act convinces me, of the Truth of my Being, according to the Method of this Philoſopher. But What I am, I know not. Sometimes I Phanſie my ſelf, no more than a Dream or Idea of all thoſe other Things, which Men commonly believe do Really Exiſt: A mere Imagination of Poſſibilities. And, that all which we call the World, is but one Grand Chimæra, or Nothing in Maſquerade.

At other Times, when theſe wild Thoughts are vaniſhed, and my Spirits tired in the Purſuit of ſuch Abſtracted Whimſies begin to flag, and that my Lower Senſe awak'd by ſome preſent Pain or Pleaſure, rouzes my ſleeping Appetites: when I am touch'd with Hunger, Thirſt, or Cold, or Heat, and find experimentally, I am Something that cannot be a mere Thought or Dream, but of a Compoſition which ſtands in Need of Meat, Drink, Garments, and other Neceſſaries: Then, rather than fret my ſelf with Vain and Endleſs Scruti-

Scrutinies, I tamely conclude, I am that which they call a Man, I lay the Sceptick aſide, and without any farther Scruples or Doubts, fall roundly to eating, drinking, or any other Refreſhments my Nature craves for.

But no ſooner have I taſted theſe Delights, when my Old Diſtemper returns again. I then conſider my ſelf as a Being, capable of Happineſs or Miſery in ſome Degree, as I ſhall poſſeſs or Want thoſe very Delights I juſt before enjoyed. This is a ſufficient Damp to a Thinking Man, when he knows, that he ſtands in Need of any Thing out of himſelf. But 'tis far greater, when he will take the Pains to number all the Train of his Particular Neceſſities, which he is not ſure he ſhall always be able to ſupply.

This makes me preſently conclude, That as I am indebted to Other Creatures for my ſenſible Happineſs, ſo I owe my very Being to Something beſide my ſelf. I examine my Original, and find I am born of Men and Women, who were in the ſame Indigent Circumſtances as my ſelf: And that it is not only ſo with my Particular Family, but with all Mankind; our whole Human Race, being born Natural Mendicants from the Womb. As ſoon as we breath the Vital Air, we Cry; and with thoſe Inarticulate Prayers, beg for Help and Protection from others, without whoſe generous Aid we could not ſubſiſt a Moment: So poor and beggerly a thing is Man, from his Birth. This is the Condition of all: Neither is a King any more exempt from this Common Character of Mortals, than the Slave who ſweeps the Streets.

If I could have reſted in this Thought, I ſhould have been happy: For it would have had this Influence on me, either to convince me, that I ought to be content with the Condition to which I was born, or to rid my ſelf out of ſo deſpicable a State by Death.

But alas, one Thought produces another: And from the Contemplation of our preſent Miſery in this Life, I fall to thinking what will become of us after Death. For, as we know not What, or Where we were before we came into this World; ſo there is no Human Certainty, Whither we ſhall go, or in What Condition we ſhall be, when we leave it: And therefore, it would be an unpardonable Madneſs, to throw my ſelf headlong into a State of which I have no Account: And, to avoid the Little Miſeries of this Life, which muſt have an End one Time or other, caſt my ſelf down a Precipice (for ought I know) of Intolerable Torments, which has no Bottom.

I hear the Philoſophers talk of Immortality, the Poets of Elyzium, the Chriſtian Prieſts of Heaven, Hell, and Purgatory; the Indian Bramins of Tranſmigration. But I know not what, or which I have Reaſon to believe, of all theſe.

I ſpeak

I ſpeak after the Manner of Philoſophers; for, if we come to Faith, the Caſe is altered. Think not, I beſeech thee, that I call in Queſtion the Sacred Oracles, the Revelations of the ſent of God. But I only acquaint thee how my Natural Reaſon hatters me with Doubts.

I ſee Men every where profeſſing ſome Religion or other; paying Divine Honours to ſome Superiour Being, or Beings, according as they have been Educated: Which many Times tempts me to think, that Religion is nothing but the Effect of Education.

Then I wonder, how Men when they come to Years of Diſcretion, and their Reaſon is able to Diſtinguiſh between Things probable, and mere Romances, can ſtill retain the Errors of their Infancy. 'Tis Natural for Children, to be wheadled or aw'd into a Belief of what their Parents, Nurſes, or Tutors teach them. But when they come of Age, they ſoon rectify their miſled Underſtandings, in all Things, ſave the Affairs of Religion. In this they are Children ſtill, tenacious of the Sacred Fables of their Prieſts, and Obſtinate in maintaining them, ſometimes even to Death.

It puzzles me to find out the Cauſe of ſo ſtrange an Effect, That Men otherwiſe endu'd with Mature Judgment, and an extraordinary Sagacity in all Things elſe, ſhould yet be Fools in Matters of Religion, and believe Things Inconſiſtent with the Common Senſe and Reaſon of Mankind.

I could

I could never give Credit to the Hiſtories of the Ancient Pagans, which acquaint us with the devout Adoration they paid to the Creatures of the Painter or Carver, did not I ſee the ſame practiſed among the Chriſtians: Or, that thoſe Wiſe Men of Old, cou'd ſwallow the Forgeries of their Prieſts concerning their Gods and Goddeſſes, were I not an Eye-Witneſs, how bigotted the Modern Nazarenes are to the Legends of their Saints, and the Jews to thoſe more Ridiculous Figments of the Talmud.

It perplexes me, to ſee Mankind generally labouring under ſo great a Darkneſs, not ſo much the Effect of Ignorance, as of Superſtition: To behold Men well ver'd in Sciences, and all kinds of Human Learning; yet Zealous Aſſertors of manifeſt Contradictions in Matters of Divinity, rather than oppoſe, or ſo much as examine the Traditions of their Fathers.

When I behold Mankind divided into ſo many innumerable Different Religions in the World, all vigorouſly propagating their own Tenets, either by Subtilty or Violence, yet few or none ſeeming by their Practice to believe what they with ſo much Ardour profeſs; I could almoſt think, that theſe various Ways of Worſhip, were firſt invented by Politicians; each accommodating his Model to the Inclinations of the People whom he deſign'd to Circumvent.

But when on the other ſide I conſider there appears ſomething ſo Natural and Undiſ-

guis'd in the Furious Zeal, and Unconquerable Obſtinacy of the Greateſt Part; I am as ready to Join with Cardan, and conclude, That all this Variety of Religions, depends on the Different Influence of the Stars. This was a famous Philoſopher in Europe; and held, That the Religion of the Jews, ow'd its Original to the Force of Saturn, that of the Chriſtians to Jupiter, and Ours to Mars. As, for the Pagans, he aſſigns to them many Conſtellations and Aſpects.

Thus there is ſo equal an Appearance of Truth and Falſhood in Every Religion, that I ſhould not know how, in Human Reaſon, to fix on any.

Superſtition renders a Man a Fool, and Scepticiſm is enough to make him Mad. To believe All Things, is above Reaſon; to give Credit to Nothing, is below it. I will keep the Middle Path, and direct my Faith by my Reaſon.

That Faculty tells me, that if I were inclined to Adore the Sun, Moon and Stars for their Beauty and Influence, I might on the ſame Ground Worſhip my own Eyes, without which I could not behold their tempting Splendors: Or, I might as well pay Divine Honour to that more Intimate Senſe, my Feeling, or any of my other Senſes, which only render me capable to know the Vertue of theſe Luminaries. The ſame may be ſaid of the Elements, and of all Viſible Beings.

What then ſhall I Adore, or to whom ſhall I return Thanks for all the Bleſſings I enjoy (for, even in this Miſerable Life, I taſte ſome Happineſs?) To what Being, I ſay, ſhall I addreſs my Vows and Supplications, for all the Good that I poſſeſs and want? Is it to any Thing that I have ſeen or can ſee, or that I can repreſent to my ſelf under a Figure? Is it to any Part of the Univerſe, or no? No. To the whole Complex together? No. I have a Thouſand kind Thoughts for the Sun, Moon and Stars, for the Elements, and many other Compound Creatures. My Soul, and that of the World, are Uniſons. But 'tis the Profound Depth of Eternity, the Infinite and Immortal, who is the Diapaſon, and makes perfect Harmony.

To that Being which has no Reſemblance neither is Divided into Parts, nor Circumſcrib'd with Limits; whoſe Center is every where, Circumference no where; Who hath neither Beginning nor End: To the only Omnipotent, from whom all other Things flow, and to whom they all return; To him I owe all that I have, and will pay what I can. And ſomething by his Determination, I am Indebted, and will diſcharge it to thee, Orient Light of the Moreſco Muſſulmans; that is, the Duty of an Humble Slave, in begging Pardon for this Preſumption.

LETTER II.

To the Kaimacham.

'TWas the Contemplation of Iſouf Eb'n Hadrilla, an Arabian Philoſopher, That all Men were at Firſt Created in a State of War: For this Sage, gave no Credit to the Writings of Moſes, the Jewiſh Hiſtorian and Prophet; neither cou'd any Arguments perſwade him to believe, That all Mortals deſcended from Adam. 'Twas an Article of his Faith, That in the Infancy of the World, Men were Form'd of the Prolifick Slime of the Earth, Impregnated by the Vigorous Warmth of the Sun, and that all other Animals had their Original in the ſame Manner: But that in Proceſs of Time, The Richneſs of the Seminal Soil being exhauſted by a continual Spontaneous Production of Living Creatures, there was no other Way to perpetuate the Various Kinds of Beings, and multiply the Individuals, but by the Ordinary Method of Generation. For which Reaſon, Nature ſeems to have ſubdivided every Species into Two Sexes.

Hence, this Philoſopher concludes, That at Firſt there was no nearer Relation between Man and Man, than there is now betwixt a Lyon and a Sheep, or any other different Kinds of Animals: Saving only, that as theſe are diſtinguiſh'd by their Forms, into Four-Footed Beaſts, Fowls, Fiſhes, and Creeping Things;

Things; ſo Men aſſum'd to themſelves, the Character of Rational Creatures: and a Principle of Self-Preſervation, was the Firſt Ground of a Tacite and Common League between Men, againſt the Reſt of their Fellow-Animals: Eſpecially againſt thoſe, which made a more frightful Figure on Earth than we do, and ſeem'd more Rapacious and Inclin'd to Miſchief; ſuch as Dragons, Tygers, Bears, Lions, &c.

But notwithſtanding this General Aſſociation of our Race, againſt the more Salvage and Fierce Troops of Beaſts; yet one Man ſtill ſtood upon his Guard againſt another. And all the Sons of the Earth, endeavour'd to maintain the Poſts which Nature had alotted each Man; That is, the Place where he was firſt Form'd, and drew Breath. But Things cou'd not laſt long in this State: For, either by Inſtinct or Reaſon (call it which you will. ſays this Author) Men being ſtreightned for want of Fruits, or ſpurr'd on by ſome ſecret Deſire of Novelty, ſoon went out of their Bounds, and encounter'd each other, more by Chance than Deſign: Whence aroſe the Firſt Occaſions of Actual War. For, every Stranger, appear'd like an Invader: They Naturally ſtartled and ſuſpected each other. Reciprocal Paſſions of Choler ſprung in their Breaſts; and every Man to prevent the Effect of his own Fears and Apprehenſions, ruſh'd on his Neighbour: who was on the ſame Ground as ready for an Aſſault as himſelf. Thus an Univerſal War Commenc'd in the World, which which by Various Methods of Improvement, was carried on by the Succeeding Generations and continu'd to the Preſent Times.

As for the Original of Governments, the Particular Time cannot be determin'd; but it may be ſuppoſed, That Men Generally finding the Inconvenience of theſe private Perſonal Combats, and by Degrees arriving to greater Maturity of Experience, form'd themſelves at Firſt into little Societies and Friendſhips, or as they dwelt near one another, or as they agreed in ſome Common Inclinations, Principles, and Intereſts. From which Small Aſſociations, they gradually ſpread into Larger Communities, living under certain Laws and Obligations of Mutual Peace, Juſtice and Aſſiſtance toward each other, and of Defence againſt their Common Enemies: Some living under the Form of a Common-Wealth, Others of a Monarchy; each Body of Men, ſetting up ſuch a Model, as beſt ſuited their own Intereſts and Neceſſities. From hence ſprung the Diſtinction of Nations, Kingdoms, and Empires. Thus far the Arabian Philoſopher.

But without enquiring into the Truth of his Principles, one wou'd think, that ſome of the Weſtern Nazarenes were his Diſciples. And indeed, all Civil Diſſentions, ſeem to be grounded on the ſame Maxims: Whilſt Men on the leaſt Diſcontent or Jealouſie, lay aſide the Obedience they owe to their Sovereigns, claiming I know not what Natural Right, to defend themſelves againſt the Encroachments croachments and Uſurpations of others.

Thus no ſooner was it ſuppos'd here, that the King intended to recall Cardinal Mazarini from his Exile; but the Parliament of Paris, who are ſecret Friends to the Prince of Conde, publiſh'd an Arreſt againſt the Cardinal, whereby all Perſons are forbid to contribute toward the Return of this Miniſter; and Ordering, That his Library, with all his Moveables ſhou'd be ſold to raiſe a Sum of a Hundred and Fifty Thouſand Livres, which is promis'd as a Reward to thoſe who ſhall either take him Priſoner, or kill him. They alſo Petition'd the Duke of Orleans, to make the utmoſt Uſe of his Authority againſt the Cardinal. Who, thereupon rais'd Conſiderable Troops, and gave the Command of them to the Duke of Beaufort.

In the mean Time, the Cardinal is not Idle, but with what Forces he has, performs ſome Conſiderable Actions, in his own Defence. He has taken Priſoner, an Eminent Councellor of Parliament. The Parliament ſent a Trumpet to demand his Releaſe. This Meſſenger was rejected. Whereupon, the Parliament are taking New Methods.

The Prince of Conde has ſent a Letter and Requeſt to the Parliament, deſiring them to ſuſpend the Execution of the Arreſt publiſh'd againſt him; ſince the Time given him to lay down his Arms, was not yet expir'd, and that the Cardinal was returned into the Kingdom, contrary to a Prohibition, ſign'd by the King.

But

But, notwithſtanding all theſe Traverſes Mazarini is come again to the Court, which is now kept at Poictiers; Where he was receiv'd with Infinite Reſpect and Careſſes, by the King, the Queen, and all his Friends. Animoſities daily encreaſe between the different Parties: Private Grudges are improv'd to Publick Factions: An Univerſal Peeviſhneſs, has poſſeſs'd the Hearts of the French Nation: They are alarm'd and offended, at one another's Looks. If a Man ſmiles too much or too little, in converſing with his Friend, 'tis enough to give him the Character of an Enemy, or at leaſt to render him ſuſpected. So that he who wou'd live peaceably here at this Juncture, had need to be well skill'd in all the Secrets of Phiſiognomy, and make frequent Uſe of his Looking-Glaſs; leſt any Oblique Caſt of his Eye, or Satyrical wrything of his Noſe, ſhou'd be Interpreted for Symptoms of Hidden Malice. For now they'll ſpy Treaſon in every Feature of a Man's Face.

As for me, when I go abroad, I conform to all Companies; yet alter not my Addreſs. I neither play the Ape, nor counterfeit a Statue: But obſerving a Medium, I pay a Civil Reſpect to all, without being Courtly or Rude: For this Carriage beſt Suits with my Circumſtances. Hence it is that no Body ſuſpects the plain, deform'd, blunt, Crook-back'd Titus of Moldavia, to be what I am really, Mahmut the Slave of the Exalted Port.

LETTER III.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire.

THE Prince of Conde's taking up Arms, has more puzzl'd the Counſels of the King of France, and more embaraſs'd his Affairs, than any Occurrence that has happen'd ſince the Death of his Father.

I have already inform'd the Kaimacham and others, of all Paſſages hitherto, relating to theſe Inteſtine Broils. Since which they ſeem to be improv'd into a War, wherein Foreign Nations take a Part. After the Return of Cardinal Mazarini to this Court, the Prince of Conde was driven to great Streights, being compell'd by the ſwift Marches of the King's Army, to retire to Bordeaux. Where, conſidering that it would not be ſo much his Intereſt to keep this Place, as to encreaſe his Forces, he ſent Envoys to the King of Spain, and Arch-Duke Leopold in Flanders, to deſire their Aſſiſtance.

The Former immediately diſpatched away Orders for a conſiderable Body of Men to approach the Confines of Gaſcoigne, where the Prince had a great Intereſt; and the Latter ſent him Eight Thouſand Men, to act on the ſide of Flanders and toward Paris, as Occaſion offer'd,

This

This is the particular Game of the Spaniards, to take Advantage of the Civil Wars in this Kingdom, that ſo by aſſiſting the weaker Party, they may balance the Conteſting Powers of the Nation, and keep 'em in a perpetual Quarrel: Whilſt in the Interim, they gain Ground; recover the Places which the French took from 'em in Time of Domeſtick Peace, and ſo pave the Way to New Conqueſts.

In the mean Time, the Parliament ſent Deputies to the King, beſeeching him to remember his Royal Word, by which he had for ever baniſh'd Cardinal Mazarini; and repreſenting to him the Fatal Conſequences, which were like to proceed from his Return. But the King, inſtead of complying with their Requeſts, caus'd an Edict of Council to be Publiſh'd, which juſtify'd his Conduct in this Matter.

He alſo writ a Letter to the Parliament, full of Complaints, that they had not yet publiſh'd any Order, to hinder the Entrance of a Foreign Army into the Kingdom. But all ſignified Nothing, to Men paſſionately bent, to maintain the Prince of Conde's Quarrel againſt their Sovereign. He has but few truſty Men in that Senate, and they are over-aw'd by the Reſt. Beſides, the Duke of Orleans bears a ſtrange Sway both in the Parliament and Country.

At the Inſtigation of the Prince, the Citizens of Orleans ſhut up their Gates, when they heard the King was coming that Way in his return to Paris. Yet the Country was open for the Prince of Conde, a Subject: He travell'd up and down the Provinces, to make New Interests, and confirm the Old; leaving the Command of his Army in Gascoigne, to his Brother the Prince of Conti.

There have been many Skirmishes and Encounters, between the King's Forces, and those of the Male-Contents; and one fierce Combat, wherein the Prince of Conde defeated the Vanguard of the King's Army, as he was marching to this City. Whereby getting the Start of his Sovereign, he arriv'd here, and was receiv'd in the Parliament, whilst the Monarch was forc'd to lie encamp'd in the Field.

The Prince found a different Reception, according to the various Humours of People. The greatest Part favour'd him, and he receiv'd infinite Caresses from the Citizens of Paris: But met with some Opposition from Persons of Higher Rank, and more stedfast Loyalty to the Crown. The Duke of Orleans is his greatest Friend, and one for whom the Parliament have a great Deference: Not so much in Contemplation of his Wit and Policy, as for the Sake of his near Relation to the Crown; he being Uncle to the present King: Whereby he has a Right to assume more Authority than others, in regulating the Disorders of the Court; among which the greatest is esteem'd, that of Cardinal Mazarini's Return.

In

In a Word, both Parties ſerve themſelves of thoſe who have the greateſt Intereſt, and are moſt likely to compoſe the Quarrel. The Exil'd Queen of England, and her Son, who have taken Sanctuary in this Kingdom from the Perſecutions of their Own Subjects, make it their Buſineſs, to mediate between the Court-Party, and the Faction of the Princes.

The Prince of Conde alſo, ſent Deputies to the King to repreſent to him, That the only Means to give Quiet to the State, was to baniſh the Cardinal-Miniſter: And as they were delivering their Addreſs, Mazarini came in; at the Sight of whom, they aggravated their Charge, and ſaid to his Face, 'That he 'was the Cauſe of all the EVILS, which 'the Kingdom ſuffer'd. The Cardinal Interrupting them, turn'd to the King, and ſaid, Sir, 'It will not be Juſt, that ſo Flouriſhing a 'Kingdom, and, to whoſe Grandeur I have 'contributed all that lay in my Power, ſhould 'ruin it ſelf for my ſake: Therefore, I humbly entreat your Majeſty to grant, that I 'may return to my own Country, or whitherſoever my Fortune ſhall call me. No, 'no, reply'd the Queen (not without ſome Paſſion) This cannot be granted; the King had 'never more need of your Counſels, than at 'this Juncture. We cannot conſent, that ſo 'Serviceable a Man ſhould be Baniſh'd, only 'to humour his Enemies. Therefore, let us 'hear no more of that.

The

The Deputies perceiving nothing of Hopes, return'd to Paris. Then the Parliament deputed others to go to the King, and Remonſtrate the Deplorable State of the Realm. This was done a few Days ago.

In the mean time, we have been alarm'd here in this City, with daily Inſurrections of the Multitude. The Occaſion was, ſome private Orders which the Duke of Orleans had given to the Proveſt of the Merchants, relating to his Charge, and the Welfare of the City. This being miſunderſtood by the People, who have not the Senſe to diſtinguiſh the Good Offices of their Governors from Injuries, put 'em all into a Tumult. They aſſaulted the Provoſt in his Coach, as he was paſſing the Streets: And had he not eſcaped into an Apothecary's Shop, they wou'd perhaps in their Fury, have torn him in Pieces: For ſo they ſerv'd his Coach, as an after Revenge.

I am weary of beholding the Malicious Quarrels of theſe Infidels. But when I conſider, that their Diſcords will be Inſtrumental to the Future Conqueſts of the True Believers, I am Patient and Reſign'd.

However, 'tis one Comfort to me in this Thorny Station, that one Time or other, inſtead of the perpetual jangling of Bells in Paris, I may again have the Happineſs, to hear the Muzeins cry on the Minarets in Conſtantinople, There is but One God, and Mahomet his Prophet. Or, if I ſhall not live to enjoy this Wiſh; yet, in the Inviſible State, I

ſhall

ſhall hear the ſame Cry, and ſhall be paſt Doubt of thoſe Things, whereof I have no Certainty in this Life.

LETTER IV.

To Cara Hali, Phyſician to the Grand Signior.

THE Chriſtians ſeem to have too proud an Opinion themſelves, and ſet a greater Value on Humane Nature than ſuits with Reaſon. They aſſert, that all Things were made for Man, and ſtyle him Lord of his Fellow-Creatures; as if God had given him an Abſolute Dominion over the Reſt of his Works, eſpecially over the Animal-Generations; and that all the Birds of the Air, Beaſts of the Earth, and Fiſh of the Sea, were Created only to ſerve his Appetite and other Neceſſities of Life. I remember a Letter I formerly ſent to thee, wherein I diſcourſed of the Carteſian Philoſophers, and their Contempt of the Beaſts, in denying them Souls, or the Uſe of Reaſon.

Give me leave to entertain thee now, and divert my ſelf with ſome farther Remarks on this Subject. 'Tis a Refuge from Melancholy, when I can thus freely diſcover my Thoughts to a Friend, who I know will not be Partial to the Truth.

I have been long an Advocate for the Brutes, and have endeavour'd both to abſtain from injuring them my ſelf, and to inculcate this Fundamental Point of Juſtice to others. This is owing to the Example and Philoſophy of Mahummed, the Eremite in Arabia, that Light and Glory of Religious Men. And were it not that my Honour is to be doubtful in all Things, the Influence of his Converſation would make me a profeſs'd Pythagorean, a Diſciple of the Indian Brachmans, a Champion for the Tranſmigration of Souls.

The laſt Letter ſave one I writ to that Solitary, was upon this Subject: Such an one as wou'd divert him in his Cave. It contain'd an Account of the Primitive Manner of Life practis'd by the Ancients, a Narrative of the Golden Age, a Hiſtory of Human Innocence, and the Steps which Men firſt took, to uſe Violence and Cruelty to their Fellow-Creatures. Now I will preſent thee with ſome Additional Obſervations, ſome Remnants of Antiquated Truth, glean'd from Philoſophers and Hiſtorians, and winnow'd from the Chaff of Error and Superſtition.

Who wou'd not believe the Beaſts to be endu'd with Reaſon, when he beholds them perform all the Actions of Rational Creatures, with more Caution, tho' leſs Pride than Men? They are more Provident than We, and much more ſubtle in avoiding any Affliction or Danger.

Danger. Witness Thales the Philosopher's Mule, which he often employed to carry Salt to a certain Market; but the Cunning Beast finding herself over-loaded, when she was passing through a River lay down, whereby the Water penetrating into the Sacks of Salt, melted it away and lightned her Burden. And this was her Constant Practice; till the Philosopher perceiving himself thus out-witted by his Beast, was resolv'd to circumvent her another way. Wherefore, instead of Salt he loaded her with Wool, which he knew would grow heavier by being Wet. But the wary Mule, sensible of the Difference of her Burden, wou'd couch no more in the Water; but seeing no other Remedy, went forward on her Journey.

Who will not admire the Wisdom of the Fox in Cold Countries, which the Inhabitants use as a Guide when they would pass over any Frozen Lake or River. For this Creature going before them, lays her Ears close down to the Ice, and listens to try if she can hear any Motion or Noise of the Water running underneath: Which if she does, she will not venture on the Ice; but if all be still, then by a Logical Deduction she concludes, The Ice is thick enough to bear Passengers; and so she leads the Way, whilst the Men follow.

When a Dog is hunting in the thick Woods, and by chance comes to a Place where Three Paths meet, he first Scents the One, then the Other: And perceiving that the Game is not gone by any of thoſe Two Ways; he throws himſelf ſwiftly forward in the Third, without ſuch a particular Application of his Noſe. Which is an evident Argument, that he makes uſe of the like Caſe we our ſelves ſhould do.

And now I have mention'd this Creature, I cannot forbear celebrating their Virtue and Fidelity: Whereof we have daily Experience; and there are many pleaſant Examples, recorded by grave Hiſtorians.

Such is that of Hircanus, a Dog belonging to Lyſimachus, who would never depart from the Body of his dead Maſter, but following it to the Funeral Pile, leapt into the Fire, and was burned for Company,

But the Gratitude of a Lyon to a certain Slave in Rome, is beyond all Parallel. This Slave was one of thoſe, who were appointed to combat with Wild Beaſts in the Amphitheatre, according to the Cuſtom of the Ancient Romans, in the Publick Shews which were exhibited to the People. As ſoon as the Lyon was let looſe in the Pavement, he ran furiouſly at the Slave, but coming nearer, he ſtop'd on a ſudden, as one aſtoniſhed: Then he came gently toward the Slave, fawning upon him, and licking his Hand, which caus'd all the People to give a Shout. The Emperour being preſent, and taking Notice of the ſeeming Friendſhip and Acquaintance that was between the Slave and the Lyon, ſent for the Slave, and enquired the Occaſion of ſo ſtrange an Accident. To whom the Slave mad the following Relation: 'My

'My Name, ſaid he, is Andredus, and I 'am Slave to a certain Proconſul, who ha-'ving determin'd to Kill me, I made my 'Eſcape, and hid my ſelf in a Cave: Where 'I had not layn long, before this Lyon, which 'you now ſee, came in, being very lame of 'one Foot. As ſoon as he ſpy'd me, he came 'limping toward me, and ſtretch'd forth the 'Paw that was Wounded, as tho' he begg'd 'of me to eaſe him. Affrighted as I was, 'I took his Paw in my Hand, and pull'd out 'a great ragged Thorn, which ſtuck faſt in 'it. Then I waſh'd the Wound with my 'own Water, whilſt he lay very patiently 'till I throughly dreſs'd it. The Eaſe he 'found by my Application, made him fall 'aſleep; and when he awak'd, he lick'd my 'Hands, and ſhew'd other Signs of Affection 'and Gratitude. I liv'd with him thus, Three 'Years in that Cave, and every Day he brought 'me a Share of his Prey, on which I ſu-'ſtain'd my Self. But at length Tyr'd with 'this manner of Life, I took my Opportu-'nity, when he was gone abroad, to make my 'Eſcape. I wandred up and down Three 'days when a Company of Soldiers meeting 'with me, and knowing to whom I belong'd, 'took me and brought me hither to my Old 'Maſter, who has Condemn'd me to this 'Cruel Death. But it ſeems, Fortune ſo or-'der'd it, That this Lyon ſhould be taken a-'bout the ſame Time, and appointed to be 'my Executioner this Day. Yet you ſee, he 'refuſes to perform his Office, out of Grati-

'rade to me for my former Kindneſs.

The Emperour aſtoniſh'd and pleas'd at this Paſſage, gave the Slave his Life and Freedom, beſtowing alſo the Lyon on him, which brought him in a Conſtant Livelyhood, by ſhewing him to all People; who having heard of this Wonderful Accident, were deſirous to ſee both the Lyon and his Tenant: For ſo they ſtyl'd the Slave; and ſome call'd him, the Lyon's Phyſician.

I ſhould think I had ſaid enough already to tire thy Patience, and make thee forſwear reading my Letters for the future, were I not well acquainted with thy Genius, and know that thou delighteſt in Relations of this Nature, being no Enemy to the harmleſs Brutes.

VVhatever thy Sentiments are towards theſe, I dare be ſure, thou art my Friend, and wilt bear with my Importunity, when I ſtrive to convince all Men, and confirm my ſelf in this Truth, That the VVild Beaſts are not void of Reaſon and Moral Vertue.

LETTER

LETTER V.

To the Captain Baſſa.

IN the Name of God, ſuperlatively Indulgent and Benign, Lord of Armies which cannot be Numbred, Conſervator of the Empire founded on his own Unity; Praiſe be to him, that has neither Beginning, nor End! What is the Reaſon, that we are always Baffl'd by the Infidels? Every Year our Auguſt Emperour ſends out mighty Armies by Land, and our Fleets by Sea are term'd INVINCIBLE, yet they are ſtill overcome by the Chriſtians. Where the Fault lies, is beſt known to thee, and the Generals to whom the Command of all is committed.

My Spirit is diſquieted about theſe Things, and I am uneaſy by Day, neither does the Night accord me any Repoſe. This hot Weather, I go up the Terraſs of my Houſe at the Hour of Sleep, thinking that the Coolneſs of the Air would incline me to Reſt; but I can find none. I turn my ſelf on the Leads to the Right-Hand and to the Left, yet all Poſtures are alike. Sleep has abandon'd my Eyes. My Zeal for the Empire of the Faithful will conſume me.

One Night I made Solemn Preparations to welcome the Firſt Appearance of the Moon, after the Manner of my Countrymen. I ſprinkl'd Water on the Floor of the Terraſs, and with a New Beſom ſwept away all Uncleanneſs: I fill'd a Lamp with the moſt precious Oyl I could get in Paris, which having lighted at the going down of the Sun, I plac'd directly on that Part which is neareſt to Mecca. Then I fell on my Face, and pray'd the Eternal Source of Lights, "That at the "Moment, when the Moon firſt Aſcended "our Horizon, an Intellectual Splendor might "ſhine in my Breaſt: That I might there, "as in a Mirror, behold the Future Fate of "the Muſſulmans, and the Events, which "as yet, were hid in the Dark Womb of Poſ-"ſibility.

My Petition was granted: The Night was in her Shady Courſe; the Stars on their Watch; and Time, as from a Limbeck, diſtill'd the Silent Minutes, till the Moment wherein the Neighbour Planet, firſt peep'd on the Tops of Mountains. At that Inſtant I ſaw, and heard Things (or at leaſt I thought ſo) which I never ſo much as dreamt of before, neither can I remember the Thouſandth Part.

Believe me, Supreme Commander of the Marine, I do not boaſt, or Joy in this. For, I think there can be no greater Affliction, than to be once made Partaker of ſuch a Bliſs, and then to loſe it, almoſt as ſoon as gain'd. Yet there are ſome Footſteps of the Viſion remaining on my Memory.

"Methinks I beheld Armies of Muſſulmans "(for I thought 'em to be ſuch by their Turbants) making ſeveral Deſcents on the Shores

" Shores of Italy: Methonght I ſaw them " proſtrate themſelves on the Ground, and " after a conſiderable Space of Silence, the " Air echo'd with the Sound of Allah, Allah, " much like the Noiſe of great Caſcades, or " Falls of Water.

" Then they ſeem'd to diſperſe themſelves " all over the Country in divers Bodies. The " Inhabitants of Rome, appear'd all in a great " Conſternation. The Chief Mufti of that " Place, went forthwith into the Streets, fol- " low'd by his Cardinals and Derviſes, ac- " companied by an Innumerable Multitude of " People. They carried their Gods of Gold " and Silver along with them; and being ap- " parell'd with Garments of coarſe Hair, they " ſprinkled Aſhes on their Foreheads, in To- " ken of their Humility, and to pacify the " Indignation that was kindled againſt " them.

" But, Heaven was deaf to their Clamo- " rous Vows, neither could all the Pomp of " their Superſtitious ſolemnity, dazle the Eyes " which are a Thouſand Times brighter than " the Sun, penetrating into the darkeſt Corners " of the Heart. In a word, theſe Infidels ſeem'd " a while after to be in a great Confuſion and " Hurry, running this Way and that Way " to hide their Goods, and ſave themſelves " from the Victorious Strangers. In fine, I " ſaw the Croſſes taken down from the Mi- " narets of the Moſques in Rome, and Cre- " ſcents advanc'd in their place.

I do not relate this, as if I gave Credit to Viſions and Trances: Perhaps all this might be but a Waking Dream. Yet ſuch Viſionary Entertainments, happen of Courſe to our Countrymen, when they obſerve the foreſaid Ceremonies. But I tell thee, I am not aſleep at this Moment; and yet it appears to me a very Probable Undertaking, for the Muſſulmans to fit out a Mighty Fleet, which having a ſufficient Army of Land-men aboard, might deliver them with little or no Oppoſition, on ſome of the Wealthy Shores of Italy: And if it is not thought worth the Labour to make New Conqueſts, which would be difficult to maintain; yet at leaſt our Soldiers by plundering only the Rich Temples and Convents of the Nazarenes, might carry away Ineſtimable Treaſures.

I wrote formerly to one of thy Predeceſſors about the ſame Matter, propoſing the Surprize of Loretto, as a very eaſy Attempt, and that the Booty would infinitely ſurpaſs the Expence and Trouble: But Mahmut's Advices are never regarded, till 'tis too late. We ſquander away Thouſands of Men, and Millions of Money to purchaſe little inſignificant Iſlands, which are defended indeed with ſeeming Vigour by the Chriſtians, but 'tis rather to amuſe us, than out of any real Value they have for thoſe Places.

It is only a Maxim of Weſtern Policy, thus to give Diverſion to the Arms which are deſtin'd to ſubdue All Nations. They ſport themſelves, to ſee the Flower of the Eaſtern Militia Militia consum'd in their Trenches, before the Impregnable Fortress of Candia, which if won will not quit the Cost of so tedious a Siege. Whereas, in half that Time, our Invincible Forces might have over-run all Italy.

Thou wilt not think this an Impracticable Enterprize, when thou shalt consider the Divisions of the Italian Princes, the Universal Security and Voluptuousness of the Inhabitants, and yet the Oppressions and Tyranny they live under, being fleec'd and poll'd of all their Substance, to maintain the Grandeur of their Governours, and the Pride of the Clergy; which renders 'em equally disgusted at their present Slavish Manner of Life, and desirous of a Change. It is not hard to surmise after all this, that a Conquest wou'd be easy to the Victorious Mussulmans; or at least such Depredations, as would mightily enrich them.

The most proper News that I can send thee, is of a Combat lately fought at Sea, between the English and the Dutch. The Generals on both Sides, are said to be brave Men. He of Britain is call'd Blake, the Other's Name is Trump. Which had the best on't is not certainly known. Men speak as they are byass'd. Yet the Dutch lost Two Ships in this Engagement, tho' their Fleet was far more Numerous than that of the English.

If I were worthy to advise my Superiours, I would propose some Notable Exploit by Land; for God has given the Earth to

the

the True Believers, but the Sea to the Chriſtians.

Paris, the 14th. of the 6th. Moon, of the Year 1652.

LETTER VI.

To the Kiaya Bey, or Lieutenant General of the Janizaries.

I HAD once a great Intimacy with Caſſom Hali, the brave Aga, who now is no more on Earth. That Honeſt Old General, merited all Men's Love: Follow thou his Example, and in Time his Poſt will fall to thy Lot. Thou art already in the laſt Advance to it; let no Airy Vice make thee Giddy, and give thee a Fall. 'Tis a Common Aphoriſm, That Health, long Life, and Honour deſcend from Above. But if they do, I tell thee, 'tis like the Rain, which only then does good, when it penetrates the Earth, and moiſtens to the Root. An Humble Heart, is like a kindly Mold, receiving the Dews of Heaven with Advantage and Profit; but Pride is a Rock, which ſpatters away the Bleſſings ſhow'd down on it.

Perhaps thou wilt be affronted at my blunt Way of Writing. Yet aſſure thy ſelf, I honour thee more than a Thouſand Flatterers.

I am

I am not ſent hither to ſtudy Nice Expreſſions, but to ſerve the Grand Signior with Integrity. Beſides, I know thou haſt not been accuſtom'd to the ſoft Entertainment a of Ladies Chambers, but the Rough Dialect of War. It is thy Honour to be unacquainted with the Delicacies of Diſcourſe, Diet, or Dreſſing; Things only fit to enervate a Man's Courage, and change his Heart into that of a VVoman. Thou know'ſt how to handle the Curiaſs and Lance, the Sabre and Shield, the Bow, and Gun: and art perfectly vers'd in all the Military Terms of Art. A Diſcourſe of Sieges and Campaigns, ſtorming of Forts, and plundering of Camps, is more agreeable to thee, than all Tully's Oratory, or the fineſt Strains of the Perſian Poets. I am therefore confident, thou wilt not take it ill, that I addreſs to thee in a Style void of Artifice, yet full of Real Reſpect and Love.

If I counſel thee, 'tis for thy Good; and I am commanded to expreſs my Sentiments with Freedom. Beſides, I have a Perſonal Priviledge to adviſe thee, the Right of a Friend: VVhich thou wilt acknowledge, when I tell thee, that I once had the Happineſs to ſave thy Life, as we travell'd together in Arabia.

Thou canſt not but remember that Paſſage, and how that in heat of Youthful Blood, thou had'ſt provok'd an Emir to kill thee in the Sight of the whole Caravan, had not I fallen at his Feet, and told him, Thou wert a Stranger to the Cuſtoms of the Country.

Believe

Believe me, I do not reproach thee with this, but only make Uſe of it, as an Argument to convince thee, That the ſame Motive which prompted me to interpoſe my ſelf at that Time, between thee and Certain Death, induces me now to give thee Warning of a Precipice, of which thou art in Danger. Every one gives thee the Character of a brave Man, and no Body diſlikes thee the Worſe, for being of an Air as Fierce as a Tartar. All this becomes a Man of the Sword; And they ſay, thou doſt every Thing with a Martial Grace.

But I am told likewiſe, that thou art Guilty of Avarice: And that for the Lucre of Preſents, thou enrolleſt Men in the Liſt of the Janizaries, who are not fit to ſerve in the Wars: ſuch as are Houſe-keepers, Perſons entangl'd with Wives and Children, with Debts and other Encumbrances: That they only appear on certain Days in the Military Habit, and then return to their Domeſtick Buſineſs, without ever regarding the Diſcipline of the Royal Chambers, or thinking themſelves oblig'd to learn the Art of War: That thou in the mean Time takeſt their Pay, and many Additional Bribes, whilſt they are only contented with the Title and Privilege of Janizary, to ſhelter themſelves from Juſtice, and protect them in their Rapine and Villainies.

I tell thee, ſhou'd this be known and prov'd againſt thee, it would be to thy Ruine. But I hope better Things, and that theſe are only the Surmizes of thy Enemies. For, thou knoweſt, knoweſt, that none ought to be admitted into that Ancient Order, but the Tributary Sons of the Nazarenes; who being in their Infancy liſted in the College, know neither Father nor Patron, ſave the Grand Signior, who is the Common Parent and Protector of the Oſman Empire. On his Service is all their Zeal and Courage fix'd, having no private Byaſs, no partial Inclinations, to warp them from the Fidelity they owe their Great Maſter. They are devoted to Indefatigable Toils and Hardſhip, during their whole Life.

This was the Firſt Inſtitution of the Janizaries, though through the Corruption of the Times, they have much degenerated from their Primitive Rules. But thou, who art honour'd with an High Command, wilt ſignalize thy Vertue and Loyalty, in reforming theſe Abuſes, and in not ſuffering the College of Men of War, to become a Receptacle of Rogues and Drones.

Such Diſorders as theſe, have promoted the Inteſtine Broils of this Kingdom. I ſay not that they are the Original Cauſes: Yet 'tis a great Diminution of Sovereign Majeſty, when a King ſhall find his Own Armies fighting againſt him, as they do at preſent here in France. How many Mutinies and Rebellions have been rais'd by the licentious Janizaries at Conſtantinople: when laying aſide all Reſpect and Duty, they have not ſpar'd to violate the Seraglio it ſelf; but entring within thoſe Sacred Walls with Bands of Armed Men, have turn'd all things Topſy-Turvey, ſeiz'd on the the Imperial Treaſure, chang'd the Domeſtick Officers of their Sovereign, and ſometimes chas'd him from his Own Palace, to the Hazard, if not to the Loſs of his Life?

I thou woul'ſt know what they are doing here in France, the Men of Arms are cutting one anothers Throats, whilſt the Rabble are burning their Neighbours out of their Houſes.

Two Days agoe, the Multitude aſſembled in the Streets, and having beſet a certain Palace in this City, they put Fire to it, reſolving to kill all that ſhould attempt to make their Eſcape, out of the Flames. A Perſon of Quality coming out to pacify them, fell a Victim to their unbridl'd Rage: And had not the Duke of Beaufort (of whom I have often made mention in my Letters) interpos'd his Authority, they had murder'd all that were within thoſe ſuſpected VValls.

Sometime before this, the Mareſchal Turenne took a Place of Strength from the Prince of Conde; who in Lieu of it took St. Denis, a Town not far from Paris, wherein there is a Temple, which the French ſay, is the Richeſt in Europe. But they are are laught at by the Italians, who boaſt of far Richer Moſques in Venice, Milan, Naples, and Rome.

The Duke of Lorain plays faſt and looſe with the Prince of Conde. He enter'd the Kingdom with an Army, pretending to eſpouſe the Prince's Quarrel, but was quickly bought off by the Queen, ſo that he is now gone to Flanders again; by this Action leaving a

Free

Free Paſſage to the King's Army under Marſhal Turenne, to range whither they pleaſe, which were before block'd up by his Forces.

Four Days ago there was a Bloody Encounter, between the Troops of the Prince, and thoſe of Marſhal Turenne, in one of the Suburbs of Paris. Neither cou'd boaſt of the Victory, tho' the Battel laſted Five Hours. But at length, the Prince of Conde's Troops retir'd into the City, being frighten'd with the Main Body of the King's Army, which appear'd on the Neighbouring Hills.

Illuſtrious Janizary, fortify thy Heart with all the Neceſſary Retrenchments of Heroick Vertue: And rather than Surrender to Temptations of Vice on diſhonourable Terms, run the Hazard of a Storm.

LETTER

LETTER VII.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

WE are all together by the Ears in this Kingdom; killing, burning and deſtroying one another: Whilſt you in Germany enjoy Abundance of Peace. The Occaſion of our Quarrels here, is, the Return of Cardinal Mazarini, againſt whom the Duke of Orleans and Prince of Conde are Inveterate Enemies. The former is declar'd Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom, by the Parliament of Paris; Who give it out, That the King is Cardinal Mazarini's Priſoner. They have alſo beſtow'd the Command of all the Forces, under the Authority of the ſaid Duke, on the Prince of Conde.

Their Principal and only Pretence is, the Removal of the Cardinal from the King and his Councils. What will be the Iſſue, Time will demonſtrate.

There has been a Duel lately fought, between the Dukes of Beaufort and Nemours, Two Eminent Friends to the Prince of Conde.

The King going to a Town call'd Pontoiſe, ſome Leagues from Paris, drew a great many Councellors and Preſidents of Parliament thither, Men who are Loyal and Stedfaſt to his Cauſe. This encouraged the King to put forth a Declaration, commanding the Parliament to meet at Pontoiſe. They, on the other Side, publiſh'd an Arreſt againſt this Declaration. Thus they continue pickeering one at another.

De-

But here is News arriv'd from Cologne, which ſurprizes People very much. I know not the true Ground of their Aſtoniſhment: but the Prieſts ſeem to he Mad for Joy. All that I can hear about it is, The Reſtauration of the Roman Catholick Religion in that Province, which is a Novelty unexpected; eſpecially the Eccleſiaſtick Grandeur, which it ſeems, has been laid aſide above theſe Hundred Years. I tell thee only as I am inform'd my ſelf: It lies in thy Power to certify me of the Truth of Matters.

They ſay alſo, That the famous General John de Werdt is dead: As likewiſe the Arch-Biſhop of Treves. It is added, that Frankendal is ſurrendred to the Elector of Heidelberg, according to the late Agreement at Munſter; And that there is a Diet begun at Ratisbon.

I deſire thee to inform me of all theſe Things particularly, and of whatſoever elſe occurs in the Court where thou reſideſt.

As to Matters of Religion, be not over ſedulous: Piety is compriz'd in a Few Rules. Yet, the Soul of Man is Naturally Inquiſitive, and would fain be acquainted with All Things. I adviſe thee to caſt thy Eyes frequently on the Earth that is under thy Feet; ſurvey the Groves and Fields; the Mountains tains and Valleys, Rocks and Rivers. Then look up to the Heavens, and take a ſtedfaſt View of the Stars: Conſider the Beauty and Order of All things. And after this, tell me, if thou canſt imagine, That the Great and Immenſe Creator of this Wonderful Fabrick, Form'd all the Nations of the Earth, to Damn 'em Eternally, ſave only thoſe of your Race.

Son of Iſrael, I wiſh thee heartily Adieu.

LETTER VIII.

To the Kaimacham.

THE Pariſians ſeem to be all in a Dream or Trance. They know not what they ſay or do, or at leaſt they care not. Such is the Immenſe Joy, for the Return of the King to this City. The Steps to this ſuddain Change, were the Retiring of Cardinal Mazarini from the Court. Which was ſeconded with a Declaration of Indemnity, or a General Pardon for all that had paſs'd during theſe Troubles, ſave ſome particular Reſerves of Sacrilege, Fires, and ſuch like. This work'd ſtrangely on the Inha-
